Britain and Afghanistan.

THE Press views the war clouds on the Afghan frontier with concern. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that while it is needless to say that the whole-hearted support of Hindus and Muhammadans will be given to the Government in a necessary war, it is unnatural to expect popular adherence to any policy involving the expenditure of millions. India has a right to know what it is all about. Let us know why Afghanistan should suffer and India would, barring certain irreconcilable elements, whole-heartedly support any British measures. The Aj considers the action of the Government of India in prohibiting the importation of arms and ammunition into Afghan territory simply because of the Amir's inability to trace out certain murderers, to be a violation of the terms of the Anglo-Afghan treaty on the part of the British Government and remarks that the existing Anglo-Afghan estrangement is not due to the murders on the frontier, but to the conflict between the imperialistic designs of the British and the assertion of its independence by Afghanistan. The Sudharak holds that if any war is declared against the Amir of Kabul it will lead to very serious consequences and convert the whole of Central Asia into an arena for a gigantic war. If British statesmanship has not become altogether bankrupt the treaty rights of the Amir should be duly respected. The Medina says that the Afghan bogey is in fact a creation of British diplomacy which finding the Assembly packed with Swarajists now wants as a precautionary measure to create an atmosphere for successfully piloting the heavy military budget. In another article the same paper predicts the defeat of the British policy of territorial aggrandisement if it engages in a war with Afghanistan. The Al Khalil remarks that a war with Afghanistan will be an invitation to Russia to join the conflict as it has been on the lookout for finding a pretext to fight with Great Britain. The Haqiqat says that any breakdown of relations with Afghanistan will endanger the peace of India and that it is the duty of the Afghan Government to arrest and punish the assassins, who have taken refuge in Afghanistan. Mir Rahmat Ullah, writing to the Najat from Kabul, holds the Government of India responsible for the crimes committed by the tribesmen as a result of a policy of ruthless repression pursued by the former and remarks that every Afghan child is now ready to shed his blood for his country and the Amir alone, without the help of any neighbouring power, is capable of crushing down England.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Anand deplores that Maulana Abdul Bari is on the war path by declaring the Hindus to be the enemies of Muhammadans and by inciting the latter against the former. It is because of the doings of bigotted Maulanas like Abdul Bari that the Muhammadans regard it to be their duty to hurt the feelings of Hindus. If the Congress leaders really want to establish harmonious relations between the two communities they should save the Muhammadans from the clutches and baneful influence of these Maulanas. The Hindus, while maintaining good-will towards the Muhammadans, should strengthen themselves by organising the scattered sections of their community inasmuch as their weakness is the main cause of Hindu-Muslim dissension. The Sudharak urges that in retaliation for the Muhammadan excesses at Nagpur and other places the Hindus should use the weapon of boycott against the Muhammadans in order to bring them to their senses. The Tabligh describes Lala Rajpat Rai's speech as betraying those hidden feelings which he was secretly entertaining against the Musalmans and remarks that in view of his being a great patriot and politician his utterance is not only regrettable and disappointing but shameful. The Arya Varta says that the exhortations of Maulana Abdul Bari are highly detrimental not only to the Hindus but also to the Muslim interests and that he is one of those bigotted persons who try to create a gulf between the two communities at the cost of the country's interests. The Arya Patra says that a spirit of selfishness pervades through his exhortations and that the political unity of the Musalmans with the Hindus was entirely based on self-respect.

The National Pact.

The National Pact as framed by the Swaraj party of Bengal has been severely criticised. The Pioneer in a leading article says that the Swarajist pact, which was intended to heal the dissensions between the two communities, has merely served to widen the breach between them. A union of this kind can only be attained by slow and almost imperceptible degrees, through the elimination of fanaticism and the gradual evolution of sentiments of mutual toleration and forbearance. It cannot be hastened by any formal pacts to which a section of the political leaders subscribe, while the masses remain indifferent, if not actively hostile. The Leader says that the pact is one-sided through and through and is a fraud on the electorate as well as the Hindu community, and it is up to the Swarajists in other provinces not only to disown it but to condemn it in no hesitating terms. In an another article the Leader says that the pact arrived at in this hole-and-corner fashion can only be regarded as worthless. The Advocate remarks that the terms of the National Pact should at first be placed before the country for discussion and for ascertaining the views of all parties before final adoption. Both hurry and indifference in coming to a decision on this momentous question should be avoided. The Independence, while sympathising with Mr. C. R. Das' difficulties, is not in favour of attempting to solve the Hindu-Muslim question by pacts. It thinks that the Bengal Pact is only a feeler, a tentative arrangement between the members of the Bengal Council to find a way to combine to attack the bureaucracy. What is wanted is a change of heart in all concerned and this can come through the cultivation of the communal sense of reverence and tolerance. The Indian Daily Telegraph thinks that the discussion round the National Pact must be as discouraging to the enemies of Nationalism who instinctively grasped at the Bengal Pact with a desire to set the Hindus against the Moslems and as a consequence, to wreck the Indian National Congress. The Anand holds that the National Pact formulated by Lala Lajpat Rai and Dr. Ansari, if acted upon, will remove most of the causes of Hindu-Muslim dissensions and establish good-will between the two communities. Unlike the Bengal Pact the National Pact has treated the religious interests of both the communities on an equal footing. The clauses on cow-killing question should serve to satisfy both the Hindus and the Muhammadans. If the latter will accept them, the future of national unity is assured. On the other hand, the Hindus will never recognise the National Pact if the Muhammadans persist in their obstinate attitude over this question. The Vartman remarks that since the Hindu Maha Sabha and other authoritative associations were not invited to make suggestions it will not be a matter for surprise if the National Pact is not accepted by the public. The Surya holds that the Hindus of Bengal will never accept this one-sided pact and will throw it into the wastepaper basket as it tramples upon their legitimate rights. It urges the Hindu institutions all over the country to protest against the unjustifiable action of the Bengal Swarajists in proposing to conclude a pact on their behalf without consulting their recognised religious leaders. The Anand asks the Bengal Swaraj party to repudiate the pact in view of the universal opposition evoked by it among the Hindus who find therein an unparalleled blow to their rights. The Kartavya says that this pact has all the more complicated the Hindu-Muslim problem and created grave dissatisfaction among the Hindus. The Congress and not the Swaraj party is competent to deal with this question. The Vartman remarks that the pact murders the rights of a particular community and as such can have no value. The Aj, while disapproving of the separate provisional Bengal Pact, in view of the fact that a National Pact had already been drawn up, sees no reason to be embarrassed by it, as it is only a tentative proposal and not a final decision, which the Congress alone is empowered to make. It suggests that the Cocanada Congress should decide the matter without delay. The Arya Varta remarks that under the present state of India's subjugation it is useless to draw up any pact as it can never be put into practice. The pact should be concluded when swaraj is achieved. The Oudh Akhbar approves of the terms of the pact as drawn up by Lala Lajpat Rai and Dr. Ansari and remarks that if it is acted upon with sincerity the present strained relations will disappear to a great extent and there will be no more communal disputes in future. The Al Khalil prefers the Bengal Swarajists' pact to that drawn up by Dr. Ansari and Lala Lajpat Rai and remarks that while the former is more practicable the latter is calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities. The Hamdam congratulates the Bengal Swarajists upon the statesmanlike step taken by them and remarks that the pact will go a long way in frustrating the efforts of the enemies of the country and will prevent any misunderstanding being created between the two communities and will safeguard the just rights of both. In another article the same paper resents the opposition of the Hindus to this pact and exhorts the Musalmans to adopt some proper means to safeguard their religious and political interests when swaraj is obtained. The Medina praises the Bengal Swarajists for drawing up the pact and remarks that a new era in Indian politics will begin from the January sessions of the Indian Legislatures. The Azad says that the pact chalked out by Lala Rajpat Rai and Dr. Ansari is more deserving of consideration and more acceptable than the Bengal one, the greatest defect of the latter being that the Swarajists' pact cannot be applicable to other provinces and that it contains some provisions which cannot be acceptable to the Hindus.

Cocanada Congress.

The Leader which characterises the annual gathering of the non-cooperators as a sort of tamasha in which it is difficult to transact any serious business or to discuss important national questions, says that no amount of camouflage can hide the fact of the fundamental nature of the differences that prevail among the Congressmen and the claim of unity in the Congress can deceive only those who habitually practise self-deception. In another article the paper congratulates Mr. Muhammad Ali on his improved outlook on the all-important question of Hindu-Muslim unity and felicitates him on the ability that marks his address, and says: "We must affirm with equal frankness that, while both of us are anxious to attain swaraj, there is almost nothing else common between us in the political work that lies before us." The Advocate says that the presidential address of Maulana Muhammad Ali is a statesmanlike pronouncement worthy of a great national leader. Though of unusual length, there is not a jejune passage in the whole address. It is the outpouring of his heart in language at once simple and sincere. The Independence is gratified at the compromise resolution and says that the atmosphere for united vigorous action has been vouchsafed by Cocanada, but adds that to talk of civil disobedience, to talk of any kind of aggressive campaign in the country without organising Congress work, is to talk irresponsibly. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that Muhammad Ali's address is remarkable for its close knowledge of Indian affairs and his closely argued address explains to the British, in the best English style, why Indians are against them and why, from being loyalists, the Moslems are today bitter against them. With regard to Maulana Shaukat Ali's address the paper says that it is the most inspired, and rings with that deep earnestness that is the foremost characteristic of the man. He may well claim to be the most representative Muslim not only in India but in all Islam. He has spoken out the Muslim mind. It cannot be gainsaid that by their learning, sacrifice and devotion to their religion, the Ali brothers, and even more particularly Shaukat Ali, have earned for themselves a name that will go down the history of Islam. The Pioneer in an article headed "India in Wonderland" says that a continuous study of the vagaries of non-cooperating politicians in India is calculated to daze the observer. The creed of non-cooperators is destructive and, undoubtedly, their subversive agitation has created an atmosphere favourable to the development of racial and communal antipathies. The plans they are now projecting, if brought to fruition, will lead to further strife, and possibly to imprisonment for the dupes of non-cooperation. In another article headed "Whither" the Pioneer asks: Cannot every one see whither the teachings of the Ali brothers must inevitably lead? Referring to Maulana Shaukat Ali's anti-British sentiments the Pioneer says that in view of the tension that exists between the Hindu and the Muhammadan communities in India it is more than strange that it should be generally accepted without protest, if not with placid equanimity. The threats against the British Empire can be dismissed as idle vapourings. It is India that stands to suffer if another campaign of rampant lawlessness is set on foot and the forces of disorder to which appeal is being made are let loose once more upon law-abiding people. It is from the point of view of India, then, that law-abiding men should resolutely and openly repudiate the pernicious teachings that have been cited, which are pregnant with evil potentialities for this country. The Hamdam describes the presidential address as a valuable addition to the political literature of the country. The Kartavya says that the cry "Back to Nagpur" is now altogether out of the question. The Bardoli programme should be re-adopted and the destructive programme should also include the organised boycott of British goods. Preparations should also be made for mass civil disobedience without which swaraj cannot be attained. It also insists on the adoption of complete independence as the goal of the Congress. The Bharat Jiwan also emphasises the need for fulfilling the constructive programme and urges the inclusion of the Moderates within the Congress, pointing out that the sacrifices made in the Congress creed, policy and programme for the purpose will be far outbalanced by the accession of strength accruing to it by the reversion of the Moderates to its fold. The Vartman remarks that the Congress should treat with indifference the Swarajist threat to withdraw from the national body in case the Council entry question was re-opened. It will be a great blunder on our part if we reject a tried programme for fear of the withdrawal of a few leaders from the Congress ranks. The Dehati urges the vigorous prosecution of the constructive programme without re-opening the Council entry question and says that those who believe in satyagraha should raise volunteers for the purpose and be ready to resort to civil disobedience when the time comes for it. They should be prepared not to pay even their taxes. The Navayug urges that the organisation of labourers and cultivators should be given the foremost place in the next Congress programme. In another article the same paper suggests the desirability of a select body of people preparing quietly for civil disobedience in particular areas. It says that the Congress will do well to give its mandate to the Swaraj party to work in the Councils subject to certain restrictions.

The Swaraj party.

Speculation is rife as to the future programme of the Swaraj party and their attitude in the Councils. The Pioneer says that the idea that the Swarajists will succeed in their aim of paralysing the administration is grotesque. The King-Emperor's Government must and will be carried on, and the executive possess ample resources to enable them to frustrate the attempts of the revolutionaries to bring it to a standstill. The Independence says that the success of the Swarajists at the polls is a glorious proclamation of the unassailable fact that the Swarajists have the sympathy of tbe country. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that with the statement before the public, bearing the signature of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, no one will dare cast any aspersion on the motive of the Swarajists in seeking election. It is a dread evidence of the success of the movement that has sent forth its ambassadors to seek fresh fields and pastures new. No Indian accustomed to think politically will cease to regret that, at this supreme moment, when the great patriots have framed their policy, any of his countrymen should be discovered in the camp of the Government. India is heading for an interesting phase in its political development. The Leader says: Now that the non-cooperation movement has collapsed and the Swarajists have failed to capture the Assembly and the Legislative Councils with one exception, it would be idle to expect that the Government would cooperate with the Swarajists in facilitating the evolution of its scheme for the formulation of a brand new constitution for India. How can they dictate their terms to Government which is fully conscious of its strength and of the weakness of the Swarajist position? The resolution of the Swaraj Council betrays the incapacity of the party to face realities. The procedure suggested by the Swaraj party appears to be impracticable in the existing conditions. The Swaraj party is merely complicating issues, instead of trying to solve them by putting forward a scheme which is open to serious objections on constitutional grounds and which starts with a demand for the release of all political prisoners. The Leader characterises His Excellency the Governor's speech at Cawnpore as a challenge to Swarajists and says that His Excellency's speech is not calculated to promote the cause of tranquillity inside and outside the Council, which is so dear to him.

The Liberal Federation.

The Leader is gratified at the enthusiasm displayed in the proceedings of the meeting of the Liberal Federation at Poona and at the large attendance of delegates and visitors and says that the address of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru is distinguished by the qualities of frankness and straightforwardness, courtesy and urbanity, opportuneness, and sober practical wisdom. It is singularly free from discourtesy or bitterness. The Pioneer, on the other hand, thinks that Sir Tej Bahadur's reference to the Kenya question must by this time be growing more than a little weary. The Indian Daily Telegragh says that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's address does not even possess the merit of an intimate and exhaustive presentment of the present situation. This is the first time that we have come across such an uninspiring and stale speech on an occasion which, to the Liberal imagination, is to supply the place of the Congress. We are afraid his voice will not be heard further than the narrow circle to which the Liberals have been forced. The Anand says that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's views expressed in his presidential address should be carefully pondered over by the Liberals. Though the number of the supporters of the policy of the Liberals has decreased owing to the anti-British feelings in the country created by the illiberal policy of the Government, yet the Liberals can gain in strength if they work more energetically and reorganise their forces. The Hamdam says that Dr. Sapru has truly voiced the sentiments of the Indian public regarding the Kenya question, though it cannot be said how far it was necessary to go on harping upon the same subject. His address shows that the Liberals have not been disheartened by their defeat in the elections but they have rather realised their weakness and want to strengthen their party.

The U. P. Ministers.

Referring to the re-appointment of Ministers the Leader says: Nothing better was expected of a Governor whose whole political outlook is reactionary. The Independence says that the announcement of the U. P. Ministry does not come as a surprise. The surprise would have been if a leader of the Swaraj party had been offered the office of Minister. The Ministers must be such as to command the confidence of a clear majority in the House, and we doubt not that the nomination of two landlords to that post is all that any reasonable man could expect any sane Government to do. The paper views the situation with cheerfulness and says: The Swarajists have no big leader in the U. P. Council. Theirs will be a soldiers' fight, without a General on the spot. And the fight will strain all the resources of the Ministry and the Government alike. The Pioneer approves of the re-appointment of the old Ministers and says that it will be welcomed by sober opinion, both Indian and European, in the United Provinces. The two Ministers have an excellent record for the short period during which they have been in office; they come from a class which has a definite stake in the country and an interest in the preservation of stable conditions; and they represent the largest party in the new Council.

The late Raja Parmanand.

The Pioneer says that the utimely death of Raja Parmanand is a serious loss to the Local Government. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that as Minister of Education during the short period he filled that position, he displayed a breadth of view and mastery of details that marked him out as a successful administrator. The Leader says: Widespread will be the regret felt at the death of the Hon'ble Raja Parmanand. Even in his advanced age he brought much industry and enthusiasm to bear on the discharge of his duties.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman prefers revolutionary methods to constitutionalism and remarks: Constitutionalism is an ineffective weapon for effecting a complete change in the present system of administration without which the attainment of national freedom is impossible. The only means of fulfilling this condition is to preach discontent and dissatisfaction against the present system of administration and on this depends the success of revolution. The Aj remarks that at present revolutionary ideas have taken hold of the country. Revolution is but a mental state. It does not depend upon arms; whether we have an armed fight or a non-violent struggle if the tendency is revolutionary the ground is fertile for revolution. Those people who do not cherish this tendency have no place in public life. The Nayaya says that though the Indian States are free and their Chiefs are declared to be the allies of the King-Emperor on paper, yet in practice they are in a state of utter subjection. No sooner an Indian Chief displays independence then he falls a victim to the displeasure of the Political department. The achievements of Lord Dalhousie are being re-enacted by Lord Reading in the matter of Nabha and other States. This will create an awakening among Indian Chiefs and make them realise their true position. The Hamdam regards the speech of Sir Malcolm Hailey at Cawnpore as an open challenge to the Indians and exhorts them to unite in defeating the reactionary policy of the Government. It reminds him that if the Government persists in its retrograde policy, then even those people who are now siding with it, will desert it as it is not the Swarajists alone but the Liberals also who are in favour of Indianisation of services.

Britain and Afghanistan.

THE Indian Press continues to be alarmed at the prospect of a conflagration on the Afghan border. The Advocate says that the prospects of embroiling the country in a war with Afghanistan, resulting in the expenditure of crores of rupees and loss of thousands of lives to avenge the murder of half a dozen British officials, cannot be looked upon with complacency by the people of India—especially in view of the fact that the Government's frontier policy in Waziristan has not been sound and has given cause for provocation to the frontier tribesmen who value freedom more than life. The Garhwali says that if war is declared against Afghanistan it will create excitement in all Muhammadan States and make them the enemy of the British Government. The Hamdam exhorts all the political parties in India to unite in averting the unnecessary war with Afghanistan and remarks that the present political situation in the country demands that the Government should desist from taking any dangerous step in that direction. The Paigham says that if the hostile attitude adopted by the Government is not changed at once it is likely to embroil India in a dangerous war against Afghanistan sooner or later. The Al Bureed lays stress on the necessity of an Anglo-Afghan friendship and insinuates that the question of arrest of the frontier criminals is only a pretext; the real object of Great Britain is to bring Afghanistan under its subordination.

The Khilafat.

The Medina remarks that the inopportune question of the power and prestige of the Khalifa has caused an excitement throughout the Muslim world. The pro-Greek and anti-Muslim activities of Great Britain have made the Turks well aware of the cunningness of the enemies of Islam and they naturally regard as dangerous any proposal emanating from the British Empire. Commenting upon Maulana Shaukat Ali's address at the Khilafat Conference the Hamdam remarks that he has truly voiced the sentiments of his co-religionists regarding the policy adopted by responsible British statesmen against the Muslim world within the past few years. It hopes that the Government will pay attention to his utterances and will refrain from taking any short-sighted and hasty action against Afghanistan.

The Nepal Treaty.

The Pioneer remarks that the treaty, now happily concluded, is equally satisfactory and honourable to both the high contracting parties and forms a fitting sequel to the first historic treaty signed between the two countries at Segowlie in December 1815. The Aj views the treaty with disfavour and remarks that if this treaty will do nothing else it will at least injure the indigenous trade and industry of Nepal, with the result that unemployment and poverty will increase in the country.

The Cocanada Congress.

The Anand notes with satisfaction that Maulana Muhammad Ali expressed important views on the Hindu-Muslim question in his presidential address and says that if both Hindus and Muhammadans were to act upon them they would never come to loggerheads again. It considers the president's warning at the conclusion of his address as quite uncalled for and says that it will only accentuate bitterness. It remarks that the Maulana failed in putting forward any new programme which could infuse enthusiasm into the people. The Vartman opines that in his speech Maulana Muhammad Ali depicted the real feelings and sentiments of the people. His exposition of the council-entry question was particularly sound and remarkable. His advice to work the Gandhian programme for one year more will be received with alacrity by the people and will engender the requisite enthusiasm. In another article the paper says that after the Congress our representatives should at once raise corps for satyagraha, resume the boycott of foreign cloth, fulfil the constructive programme and launch out satyagraha at the gate of the Yervada jail. The Kartvaya remarks that Maulana Muhammad Ali has once again made it clear that Indians have no other weapon than non-cooperation to secure freedom and that the path of red revolution is not desirable for them. It expresses approval of his views on the Hindu-Muslim question and hopes that both Hindus and Muhammadans will mould their future conduct in that light. The Vartman says that by rejecting the Independence resolution and the ideal for which it stood the Subjects Committee of the Cocanada Congress, its president Maulana Muhammad Ali and other Congress leaders have betrayed their timidity and weakness of mind. Thus for the time being the high aspirations of Indian youths have been crushed and weakness and ambiguity have triumphed. The Hindustani describes the Congress session as being a great success and remarks that the presidential address will ever remain memorable in the annals of history, and that Maulana Muhammad Ali has fulfilled all the expectations entertained of him. The Ariya Patra says that Maulana Muhammad Ali's presidential address was fit to be read in a meeting of the Muslim League considering that throughout the address he has constantly kept in view the fact that he is first a Musalman and then an Indian. His address is devoid of the truer spirit of patriotism. The Al Khalil remarks that the Congress session ended very successfully in spite of the fact that the foundation of unity was undermined and Shuddhi and Sangathan had usurped the place of political activities. Maulana Muhammad Ali deserves to be congratulated for his candour and outspokenness and the manner in which he treated the important though unpleasant question of Hindu-Muslim unity.

The Liberal Federation.

The Bhartiya Lokmat remarks that the dominant note in the presidential address at the Liberal Federation was one of mendicancy as usual. Whatever action is to be taken to redress Indian wrongs the Viceroy is called upon to undertake it. Regarding the administration of the country Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru has prescribed the panacea of a commission despite the bitter experience that no commission has so far yielded any substantial results. He will do well to leave the political field rather than put obstacles in the way of the Indian nationalists to attain swaraj by destroying the existing system of administration. The Surya, on the other hand, pays a tribute to Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru for his presidential address and says that he has fully voiced the views of his party. No true patriot can take exception to them, of course with the exceptions of British Tories, the Civilians, Smuts and the Swarajists who hold divergent views to serve their own selfish purposes.

The National Pact.

Commenting on the resolution of the Khilafat Conference on the Indian National pact the Leader says that Musalmans enjoy representation much in excess of their numerical strength in the local Council on the basis of the Lucknow pact and also on the local bodies. But they will lose heavily if the basis of population for purposes of representation is accepted. Whatever principle is accepted should be applied to all parts of the country. For our part we are opposed to the reopening of the question as it is likely to create fresh communal discord and to increase the existing bitterness. The Bengal Hindu-Muslim pact continues to be the burning topic in the vernacular press, specially in its Hindu section. The Abhyudaya strongly disapproves of the pact and remarks that it will spoil the chances of a Hindu-Muslim settlement rather than facilitate it. No nationalist and particularly no Hindu can ever agree to and be satisfied with it. If swaraj is to be attained under the conditions laid down in the pact, we will rather like to be without swaraj. If the Hindu leaders fail to take any action and allow Mr. C. R. Dass and his colleagues a free hand in the matter, the situation will assume a very serious turn. The Gyan Shakti remarks that the Bengal Hindu-Muslim pact renders the Hindus the slaves of the Muhammadans. Complete extinction should be preferable for the Hindus to the acceptance of such a pact which murders all their religious rights. If the attainment of swaraj depends upon the acceptance of this pact the Hindus will prefer to go without it. The Gorakshan considers the pact to be wholly unjust, one-sided, reprehensible and unacceptable. The pact concedes even such rights to Muhammadans as they did not enjoy under their own rule. It utterly ignores the religious sentiments and susceptibilities of the Hindus. Its clauses relating to cow-killing and music before mosques are specially objectionable. The Swadesh says that the pact neither does any good to the country nor solves the Hindu-Muslim problem and that on the contrary it further complicates that question. The Jhansi Samachar remarks that it is fatal to the communal and religious interests of the Hindus and can therefore never succeed in establishing the much-desired unity between Hindus and Muslims. The Vartman points out that if the contemplated national Hindu-Muslim pact allows even under very limited conditions the slaughter of cows, it will be unacceptable to the Hindus. No Hindu true to his religion can ever allow cow-slaughter under any condition and in any part of India. It urges that the national pact should be revised so as to satisfy the Hindu sentiment on the point. The Aj says that no tribute to the national pact drafted by Lala Lajpat Rai and Dr. Ansari can be too high. It stands for self-respect, national honour, Asiatic interests and universal peace. It is to be hoped that the Congress will accept it. The Medina is sceptical about the enforcement of the national pact even if it is accepted by the Congress and remarks that if in local bodies the Musalmans and other minorities are not given separate representation then their political and civic prestige will be destroyed and a severe blow will be dealt to their just rights. The Paigham says that the pact is a living example of the broad-mindedness, generosity and large-heartedness of the Bengal Swarajists and is a clear indication of the fact that the Swaraj party has sincerely at heart the common good of the country and wishes that all the communities within the country should march side by side on the path of progress.

Swaraj party.

In a leading article headed "Swarajists and Councils" the Leader assumes that the Government will refuse to consider the Swarajist demands presented by registered post and with a pistol at its head. It thinks that they will carry out the policy of obstruction. Their electors will gaze with awe and admiration on these shining lights of non-cooperation doing nothing except voting now and then, but probably drawing their allowances. Commenting on the Swaraj party programme the Pioneer says that no Government worthy of the name could yield to the hectoring demands advanced by the Swaraj party. In another article the paper says that the Swarajists initiating a policy of continual and persistent obstruction in the United Provinces Council may be regarded as unlikely. The Leader replying to the comments of the Pioneer says that the Swarajist programme should have occasioned no surprise even to the Pioneer which, while living, moving and having his being in India, is yet strangely out of touch with the realities of the situation. There is not the slightest doubt that the non-cooperation in India is the direct product of bureaucratic government just as Bolshevist Russia is the child of Tzarist Russia. And the threatened Swarajist obstruction in Councils is wholly due to the obstinate unresponsiveness of Government to temperate and reasoned persuasion. There is not the slightest doubt that effective means will be found, within the limits of the Act itself, to deal with the ill-advised and childish attempts at destructive obstruction. But every well-wisher of both England and India will earnestly hope that the wisdom and the vision of the statesman will prevail and not merely the vigour and the capacity of the administrator, that the policy that will be favoured will be not merely a hand-to-mouth or a day-to-day policy but a policy that will envisage the future and secure peaceful progress. The Advocate says that it is not possible to forecast the course which the coming tussle between the elected representatives of India and the Government will take, but it seems probable that the latter will not easily yield until forced to do so by circumstances. The Government will not be in a hurry to yield to the popular demand. But it cannot be denied that the Swarajist success has caused considerable uneasiness to the officials and the Anglo-Indian papers. Commenting on the proceedings of the Legislative Council the Leader says: The courtesy and consideration shown to the Swarajists in the allotment of seats is evidence only of the insinuating ways of the bureaucracy. Commenting upon the general defeat of the Muslim Swarajist candidates the Dilchasp remarks that the Muslim public acted wisely in not returning those candidates to the legislature who had allied themselves with the party of Pandit Malaviya, an enemy of Islam. Most of the Swarajist candidates are not free from communal prejudice and there is every apprehension that it will be these members who will bring about the failure of their party. The Oudh Akhbar says that if the Government is sincerely desirous to grant self-government to India then it should have no hesitation in accepting the demands formulated by the Swarajists in their conference at Cocanada. It observes that Mr. Gandhi and other political leaders were not prompted by any ill-will against the Government, but only voiced the public desire for swaraj.

Public Services Commission.

Commenting on the evidence submitted by the Madras Association of Indian Officers to the Public Services Commission the Pioneer says that it is obvious that evidence of this kind is likely to have a very deleterious effect upon the prospects, already none too bright, of recruitment of British candidates for appointment to the Indian Services. The Leader says that the interesting statement submitted by the Madras European Servants Association shows in more explicit terms than any of the statements previously submitted before the Lee Commission did the way of thinking of the superior services in India. Englishmen seem to forget that the cost of living has increased not only for them but for all and sundry, and the persons who are most affected by these hard times are not so much the Englishmen who are clamouring for higher pay and prospects as the poor hard hit tax-payers who are being more and more squeezed every day, and who find it extremely difficult to make both ends meet. To such Englishmen who think it necessary to keep seventeen servants in India in order to maintain their prestige and dignity we would recommend the reading of Wordsworth's poem wherein he emphasises the necessity of 'plain living and high thinking' instead of a glittering and polished life 'drest only for show.'

Civil Disobedience in Gujrat.

The Hamdam writing before the issue of the communiqué by the Bombay Government protests against its action in imposing the punitive police tax on the people. It does not believe that the people offered shelter to the robbers and praises the non-violent protest of the people, and their attitude when their effects were confiscated and warns the Government that it cannot succeed through repression against the firm attitude of the people. The Leader says that the Bombay Government communiqué announcing the remission of the punitive police tax imposed on the people of the Borsad taluk, who had started satyagraha as a protest against the levy, will be claimed as a triumph of non-cooperation and the defeat of Government. The Government, however, deserves to be congratulated on the rare moral courage it has shown in confessing its mistake and the admission it has made that those who refused to pay the punitive tax were justified in the attitude they took up. The Government having admitted its mistake should compensate those who suffered by resisting an unjust levy.

The U. P. Ministers.

The Leader approves the appointment of Rai Rajeswar Bali and says that His Excellency's choice is better than it was thought it would be. During the last term of the Council Rai Rajeshwar Bali's record of work was better than that of the average landlord member and particularly during the days that the District Boards Bill was before the Council he showed much foresight and courage in actively identifying himself with the Progressives with a view to saving the Bill from the die-hard onslaughts. It is a difficult task he has undertaken, but he will have with him the good-wishes of many progressive and independent members of the Council and of others outside who have come to appreciate his high character and patriotic outlook in the discharge of his onerous duties. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that in his selection of his new Minister His Excellency has shown both discrimination and courage. Rai Rajeshwar Bali is one of the most highly educated among the taluqdars, belongs to a very distinguished family, is a reputed scholar and his manners as a man have earned for him the appreciation of all, but it warns the landholders of the dissensions in their camp and of the positive insecurity of the ministry if the Swarajists and the Independents among the taluqdars and among the politicians should combine, as they can easily. The Governor has done his part well. He has selected from the party in power two Ministers against whom not even their enemies have anything to say. He certainly expects from them the cohesive force to keep their party together.

The Akali agitation.

The Indian Daily Telegraph ascribes the action of the Punjab Government in arresting the Akali leaders to their having gone to Cocanada to make a demonstration. It praises the Akalis for their self-restraint at the time of the arrests, and says that the Government of the Punjab is the greatest inspirer of patriotism in the minds of India. The Indian patriots will not fail to take up the challenge. Remember the action against the Akalis is a challenge from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin and not in Amritsar alone. And the Government will soon know it. And the Government wants it. It shall have it. On the other hand, the Pioneer which praises the tact and forbearance exercised by the District Magistrate of Amritsar and the police, says that if recrudescence of organised aggressive activity among the Akalis is averted it will be mainly due to the firmness now displayed by the Punjab Government in taking immediate action against those who were met together to concert a renewal of the anti-Government campaign, and to the precautions taken by the police to give no shadow of ground of complaint in the execution of their duty.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman observes that the increase in the air forces of all the countries of the world and the increased manufacture of air-ships are the preparations for the next great war in which the whole world will be involved. It prophesies that this war will take place within two or three years, and the strength in air force will be the one deciding factor in it. It also opines that Germany, Russia, Austria, Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan and China will form one party and that the British will have to fight on a front extending from Europe to the Far East. The Utsah commenting upon Lord Reading's régime including his incarceration of Mr. Gandhi and the certification of the salt tax says that his injustice and tyranny cannot last for ever. The obstructive opposition of the Swarajists within the Councils and vigorous prosecution of the boycott of British goods will surely end in his recall to England. If he is wise he will do well to retire before any such contingency arises. The Abhyudaya says that the Bangalore speech of Mr. Sastri shows that his views have of late undergone a radical change. He has lost faith in British justice and generosity and has pinned his faith to self-help. He too does not want petty reforms but stands for swaraj. Our Congress leaders should welcome him back among their ranks and work unitedly for swaraj. The Bharatiya Lokmat publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap in which he claims that all his work in Germany, Turkey and Afghanistan during the Great War was for the good of India, that he secured letters from Germany and Turkey to seven Indian Maharajas and Nawabs conveying the assurance that if the Indian people and princes established a national government of their own it will be recognised as such by those States; that it was he who got the Kaiser to address the Ruler of Nepal as His Majesty. It was after this event that the British Government also recognised the appellation of that Ruler as His Majesty. He asks the Nepal Durbar to contradict or corroborate the statement of the companion of Captain Gujar Singh who took the Kaiser's letters to Nepal that the Nepal Durbar honoured the messenger.

Britain and Afghanistan.

THE Advocate says that the cloud which appeared in the horizon of the North-Western frontier is now assuming rather ominous proportions, and insinuates that Great Britain is seeking to reduce the power of the Amir in order to make up for the loss of prestige she has suffered in Turkey. The Leader notes with satisfaction that with the capture of the Ajab gang the tension between the Afghan and Indian Government will certainly lessen, but thinks that the question of the renewal of the Afghan Treaty may have something to do with the present troubles, as the issues involved are not merely captures of this gang or that but the whole foreign relations of the one Government with the other. The Pioneer is gratified at the capture of the Kohat murderers by the Afghan Government and says that the Amir has given a practical demonstration of his wish to maintain friendly relations with Great Britain. As soon as the Landikotal murderers are captured the main causes of the protests made by Great Britain will have been removed, and the avoidance of any similar ground for friction in the future will retain for the Amir the good-will of a country which has always viewed with sympathetic interest the prospect of the establishment in Afghanistan of a stable and well-ordered Government on modern lines. The Hamdam accuses the Anglo-Indian press of trying to strain the relations between England and Afghanistan and advises the Government not to treat the frontier tribes as worse than beasts but to try to conciliate them and win their gratitude. The Haqiqat asks the Government of India not to lose sight of the present situation in the country and of the presence of the Bolshevik armies in Turkistan before committing India to a dangerous war against Afghanistan. The Medina exhorts the Indians to fully realise their responsibilities and urges that the Government should not get a pie from the poor and destitute Indians to wage a war against Afghanistan. The Tohfa-i-Hind hopes that the Government will not act upon the advice of a section of the press to declare war against Afghanistan and cause the bloodshed of thousands for a few murders committed on the frontier.

The Labour Government in England.

While the Pioneer is anything but enthusiastic over the change of Ministry in England, the prospect of a Labour Ministry coming into power is viewed with satisfaction by the Indian papers. The Vartman remarks that a Labour Ministry with Mr. Ramsay MacDonald at its head is fully assured and that with its establishment the British Empire will undergo great changes which will not be favourable to the interests of the capitalists. The Aj resents the attempts in the British press to spoil the chances of a Labour Government in England and says: India does not expect the Labour party to confer freedom on her but what she does hope is that a Labour Government will be less unjust to her. But an attempt to deprive her of even this small gain means that we should abandon all hopes of justice at the hands of Britain. The Hamdam entertains high hopes for India in case a Labour Government comes into power and remarks that a Labour Government can be beneficial to India only when the political struggle started by Mahatma Gandhi is continued. The Hindustani hopes that all the demands of the Indians for swaraj will be satisfied under a Labour Government.

The Nepal Treaty.

Referring to the new treaty between Nepal and the British Government the Pratap remarks that the British Government is now patronising the Gurkhas only because it has forfeited the sympathy of the Akalis and the Afghans, but European diplomacy, says the paper, has taught the world to treat all former treaties as mere scraps of paper. The Mashriq welcomes the treaty and hopes that Nepal will profit by the proper and generous rights granted to it and will abstain from giving any cause of suspicion against itself.

The Cocanada Congress.

The Swadesh says that Maulana Muhammad Ali's presidential address at the Cocanada Congress was comprehensive and dealt ably with all important questions of the day. It pulsated with the spirit of nationalism and embodied sound arguments. He has succeeded in impressing upon the public mind the need of Hindu-Muslim unity and the fulfilment of the constructive programme. The Shakti remarks that the presidential address was a historical pronouncement full of sound, striking and profound ideas. The Utsah holds that the address was marked with ability and thoroughly dealt with the present political situation in the country. The president rightly emphasised the need of Hindu-Muslim unity and his plea for mixed electorates ought to commend itself to the Muhammadan community. His views regarding the shuddhi and sangathan movements were impartial. The Pratap regrets that although the Cocanada Congress laid particular stress on working out the constructive programme, it did not prescribe any practical measures for the purpose. The Dehati exhorts all Indians to work out the constructive programme and reorganise national forces on the lines suggested by Maulana Muhammad Ali and says that if they do so they are sure to make the Government yield to their demands or at least they will have prepared the ground for the proclamation of a republic in India in case the Government of India does not release Mahatma Gandhi and place the Charter of the grant of swaraj in his hands by the end of the year 1924. They should be prepared to run a Congress Government parallel to the established Government in 1925 to demonstrate that they are quite capable of maintaining peace and order and fit for self-government. The Kartavya, while holding that the Cocanada session of the Congress was a success, notes with regret that the Congress failed to provide for the organisation of labour and to define swaraj. The Vartman remarks in a pessimistic tone that among all the great Indian leaders who could be seen in the National Congress at Cocanada there was none who could be called a true soldier of the nation and a true seeker of freedom. There was not one who could come forward and say that he was ready to sacrifice his life at the altar of freedom, and that he had pledged himself either to wipe out slavery from India or give up his life in the attempt. The Bharat Jivan says that despite the eulogies lavished upon the Poona Liberal Federation and the Cocanada Congress in their respective party organs, it remains a deplorable fact that there has been no improvement in the political situation in the country. The crying need of the hour is a leader who could command universal respect and who could effectively help in the solution of the difficulties of the country. The Medina remarks that it gives a lead to the right path and decides our course of action for the future. The Haqiqat says that the address in spite of being lengthy was very learned and remarkable. The Mashriq takes Maulana Muhammad Ali to task for belittling the Hindu-Muslim strifes and disturbances and observes that he has incurred the displeasure of both the Hindus and the Musalmans. The Ali brothers and their comrades are making the lot of the Muslims all the more miserable. The Najat expresses its gratification that contrary to all the apprehensions Maulana Muhammad Ali's statesmanship has saved the Congress from being divided into hostile functions. The Zulqarnain urges upon the Musalmans to organise a separate political association for themselves and not to leave their communal interests at the mercy of the Congress so that they may not be swallowed up by the Hindus and lose the importance which they enjoy in the country. The Hamdard eulogises the presidential address of Maulana Muhammad Ali and commends to every party in the country the portion of his speech dealing with the question of the Hindu-Muslim unity. It regrets, however, that the Cocanada Congress like the Delhi session has failed to accomplish any solid work.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Pratap regrets that the Congress could effect little in the direction of Hindu-Muslim unity. Maulana Muhammad Ali's dictum regarding the stoppage of cow-slaughter ill becomes the present president of the country. It is idle to aspire for swaraj when the Muhammadans cannot give up their weakness for beef-eating for a time and the Hindus cannot stop music before mosques for a high ideal. No serious problem can be solved without sacrifice. Without the stoppage of cow-slaughter there can be no real Hindu-Muslim unity, and in the absence of this consummation the attainment of swaraj is impossible.

Indians in the Colonies.

In a leading article headed "Indians in South Africa" the Leader says that the position of Indians in South Africa calls for serious attention. The anti-Indian immigration law of the Union has already placed them in terrible isolation in a land whose atmosphere has grown tense with racial arrogance and economic jealousy. The Government of India must take a strong stand now that all their sweet reasonableness has so far completely failed. Public opinion in this country must need be focussed on the situation in South Africa. It is much to be regretted that the matter has not received the attention it deserves and it is time that we in India woke up to the grave peril threatening to wipe out the Indian community in South Africa.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Indian press views the illness of Mr. Gandhi with grave concern and urges his immediate release. The Advocate says that all India will feel anxious till Mahatma is once more at liberty. If Mahatma were to die while in a British prison or still a prisoner in British hands, the hope of reconciliation between the Indian and the British would die with him, and the event would have a terrible reaction on the people all over the world. The Independence remarks that the fact that the Mahatma is in prison proclaims the terrible truth that India is in chains. Mahatma Gandhi is the personification of the genius of the Indian race. We ask for his release not because his health has suffered in the jail, but because the bureaucracy had no right to put him in jail. The disastrous breakdown of the Mahatma's health is an unassailable testimony to the incompetence of the Government to have in their charge that great soul's body any longer. After the operation the Government will continue to keep the Mahatma in prison at their own peril. In another article entitled "Prisons and Health" the Independence says that the Mahatma who was so careful of his health should have developed appendicitis necessitating an operation is a gross reflection on jail administration by the bureaucracy as much as it is a revelation of the kind of treatment political prisoners can obtain in jails which are built for thieves, dacoits and murderers. Every moment the Mahatma passes behind the rusted bars after this major operation is a moment of anxiety to the Indian people. India must speak out as one man, its one mind: "Release Gandhi." And if the Government ignores the demand of India it will do so at its own peril. The Leader says that if Mr. Gandhi is let off there will be universal rejoicing in the country. No just and honest Government need be afraid of Mr. Gandhi, and his release will be indication of a change of heart which cannot fail to produce a salutary effect. The Hamdam is confident that the resolution for the release of Mahatma Gandhi will be passed in the Assembly, and if the Viceroy exercises his special power in setting it aside, then a fire of opposition will surely break out in the country. In another article the same paper is of opinion that Mr. Gandhi's illness was due to his imprisonment. It suggests to the Governor of Bombay the advisability of releasing Mr. Gandhi without hesitation. The Tohfa-i-Hind is gratified that a resolution for the release of Mahatma Gandhi is to be moved in the Assembly and hopes that the Government will release him with a view to appease the people and in the interest of peace and order in India. The Al Khalil, on the other hand, asserts that the release of Mahatma Gandhi will not be the result of the resolution passed by the Assembly but the Government, in case of a war with Afghanistan, wants to have in India a powerful and influential personality strongly averse to the entry of any foreign power in India and this personality can be no other than that of Mahatma Gandhi.

The U. P. Ministers.

The Swarajist resolution of non-confidence in the Ministers has attracted considerable attention in the press and a mass of correspondence on the subject has appeared in the Lucknow papers. A Taluqdar nationalist writing in the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the crisis which threatens the present Ministry in the U. P. Council is also a crisis that faces the community of Zamindars and Taluqdars. Mr. Chintamani in a signed article published in the Leader describes the tactics of the Swarajists as "constitutional vandalism," and says that the relevant question is not whether the present Ministers are the best and ablest of available men, but what the "non-confidence" motion means and implies. The object of the Swarajists is to discredit, to wreck, to obstruct, to destroy, not to improve or reform. It is the duty of every member who has no faith in wrecking and destruction to disapprove and to discourage in every possible manner the insensate policy to which the Swarajists have pledged themselves. The Independence replies by calling Mr. Chintamani an abject apologist of the bureaucracy and its indigenous prop, the Ministry, and says that by characterising a sincere band of men who have no personal interests to serve as "constitutional vandals," Mr. Chintamani only reveals, incidentally, the depth of his own degradation. In another article the Independence says that the vote of censure is a censure of the system of dyarchy and of the spirit of cooperation which runs riot amongst a section of the Indian people. The Swarajists do not care for the results. It is their duty to clear their position before the public which is critically watching every movement of theirs in and out of the Council until the present system is changed and India released from alien leading strings. The Leader says that the Swarajists are up against the bureaucratic-cum-aristocratic block in the Council, and in spite of dissensions among the landholders, it doubts whether the motion will be carried. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the Swarajists have been deluded by the attitude of certain Zamindar members and have unnecessarily plunged in a struggle which they should have reserved for the budget time. It urges them to leave the present Ministers alone and to make preparation for an attack when the budget comes up for discussion. The Hamdam fails to understand the fault of the present Ministers which prompted certain members to move the resolution of non-confidence and remarks that in view of the popularity enjoyed by the Ministers the resolution is sure to be defeated.

The Akali agitation.

The Vartman says that by arresting the sixty-four members of the Shiromani Gurdwara Committee the bureaucracy has tried to destroy the power of organisation of the Akalis, but it will soon find out how far it can succeed in this attempt. Let the bureaucracy arrest sixty-four thousand Akalis instead of sixty-four, but the Shiromani Committee cannot be destroyed by it. The Congress has taken up the cause of the Akalis, and as soon as it gives its mandate all the Hindus and Musalmans of India will fill the places of the Akalis and enter into a battle with the bureaucracy. By its action the bureaucracy has thrown out a challenge to the whole of India. Brave Indians will now come forward to the field and make the bureaucracy taste the fruits of its shortsightedness. The Medina praises the peaceful political activities of Akalis and wishes that the Hindus and the Muhammadans would take a lesson from this small community and be active in emancipating India from the iron grip of an alien Government.

The Swaraj party.

The Aj points out that the Swarajists' Councils will prove as futile and harmful as the former ones if no effort is made to exercise pressure upon the Government through a vigorous agitation from outside the Councils. This can easily be effected by the Swarajists participating in the working of the constructive programme. In another article the same paper remarks that as the foundations of British rule in India have already been shaken, it would be for its own good if the Government were to convene a Round Table Conference as demanded by the Swaraj party and to try to improve the situation. The Abhyudaya opines that the Swarajists' demands are wholly justifiable and no one can offer any adverse comments on them. The Anand says that if Government succeeds in forming a party against the Swarajists in the Councils the latter's threat to wreck the Councils will be rendered ineffective, but in case it fails to do so, it will have to face a very difficult situation. If the Muhammadan members join the Government, of which signs are not wanting in view of the increased number of Muslim Ministers in Bengal and Bombay, the Swarajists cannot at all prevail against the Government. The Hamdam is sceptical about the Swarajists' success in the Council in view of their minority and remarks that an immature dissolution of the Legislatures due to their policy of obstruction will create fresh difficulties in their path and compel them to alter their policy. The Zulqarnain in a communicated article urges upon the Liberals to give their full support to Government and exhorts all sensible men to protest against the Swarajists' policy of obstruction. The Swadesh says that the Governor's assumption that the Swarajists will not translate into action their election cry to wreck the Councils is meant to seduce them from their pledges to the voters and play traitor to the country.

The Chowringhee murder.

The papers deplore the recent anarchist outrage in Calcutta. The Indian Daily Telegraph says there is no Indian of any position but does condemn the crime, but remarks that the Europeans, who have not hesitated to face the worst and to call upon the authorities to lose their senses and subject the people to repression, forget that the assassin was pursued by Indians at the risk of their own lives. The Leader condemns the murder as brutal and points out to the existence of a gang which eschewed violence under the influence probably of Mr. Gandhi's movement of non-violent non-cooperation but which has again resumed its activities with the collapse of the movement. In no country in the world has freedom been won by such methods. They defeat their own purpose and produce a reaction in the public mind which strengthens the forces of retrogression. The Hamdam thinks that the resuscitation of the revolutionaries and anarchists is due to the rejection by Government of the demands made by the non-cooperators. It warns the Government that in case it persists in its present policy, it is likely that the party of revolution will raise its head throughout the country.

Britain and Afghanistan.

THE Swadesh urges that if the Government of India does not allow the deputation, as suggested by Maulana Shaukat Ali, to proceed to Afghanistan to conclude an agreement with the Amir of Kabul, Indians should refuse to give any help to it in case a war is declared. The Nejat says that the Government is playing with fire at the frontier. The present condition of Great Britain does not justify her engaging in a quarrel with Afghanistan. Approving the suggestion of Maulana Shaukat Ali of sending an Indian deputation to Afghanistan, the Medina remarks that Great Britain wants to keep the two nations suspicious of each other, and that by bringing false accusations against Indian patriots she wishes to impress upon the minds of the people the fear of an Afghan invasion. The Mukhbir-i-Alam advises the Government not to engage in a costly war with Afghanistan as the present dispute can be amicably settled.

Turkey and Khilafat.

The Medina justifies the action taken by the Turkish Government against the publication of the Aga Khan's letter and remarks that Turkey being a hot-bed of foreign intrigues and Syed Amir Ali and the Aga Khan being more or less tools in British hands, the Turkish Government did well in protesting against its publication and prosecuting the editors. In another article the same paper describes Maulana Shaukat Ali's address at the Khilafat Conference as free from affectation and artificiality and remarks that he has fully exposed Great Britain's autocratic and freedom-killing diplomacy which has hitherto deceived the Moderates. The Mukhbir-i-Alam hopes that the proposed deputation to Angora will not prove extravagant like Maulana Muhammad Ali's deputation in England.

Death of Lenin.

The Independence says that the news of Lenin's death will cast a gloom not only in Russia but throughout the liberty-loving and autocracy-hating world. Lenin was a modern rishi, and his message, however cruelly misunderstood or selfishly misinterpreted, was not only for Russia but for mankind. Lenin's life-work and ideals will live as long as humanity endures. Lenin was a hero who had striven and greatly succeeded in bringing peace and happiness to an old country which had cruelly suffered for their attainment. The Pioneer remarks that judged by Soviet standards, M. Lenin probably achieved greatness; in the eyes of the civilised world he achieved his personal aim in the attainment of almost despotic power, but at an appalling cost in lives and misery to the Russian people.

The Labour Government in England.

The assumption of government by the Labour party has been generally well received, and the papers are satisfied with the selection of ministers. The Pioneer says that, taken as a whole, the Government is composed of real ability, most of whom have had no small experience of affairs. There is every indication, says the paper, that the country is prepared to give them a fair trial, and that they will be judged, as every administration should be judged, by their performance and not by their previous records or their promises. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that in his choice of a ministry Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has shown the steadiness and calm grasp which we had a right to expect from the one man to whom Labour looks forward to obtain the stamp on it of considered statesmanship, but the inclusion in the Cabinet of Lord Chelmsford will be received with positive dismay in India. Perhaps Lord Chelmsford is to be the lamb to be thrown to appease the Liberal wolf prowling in the Labour corridor sneaking for its prey. The Leader says that the advent of Labour makes an event of first-rate national importance. To those who are struggling against the inexorable pressure of capitalism or foreign political domination the rise of the Labour Party has conveyed a message of hope and faith. India particularly has special reasons to welcome the change in Government at Whitehall and rejoice at the exit of Lords Peel and Winterton, and the advent in their places of men of different ideals and a higher purpose. The acid test of the profession of Labour lies in the fact that timely concession to Indian sentiments must be made by making the governance of India in the letter and spirit responsible to the Indian people. In another article the Leader says that the Labour Government is an unique event in the history of Great Britain. The great empire built by the concentration of centuries has definitely passed to the man of ideas from the pompous man with a stake in the land. It is to be governed by brains and not by the purse. India wishes the new Government every success in its undoubtedly difficult venture and hopes it will have the vision and the courage to deal justly by her. The Abhyudaya hopes that the bureaucracy in India will cease to continue to be as irresponsible as at present, and in a way Indians will be accorded the right of self-determination and will no longer be treated as inferiors. The Hamdam, however, has no hope that India will become free if the Labour party comes into power and remarks that however independent-minded a party may be, it always gives preference to the interests of its own nation and country over the interests of its subject nation. The Aryapatra does not expect that the Labour party will be able to satisfy the wishes of the Indians as it does not command an absolute majority in Parliament and will have to seek the support of the Liberals for its continuance. The Tohfa-i-Hind says Mr. Ramsay MacDonald will not be prepared to endanger the stability of his Government by attempting to grant more rights to India in face of the opposition of the Liberal and Conservative element in Parliament. The Hindustani remarks that it is impossible for the Labour party to accept our demands at once but its coming into power indicates that our future is bright. The Mashriq opines that the Indians should entertain no hope from any political party of England and that the sympathy of the Labour party can be of no avail until the spirit of attaining self-government is created in India itself.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Oudh Akhbar regrets that the vindictive spirit displayed by the white colonists in starting a boycott movement against the Indian traders only casts an ugly slur on European civilisation. The Medina remarks that the Indians can hardly be able to help their brethren in foreign countries when even in their own country they cannot keep themselves safe from British oppression. A nation which could not hold its own against a Power in its own country can never be expected to subdue the same Power in Kenya and the Transvaal.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hamdam protests against the hostile attitude adopted by the Hindu press against Muslim leaders like Maulana Muhammad Ali and remarks that in face of such painful writings the Musalmans can no longer be expected to suffer patiently. If the Hindu leaders really desire unity they should first of all silence these promoters of religious dissensions. The Al Burid resents the Hindu opposition aroused by the Bengal Swarajists' pact and remarks that the Congress by rejecting the same has given a proof of its partiality towards the Hindus. One "Arya Putra" writing in the Jiwan urges the need of Hindus erecting monuments in Agra, Saharanpur and other places to commemorate the atrocities of Muhammadans upon them and to warn their future generations against placing any reliance upon the Muhammadans in future as they profess a religion diametrically opposed to their own and are sure to prove perfidious in the hour of need. The Sudharak condemns the Muhammadan frenzy in connection with the Howrah disturbance and remarks that if the Hindus had any spirit they would have organised themselves in a moment aud made the bigotted Muhammadans taste the bitter fruit of their cruelty and callousness against themselves. It exhorts the Hindus to wake up even now and devote themselves to the adoption of practical measures for their organisation and protection. The Kartavya holds that Mr. C. R. Dass has proved himself to be an enemy of the country by throwing the apple of discord among Hindus and Muhammadans and is thus responsible for dragging the country once more into the mire of mutual dissessions and the consequent division of the public mind from the pursuit of their national struggle.

Civil disobedience in Gujrat.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the success of the Borsad satyagraha has sent out a thrilling message to the spiritless and the suffering. The Government must either yield or face the music. It is getting rather difficult to govern India. The Vartman characterises the action of the Governor of Bombay in bringing the Borsad civil disobedience campaign to an end as wise and tactful and urges the restoration of the confiscated property to their owners. The Bhartiya Lokmat says that the success of civil disobedience in Borsad shows that satyagraha can be successfully practised at any place provided full preparations are made beforehand and people are ready to undergo all sorts of hardships and sacrifice. It is certain that satanic forces cannot prevail against divine forces for long.

The Akali agitation.

The Swadesh points out that the arrest of sixty members of the new Shromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee will not disconcert the Akalis. If the Congress were to accept the Government's challenge serious developments would take place. The Punjab is to be congratulated on the appointment of Sir Malcolm Hailey as its next Governor, as this appointment is bound to aggravate matters there. The Kartavya remarks: The Akalis are a brave, courageous and self-respecting people. The bureaucracy cannot tolerate such a living community. It only desires to render the people weak and spiritless in order to keep them in subjection for ever. The Punjab bureaucracy has almost taken a vow to wipe out the Akalis, but the latter too are making a courageous stand against it. As soon as the mandate of the Congress goes out thousands of Hindus and Muhammadans will march forward to help the Akalis. This struggle between the bureaucracy, proud of its brute force, and the Akalis, firm in their vow of non-violence, will indeed be a terrible one. In view of its defeat in Guru-ka-bagh, Nagpur and Borsad the bureaucracy should realise that it cannot hold its ground against the Akalis for long. Protesting against the policy of repression pursued by the Government, the Medina remarks that a self-respecting people like the Akalis, which regards troubles and miseries as a means to success, can never be cowed by oppression. It is at a loss to understand why the Government, in spite of so much experience, still wishes to maintain an obstinate attitude and to add another reverse to its long list of defeats.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Indian papers continue to urge the immediate release of Mr. Gandhi. The Independence remarks that refusal to release Mahatmaji, even after the grave crisis to his health, will mean that the British Government is devoid of any sense of humanity and fellow-feeling, and that refusal to release him is bound to create a great revulsion of feeling. After paying a tribute to Colonel Maddock for his service to Britain and India, which has produced a deep impression on the minds of Indians, the Leader asks: Will British statesmanship fail to rise to the occasion and refuse to take advantage of the warm feelings aroused in healing the sore caused by Mr. Gandhi's imprisonment? Colonel Maddock has done his duty, let the Government do its own. The Nyaya remarks that if the Government of India is considering the question of the release of Mahatma Gandhi it is doing so, not out of any feeling of charity but because of the apprehension of its hands being forced by the Swarajists in the Assembly and the Labour Government in England, which must rectify the blunder of the Indian bureaucracy in this respect. The Anand says that Lord Reading will be well-advised to order the release of Mahatma Gandhi on account of his illness otherwise Government will be discredited and unrest will increase in case he dies in jail. If the Viceroy will not release him, in deference to the resolution in the Assembly, he will lose the opportunity of earning a good name for himself. The Kartavya asks the Indians to make India free first if they want Mahatma Gandhi to be released. It will be a blot on the country if he were released by Government by way of favour. The Hamdam resents the action of the Government in depriving Mr. Gandhi of private medical advice in the beginning of his illness and thus making it all the more serious. The Government by its action has rendered its position very delicate. The Al Khalil advises the Government to release Mr. Gandhi as he will prove a most useful man in case the Afghan war breaks out and remarks that he will surely be released if the Labour party comes into power. It will be better to release him before suffering a defeat in the Assembly.

Release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani.

Deploring the treatment meted out to Hasrat Mohani in jail, the Medina does not hope that the Hindus will agitate for the release of the Maulana however great a patriot he may be and exhorts the Musalmans to demand his release along with that of Mr. Gandhi. The Hamdam protests against the hardships imposed upon Maulana Hasrat Mohani and asks the Assembly to move a resolution for his release. It takes the people to task for doing nothing practical and hopes that the new Governor of Bombay will not follow the footsteps of his predecessor in victimising the leaders.

The Swaraj Party.

The passing of the "no-confidence" motion in the Central Provinces Council is interpreted by the Indian Daily Telegraph as an event of great importance. The paper remarks that the Council of the Central Provinces today stands wrecked. The collapse of the wonderful Britisher, trained to administer India, is pathetic: it seems he has forgotten even the act of governing in the presence of danger. Whether the Swarajists carry the non-confidence motion or not in other provinces, the grip with the bureaucracy in the Central Provinces will bring out the British Government as an engine of autocracy. The Pioneer remarks India's progress towards full responsible government will undoubtedly receive a severe set-back if their wrecking policy should succeed. Non-cooperators have shown themselves absolutely reckless where the interests of their country are concerned, and while their impotence to govern India themselves is notorious, they are ready to destroy the only Government that is possible. These men have notoriously no conception of what they are aiming at. It is, indeed, time the situation were frankly met. The present condition of affairs is becoming intolerable and it is gravely detrimental to the prosperity and progress of India. Commenting on the Swarajist demands in the Legislative Assembly the Leader says: It is not improbable that the Swarajist demands when made, not through the constitutional channel provided by the Government of India Act, in the form of a resolution, but by the registered post in the form of an ultimatum, will be summarily rejected. The Bhartiya Lokmat says that there is no doubt that India will secure freedom one day or the other and it will be but wise statesmanship to gracefully accede to what will have to be done under force of circumstances and thereby avoid unnecessary unrest, bitterness and agitation. When the establishment of self-government in India is the declared aim of the British policy, Lord Reading will do well to accept the Swarajist demand for a Round Table Conference to settle the question. The Surya, on the other hand, remarks that Government, strong as it is, can never yield to the humiliating terms of the Swarajists and that the latter should moderate their demands if anything is to come out of their agitation. The Ariyapatra remarks that if the Government rejects the demands of the Swarajists, then it will be altogether an act of self-deception for the Indians to cooperate with the Government any more. Every patriotic member of the Assembly should cooperate with the Swarajists so that a successful war may be waged against the bureaucracy. The Oudh Akhbar describes the resolution of "No-confidence" passed by the C. P. Council as the first victory of the Swarajists and advises the Government to reconciliate the Swarajists by promising to support their demands strongly. The Nejat says that the money and energy spent by the Swarajists in contesting the elections would have been better employed in pushing forward the constructive programme of the Congress. The Azad remarks that the Swarajists by taking the oath of allegiance have in a sense indicated their willingness to cooperate in carrying out the work for which the Councils have been established.

The U. P. Ministry.

The Swarajist papers continue their propaganda against the U. P. Ministry. Mr. C. R. Ranga Iyer in a signed article says that the purpose of the Swarajists in bringing the no-confidence motion at the very outset of their entry into the Council must be plain to those who know their pledge to the party and their manifesto to their constituents. The definite appeal to them by the Head of these provinces to break their pledge and forget their promise to the electorate has compelled them to make it clear to a questioning and doubting world that they propose to do nothing of the kind. The origin of the no-confidence motion is in the inaugural address of the Governor of the provinces to our new Councillors. The immediate objective of the provincial Swarajists is to remove this half-way house by a series of ministerial crises. He appeals to the members of the Council to see whether it is consistent with the aspirations of the people of their own character as popular representatives to cooperate with those who agree to work dyarchy and await in loyal submission the day when it might please their "masters" to fling a few more bones before their faithful dogs. The Anand apprehends that if the Zamindar opponents of the present Ministry in the United Provinces join the Swarajists the resolution of no-confidence against the Ministers will be carried. It doubts whether any compromise could be effected among the ranks of Zamindar members to avert this serious contingency. The Aj asserts that Ministers after Ministers will fall victims to no-confidence resolutions so long as swaraj is not established. No capable patriotic Indian can accept the office of Minister until his appointment and dismissal are under the control of the Council and not that of the Governor, and if anybody does so he will occupy a very unenviable position as has been made apparent in the case of Mr. C. Y. Chintamani and Pandit Jagat Narayan Mulla. In another article the paper regrets the acceptance of the office of Minister by Rai

Rajeshwar Bali and remarks that those who become a part of dyarchy must be prepared for trouble and opposition as the people are determined to get rid of this obstacle in the path of swaraj.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman remarks that no one who has even a superficial knowledge of Indian history can deny that while Indians were prosperous before the advent of British rule in India, the average income of an Indian has now been reduced to rupees thirty a year. The indigenous industries of the country have been destroyed and unemployment has followed in its wake. Indian money has been and is being terribly wasted in maintaining the white elephant of the Civil Service. The insults to which Indians are every day subjected by the whites, the atrocities that are perpetrated on Indian women in the railway trains and the brutal oppression practised upon the poor labourers in the mills are but the inevitable concomitants of British rule in this country. The same paper warns the Indians against the anti-Indian propaganda carried on in America and other countries and asks the Congress to adopt counter-measures against it, bearing in mind that without some such action on its part opinion is likely to remain prejudiced against India. The Bharat Jiwan refers to shooting accidents in which Indians have been killed at the hands of Europeans and points out that in such cases there is generally miscarriage of justice, with the result that Europeans are encouraged to indulge in violence and haughtiness. The only cure for this tendency is for the Indians to retaliate in self-defence out of a sense of self-respect and not seek redress in law courts. The Nyaya says that the treatment meted out to the heirs of Amba Bai Desai in respect of their rights in the Sankali State should make the Indian Chiefs realise how the bureaucracy treats as a scrap of paper the treaties entered into between their ancestors and the Government of India. The bureaucracy becomes blind with rage when it sees any Indian Chief taking interest in national affairs and does not hesitate to take the most arbitrary action against him.

Great Britain and Afganistan.

The Utsah says that the efforts of the Amir of Kabul to establish his supremacy over the frontier tribes, the steady advance of the Bolsheviks in Central Asia and their attempts to win over the Afghans to their side and Maulana Shaukat Ali's speech in the Congress Subjects Committee at Cocanada have greatly exercised the mind of Lord Reading who is now busy devising means to extricate himself successfully from the complicated situation. The Medina hopes that the political relations between the two countries will not be adversely affected if Great Britain abstains from indulging in arrogance and the English press changes its bellicose attitude. The Indians cherish friendly feelings towards the Afghans and it will be harmful to Great Britain if it goes to war with Afghanistan. The Al Khalil reproduces from the Aman-i-Afghan an article saying that Great Britain has in fact suffered a discomfiture in the present quarrel and if it again stands up against Afghanistan it will have to bear extraordinary loss of life and money. England should know that she cannot rest in peace by provoking Afghanistan. In another article the same paper remarks that Great Britain by holding out a threat of war has turned Afghanistan and Russia into enemies. The Al Bureed avers that the accusations made by the Englishman against the Afghan Government were unjustified and malicious considering that the latter is exerting every nerve to maintain friendly relations with Great Britain.

Khilafat.

The Mansur ridicules the Sharif for laying claim to the office of Khalifa as he is not an independent ruler and remarks that if the Turks ignore the question of the Khalifa's status, the Muslim world will be obliged to take it up in its own hands along with that of the Jazirat-ul-Arab.

Death of Lenin.

The Leader says that Lenin was the heart and soul of the new movement in Russia. But there is no doubt that he came in for a good deal of unmerited criticism in the capitalistic press of England, who had much to fear from the Bolshevik propaganda in the Middle East. The Aj says that after Mahatma Gandhi Mr. Lenin was the greatest man of the world in the present age. Humanity has suffered an irreparable loss by his death. May God give his followers strength to fulfil his mission of the emancipation of the world.

The new Ministry in Egypt.

The Leader says that the rise of Zaglul Pasha under the new constitution constitutes a landmark in the political development of Egypt. In contrast with Swarajist methods of obstruction, says the paper, the Egyptian nationalists did not refuse to make what use they could of the opportunities provided for it by the new constitution for the service of their country. The idea of wrecking the constitution by launching upon a career of reckless opposition within the legislatures, such as has appealed to the Swarajists in India, has not found favour with the Egyptian nationalists, who are as keen on the consummation of their aspirations as our "neo-non-cooperators." When called upon to form a ministry Zaglul Pasha, unlike Mr. C. R. Das, did not wobble and refuse to accept responsibility. The paper does not doubt that the method which the Zaglulists have chosen to carry on their struggle is far more potent and less liable to arouse hostility on the part of the British Government than the Swarajist way of winning India's freedom by insensate obstruction and presentation of "national" demands per "registered post." The Pioneer regrets that Zaglul Pasha should have included the independence of Sudan in his statement of policy.

The Labour Government.

The Leader says that India wishes the new Government every success in its undoubtedly difficult venture and hopes it will have the vision and the courage to deal justly by her. It approves the appointment of the new Secretary of State for India and says that his writings show that he is free from racial and colour prejudice, and that so far as the domestic politics of England are concerned he is a strong radical. In dealing with India he should try to follow in the footsteps of

Mr. Montagu and undo all the mischief that has been done by his predecessor-in-office. The paper is satisfied with the new Ministers in England, several of whom are noted for the sympathetic interest they have evinced in Indian affairs, save Viscount Chelmsford who like the curate's egg is good in parts. Quoting Sir Sidney Olivier's views with regard to India the Leader says that extremists on both sides may please take note of this. Lord Reading has now a splendid opportunity of doing something substantial for India and making his lustrum a memorable one. The time is now overdue for his Government to make constructive suggestions for further political advance in accordance with public demand. The people of India are among those who are struggling for freedom, security from exploitation and a happier life. Will they be helped in that struggle by Labour or will the latter also fail to act up to its professions? According to the Advocate the appointment of Sir Sidney Olivier as Secretary of State for India will be regarded as a result of strong representation from official heads in India. It regrets that in rejecting Colonel Wedgwood the Labour Party succumbed to the pressure of vested interests. The Bir Hindu does not entertain any high hopes for India from the Labour Government and remarks that the only way in which it can make its régime memorable is to release Mahatma Gandhi and the other political prisoners. The Arya Patra points out that the only way in which India can have its wishes fulfilled is to carry on the agitation and create obstruction in the Councils. India should not allow this chance to slip away and should do its utmost to harass the bureaucracy and compel it to bow down its haughty head. The Hindustani advises the Indians not to depend upon the Labour Government, but to continue their struggle with increased energy and vigour till they succeed in forcing the Labour Government to recognise their demands. The Oudh Akhbar expresses its satisfaction at the appointment of Sir Sidney Olivier as the Secretary of State for India. Referring to the Premier's message to the Hindu the Nejat says that the Indians are now well aware of the deceitful and cunning policy pursued by the Government and hence such threats can be of no avail. India's success lies only in silent and peaceful resistance. The Hamdam remarks that the Premier's message to India proves that the dream of India's freedom can never be realised during the régime of the Labour Party. It regrets that he has not uttered a single word of sympathy for the Indians and on the other hand has held out a severe threat to them. The paper is not sanguine that Sir Sidney Olivier will sympathise with the aspirations of Indians and tolerate any change in the present system of administration. It, however, hopes that the new Premier will establish friendly relations with Turkey and other Muslim countries and take a broadminded view of the daily increasing awakening in the East and its desire for liberty. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's message to India has been commented upon adversely by the Swarajist press. The Vartman says that Mr. MacDonald has followed in the wake of Conservatives and Imperialists, the inveterate opponents of democracy, in his remarks about India. His advice to Indians to follow constitutional methods and his threat to the Swarajists who are determined to carry on a policy of unadulterated obstruction must open the eyes of Congressmen who should now give up their attachment for the Empire. In another article the paper says that the Labour representatives in Parliament are in fact Liberals in disguise and their outlook is not broader than that of Imperialist Lloyd George. It asserts that despite the Premier's threat Indians will not give up non-cooperation which has proved a blessing to them. The Aj says: Let those who had built hopes on the Labour Ministry see what a change the altered circumstances have brought about in its angle of vision. Indians have got to accept this challenge from the new Premier in the same manner in which they accepted challenges from Mr. Montagu and Mr. Lloyd George in the past. In another article the same paper remarks that a vigorous prosecution of the boycott of British goods in India will aggravate the unemployment problem in England and compel Parliament to enter into a compromise with India. The Utsah warns the Indians in view of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's views against direct action and in favour of constitutional methods, not to entertain any hopes that he will grant swaraj to Indians but to continue their activities for its attainment. The Anand does not expect that anything substantial will be done by the Labour Government in the matter of advancing India on the road to self-government. It asks the Labour Government to pay attention to the solution of the Akali question. If it fails to do so, it will have to be admitted that so far as India is concerned it matters little which political party holds the reins of Government in Britain. The Prem says that though the Labour Party has pledged itself to the grant of responsible government to India, it is doubtful whether it will be able to redeem its pledge owing to its dependence on the Liberal Party. The Bhartiya Lokmat has no hopes from the Labour Government in England and urges the Indians to devote themselves to the formation of a very powerful organisation to enforce the boycott of British goods so as to accentuate the unemployment problem in England. This will surely compel the Labour Government and the British capitalists to come to terms with the Indians. Referring to Colonel Wedgwood's recent speech in England sympathising with Indian aspirations the Aj says that Indians should not rejoice over it, seeing that the professions of politicians widely differ from their practices. The Vartman remarks that Colonel Wedgwood's speech indicates that the Labour Party wants to swallow the Swaraj Party and put an end to its agitation. Just as the Moderates were reduced to a deplorable position by being fed on false hopes, in the same manner it is being sought to deal with Swarajists. If the Swaraj Party falls a prey to these allurements, then it will meet the same fate which has befallen the Moderates.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Kartavya condemns the new legislation against Indians in South Africa. It says that the Classes Areas Bill is designed to reduce them to the status of outcastes and that it is no wonder that they should be thus wronged and insulted in the Colonies when they are slaves in their own country. If they want to be free and to secure honourable treatment in the Colonies, they will have to launch the movement for the boycott of British goods. The Hamdam describes the new Immigration Bill as a cruel method of depriving the Indians of the right of citizenship. It exhorts the Indians to unite and take no rest until equal rights of citizenship are granted to them throughout the Empire.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on the National Pact the Pioneer says that it will be interesting to see whether Dr. Ansari and Lala Lajpat Rai will prove more successful than Mr. C. R. Das in allaying communal jealousy and distrust. The Hamdam exhorts the Musalmans to establish a powerful national organisation to combat successfully the activities of the Hindu Mahasabha and remarks that they have now every opportunity to reorganise the Muslim League on the above lines. One Thakur Lal Tiwari writing in the Desh Bhakta says that Khwaja Hasan Nizami's new book clearly shows that Muhammadans are bent upon destroying Hindus. He urges the Hindus to keep aloof from the Congress till they attain communal freedom. If the Muhammadan leaders cannot stop cow-killing before the attainment of swaraj it is impossible that they can do so after it. If the Hindus do not completely organise themselves before the advent of swaraj they are sure to be annihilated on its establishment. In a communicated article the Al Khalil remarks that in the absence of feelings of toleration, whether religious or political among the Indians, any discussion regarding the pact only serves to betray their unfitness for swaraj. The Mashriq is glad that the Hindus have expressed their disapproval of the Swarajists' pact as such devices on the part of the Hindus are designed to crush the Musalmans after obtaining swaraj with their aid.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Independence says that the statement of Mr. Muhammad Ali about a message that he is alleged to have received through the agency of young Devidas places Mahatma Gandhi in a very false position. We do not believe a word of what Devidas, Mr. Muhammad Ali thinks, told him, nor do we believe that Mahatma Gandhi could have violated his principle of listening to Devidas's discussion of the political situation outside and sent a message of any kind to Mr. Muhammad Ali from inside the prison. Referring to Mr. Gandhi's message, the Aligarh Gazette remarks that in spite of the Ali brothers holding him in high reverence, Mr. Gandhi never hesitates to prove them to be liars. The present incident will have a far-reaching effect upon the political life of the Ali brothers and in future their tactics of exploiting the name of Mr. Gandhi will not be effective. The Oudh Akhbar advises the Government to earn public applause by releasing Mr. Gandhi at once and remarks that if in the discussions in the Assembly the Government members resort to their old practice of abusing the leaders, then the Swarajists are likely to rouse the public sentiments against the Government and resort to direct action instead of making constitutional efforts for his release. The Hindustani avers that the non-cooperation movement cannot be checked by keeping Mr. Gandhi in prison and the Government by rejecting the demand for his release will discredit itself in the eyes of the public. The Arya Patra remarks that the leaders by taking no practical step for his release have given proof of their lack of courage and have shown themselves devoid of any sense of duty and sentiments of liberty. If the Indian youths had really the freedom of India at heart they would have got Mr. Gandhi released within a year or would have themselves gone to jail. Writing in a similar strain the Al Bureed exhorts the people to demand the release of Maulana Hasrat along with Mr. Gandhi and remarks that the latter being a strong Khilafatist his release will be hailed with delight by the Musalmans. The Tohfa-i-Hind opines that the release of Mr. Gandhi is sure to remove the distrust against the Government and disarm the agitators of their most effective weapon of agitation. The Medina says that Mr. Gandhi's imprisonment betrays the autocracy of the Government which can easily rectify its mistake by releasing him at once along with Hasrat Mohani and other political prisoners and by peacefully putting an end to the struggle between Mr. Gandhi and itself. The Aj takes it for granted that the release of Mahatma Gandhi cannot be withheld any longer, and says that if the release is not made unconditional it is certain that a wave of discontent and dissatisfaction will spread in the country resulting in an all-India satyagraha. Let the Government realise that it will not be able to withstand the force of this all-India satyagraha and that it will be compelled to release the Mahatma unconditionally. The Arya Mitra hopes that the Government of India will show the same generosity in releasing Mahatma Gandhi as it did in removing him to the hospital for his satisfactory treatment. It thinks that the circumstances which led to his incarceration no longer exist and it is now time that he was released. The Surya urges the Government to release Mahatma Gandhi in response to public opinion and thereby earn the gratitude of the country. The Bhartiya Lokmat says that if the bureaucracy has committed a blunder in imprisoning Mahatma Gandhi, it should admit it and repent of it. The Government should act courageously and release him unconditionally if a better situation is to be created in the country and more harmonious relations are to prevail between the officials and the people. The Aligarh Gazette is the only paper which sounds a dissenting note and interprets Mr. Gandhi's message as a desire to demand his release. Mr. Gandhi never enjoyed a greater peace of mind than in prison and to give any practical shape to his desire will be detrimental to the interests of the public as well as to that of Mr. Gandhi himself.

The Swaraj Party.

The Leader continues to severely attack the Swarajist policy in relation to the legislative councils. Commenting on the deadlock in the Central Provinces the Leader says: They will be mistaken if they fancy that by such means they will hasten the advent of swaraj. To speak plainly, it must be clear to thoughtful minds that the Swarajist challenges and threats are merely childish. In another article the paper says that a party bent upon not reforming but ending the Government ought to seek its opportunities elsewhere than in the legislature. One looks in vain for the sense of proportion, foresight, and compromise in the policy of the Swarajists and they deserve to be beaten all along the line. Our only regret is that as a result of their fatuous policy the country's interest is likely to suffer. The position of the constitutionalists has been rendered very difficult. If the Reforms are wrecked, the old autocracy will be re-established and the forms of democratic government will be discarded. If the country were prepared for revolution there might be some justification for the Swarajist policy. But the collapse of the non-cooperation movement conclusively shows that it is not. The Advocate says that both the Moderates who criticise the Swarajists and the officials should bear in mind that the electors are at the back of the Swarajist programme of mending or ending the Reforms. Not only the electors but the vast majority of the people are entirely in agreement with the Swarajist policy of obstruction until the national demands are satisfied. It has full confidence in the sagacity of Swarajist leaders to avoid the pitfalls. The Gorakshan says that the demands of the Swaraj Party represent a reversion to the old policy of mendicancy which is as unlikely to be fruitful now as it was ever before and will only drag the country backward. The people will do well to oppose their demands and have recourse to self-help for their deliverance.

The U. P. Ministers.

The Zulqarnain says that the Swarajists were not justified in moving the resolution of no-confidence. They ought to have presented their demands first and then launched out a destructive programme if those demands were rejected. By keeping the ministerial offices vacant the Government machinery cannot be brought to a standstill. Writing in a similar strain the Aftab exhorts the members of the Council not to encourage the Swarajists in their policy of destruction but offer a strong opposition to them. The Garhwali remarks that the Swarajist members are not well advised in their action as it will only alienate the Ministers and will not bring the country nearer to swaraj.

The Adh-Kumbh mela at Allahabad.

Prohibitory orders of the Allahabad district authorities regarding bathing at the sangam have evoked universal resentment in the Hindu press. The Aj says that the satyagraha which took place at Allahabad on the Sankrant day shows that the local authorities are incapable of managing the fair and that it is but fit that the Governor should transfer the responsibility of managing the fair on to the municipal board which has volunteered to undertake it. In another article the same paper remarks that by violating the order of the District Magistrate Madan Mohan Malaviya and others have made it clear to the authorities that it is only by resorting to satyagraha that the people can compel them to respect their views. The Anand says that the United Provinces Government will not be well advised in prosecuting those who participated in the satyagraha at Tribeni. This will only fan the fire of discontent among the Hindus. When the Hindus were prepared to undertake the responsibility of managing the fair, obstinacy on the part of the local authorities was altogether unjustified. The Abhyudaya says that the District Magistrate's order was improper, illegal and unjustifiable. It was nothing short of a challenge to the entire Hindu populace and we wish to say this plainly that instead of a few Hindus violating the magisterial order and bathing at the confluence, we should have preferred that all the Hindus assembled at the Tribeni had drowned themselves in the Ganges. The Bhartiya Lokmat warns the District Magistrate of Allahabad not to repeat the exhibition of such self-will in religious matters in future as led to the practice of satyagraha at Tribeni or else very serious consequences are likely to ensue therefrom. The Vartman remarks that the Tribeni satyagraha was the sequel of the foolish decision and behaviour of the authorities. They wanted to crush the religious sentiments of the Hindus on the pretext of the depth of the Ganges. But the determination of the pilgrims to save their religion even at the cost of their lives compelled the District Magistrate to withdraw his orders and brought home to the authorities the infinite force of satyagraha. The Kartavya says that the prohibitory orders were issued not because of the dangers attending bathing at the place but because the District Magistrate wanted to make a show of his power and to tell the world that the British controlled even the religion of the Indians. The successful satyagraha of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and others in this connection should convince even the most sceptic of the efficacy of this weapon of satyagraha. Self-willed officials like Mr. Knox should fully realise that the Hindus, despite their subjection, have enough of religious self-respect to be ready to sacrifice even their lives in its defence. Mahatma Gandhi's doctrine of satyagraha has taken hold of the hearts of the Indians and they will always use this weapon notwithstanding all the war paraphernalia of the Government in case their religion is attacked. The Bharat Jiwan points out that the satyagraha at Tribeni shows how spirit can be created even among lifeless Hindus by interference with their religious matters and expresses the hope that the Government which is already at its wits end owing to the Akali agitation, will think twice before provoking the followers of other creeds.

The Viceroy's speech.

Commenting on the Viceroy's speech at the opening of the new Legislatures the Pioneer remarks that the Viceroy admirably and with great lucidity stated the political situation with which India is faced. Referring to His Excellency's warning to the non-cooperators the paper says if these men will not be deterred at the eleventh hour from pursuing the foolish and insensate policy to which they have committed themselves, upon them will rest the full responsibility for what must inevitably follow the paralysis of Council Government. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the Viceroy's speech cannot be described as conciliatory to the council wreckers and on that score must be hailed with satisfaction by the retrograde elements in the country. The vague suspicions about a change of heart as a result of the Labour Government were dispelled by the threat of the Labour Premier who did not hesitate to display the shopkeeper character of his race by unnecessarily abusing Indians. Referring to the Liberals the paper says: These time-serving politicians are already by the side of the officials in supporting the Government against Swarajist attacks. The Viceroy has taken advantage of these reeds as well as the frail bark on which Mr. Ramsay MacDonald is embarked in making one of the most retrograde speeches of which he has become a past master.

Khilafat affairs.

THE Al Balagh of Lucknow disputes the Sharif's right to Khilafat and remarks that any participation in this question on the part of Englishmen, who have been ever trying to spread dissension among the Muslims, will be greatly resented by the Muslim world. The Musalmans, who are well aware of the Sharif's treachery, can never acknowledge him as their Khalifa. The Najat says that the Sharif has now resorted to extreme mischief and cunning and that his recent activities are due to British support. By proclaiming himself Khalifa he will have to face great difficulties in Arabia as the Arabs, in spite of being lavishly supplied with money by Great Britain, are well aware of the true state of things and know who is pulling the wire from behind the curtain. Referring to the Sharif's message to Great Britain the Hamdam remarks: When the Sharif himself, after taking the oath of allegiance in Ka'aba, played false to the Turks, who were the greatest benefactors of the Arabs, how can he expect a Christian Power to keep faith with him. The fate of the Arabs has been sealed and the Sharif's wailings are like a cry in the wilderness. The Medina regrets that owing to disunity and dissension prevailing among the Arabs British diplomacy has achieved success in Palestine and that the Arab, ignorant of politics and ever avaricious and greedy, has at last been entrapped.

The Labour Government.

Commenting on the British recognition of the "Union Soviet Republics" in Russia, the Pioneer says that the first and most important act of the new Labour Government is unlikely to evoke much enthusiasm in Great Britain, at any rate outside the ranks of the Labour Party. The paper is sceptic whether it will be possible to conclude that "definite and practical agreement" which the Labour Government have in view on a basis satisfactory to the British people. The Leader suggests to the new Secretary of State for India the immediate need of ordering an inquiry into the economic condition of India, and says that among the main causes of dissatisfaction with British rule is the extremely unsatisfactory economic condition of the masses, who are, therefore, ready to listen to any subversive doctrine and to sympathise with extremist propaganda. The remedy can be found not in extreme forms of socialism but in a compromise between individualism and socialism. The British Labour Party is the fittest instrument to bring about such a compromise at least within the British Empire, provided it remains true to its ideals and applies them not only to the solution of its domestic problems but also to those of India. The vernacular press continues to express resentment against the Premier's message to the Indian people and the burden of its song has been one of general distrust in the British statesmen irrespective of the parties to which they may belong. The Al Bureed says that in view of the past utterances of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald the Indians were justified in entertaining high hopes for India from the Labour Government, but the Premier's message to the Hindu has now disillusioned them. The Arya Patra deplores the attitude adopted by the Premier after coming into power and remarks that he has not only ignored the sentiments and the demands of the Indians but has held out a threat to them. Those who are entertaining high hopes from the Labour Party are in fact falling a prey to a sad blunder and deception, as whatever party may reign supreme in England its policy will always be opposed to the interests of the Indians. The Aligarh Gazette characterises it as an act of self-deception on the part of the Swarajists to expect swaraj from the Labour Government as by their anti-British activities they are planning to starve the English labourers. The Mashriq does not expect any change in the angle of vision of Great Britain by the ascendancy of the Labour Party to power. But the change of Government in England will prove beneficial to Turkey as the Labour Government will avoid incurring huge expenditure on war preparation. The Tohfa-i-Hind describes the Premier's message as a challenge to the Congressmen and the non-cooperators and remarks that it is idle to expect that Englishmen by lowering the prestige of their own countrymen would stoop down to help the Indian slaves. The Hamdam interprets the Premier's message as a threat to the Swarajists and remarks that if the Government gives practical assurances of its change of attitude the Swarajists will have no cause to harass the Government. The Bharat Jiwan avers that India has no cause to be too much elated at the Labour ministry in England, seeing that self-interest will be too strong for the Labour Party to deal justly by India. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's recent threat to India to confine itself to constitutional methods makes it quite plain that the iron grip on India will not be relaxed whether those in power in Britain are Conservatives or Labourites. The Swadesh says that it will be folly to expect that the change in ministry in England will assure immediate emancipation of India. Those who built hopes on the Labour Government must have been seriously disappointed by the appointment of Sir Sidney Oliver and Mr. Robert Richards as the Secretary and the Under Secretary of State for India. It considers Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's recent threat to India as a challenge to the non-violent non-cooperation movement and says that the best reply to this challenge will be for the Indians to realise their subjection and to work earnestly for the fulfilment of the constructive programme for their deliverance. The Kartavya asserts that the threat of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald cannot cow down Indians who have found out that the attainment of swaraj depends only upon their own exertions and that they can establish it only through the non-cooperation movement. The Aj displays an attitude of indifference in the matter of the change in the British ministry as it considers the Labour Party, notwithstanding its high-sounding professions, to be no better than the Conservative in its treatment of India. In another article the same paper belittles the Liberals for sending congratulatory messages to the new Premier and building hopes on him in face of his challenge to the Indian people and its acceptance by the latter. The Shakti opines that the message of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has made it abundantly clear that Indians will have to depend on their own exertions for the attainment of swaraj. The boycott of British goods and the encouragement of the swadeshi movement are the only means of creating an impression upon the Labour Government. The Swadesi hails with exultation the Labour ministry in England and, unlike other nationalist papers, takes a very optimistic view of the character of the Labour régime. Whether the Labour Government, says the paper, will be able to give full effect to its noble principles or not, this much is certain that India, which was being ground down by the repressive Conservative Government, will now heave a sigh of relief. This in itself is no small satisfaction to the Indians who have got rid of the galling yoke of Lords Peel and Winterton.

Death of Lenin.

The Desh Bhakta says that the death of Lenin means a serious loss not only to labourers but to all nations groaning under the burden of subjection. Lenin was the saviour of not only Europe but of the whole world. Capitalists can have no peace even now, for although Lenin is no more on earth, he has planted his principles deep in the minds of the people. The Vartman commends the decision of the Kisan and Labour organisation, Madras, to observe Lenin week as a mark of respect for the departed Bolshevik leader and urges all the Labour organisations throughout India to follow the lead that has come from Madras and avail of the opportunity to give an impetus to the international labour activities. The Medina deplores the death of Lenin and remarks that Russian Communism was the only weapon which could be successfully wielded against Capitalism.

Indians in the colonies.

Commenting on Mr. Thomas' statement with regard to the Kenya question the Leader says: If the interests of the natives are to be considered paramount, the Whites must be deprived of the many privileges they have secured at the expense of the natives who should no longer be allowed to be exploited by the white settlers. The racial discrimination as between the Whites and Indians has caused the greatest resentment in this country, and if this is to be maintained then the Labour Party must also forfeit the confidence of the Indian people. The paper concludes by saying that the Labour Party is more anxious at present to consolidate its position. In fact his statement is calculated to shock the Indian public which expected after Colonel Wedgwood's statement in the House of Commons in the course of the Kenya debate, that the decision would be revised when Labour came into power. The Indian Daily Telegraph does not agree with His Excellency the Viceroy that the Indian Government have supported the efforts of Indian leaders. The position of Indians in the colonies is wholly different from that of white British subjects and is materially worse than that of white aliens. In spite of misleading official optimism, Indians do not in practice hold any but subordinate appointments even in Crown Colonies, where there are no or very few permanent white settlers.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hamdam regrets that even those leaders who were noted for their broadmindedness and largeheartedness have been influenced by the movements started by Pandit Malaviya and Swami Shraddhanand and remarks that the unexpected support given to the shuddhi and sangathan movements by Lala Lajpat Rai is calculated to destroy the national movement for liberty and weaken Hindu-Muslim unity. In another article the same paper takes to task Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal for accusing the Musalmans of not keeping faith with the Hindus and remarks that they have not abandoned the desire for swaraj and are ready to work side by side with the Hindus for the freedom of India. In a communicated article the Mashriq ridicules Maulana Muhammad Ali for relying upon the Hindus in spite of being abused by them. It exhorts him to take a lesson from Pandit Malaviya and Swami Shraddhanand and devote himself in organising the Musalmans and propagating Islam. The Medina regrets that the hue and cry raised by the Hindus has prejudiced Lala Lajpat Rai against the Musalmans and has made him set aside all considerations of patriotism and nationality.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Indian papers which have so far commented on the release of Mr. Gandhi are jubilant over his freedom. The Leader says: The unconditional release of Mahatma Gandhi is an act of wisdom and humanity on which both the Governments of Bombay and India deserve to be warmly congratulated. It indicates a welcome change in outlook which, however, ought not to lead Indians to relax their efforts to attain the desired national goal of responsible self-government within the Empire by all constitutional means. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: If the announcement had been made earlier, perhaps the prestige of the Indian Government might have stood higher, for the release on the eve of the debate in the Assembly cannot but have the ugly appearance, so dreaded by certain people, of concession to popular agitation. The signs of joy on all sides at the news of his release constitute an event in the history of India. Of no living being on earth, not even the King-Emperor, could it be said as of Gandhi that three hundred millions love, revere and worship him. The Independence says that the key of the Yervada jail has been found at last: it lay flashing on the floor of the Legislative Assembly for the Swarajists and the Independents to stoop and pick up. Even in releasing the bureaucrat cannot be graceful. The bureaucratic ideals of prestige have not yet changed. They will soon be changed under the hammer blows from the Swarajists. And what will Gandhi do after the sea has invigorated him? Let the bureaucrat think and tremble. The Hamdam congratulates the Indian nation and all those who were searching for the key of the Yervada jail. The paper observes with satisfaction that the event will work as a cold douche to the activities of those who are trying to destroy the Hindu-Muslim unity, and the people who were responsible for creating dissensions between Hindus and Musalmans by launching the shuddhi and sangathan movements will now be ashamed of their mistakes. Writing before the release of Mr. Gandhi Indian papers were persistent in demanding his immediate and unconditional release. The only exception was the Aligarh Gazette which remarked that the Government of India will take upon itself a great responsibility by releasing Mr. Gandhi unconditionally as he is very easily influenced by his environments and is ever ready to explain away his words and actions. The Medina regrets that the non-cooperators have stooped so low as to request the Government to release Mr. Gandhi who ought to have been set free by the first President of the Indian Republic. The Swadesh emphatically asserts that the general public is extremely eager for the release of Mr. Gandhi and that even the most callous-hearted person will feel that the Mahatma should no longer remain in jail. Government must order his immediate and unconditional release. The Aj opines that the release of Mahatma Gandhi is a very urgent question before the country. It points out that if the Government does not release Mahatmaji then it is the imperative duty of the Indian people to secure his release by launching out an all-India satyagraha campaign. They could very well postpone the constructive programme of the Congress but they must not bear to see Mahatmaji in jail any longer. The Hindi Kesari remarks that if Mahatma Gandhi is not released and public opinion in this connection is flouted it will be a matter quite unbecoming the Government and of deep shame to the country. If the Mahatma is sent back after his serious illness to the Yervada jail the Indian nation will be humiliated everywhere. It expresses the hope that the Government will give no cause for a vigorous all-India agitation being started in this connection. The Pratap points out that it would be futile for the Government to release Mahatma Gandhi on the pretext of his illness. It should release him only if it thinks that it committed an error in imprisoning him. It does not approve of making any request to the Government or of moving resolutions in the Assembly and the Council of State for his release as it apprehends that such a course of action will tighten the chains fettering the Mahatma rather than break them. Mahatma Gandhi does not want his release by becoming an object of clemency or mercy. There is only one method of releasing him and that is to make ourselves strong and organise ourselves in such a way as to compel Government to yield and release Mahatmaji unconditionally.

Release of Maulana Hasrat.

The Mashriq regrets that while so much agitation is going on for the release of Mr. Gandhi not a voice has been raised for that of Maulana Hasrat. It advises the Government to release Maulana Hasrat before it releases Mr. Gandhi and remarks that according to the Islamic injunctions no Musalmans should give preference to Mr. Gandhi over Maulana Hasrat. Eulogising Maulana Hasrat's sacrifices in the cause of the country, the Mansur exhorts the Musaln ans to demand his immediate release and remarks that the Government by releasing him will be able to bridge the gulf of mutual hatred. The Rahnuma regrets that Maulana Hasrat has been consigned to oblivion by the nation and says that the Government by releasing him will give a proof of its largeheartedness. The Arya Patra protests against the unjust and vindictive spirit shown by Government and the inhuman treatment meted out to Maulana Hasrat in jail and hopes that the Assembly will raise its unanimous voice for his release.

The Swaraj Party.

The Pioneer in a leading article headed "The Goal of the Swarajists" says that the demand that is being pressed by the Swarajists is that the Governance of the country should be entrusted to an oligarchy incapable of maintaining internal order and of securing India from external aggression. The issue can no longer be camouflaged. India is faced with realities and stands at the parting of the ways. It points to the danger of creation of potential danger in the shape of Bolshevik intrigues in India and says that the Russian Revolutionary Communists are taking a definite interest in India as a field which offers suitable opportunities for the establishment of Communism and their Indian agents who are working with the Bolsheviks are consistently advising their employers that if once the British power is withdrawn the task of overthrowing what they describe as a bourgeois Indian Government and confiscating the possession of landowners and of the commercial classes could be accomplished with comparative ease. The crisis in the C. P. Council continues to engage the attention of the Hindi Press. The Surya apprehends that the attitude of the Swarajist members in the Central Provinces is not likely to do any good to the province and may only result in the augmentation of the autocracy of the Government and in prolonging the attainment of swaraj. The Vartman refers in condemnatory terms to the decision of Mr. Chitnavis, the C. P. Minister, to continue to remain in office in spite of the passage of the 'no confidence' resolution in the Council and remarks: It is the height of shamelessness on the part of Mr. Chitnavis to attempt to protect the tottering Reforms in face of public censure. The paper regards this incident as illustrative of the attitude of the Liberals who are now going to side openly with the enemies of the country. Referring to the rumour about the contemplated appointment of the Maharaja of Burdwan as the Governor of the Central Provinces, the Pratap insinuates that the Governorship is going to an Indian only because of the critical situation in the province. The Aj remarks that if the Government does not give effect, as is most probable, to the resolution about the release of political prisoners passed in the Bengal Council, then Mr. C. R. Das will have to show to the country how swaraj may be attained by obstructing Governmental business and by clogging the wheels of administration. The Medina expresses its gratification at the Swarajists' first success in the Bengal Council and hopes that they would show the same spirit throughout. The Oudh Akhbar describes the passage of the resolution as a great and unparalleled victory of the Swarajists. The Haqiqat has no hope that the Bengal Government will release all the political prisoners and remarks that, if it ignores the recommendations of the Council, the Independents and the Swarajists by uniting and cooperating together will harass the Government at every step. In another article the same paper remarks that the withdrawal of the resolution of no confidence against the U. P. Ministers has dealt a severe blow to the prestige of the Swaraj Party which has to a great extent lost the confidence of the public. It has enhanced the reputation of the Ministers and the people have now begun to repose greater confidence in them. The Hamdam remarks that as the U. P. Ministers had done nothing objectionable to incur the displeasure of the public, it was but proper and wise for the Swarajists to withdraw the motion. The Arya Varta avers that if the Independents combine with the Swarajists, a situation can again be created which once compelled the Government to ask for a round table conference. As long as the people do not act on the policy of direct action neither swaraj can be obtained nor can the bureaucracy be brought to its senses. The Anand Pracharak resents the activities of the Swarajists and remarks that the policy of the Congress is proving ruinous to the Hindus. It advises them to sever their connection from the Congress and establish a separate Sabha of their own.

The Viceroy's speech.

Commenting on His Excellency the Viceroy's speech before the Indian Legislatures the Leader says: Another golden opportunity of putting heart into the country and, in any case, of strengthening the hands of those who believe in constitutional methods of agitation has been missed by Lord Reading. We are constrained to say that his speech fills us with gloomy foreboding of the future. The Independence says that the speech must be hailed with satisfaction by the retrograde elements in the country. It congratulates the Swarajists on point-to-point contact with the wildest form of bureaucratic opposition from the head of the Government of India. Whatever it is, the Swarajists have been insulted, and rightly, in a place where they know they are not wanted. Only a few Hindi papers have so far commented on the Viceroy's speech. The Aj characterises the speech as barren and full of mere platitudes. It says that in his speech the Viceroy has made the perilous attempt to sail in two boats at one and the same time. On the one hand he has tried to please the new Assembly and on the other he has held out a threat to those who have entered the Assembly with the avowed object of creating obstruction there. It asks the Swarajists to accept the Viceregal challenge. The Vartman considers the speech as disappointing and remarks that to expect any good to India from the Viceroy is like attempting to press water out of sand. What sympathy can that official bear towards India who is himself a slave of the Government and dances at its bidding. Those who had falsely hoped that the Viceroy might respect the wishes of the Council will now be totally disillusionised. It is very good that the disillusionment has come so early. The Hamdam says that on the whole the Viceroy's speech presents a future full of bright hopes for India and the most satisfactory side of it is this that it has altogether dispelled the danger of a war with Afghanistan. The Haqiqat remarks that the views expressed by the Viceroy on the relations between India and Afghanistan will be read with satisfaction in both the countries and it will go a long way to remove the public anxiety regarding the present Anglo-Afghan relations. It describes the speech as full of threats and warning to the Swarajists and has no hope that the nationalists will be influenced by these threats. The Arya Patra describes the speech as disappointing even to the Liberals and exhorts the Independents to cooperate with the Swarajists and by their concerted action to show Lord Reading that no power on earth can now check them from obtaining swaraj.

The Chowringhee murder.

One Govind Hayaran writing in the Nyaya strongly condemns the misguided youth who murdered Mr. Day and urges Government not to succumb to the clamour of Europeans to start wholesale repression, which will not only be unjustifiable but will also create unnecessary unrest in the country. The Vartman remarks that the revolutionary agitation in Bengal is but the result of the sins committed by the bureaucracy. The ordinary laws of the country are sufficient to put down the agitation and the enforcement of extraordinary measures for this purpose is quite indefensible. The people will continue to oppose the Government as long as it does not give up extraordinary measures and instead have resort to ordinary laws.

The Reforms.

Speculation is rife in respect of the demands for constitutional reforms and a section of the press profiting by the Viceroy's statement before the Legislatures urges upon the members the necessity of presenting a united front to the Government. The Leader says: We desire to emphasise that the Viceroy's speech and more than it its implications should not be lost sight of in the discussion that is bound to arise on the motion for constitutional advance. It thinks that the only bold way of facing the problem is by bringing about the appointment of a Royal Commission. The Assembly must put forward that demand and implement it by work in England. Is it too much to hope that the Swarajists will yet revise their attitude of scorn of help of our friends in England? If, however, they are as obstinate in the rejection of the proposal for the appointment of a Royal Commission as the Government of India, then we repeat what we said yesterday that we view the future with the gloomiest of forebodings. In a recent issue the paper advocates its original suggestion of entrusting the work of formulating further reforms to a Royal Commission and opposes the idea of a Committee in India, and says: Stalwarts in the Assembly who have not given much evidence of sound political judgment, appear to be enamoured of it, and we are afraid they are going to commit a serious mistake in not pressing for the immediate appointment of a Royal Commission and in urging for the appointment of a committee which is likely to delay further advance. The Independence says that the biggest bluff so far known to India and humanity is "dyarchy." When the corpse of dyarchy is decently cremated, when the mask of the reforms is torn off, then none can stand between India and the world-opinion asking for India's freedom. It trusts that the Swarajists and the Independents will prove equal to the task.

Hindu organisation.

The Indian Daily Telegraph draws the attention of the Hindus to the necessity of releasing Hindu temples from the hands of those who care only for the accumulation of wealth, for personal gratification and for the satisfaction of princely luxury and wanton lust. These temples of God ruled by modern Beelzebubs are becoming an abomination unto God and religion. It suggests that the Hindu Mahasabha should organise small committees all over the land to keep a strict watch over the Hindu temples and see that they are not turned into little hells on earth.

The Adh-Kumbh mela at Allahabad.

The Aj applauds the action of the sanyasis of Allahabad in condemning the conduct of the District Magistrate on the occasion of the Adh-Kumbh fair and says that it would have been better if they had also taken a vow to establish swaraj in India, for until swaraj is established it is impossible to prevent the recurrence of such untoward events. One of the reasons why we want to change the present system of administration is the autocracy of the officials. Those who come to our country as rulers have doubtful administrative capacity. They only know how to make military or police demonstrations.

The Labour Government.

COMMENTING on the statement of policy by the Prime Minister in Parliament, the Pioneer remarks that the task to which Mr. MacDonald has to apply himself is a terribly onerous one, and none is likely to begrudge Labour its victory if it succeeds where the other political parties have failed. The Aj asks Indians not to build false hopes on the installation of the Labour Government in England and adds: The continuance of Lord Reading as the Viceroy of India and the inclusion of Lord Chelmsford in, and the absence of Mr. Lansberry from the Cabinet demonstrate the truth that the Labour Government does not want to deal justly by India. In another article the same paper remarks that the appointment of a nonentity like Sir Sydney Olivier as the Secretary of State for India and his membership of the House of Lords instead of the House of Commons are indicative of the fact that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald does not want to effect any improvement in the present system of administration in India.

Death of Lenin.

The Vartman says that just as Lord Buddha is still living and Jesus Christ scorned death by promising to come to this earth again in the same manner Lenin, the god of the poor, is immortal. Lenin was more kind-hearted than Buddha, more devoted than Jesus Christ, and a more rigid follower of non-violence than Mahatma Gandhi. He finished with his own hands what Buddha could only begin and Christ left uncompleted. Those who are sinners see Lenin's activities as bloody, but he is always living like god in the hearts of those who have understood his lofty ideals.

Indians in Colonies.

The Hamdam is indignant at the propaganda started in India by the Guiana Government for the success of its colonisation scheme and warns the Indians not to be influenced thereby. So long as the Kenya question is not satisfactorily settled, and India is not powerful enough to safeguard the interest of her sons abroad the colonisation scheme will always prove harmful to the Indians.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on Mr. Gandhi's message the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the emphasis laid by Mr. Gandhi on Hindu-Muslim unity will not be slurred over by the country, but there is no use concealing from ourselves the clouds that gather. The Muslims are fast gathering round the Bengal Pact as the irreducible minimum and the Hindus are deliberately opposed to it as a working programme. It is unfortunate, but none the less true, that forces are actually at work pulling the communities from each other. All the strength of the leaders is necessary to restore the position which Gandhi had effected before his incarceration. The Arya Mitra urges that in order to bring about harmonious relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, the former should stop music before mosques, and the latter should give up cow-slaughter except on Bakr'Id. As regards the shuddhi and sanguthan movements, it says that the Muhammadans should not object to them as they too can organise their community and add new members to it. Wherever either Hindus or Muhammadans are in a minority the number of their seats in the local boards should be fixed. The Medina regards communal unity as a great factor in the attainment of swaraj and remarks that the emancipation of India is the only thing which can ensure the safety of the Muslims in Arabia, Palestine, Iraq, Egypt, Tripoli and Morrocco. It is simply cowardice and weakness on the part of the Hindus to suppose that the Musalmans will subjugate them; similarly it is absurd and wrong for the latter to interpret swaraj as Hindu rule. Writing in a similar strain the Al Balagh exhorts the Hindus and the Musalmans to maintain happy relations and abstain from interfering in the religious matters of each other if they have the emancipation of their country at heart. The Hamdam regrets that the Hindus regard the stoppage of cow-slaughter as a condition precedent to unity and remarks that the best way to bridge the ever-widening gulf of mutual hatred is that the Hindus should cease to be aggressive and should not attempt to solve the question of cow-slaughter by legislative measures.

The Viceroy's speech.

The Independence says that the Viceregal utterance before the new Assembly has caused the deepest disappointment in all political circles in India. The speech though full of superficial sympathy is lacking in broadmindedness, imagination and even diplomacy. It is far from concialiatory. The speech clearly shows that no change can take place under existing circumstances in India. India declines to accept this position. The Aj remarks that the Viceroy's speech before the Legislature shows that he too has begun to doubt if the illusion of the Reforms can last long. His eulogy on the Reforms and his threat to the Swarajists are therefore the inevitable outcome of his doubtful mind. But let the Viceroy have no delusion in regard to the policy and the programme of the Swarajists. Until swaraj is conferred they are determined to resort to obstruction. The Abhyudaya thinks that the speech was a downright challenge to the representatives of the people in the Assembly and was an open declaration of the bankruptcy of British statesmanship. One great service which it has done is that it has disillusioned the Moderates. The Azad describes the Viceroy's speech as disappointing and remarks that his observations on the question of further Reforms have hurt the sentiments of patriotic Indians. It was highly impolitic on his part not to announce in his speech the much-expected release of Mr. Gandhi. The Najat says that the Viceroy's speech betrays his utter ignorance of Indian affairs and lack of sympathy with Indians, and that instead of trying to solve the present difficulties he delights in holding out threats to the people. The Aligarh Gazette hopes that unlike former occasions the threats held out by the Viceroy will be translated into action and will not be kept confined to the official desks and council platforms.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Indian Daily Telegraph does not think that the release of Mr. Gandhi has eased the political situation in the country. The Government of India released Gandhi not because of any change of heart but because it felt that it was risky to keep him in jail where he is liable to sudden serious illness. The Leader says that the release of Mr. Gandhi has created a significant change in the people, as well as the Government. In view of the great clearing of the astmosphere that is taking place as a result of Mr. Gandhi's release we offer once more our hearty congratulations to Government on its courageous act of statesmanship. It was the inhumanity of Jallianwalla Bagh which stirred a revolt in the heart of the people, and it is the sense of humanity behind the release of Mr. Gandhi which has touched the tenderest chords of the people. Commenting on the message of Mr. Gandhi to his countrymen, the paper says : It is simple and straight, magnanimous to opponents, dignified throughout in substance and in language. Although his observations on Civil Disobedience are not approved by the paper, it says : If he should apply his unequalled powers of leadership and inspiration chiefly to those parts of the Bardoli programme whose success will make of Indians both a more efficient and a more united people, the result will be such as undoubtedly to hasten the advent of swaraj, and every single man, woman and child, English and Indian alike, will without one exception be able conscientiously to regard Mr. Gandhi as absolutely the greatest benefactor that India has had in modern times. The Indian Daily Telegraph thanks God that Gandhi is free, and is gaining strength. If Mr. Gandhi does not find the change of heart in the Government, and if he finds it in the people, in Hindu-Muslim reunion, India may be a united Borsad. The release of Mr. Gandhi has been received in the vernacular press with universal satisfaction. The Gyan Shakti says that the wise and proper action of Government in releasing Mahatma Gandhi will ensure contentment in the country and inaugurate an era of hope and trust. The Swadeshi congratulates the Governor of Bombay and Lord Reading on the wise action in releasing Mahatma Gandhi and says that Government would have been well-advised in acknowledging that the decision was brought about by the force of public opinion as well as by the desire of Government to deal justly by him. The Aj holds that the main cause of Mahatma Gandhi's release is the unanimity of public opinion in its favour. Among other contributory factors may be mentioned the influence of the Labour Party in England and probably the desire of the bureaucracy to gratify the Swaraj Party. Whatever may be the causes that brought about the release of Mahatma Gandhi, Sir Leslie Wilson deserves our heartfelt thanks and not Lord Reading. In another article the same paper remarks: We cannot help laughing at the tactics of the Liberal leaders and journals in offering their thanks to the Bombay Government and the Government of India for releasing Mahatma Gandhi. The Government itself says that it was compelled to release the Mahatma under medical advice and was not swayed by any consideration for public opinion and yet our Liberal friends are going to thank the Government for respecting public opinion. In another place the paper says that although we are ashamed of the fact that we could not secure the Mahatma's release by virtue of our own strength yet we are overwhelmed with joy in finding the Mahatma in our midst again. The Anand observes that the universal jubilation in the country over the release of Mahatma Gandhi despite political differences should convince the Government of the Mahatma's influence over the people. The Medina is jubilant at the release of Mr. Gandhi and remarks that for the first time in its life the autocratic Government has displayed a sound conception of politics and allowed public opinion to triumph over itself. The Hamdam says that the Government by releasing Mr. Gandhi has earned the gratitude of the people and given proof of its farsightedness. A favourable atmosphere will now be created and Lord Reading will do well to alter his views to suit the changed conditions. The Haqiqat avers that the Government by releasing Mr. Gandhi has removed great public unrest and created an atmosphere favourable for reconciliation. The Al Khalil says that Mr. Gandhi's release marks the failure of the non-cooperation movement because it shows that the Government is no more afraid of him. The Hindustani praises the wisdom and sagacity of the Government in releasing the greatest man in the country and hopes that he will now apply himself in creating happy relations between the Hindus aud Musalmans. The Aryapatra says that in releasing Mr. Gandhi the Government has clearly anticipated the decision of the Assembly. The Rahnuma remarks that the Government by releasing Mr. Gandhi has shown its respect to the united demand of the country. It hopes that the activities of the advocates of shuddhi and sangathan will now be paralysed and happy relations will once more be restored between the two communities. The Aligarh Gazette is the only exception which disapproves the action of the Government in releasing Mr. Gandhi at a time when the political atmosphere is cloudy on account of the activities of the Swaraj Party and remarks that his release will cause a fresh stir in the minds of the people. Commenting upon Mr. Gandhi's message the Hamdam regrets that the people during his imprisonment have deviated from the course chalked out by him. Both the communities should now reunite to gratify the wishes of the great man.

The Akali agitation.

The Vartman accuses the police of merciless flogging of the Akalis at Bhai Pheru. This callous and ruthless treatment is not only despicable but also reprehensible. By such actions the police is goading the Akalis to violence. All the designs and the repression of the bureaucracy proved futile at Guru-ka-Bagh ; in the same manner it will suffer a discomfiture at Bhai Pheru.

The Swaraj Party.

The Haqiqat hails with satisfaction the union of the Independent and the Swarajist members of the Assembly and remarks that the Government will have no peace until it accepts the just demands of the nation. Commenting upon the Swarajists' activities in the Assembly the Al Khalil remarks that the Home Member has now adopted a conciliatory attitude instead of an imperious one and it will be no wonder if the Government climbs down and agrees to hold a Round Table Conference. On the other hand the Aligarh Gazette condemns the activities of the Swarajists as detrimental to the interests of the country and advises the Government to use its power of veto against the resolutions passed by them. When the existing laws have proved effective in maintaining peace and order there is no reason why they should be repealed, on the contrary they should be made more rigid.

Constitutional advance.

Commenting on Sir Malcolm Hailey's speech in the Legislative Assembly, the Leader congratulates the Home Member on the signal ability with which he treated the subject and says: We should further acknowledge, as we do gladly, that a perusal of the text leaves on the mind a less disagreeable impression than the summary prepared by the Associated Press. It asks the Home Member what exactly he means by the term "Local Government." Did he mean only the Governors in Council or he had also the Ministers in mind? It regrets that instead of concentrating on Mr. Rangachariar's resolution asking for a Commission and according to it unanimous support, certain non-official Indian members should have deviated into less wise suggestions in favour of a committee or a conference. Even at this last moment we would fain hope that they may show greater foresight and withdraw their amendments in favour of the original motion. It deprecates the attitude adopted by the Home Member with reference to military policy of the Government and says that a great and a relevant point in the consideration of the subject of a further constitutional advance is that the longer it is postponed the greater may be the difficulties. The Pioneer says: When it becomes known in England that the leader of the Swaraj Party in the Legislative Assembly has described the Reformed Constitution as an "evil thing" and declared that the Government of India Act "had enacted great injustice," there will be a more pronounced disposition than ever to reject the claims put forward by him and his party. No Government in England is likely to give way to cheap threats. The next stage towards responsible government will be possible when Indian politicians have shown full sense of responsibility and a sincere desire to cooperate with Government in advancing the interests of their country. The Independence disapproves the idea of a Royal Commission or an official committee and says that there is nothing unprecedented in the demands for a Round Table Conference in the history of the British Empire, though lack of precedents is no excuse to create precedents. It quotes the example of Egypt and says Egypt was given the right of framing her own constitution. And today the Egyptian rebel whom the Anglo-Egyptian bureaucracy had deported is Egypt's Premier. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the spokesman of the Government, Sir Malcolm Hailey, forgot the millions standing solid, as one man, behind the demand for swaraj; he only remembered the prince and the foreign capitalist. It hopes that he convinced the princes and those he addressed at the Cawnpore Chamber of Commerce of his strength and determination. As for the country, it will not be impressed by his specious words. He has failed to explain why the British Government should not deal honestly with the demand for swaraj. Let the Government remember the definite threat of the Swarajists. It is not a mere reply to Lord Reading or his minister: it is the voice of the Indian nation. The Independence says that the Round Table Conference will determine the principles of a constitution for India. This is the only honourable way in which Indian agitation for swaraj can be ended. We find no other path of India's reconciliation with England and the Empire. This path was followed by the English Cabinet and Parliament in regard to Ireland. If India is to avoid the sorrows and sufferings of Ireland, England will see the inevitable trend of events and recognise it by a brave stroke of broad statesmanship. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the Government of India again undertook a grave responsibility in opposing the resolution of the Nationalists for a round table discussion to settle the preliminaries to the grant of swaraj. The spirit of the country is the spirit of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru. It knows what it wants. Indians are unarmed. Indians are pledged to non-violence. But Indians are pledged also to wrest swaraj. The change of heart is not yet visible: the taunt of British trusteeship does not show it: the idle and innocuous threat against the council-wreckers would only rouse a smile from those who have realised their own strength. England will soon know what it is to govern autocratically a people determined to have democracy. The Independence says that the immediate outlook is certainly not very promising. There is no earthly chance of inducing the Government in India and England to realise the Indian point of view until and unless the various parties in the Assembly are welded into one united whole not merely in the mere adoption of a few demands but in the plan of campaign to enforce these demands. The Hamdam is gratified that all the political parties in the country are united in their demand for complete self-government for India and remarks that it was due simply to the Liberal opposition that the Government dared to adopt an unsympathetic attitude towards the popular sentiments. It requests the Liberals to join the non-violent and constitutional activities of the other political parties. The Oudh Akhbar resents the opposition of the Calcutta European Association to the Indian demand for self-government which is based on righteousness and truth, and remarks that by going against the Indians the non-official European community will not be able to stay even for a day in the country when self-government is granted. The Medina says that the Indians have now fully realised that by showing a united front they can force the Government to accept their demands. The Government will have now either to yield before the united demand of the country or throw the entire responsibility on the shoulders of the Viceroy and make him to bring into play his special power of veto. The Hindustani remarks that Indians can now no longer be duped. The desire for liberty is so widespread and intense that the Indian leaders will have no rest until they obtain complete self-government.

The Public Services Commission.

The Swadeshi urges that whatever the decision of the Lee Commission regarding the increase of pay of the superior Civil Services may be, they should all be brought under the control of Local Governments.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani.

Eulogising Maulana Hasrat's services in the cause of the country, the Aligarh Gazette regrets the utter neglect shown to him by his countrymen in not demanding his release simply because he is a Musalman. The Hamdam enumerates the hardships imposed upon Maulana Hasrat in jail and exhorts the members of the Bombay Legislature to bring them to the notice of the Governor and demand his release.

Conviction of Mr. Victor Mohan Joshi.

The Aj says that never before has section 144 been so grossly abused as in the case of Mr. Victor Mohan Joshi of Almora, who has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment for violating this section. Here is a sample of justice administered in the régime of Lord Reading. Mr. Victor Mohan Joshi is a nationalist Indian Christian and the sole object of passing a severe sentence on him is to prevent the growth of nationalism and patriotism among Indian Christians.

Labour.

The Weekly Mazdoor, a recently started journal of the Labour Party in these provinces, in a leading article headed the "Impending Strike" says that the time has now come for the labourers not to be mute but to assert their rights with a voice equal to that of a roaring lion. These lions, who are the mainsprings of trade and Government, were brought up with sheep by accident, and began to bleet like sheep; but they have come to realise through their mother lioness (Unionism) that they are not sheep to bleet, but lions to roar, and they have seen their faces in the transparent lake of unity.

Political propaganda.

The Prem publishes a contributed article in which "Raja" Mahendra Pratap urges the advocates of the propagation of the Nagri script to send their representatives to Turkey and Afghanistan to carry on their propaganda in those countries. This will ensure not only the use of that script in those countries but also result in political advantages to India. The Dehati makes out that British rule in India has been unsuccessful owing to the failure of the British Government to grant home rule to the country and its efforts to perpetuate its subjection by means of enormous increase in military expenditure, poisonous education in schools, distortion of history and finally by the repudiation of Queen Victoria's Proclamation by Lord Curzon. The unrest in the country has been steadily increasing and has only been met by repression after repression. It is not yet too late for the British statesmen to grant equality of treatment to India, otherwise they will soon find that the brightest jewel in the British Crown has separated itself from the British Empire. The Bhawishya, a new weekly nationalist journal of Cawnpore, in describing its policy in its first issue says: "The main object of the Bhawishya is to remove the veil of servility from the hearts of the Indian people so as to expose them to the sunshine of liberty. 'Death is preferable to subjection,' will be the motto of the Bhawishya. Bhawishya will be the supporter of equality and it will consider it to be its duty to work for the redress of the various atrocities that are at present perpetrated upon the poor kisans and labourers. Bhawishya will not tolerate the treatment of inequality which is at present meted out in India to women and untouchables. It will aim at the propagation of fraternal feelings among all communities and religions. It will be the duty of the Bhawishya to work for the propagation of swadeshi. Fearlessness and impartiality will be the chief features of the Bhawishya and under no circumstances will it deviate from truth."

The Khilafat.

A CORRESPONDENT writing in the Haqiqat challenges the authority of the Turks to restrict the power and prestige of the Khalifa and to decide the Khilafat question in utter disregard of the opinion of the Muslim world and demands the abolition of the Khilafat Committees. The editor, however, disagrees and opposes the abolition of the Khilafat Committees unless the Muslim League is reorganised to safeguard communal interests, and refutes the allegation that the Khilafat Committees are responsible for Hindu-Muslim dissensions. The Arya Varta regards the abolition of the Khilafat Committees as beneficial to the interests of the country and as an incentive for the Musalmans to join the Congress and remarks that in order to create and maintain friendly relations between the two communities it is necessary that the Khilafat Committees should be abolished.

The Labour Government.

The Leader says that there is at least one party in England whom all sections of Indian politicians can trust, viz., the Labour Party but its position in office is not strong enough for it to do anything striking. Recognising its limitations it is the duty of Indian politicians neither to hustle it nor to antagonise it, but to make the utmost use of its capacity to do good while it is in power by making demands which it is in a position to meet. Pointing out the difficulties which the Government in England has to face in connection with foreign affairs the paper asks: Will the British foreign policy under the Labour Government effect a miraculous change? Mr. Lloyd George wanted to be the saviour of Europe but he failed. Let us see if better luck awaits Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's efforts. The Vartman says that in view of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's unequivocal attitude towards India, Indian leaders of all shades of opinion must cease to depend upon Britain. They must give up the idea that the British Government is the arbiter of their destiny and unitedly announce that Indians will establish complete independence in their country by their own exertions. The paper takes Mr. C. Y. Chintamani to task for his letter to the British Premier, and remarks that it is regrettable that the Moderates have not even after their discomfiture in the last elections given up their habit of servility and sycophancy. It is possible that Mr. Chintamani and his colleagues may have built hopes on the Labour Government, but the non-cooperators labour under no such delusion. They shun sycophancy and know how to compel the Government to yield to their wishes. The Indian public and the Congress leaders want to win swaraj and not beg for it.

Death of Lenin.

The Utsah publishes an article highly eulogistic of M. Lenin whose policy, the paper asserts, was to serve his country and not become its master for his personal gratification. He was an enemy of despotism and territorial aggrandisement. Those alone are his enemies who advocate despotism. The principles of Lenin will continue to flourish in the world so long as those people live who want to take advantage of helpless people. Had he been born in India, Indians too would have realised what nationalism meant. What Mahatma Gandhi could not achieve by words and threats, Lenin achieved by dint of strength. Lenin did not approve of the policy of killing the serpent but of nourishing its young ones. The propaganda against Lenin in India is nothing but an attempt to take advantage of the ignorance of Indians and prevent them from breaking their chains. Mahatma Gandhi too hates slavery but he is afraid of the policy which destroys it. India alone had a place in Lenin's heart. Indians do not exactly know as to who are their real foes and friends. The truth, however, will soon be out since Lenin's disciples will surely carry out his principle of helping the distressed people of the whole world.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Desh Bhakta holds that so long as the Indian Muhammadans do not regard India as their mother-country and do not give up their sympathy for Turkey, Arabia and Afghanistan, the Hindus cannot fully trust them. The Hindus and Muhammadans cannot unite even under the guidance of Mahatma Gandhi, and if any compact is concluded between the two communities it cannot last long, for the Muhammadans are sure to fall out with the Hindus as soon as their selfish ends have been gained.

The Viceroy's speech.

The Abhyudaya says that by his discourteous and disappointing speech the Viceroy has exasperated the members of the Assembly. If the leaders in the Assembly are possessed of any self-respect the Viceroy will have to repent of his utterance. The Surya holds that the Viceroy's speech was highly unsatisfactory. His Excellency is determined not to move an inch from his old position. He has done nothing to prove himself to be a well-wisher of the country. He has not helped in the attainment of swaraj, but only threatened to suppress the Swarajists. He holds out the threat of withdrawing the Reforms, quite forgetful of its disastrous effect on the country. If he will not help forward the cause of Reforms he will forfeit the confidence of even those who have so far supported his Government. If obstacles will be put in the path of those who work for the attainment of swaraj by creating internal differences so as to emphasise the unfitness of India for swaraj, it will be regarded as the weakness or the mistake of the existing Government itself. The Bharat Jiwan reminds the Viceroy that his too frequent use of threats will only stiffen the back of the Congressmen. His threat to abolish the Councils only shows that the Reforms are shadowy and unsubstantial. If this is not so, the Government should carry out the resolutions passed in the Councils and the Assembly. The Viceroy is mistaken in emphasising that India can get anything from England only as a favour. He should know that Indians have now realised their strength and that they no longer believe in the policy of mendicancy.

Constitutional advance.

The debate in the Legislative Assembly on "Constitutional advance" is being followed with close attention. The Pioneer in a leading article headed "Political Myopia in Delhi" indignantly remarks: Apart from a small section which is blinded by fanaticism, there is not a man among those who voted for the Nehru resolution who does not know full well that he and his associates would be incapable of carrying on stable rule and of maintaining efficient administration. The adoption by the Assembly of the Nehru resolution is a fitting climax to the make-believe, the refusal to face facts or to recognise realities, which characterise Indian politics. The special feature of the debate at Delhi, according to the paper, was the visualising of an India in which, the British civil official having been driven out at the point of the tongue, the British soldier will remain to protect the evictors from those who would rule at the point of the sword. Mr. Patel and his coadjutors may rest assured that the day will never come when the sole function of the British in India will be to shed their blood for the exponents of anti-British doctrines. The paper resents the attitude of the Moderates and says: In the first year of the operation of the new Constitution the Moderates claimed that they had already proved their fitness to exercise additional powers. Now, in 1924, they have joined the Swarajists in calling for Dominion status. They have witnessed the grievous injury inflicted upon India by non-cooperation; they have followed the long record of crime, the massacre of police, the fomenting of labour disputes, the practice of cruel social tyranny and the flouting of law which have been the concomitants of the baneful movement. Yet in the Council Chamber they are prepared to join hands with the leaders of the non-co-operators in demanding fresh power which cannot honestly be granted until there arises in India a constitutional party possessing the courage of its beliefs, imbued with a high sense of responsibility and determined to give no countenance to politicians who, while professing lofty principles, are prepared to follow a course of action which if it succeeds must disintegrate the ties that hold civilised society together. The Leader says that the Government's attitude has shown a deplorable lack of imagination and statesmanship and strengthened the hands of the opposition. And what is the measure of the Government of India's appreciation of the force that its own short-sighted policy has aroused? A departmental enquiry! If this is the limit of British statesmanship under a Labour Government, then no one should be surprised if deeper distrust and gloom spreads over the country. In another article the paper suggests that efforts should be made to get a Royal Commission appointed, and for this purpose the paper thinks it absolutely necessary that a deputation should visit England to represent to the authorities the Indian side of the case and to press the need of an early inquiry by an independent commission. It feels convinced that the work in England in the existing circumstances is as necessary as in India, so that judgment may not go against us by default. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the political question at once becomes interesting after the passing of the Nehru amendment. Round Table is a standing proclamation that the bureaucrat is not trusted. No words, no sentiments, no pious solicitude will satisfy. The Swarajists will wreck the Reforms. It wishes the Government of India all happiness over this concurrence in its policy by the Cabinet. But they will find small satisfaction in setting themselves against the people in this country. They are face to face with an agitation the like of which they have never before experienced. The Advocate says that the bold and outspoken speeches of the Swarajists and the Independents bring into prominent relief the great improvement which the present Assembly is upon its predecessor. The speech of Sir Malcolm Hailey shows how weak is the case of Government for withholding the desired basis of swaraj. It characterises his arguments as puerile and says: If British statesmanship is not totally bankrupt, the Government will take courage in both hands and meet the modest demand of the people. The Independence in a leading article headed "Mr. Patel's Straight Talk" praises him for his candour, "because it was so void of diplomacy which the non-cooperator has winnowed from his politics as chaff from good wheat." Mr. Patel has destroyed that illusion which the foreign bureaucrat and his Indian friend have sedulously tried to build up, namely, our own incompetence to defend our homes. Commenting on the Home Member's statement the Indian Daily Telegraph says that he betrays a strange ignorance of human character indeed when he piteously bemoans against mistrust. The Government have only reaped what they have sowed. The rhetoric about justice from posterity falls flat on the country: the bathos of the whole utterance is sickening. The Government has made up its mind. It is not prepared to yield to the popular demand. We now await the action of the self-respecting patriots. The Independence writing on the prospects of a Royal Commission says: It is extravagant to predict that the boycott of the new Royal Commission, if appointed, will be as complete as the boycott of the Milner Mission in Egypt. Who knows that Egyptian history will not repeat itself in India. If the Royal Commission comes, it will give the Congress once again a chance to demonstrate the principle of non-cooperation. At another place the paper says: If the Round Table is denied and the Royal Commission is promised there is but one alternative—boycott that Commission and leave it for Sivaswami Iyers and Rangacharis. The Arya Mitra says that the bureaucracy is standing in the way of India's demand for self-government. The Government will be well-advised to accept the demands of the Indians, as any opposition in this matter will compel them to sever their connection from Great Britain. If bureaucracy has lost its reason and attempts to suppress the desire of India for liberty, then India knows well how a self-respecting nation should behave under such circumstances. The Rahnuma welcomes the formation of a national party in the Assembly and hopes that concerted action on constitutional lines will force the Government to accept the demands of the Indians. The Azad disapproves the Government's proposal of a departmental inquiry into the working of the Reforms and exhorts the members of the Assembly to insist upon the immediate appointment of a Royal Commission for that purpose. The Najat remarks that with the formation of the nationalist party even the "Ji-huzurs," who always supported the Government in its policy of repression, have abstained from siding with it. The Anand holds that Sir Malcolm Hailey's statement in the Legislative Assembly was highly unsatisfactory and disappointing. Sir Malcolm Hailey altogether ignored the King-Emperor's message to India conveyed through the Duke of Connaught on the occasion of the inauguration of the Reforms and expressed views which cannot but increase unrest in the country. The Government of India itself appears at the present time to be opposed to the fulfilment of Indian aspirations and it is highly desirable that a deputation should be sent to England to exercise pressure on the Government and to make the British Government acquainted with the existing situation in India.

The Salt-tax.

The Aj says that if it is proposed to retain the salt-tax this year also it should be the duty of the Assembly not only to reject the salt-tax but consign the whole budget to the wastepaper basket. The Assembly should also reduce the excessive military and administrative expenditure and save the people from the terrible burden of taxation.

The release of Mahatma Gandhi.

The Vartman is jubilant over the release of Mahatma Gandhi and remarks: God alone deserves our thanks for his release which is the outcome neither of any benevolence on the part of the Labour Government nor of any regard on the part of the Government of India for the Swarajists. The Abhyudaya says: Although we are happy over the release of Mahatma Gandhi we cannot congratulate the Government on it. By releasing Mahatma Gandhi Government has only removed its previous injustice. It did not release the Mahatma out of mercy or clemency but was constrained to do so by the compelling force of the unanimity of public opinion. The release of Mahatma Gandhi shows that if Indians are only united they can force the Government to yield to their wishes. The Hamdard points out that there is no doubt that the release of Mahatma Gandhi is very happy news for the country, but the people would be guilty of extreme ungratefulness if Government were not thanked for this wise and sympathetic act. The Shakti remarks that the release of Mahatma Gandhi shows that even the most powerful Government has to yield to the force of public opinion. Government may well conceal the fact, but it is nevertheless true that Government released Mahatma Gandhi to conciliate the people. Truth has after all triumphed over obstinacy and falsehood. The Swadesh reads in the release of Mahatma Gandhi the triumph of spiritual force over brute force. It is sure that with the release of Mahatma Gandhi there will be a change for the better in the fortunes of the country. The Kartavya says that Government has set right the mistake which it committed two years ago. It asks Mahatma Gandhi to assume the leadership of the distracted country once again and renew the non-violent struggle for liberty. The Al Balagh is gratified at the release of Mr. Gandhi and exhorts the people to act upon his advice. If they have any sense of shame left in them they will not pollute their bodies by the use of foreign cloth, and if they are desirous of freedom they will abstain from purchasing any foreign article. The Aftab describes Mr. Gandhi's release as a great proof of Government's good faith and asks the Swarajists to be grateful to the Government for sparing them the trouble of carrying on a vigorous agitation. The Haqiqat hopes that Mr. Gandhi will start a new movement to create enthusiasm among the public and to infuse fresh life into the non-cooperation movement and remarks that any failure on his part to do so will greatly disappoint the people and affect their minds adversely. The Hamdam emphasises the necessity of observing the "Gandhi month" throughout the country to strengthen India's demand for liberty and hopes that the leaders will take an active part in this movement.

Maulana Hasrat.

The Mansur is indignant at the silence maintained by the Musalmans in the matter of the Maulana's release and advises the Government to immediately release him in order to wipe away the distrust and hatred prevailing against it. His imprisonment will prove injurious to the Government and it will be in its own interest to release him. The Medina regards the Maulana as an innocent victim of the unconstitutional laws of the country and exhorts the Musalmans to carry on a vigorous agitation for his release.

The Nizam and the Berar.

The Leader says that the Nizam's letter to the Viceroy is a sensational document and the attempt to seek publicity is certainly remarkable. It probably indicates a desire on the part of His Exalted Highness to seek the support of Indian public opinion to strengthen his claim. This change in the angle of vision of a prince like the Nizam is welcome. The paper calls upon the Government of India to come forward with its own version of the affair, and suggests that the dispute between the ally and his sovereign can best be settled by reference to a plebiscite. The people of Berar are most concerned in the matter and theirs must be the determining voice. It does not believe in the profession of the Nizam regarding his faith in self-government and suggests that in order to be true to this solicitude he should put an end to autocracy in his own dominion. It is doubtful if the offer of the Nizam will appeal to the Beraris or the rest of political India as Indians of British India have got more constitutional freedom and look forward for more of it in the near future than the subjects of most Indian princes, who are denied freedom of speech and writing and security of person and property against the arbitrary will of the rulers. The Al Balagh thinks the Nizam's demand are quite legitimate and hopes that in view of his loyal services the British Government will no longer deprive the Nizam's Government its lawful right and will restore Berar to it. The Haqiqat says that the demand of the Nizam for the restoration of Berar is quite reasonable and just and the scheme of administration chalked out by him will meet the approval of the people of that province. Writing in a similar strain the Oudh Akhbar remarks that the restoration of Berar will go a long way to allay the present agitation for the immediate grant of further Reforms and will keep back Mr. Gandhi from getting a new handle to stir the minds of the people.

The Royal Commission.

The Leader publishes in full the statement made by Mr. Hasan Imam before the Royal Commission and says that his replies to the questionaire of the Commission set out the issues involved in clear and forceful language, and it would be difficult to improve upon his presentment of the Indian case. The Oudh Akhbar praises Mr. Hasan Imam for his sound and straightforward evidence before the Commission and agrees with him that there is a great defect in the Government of India Act in that the Ministers do not possess full control over the staff of the departments under their charge.

Baby Shows.

The Gorakshan says that the baby shows organised by the bureaucracy in India are a hollow farce and cannot reduce infant mortality. If the bureaucracy is really anxious for the well-being of Indian children, it should stop cow-slaughter and provide pasture grounds for cows so as to increase the milk supply which is so necessary for the proper preservation and nourishment of children. The Surya also writes to a similar effect.

The Akali agitation.

Commenting on the activities of the Akalis the Hamdam suggests that the Swarajists being busy with the Councils the no-changers should now turn their attention towards the Akalis and encourage them in their struggle. The influential members should make a tour of the Punjab and enlist the sympathy of the Hindus and Musalmans for the Akalis. The Haqiqat describes the struggle of the Akalis as a moral lesson to the country and remarks that the measures adopted by the Government against them amount to a challenge to the whole nation. In view of the past experience the Government will do well to abstain from interfering in purely religious matters and to accept their demands. Commenting upon the shooting of Akalis at Jaiton the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the Akali situation can never be solved by buckshots ; on the other hand, that is the best way to aggravate it.

The Nationalist Party.

The Vartman is not very hopeful of the newly formed Nationalist Party in the Assembly. This party though organised by the efforts of the Swarajists is weaker than the Swaraj Party itself in its ideals and convictions. The majority of its members are advocates of responsive cooperation, while some of its members are such as will be willing to cooperate whole-heartedly with the Government as soon as it becomes apparent that it is determined to oppose them. The Aj remarks that the formation of the Nationalist Party and the inclusion of Swarajists in it along with the members of other parties and of a different political outlook show that the direction in which the Swaraj Party is leaning is the old path of political mendicancy.

The crisis in the Central Provinces.

The Aj condemns the decision of the Liberal Ministers of the Central Provinces to continue to remain in office in spite of the no confidence resolution and remarks that if the Ministers do not resign the whole of the budget will be rejected. In that event the bureaucracy will have either to withdraw the Reforms or confer real rights on the people.

Hindi and the United Provinces Council.

The Kartavya referring to the refusal of the President to allow Lala Sangam Lal to speak in Hindi in the Provincial Legislative Council asks other members of the Council not to tolerate this insult to their mother-tongue. The Swarajists and Independent members should speak in their own language and refuse to use the English language. The Hamdam in a communicated article exhorts the members of the Council to deliver their speeches in Hindustani and resents the restrictions imposed on them for the convenience of the officials. It is simply ludicrous that the rulers remain ignorant of the language and customs of the people over whom they rule.

Political propaganda.

Commenting upon the census report the Oudh Akhbar deplores the growing poverty in the country and accuses the Government officials of deceiving the world by deliberately concealing the true facts. The present unrest is the direct result of the bread problem, and unless the economic question is solved any change in the form of administration will be of no avail. The Najat says that to make the Indian exchequer bear the burden of military operations for Imperial purposes amounts to only a refined way of plundering the country. The Desh Bhakta publishes a poem by Trivedi in which the following lines among others occur: "The tyrannical people are oppressing the country. They are squeezing it in their grip. Behold ! brave men, open your eyes. . . The house is on fire. The foreigners are carrying on their predatory practices. . . Destroy the crooked policy of the evil-minded people. . . " The Utsah publishes an open letter to Indian princes in which the writer points out how they are utterly at the mercy of the Residents and how the Nabha affair shows that their Narendra Mandal is treated as an insignificant body with no substantial powers. Virtually they are internees in their own territories. If they are to possess real powers and want to keep their subjects happy and contented, they should not remain indifferent to the swaraj movement in the country but should rather welcome it. The Swadesh urges that if the country is to be wholly interested in the struggle for swaraj, leaders should visit the villages in their largest number and make their inhabitants take their due share in national affairs. The Vartman publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap giving an account of his interview with Trotsky and Lenin in the years 1918 and 1919, respectively, and pointing out that Trotsky sympathised with his political views, declared that he wanted freedom for the oppressed Eastern nations and that Lenin expressed even greater sympathy with his political views.

Muslim affairs.

THE Hamdam resents the Government notification requiring the Haj pilgrims to purchase return tickets and blames the Sharif for upsetting the old Turkish arrangements and thereby adding to the difficulties of the pilgrims. The Indian Government should not grudge to help the destitute Hajis and the enforcement of the notification would be regarded as an interference in religious affairs. The Haqiqat opines that Great Britain is playing a losing game in Mesopotamia and infers from the recent statement of the Premier that he is contemplating the evacuation of Iraq as the British tax-payers can no more bear the burden of expenditure. The Aligarh Gazette, on the other hand, finds in the statement an example of the Labour Premier's lack of sympathy with the nationalists' demands and asserts that in spite of heavy expenditure in Iraq he is not prepared to evacuate the country. The Medina says that the existence of the Khilafat Committees is a religious necessity and essential for the emancipation of India. The first object of the Khilafat deputation shortly to start for the Muslim countries would be to free Asia from European imperialism and promote the pan-Asiatic movement. The Aligarh Gazette regards the arrival of the Turkish deputation in India as a proof of friendly relations between England and Turkey and trusts that the Government of India would leave no stone unturned to make its mission a success.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Haqiqat protests against the Class Area Bill in South Africa and says that it casts a slur on British statesmanship and amounts to a challenge to the Indians. The miseries of their countrymen abroad have exhausted the patience of the Indians and if the matters are not mended soon they would be compelled to go out of the British Empire.

The Labour Government.

The Aj remarks that the fact that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald made no mention of India in his statement of policy, shows that the Labour Government too attaches little importance to Indian affairs. It is unmistakably clear from this indifference that the British Parliament, the so-called arbiter of India's destiny, has contented itself with giving the "steel frame" to India and does not want to bother itself any more about her. The Vartman holds that the Labour Government may well be able to do some good to England, but that no good can accrue from it to India unless the labouring classes here organise themselves and have recourse to agitation.

Constitutional advance.

The Leader praises Sir Malcolm Hailey for his speech in the Legislative Assembly and says: Although his speech was a fine forensic performance and showed that he could hold his own against the guns of the other side, he could not influence the votes because he had nothing better to offer than a departmental enquiry which was not wanted by any non-official member. In the course of a signed article, headed "An open letter to Lord Reading" Pandit Krishna Kant Malaviya, the editor of the Abhyudaya, surveys the political situation in the country during the last three years and concludes that the situation at present is much graver than what it was at the time of Lord Reading's assumption of the viceroyalty of India. He ascribes this deterioration in the political situation to the mistakes repeatedly committed by Lord Reading. He asks whether His Excellency can deny that the recrudescence of the anarchical crime is not the direct outcome of the policy of his Government. The Aj contends that the Indians are as dependent today as they were in the pre-Reform days. The Reforms have led only to increased expenditure. The Swadhin maintains that neither a round table conference nor a commission appointed by the Government of India can do anything substantial towards pushing forward the constitutional advance of India. What is required is a Royal Commission whose recommendation may be binding upon the British Parliament. As the existing Government in Britain is formed by Labour and Liberal members, such a Commission is bound to be composed of members having sympathies with India, unlike the Lee Commission, which was appointed by the Conservative Government. The Vartman points out that if the Government rejects the proposal of the elected members of the Assembly for a round table conference it will have to meet with obstacles at every step and it will become impossible for it to carry on administration. The Government will therefore be well advised to accept the proposal and to include among the members of the conference Mahatma Gandhi, Lala Lajpat Rai and Maulana Muhammad Ali. The Bharat Jiwan contends that if the Reforms are not shadowy the Government must carry out the resolution regarding the grant of dominion status to India if passed by the Legislative Assembly. It is to be hoped that the British Government will surely save its declining prestige and act justly by India by meeting her political aspirations. Contrasting the speeches of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and Sir Malcolm Hailey in the Assembly the Abhyudaya remarks: Pandit Moti Lal's speech was reasonable, well-balanced and altogether restrained. The only fault was that it suffered from an excess of moderation. On the other hand, Sir Malcolm Hailey's speech was not like that of a sensible vakil but of a pettifogging mukhtar. The Desh Bhakta remarks that it is the height of folly to enter the Councils and cooperate with the cruel, and selfish Government which has been repeatedly proved to be deceitful and tyrannical. It will be nothing but barefaced shamelessness on the part of Indian leaders if they, even after Sir Malcolm Hailey's statement, continue to be members of the Councils and cooperate with Government. If Mr. Gandhi remains firm in his principles victory is sure to come into his hands. The Al Bashir remarks that Sir Malcolm Hailey's speech has made it clear that the fear of an Afghan bogey was not the result of natural timidity on the part of the Hindus but was impressed upon them by a third party. He has proved that dissensions and lack of confidence among the different communities of India are essential for the stability of the present Government. The Medina says that it will greatly redound to the credit of the Labour Government if it respects the firm determination and perseverance displayed by the Assembly in its demand for further reforms, otherwise India will be prepared for a vigorous struggle. The Hamdam is sceptical about the success of a Royal Commission in allaying the present political agitation. India can wait no more and the Government instead of trying to cool down the enthusiasm of the nationalists for the time should adopt some effective practical measures to allay the unrest prevailing in the country. The Azad, on the other hand, favours the appointment of a Royal Commission by the Premier in view of the present political situation in the country. The Haqiqat regards the speech of Sir Malcolm Hailey as disappointing and remarks that at a time when ideas of liberty and democracy are occupying the minds of the people, India cannot silently and patiently accept the certificate of unfitness given to it by the Home Member. The Oudh Akhbar expresses its gratification at the passage of the resolution in the Assembly for further reforms and remarks that the question of swaraj cannot be solved without convening a round table conference. Writing in a similar strain the Arya Varta says that Pandit Moti Lal has truly voiced the sentiments of the people and that the Government would be well advised to convene a round table conference, if it wants to prove itself a well-wisher of the country. The Mukhbar-i-Hind is against the appointment of a Royal Commission as the cause of the present unrest is too well-known to require an inquiry.

Lord Olivier's statement.

The Leader says that Lord Olivier's statement does not go much beyond the statement made by Sir Malcolm Hailey. No one can fail to be struck by its conciliatory tone, which is in strong contrast to the spirit and the temper of the Home Member's speech in the Assembly. It bears evidence of the goodwill of the Labour Government towards Indian national aspirations. The paper opines that a policy of indiscriminate obstruction will defeat the end in view and will render the position of the Labour Government itself very difficult. The appeal should not lightly be dismissed coming as it does from an undoubtedly friendly quarter. The Labour Government should be given a chance. The Indian Daily Telegraph, on the other hand, says that the statement will not raise any echo of appreciation in political circles in this country. Lord Olivier has disappointed expectations, for he has not even made a striking speech. This is not the kind of service that India had been led to expect from the idealists and thinkers of the Labour Party. Every word uttered to Indians against their cherished ideal of immediate grant of swaraj will only draw forth a smile from the hardened patriots pledged to win their birthright for their country. In another article the paper dismisses Lord Olivier's speech with a mingled feeling of amusement and disgust and says that there can be no clasping of the hand that pulled the trigger at Jaito. The Independence congratulates the Secretary of State for India for disappointing the Liberals who have been agitated over a Royal Commission. God be thanked that no such dangerous futility has been forced on the country. Lord Olivier has done a distinct service in strengthening the hands of the Swaraj party by disappointing some of the Independents who might have liked to flirt for a while with a Royal Commission. The Pioneer says that the statement will be a signal campaign of vilification and denunciation similar to that with which his Conservative predecessor was assailed.

The Imperial Budget.

Commenting on the Indian Budget the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the budget statement will not take any one by surprise as the proposals indicate no departure from previous records. It is a sorry picture to see education, sanitation and industry being impoverished to enable the bureaucracy to keep a huge monster in the shape of ludicrously expensive military organisation and to maintain the British element therein. A change of heart is required. The present burden is an insult to the self-respect, ambition and patriotism of the sons of the soil. The paper concludes its criticism by asking: The magician of a Blackett has waved the magic wand—who will be hypnotised and who will affix boldly the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth? The Haqiqat advises the members of the Assembly not to vote for any military expenditure in connection with Waziristan. The Bhartiya Lokmat urges the Nationalist Party in the Assembly to compel the Government of India to reduce the salt tax, the postal rates and the railway fares, and in case the Government refuses to do so, to consign the budget to the waste paper basket and thus unmask the Councils and lay bare the bureaucracy in its utter nakedness.

The Restoration of Berar.

The Swadesh remarks that the Government will act wisely if it will satisfy the demand of the Nizam for the restoration of Berar, specially in view of his services during the war and his pledge to grant responsible Government to that province. It adds that the Nizam would strengthen his case all the more if he were to proclaim responsible government within his existing dominion and withdraw the ban on the entry of the Hindu, Swarajya and Tej into it. The Bharat Jiwan doubts whether the Nizam who interdicted the entry of the Hindu and other papers into his territory for the mere offence of criticising his administration will ever grant self-government to Berar, but nevertheless urges that if the inhabitants of Berar consent, that province should be restored to the Nizam who has certainly succeeded in proving that injustice was done to him in depriving him of it. The Hindu Kesri says that the Nizam should first grant responsible government to the Hyderabad State and then demand the restoration of Berar. If he does so, the inhabitants of Berar will be assured of the bona fides of his intentions. The Vartman remarks that the story of the usurpation of Indian States forms one of those black chapters of the history of British rule which are full of accounts of loss and exploitation. The Nizam has held out great promises to the people of Berar, but they smack only too well of British diplomatic methods. Perhaps the Nizam considers Berar to be his private property, but truly speaking the inhabitants of Berar are the property neither of the British Government nor of the Nizam's Government. However defective the British administration of Berar may be, it is far better than the irresponsible administration of the Nizam. The best way to secure the restoration of Berar for the Nizam is to reform the administration of his own dominion. If he does so the inhabitants of Berar will of their own free will desire to be ruled by him. The Khadim of Fyzabad regards the annexation of Berar as an act beneath the dignity of a respectable Government and upon which no civilised nation would look with equanimity. It is a sheer injustice to deprive a faithful ally of his legitimate right. The Nizam's promise of Home Rule has put heart into the leaders, and if the Government does not accede to his request Mahatma Gandhi will start civil disobedience with the help of the Berar people. The Haqiqat hopes that the Government will no more obstinately adhere to its old policy in the matter of Berar as it will create a distrust against it among the well-wishers of the Nizam. The Hamdam says that the restoration of Berar is not only based on the considerations of right and justice but it will also help the cause of political freedom in India. The Medina accuses the British Government of cunningness and diplomacy in the matter of Berar and remarks that the Nizam's demand is a legitimate one and is based on righteousness and justice. The Mansur says that the Nizam's demand for the restoration of Berar has afforded a good opportunity to the Labour Government to give proof of its frequently avowed love of justice. Commenting upon the legitimacy of the Nizam's demand the Al Khalil remarks that territories are acquired by sword or given under compulsion but not willingly for considerations of justice.

The Akali agitation.

The Indian papers are unanimous in condemning the firing at Jaito. The Leader emphasises that more light ought to be thrown on the happenings at Jaito than has been done by the very guarded communiqué that has been issued, as it contains some gaps which require to be filled up. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the responsibility which the Government of India have taken for the Jaito shooting incapacitates them from dealing with the new question that has with one fell blow effaced all prospects of any cooperation between the people and the Government. Mr. Ranga Iyer in a signed article asserts that the supporters of the Maharaja outside Nabha are multiplied by the policy set in motion against the Akalis. Lack of imagination is writ large in the policy of the Punjab Government. The Independence hopes that the question of the restoration of the Maharaja of Nabha over which the whole country is intensely excited will be pursued further, not by the Akalis alone, who are sure to do it, but by the leaders of Indian political opinion. The Bhartiya Lokmat remarks that the jatha of five hundred Akalis has by its martyrdom electrified the whole of the province of the Punjab with enthusiasm. It is certain that the brave Akalis will ultimately emerge victorious from their struggle and their oppressors will have to hang down their heads in shame. The Hind Jadid of Jaunpur appreciates the firm stand made by the Akalis and remarks that in spite of being a warlike tribe the way in which they have adhered to the creed of non-violence can find no parallel in any other community. We have not the slightest doubt that their present enthusiasm, religious fervour and sincerity will result in success and that it would amount to a treachery to the nation not to extend a helping hand to them. The Haqiqat deplores the recent bloodshed at Jaito and remarks that it has made the situation all the more critical and serious. In view of the present organisation of the Akalis there is apparently no hope that the Government will succeed in allaying the agitation by repressive measures. The Pioneer says that the incident at Jaito has led to the dissemination of the most reprehensible mendacities and to scurrilous abuse of British officials. One of the most shocking features in Indian political life at the present time is the manner in which falsehoods of the most mischievous character are spread among ignorant people, and every official who is called upon to accept grave responsibility in maintaining order is held up to obloquy and abuse.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Anand Pracharak remarks that the release of Mr. Gandhi was not due to any fear of agitation but was the result of the magnanimity and kindness of the Government as his life was endangered in jail. The District Gazette of Aligarh regrets that Mr. Gandhi's views have undergone no change after his release, though he will probably admit now that he was not painting the Government in true colours before. The Government in releasing him has proved itself very merciful and Mr. Gandhi would do well to apply himself to the social progress of the country. The Bharat Jiwan says that the country can easily be brought to its old position three years ago, provided Mahatma Gandhi resumes the control of the national affairs in his strong hands. One Brij Behari Mehrotra writing in the Kartavya points out that the release of Mahatma Gandhi is not the outcome of any charitable feeling but of a clever move on the part of the Labour Government which knows that he will certainly hurt his influence against the boycott of British goods which cannot but accentuate unemployment in England and thereby multiply its difficulties in solving this problem. The Government of India appear to have supported the release of Mahatma Gandhi to stem the anarchical tendencies manifesting themselves in the country. These two facts go to show that Government has had to bend its knees before Mahatma Gandhi's personality which stands for peace and non-violence. It is the Government which is responsible for the recrudescence of anarchism as the sequel to its policy of repression. The Prem finds nothing in the release of Mahatma Gandhi to thank the Government, which it thinks must have been moved by some self-interest to make this paltry expiation for its terrible mistake and unjust action in imprisoning him. It remarks that the Indians played traitor to Mahatma Gandhi and were the main cause of his incarceration. They have done nothing in the interval to enable them to welcome him with a clear conscience. Let them now make up for their previous negligence by redoubling their efforts in the country's cause under his renewed leadership.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman expresses gratification that the Bolshevik movement continues as strong as it was in the time of M. Lenin. It is entirely the fruit of his labours. It remarks that even imperialist Britain is now seeking the friendship of the Bolsheviks by recognising the Soviet Government. The Bhavishya refers in commendatory terms to the principles of socialism and remarks: Through socialism its originators seek to inaugurate a new era of equality. Socialism means that the kisans and labouring classes should carry on the administration of the country with their own hands in accordance with democratic principles. Bolshevism is but another name for socialism. The installation of Labour Government in England is a living proof of the success of socialism. This victory of socialism in an imperialistic country like England gives a foretaste of the future order of things. It is certain that the future Government of every country in the world will be socialistic and akin to the Bolshevik system of administration. The Utsah publishes a contributed article in which the writer makes out that though there is complete religious liberty in Russia, the Bolsheviks are being discredited by interested people. The greatest power in the world being helpless against the Bolsheviks, seeks to prejudice the world against them by means of an unscrupulous propaganda. Indians have nothing to fear from Bolsheviks who are only out to destroy despotism.

The U. P. Budget.

According to the Leader the Hon. the Finance Member did not hold out a cheerful prospect for next year. It urges the claim of the United Provinces to the remission of provincial contribution and regrets that they have to suffer because of the impecuniosity of the Government of India. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the budget is no 'Prosperity Budget.' Old deficits stand in dark prominence. The Government have not made efforts to economise, and if they wanted they will do it with a will and not depend on the notes of Under Secretaries. The Pioneer says that the closing deficit instead of anticipated surplus will be a disappointment to the provincial tax-payer, who will find himself once more called upon to shoulder the burden of the additional taxation imposed last year. The tax-payer, therefore, is left to derive what comfort he may from Mr. O'Donnell's confident expectation that it will not be necessary next year again to introduce Bills extending the operation of these Acts.

The Chauri-Chaura Memorial.

Referring to the Chauri-Chaura memorial the Pratap sarcastically asks H. E. Sir William Marris to request the Government of India to erect similar memorials to the memory of the victims of the Moplah train tragedy and of the Indians shot down at the Jallianwala Bagh.

Enforcement of the Muslim Waqf Act in U. P.

The Hamdam is confident that the resolution for the immediate enforcement of the Muslim Waqf Act will meet the warm support of the Council and the Government will abstain from placing any obstacles in accepting the same. The Muslim waqfs are generally for religious and educational purposes and it is the prime duty of every civilised Government to help in the achievement of such object. Writing in a similar strain the Zulqarnain says that the resolution voices the sentiments of the Muslim public of these provinces and the opposition of those who are in possession of the waqf property is of no importance as they belong to the interested party. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the resolution of Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan will to a great extent satisfy the long-standing need of the public. It suggests the establishment of an office composed of honorary workers in each district under a Muslim member of the Council for that district to do the work on behalf of the Government. Shah Wilayat Husain and others of the Allahabad district in a memorial to the Muslim members of the Council published in the Haqiqat assert that the passage of the Waqf Act is calculated to create difficulties and dissensions among the Musalmans and besides being an open interference in religious affairs it will furnish a good weapon to the people to harass the trustees.

Political propaganda.

The Hindi Kesari publishes a communication from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap in which he says: "I ask whether those who call themselves Aryas and accepting service under the British bureaucracy help it in crushing the Indians are really Aryas? Certainly not. And in the same way those Hindus are not Hindus and those Musalmans are not Musalmans who oppress Hindus and Musalmans for the sake of a few pice. God has given two religions, Hinduism and Islam, for the benefit of mankind to suit different places and times, but their object is one and the same. These two creeds are but two aspects of the same religious system. Those who regard them as wholly opposed to each other are fools or have been blinded by false pride. They alone are the wise people who recognise oneness in these two forms. The Aj also publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap in which he warns the Nepalese against accepting British help in the construction of bridges, railroads, etc., otherwise they themselves will be the instrument of imposing shackles of subjection upon their country. They will do well to seek the aid of Japan and smaller European countries like Switzerland, Sweden, and Denmark in the development of their country. If the rising kingdoms like Nepal and Afghanistan, he says, want to maintain their self-respect they should strengthen themselves by mutual agreements and never allow the British, who hate the coloured races, to gain ascendancy in them. The Hindustani says that the growing poverty of the country and the present unrest are due to the continual drain of wealth to England. It does not believe that India can enjoy prosperity under the British rule and remarks that only swaraj can keep the nation alive during the present struggle for existence.

The Khilafat.

THE papers which have so far commented on the Khilafat crisis are surprised at the news of the deposition of the Khalifa. The Leader says that the news must cause a great shock to the Indian Musalmans who made such huge sacrifices for its victory and preservation. The drastic action taken by the Angora Assembly has, we are afraid, knocked the bottom out of the Khilafat movement in this country. It calls upon the Ali brothers and other Khilafat leaders to devote their time and energy henceforth exclusively to the national movement and to shed once for all their extra-territorial patriotism. There is no room left for divided allegiance, and if the decision of the Angora Assembly produced the happy result of drawing Muhammadans and Hindus nearer to each other, and bringing into closer approximation their aims and objects, we would regard it as divinely inspired. In another article the paper says: The action of the Angora Assembly is one of the unkindest cuts to those Indian Musalmans who prayed for the victory of Turkish arms and made great sacrifices in the belief that if the Turks won, the Khilafat would be safe. Now this almost arrogant attitude of Ismet Pasha is likely to be resented rather keenly by Indian Khilafatists. It is a cruel slap in their face. In a contributed article the paper says: It is not the "satanic" British Government which has destroyed the Khilafat but the redoubtable Kemal Pasha, whose praises the Indian Khilafatists have sung and who cannot be described as the enemy of Islam. It advises the Indian Musalmans to give up their extra-territorial patriotism and revise their policy. Their future lies not in Turkey nor in Arabia but in India, and the decision of the Angora Assembly ought to bring this fact home to them. The Khilafat Committees and its offshoots should be abolished and Muslim politics should be freed from the domination of religion here as they have been in Turkey. It offers a warm tribute to the great patriots of Turkey who have thus won the internal and external freedom of Turkey and thrown off the shackles of ages. The Pioneer says: By a curious irony the leader of the party at Angora which favours the deposition and banishment of the Khalifa and has prevailed on the National Assembly to endorse its views is Mustapha Kemal Pasha who was not so long ago hailed by Khilafatist leaders in India as the saviour and bulwork of the Khilafat. Commenting upon the deposition of the Khalifa the paper says: Whether this action on the part of Turkey spells the end of the Khilafat it is for Moslems to decide. The Khilafat may be revived in some other Moslem country, but the decision of the Angora Assembly makes it clear that the seat of it will no longer be in Turkey. The leading Muslim daily, the Hamdam, is surprised to find the Turkish republicans trying to oust the very family which carved out the Turkish State and which was the pride of the Muslim world for centuries. The Turks are entitled to choose their own Government, but they must at the same time uphold the institution of the Khilafat. The news is distressing to the Musalmans but they should take no hasty steps and should carefully study the trend of events in Turkey. It approves of the action taken by the Central Khilafat Committee in applying to Mustapha Kemal Pasha for authentic news. The office of Khilafat is a basic principle of Islam and the question can admit of no hasty solution but requires an atmosphere free of excitement. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The root and branch effacement of a religious and historic link that rallied the superstitious attachment of the Moslem all over the world to Constantinople, will affect the large body of conservative Moslem opinion. Turkish statesmanship, in the sudden and extreme action it has taken, has failed to utilise the large body of Islamic opinion available outside. They had the help from other Muslim countries whose opinion they now profess to discard.

Indians in Colonies.

The Hamdam describes the Class Areas Bill as insulting to the Indians, productive of racial bitterness, harmful to the commerce of the country, and prejudicial to the interests of both the communities. It hopes that the Government of India will not allow the Gandhi-Smuts compromise to be thrown into the waste paper basket. If the British Government fails to solve the question to the satisfaction of the Indians, the latter will see no good in remaining within the British Empire.

Constitutional advance.

The Hindustani regrets that the Labour Government has failed to take advantage of a great opportunity by refusing to hold a round table conference. The Mashriq asserts that the Government will act ungratefully towards the Musalmans if it grants swaraj to India at a time when the Hindus are oppressing the Musalmans. It trusts that the English will not leave the Musalmans at the mercy of the Hindus and remarks that every act of bringing India to the path of liberty was a folly. The Garhwali says that when the British Government is pledged to grant swaraj to India it should have no hesitation in accepting the demand for the amendment of the Government of India Act. When Lord Reading was ready to convene a round table conference two years ago he should have no scruples in convening such a conference now. The unnecessary postponement of the grant of swaraj will be equally detrimental to the interests of the rulers and the ruled. While the Surya considers the action of the Government of India in opposing the Nehru amendment as imprudent, it says that the Swarajists would also be betraying similar imprudence if they resorted to an obstructionist policy and wrecked the Reforms. If the Reforms are withdrawn and an arbitrary administration is re-established in the country not only the Viceroy but also the Swarajists will be responsible for it. The Aj opines that by refusing to give effect to the Nehru amendment which has been passed in the Assembly by an overwhelming majority of votes the bureaucracy has accepted the challenge of the Swaraj Party. The Bhavishya is convinced that the Nehru amendment will not be carried into effect by the Government and thinks that the Swarajists have wasted their energies for nothing. It advises them to cease to rely on the satanic and unholy weapons of the crooked bureaucracy and follow the divine and holy path laid down by Mahatma Gandhi. The Kartavya also doubts whether the Government will carry out the Nehru amendment despite its passage in the Assembly but is sanguine that when the Government will have to face opposition at every step it will have to yield in the end. The Vartman asserts that if only a few more debates take place in the Assembly like the one that took place on the Nehru amendment it will become very difficult for Sir Malcolm Hailey to continue to remain in office and the need for adopting an obstructionist policy will also not arise. The Indian bureaucracy and the British cabinet are cognisant of the unprecedented change that has taken place in the Indian political situation and if they do not profit by it they will have to undergo bitter experiences in the future. The Abhyudaya remarks that if the leaders of the Nationalist Party decide that the attitude of the Government in regard to the Nehru amendment is unsatisfactory the Government will be compelled to dissolve the Assembly. This dissolution of the Assembly will form the first chapter of the struggle between the Government and the representatives of the people. The Bharat Jiwan says that if the members of the Legislative Assembly maintain the unity they displayed on the occasion of the passing of the Nehru amendment they can surely win swaraj whether the Government grants it or not. It asks the people also to continue to push forward their khaddar, boycott and swadeshi movements with full vigour to support from outside the agitation for swaraj within the Council.

Lord Olivier's statement.

The Pioneer is satisfied that the Labour Government will entertain no proposal for a round table conference to settle the future constitution of India and that they decline definitely to accede to the demand for the premature appointment of a Statutory Commission under the Government of India Act. While welcoming the Labour Government's declaration of policy the paper cannot help feeling that Lord Olivier would have been well advised if he had avoided some of the propositions which he put forward in his survey of the past, notably his reference to Mr. Lloyd George's "steel frame" speech. Lord Olivier will soon discover that there are few acts of Government which cannot be made the pretext for violent political agitation in India. The Secretary of State has yet to grasp the true aims of the Swarajists, to realise the implacable racial animosity by which they are inspired and the apprehension which their methods created among the sober and solid elements in India. The Hamdam expresses its disappointment at the speech of the Secretary of State for India and remarks that it is not materially different from the utterances of the Conservative and Liberal Governments. He has repeated the old song of praising the bureaucracy and condemning the non-cooperators. If India is unfit for swaraj it is chiefly due to the rule of an alien Government. The Haqiqat regards the speech as extremely disappointing if it is the true reflection of the policy of the Labour Government and remarks that it has been prepared with unusual care to give no cause of complaint to the Anglo-Indians and the bureaucracy. The Najat says that the Indians who were counting on the vigorous support of the Labour Ministry to their scheme for swaraj have been greatly disappointed by the speech of Lord Olivier. The Aj remarks that Lord Olivier has endorsed the views of Sir Malcolm Hailey in toto. The only difference between the statements of Sir Malcolm and Lord Olivier is that while the former is full of bureaucratic arrogance, the latter is couched in sweet and polite language and contains indefinite promises for the future likely to allure the Indian mind. The Vartman believes that the Secretary of State's statement on India is not the final pronouncement and that the question of the expansion of autonomous powers in India is still under the consideration of the British Government which is anxious to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the question. It does not find in the Secretary of State's pronouncement any confirmation of the statement made by Sir Malcolm Hailey in the Assembly on behalf of the Government. The Anand opines that the sympathetic statement of Lord Olivier on India encourages the hope that the Labour Government will take measures to satisfy Indian aspirations and asks the Swarajist leaders to abandon their obstructionist policy in view of this statement.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Arya Mitra characterises Maulana Muhammad Ali's remarks that a Muhammadan, howsoever degraded and impure he might be, was superior to Mahatma Gandhi, as rank bigotry and says that he should make it plain to the Hindu leaders who are tired of harping upon the topic of Hindu-Muslim unity, that the Muhammadans look upon them with supreme contempt. It asks the Hindus to maintain their self respect and individual identity in their cry for unity and swaraj. They shoul- have nothing to do with such a swaraj as is built on the ashes of the Hindd community and the Hindu religion. The Vartman also takes to task the Maulanu for his statement that the Khilafat Committees were the originators of the nona cooperation movement, remarking that every action and utterance of the Maulana- strongly smacks of communal partisanship. The Congress is the originator of the non-cooperation movement and not the Khilafat Committees. The Maulana is [illegible] to himself and his community the entire credit for every- thing which the Indian nation as a whole has achieved. He must have some regard for his high responsibilities as the Congress President.

Imperial Budget.

The Independence says that the budget statement of the Finance Member will not take any one by surprise. By its plausibility, outward attractions and clever marshalling of figures it puts before the legislators a picture that is calculated to create imperfect impressions and stimulate those who choose to sit on the fence and are ready to drift to the bureauoratic point of view under the garb of moderation or sweet reasonableness. The Advocate remarks that it is satisfactory to note that the budget shows a surplus instead of a deficit, but there are a number of ugly features which cannot but be condemned by all impartial observers. In spite of the Inchcape cuts, the military octopus still continues to play havoc on the finances of India. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the bait of provincial contributions has not been caught by the politicians who might have clutched at it in advocating the cause of the poor. There is no other country in the world that pays so heavy for its military protection. The paper is afraid the Commander-in-Chief was overdoing his part when he swore about the impossibility of further reducing the strength of the army. As regards the salt-tax the paper says that it would be safe to predict that the salt-tax would go and that the provincial contributions would stand. The Leader says that it appears unlikely that the Nationalist Party should follow a policy of obstruction and throw out the budget. If this policy is to be followed by the majority in the Assembly, it would be obviously waste of time and energy for Indian publicists to discuss it any further on the merits and to make suggestions for its improvement. It opines that the duty of the non-official members of the Assembly is absolutely clear and it is to vote for a rate of Re. 1-4-0. The Hamdam says that the Finance Member deserves to be congratulated on presenting a "surplus budget." The people will not be satisfied at the small reduction made in the salt-tax and the members of the United Provinces Council will surely raise a protest against the very small reduction allowed in their provincial contribution as compared to other provinces. The Anand remarks that though some efforts have been made to meet the public wishes with regard to the budget yet the concessions made are so few and meagre that they cannot satisfy the people.

Restoration of Berar.

The States, a new journal devoted to the interests of Indian States, appreciates the idea of His Exalted Highness the Nizam to confer on the Beraris a constitution with an "absolute popular control." Instead of holding out a promise for Beraris it suggests that His Exalted Highness should give the idea a practical shape in his present dominion. The Beraris will then have no objection to the restoration of their province. Besides, this wise step of the Nizam will give lead to other Indian princes and help them a great deal. The Hind Jadid does not believe in a plebecite in the matter of restoration of Berar as in India thousands of people can be got who at the least hint from local officials will be prepared to sacrifice their national pride and patriotism and says that they are not willing to accept any change in the existing system of administration. The Azad remarks that the Nizam's offer of home rule to the people of Berar refutes the plea of opposition of the Indian States to swaraj put forward by the Home Member in the Assembly. The home rule to Berar, besides proving beneficial to the cause of India, will furnish a good example for other Indian States also. The Oudh Akhbar resents the opposition of a section of the Hindu press to the restoration of Berar and remarks that the Hindu-Muslim controversy raised in this connection will prove detrimental to the interests of the country. The opposition to the restoration of Berar amounts to an opposition to the grant of swaraj to India. The Mashriq says that the prestige and honour of England will suffer a heavy loss if it persists in its present attitude in the matter of Berar. It is high time for the British nation to give practical proof of its love for constitutional reforms by restoring Berar to the Nizam. The Swadhin says that if the Nizam is prepared to grant responsible government to Berar provided it is restored to him, he should have no objection to establishing at least partial swaraj in his existing dominions.

The National Conference.

The Medina adversely criticises the National Conference held at Delhi and describes the Liberals as a party which wants to gain public confidence and at the same time appease the Government. It regards the proposal of sending a deputation to England as absurd and useless. Commenting upon the conference the Arya Patra says that it is an insult to the nation to call it a National Conference. The people who have taken part in the deliberations of this conference have committed the unpardonable sin of stopping the progress of India. When the Assembly was not in favour of a Royal Commission the conference should not have insisted upon its appointment. The Hamdam pays a tribute to the efforts of Mrs. Annie Besant and remarks that any constitution which is not drawn up by India itself will ever fail to satisfy the people. The Round Table Conference and the Royal Commission are equally useless unless the rulers are sincerely prepared to bring about a radical change in the system of government. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the goal of the Nationalists and the Liberals being the same this division of national energies cannot be harmful to India and that prudence and mutual toleration demand that both the parties should support and help each other. The Vartman disapproves of the resolution passed in the National Conference urging the appointment of a Royal Commission to revise the Reforms Act and holds it to be inopportune, worthless and detrimental to the interests of the country. There was absolutely no need for it, says the paper, when the resolution about the Round Table Conference had already been passed in the Assembly. It has unnecessarily raised a new issue thereby, destroying the unanimity of the demand for a Round Table Conference. The Aj resents the decision of the National Conference to send a Liberal deputation to England in connection with the amendment of the Reforms Act and says that the Liberals should before deciding to send a deputation make sure whether any settlement which they may make in England will be acceptable to the country or not.

The Akali agitation.

The Pioneer regrets the attitude of the non-official members of the Assembly in not accepting the statements of responsible Government officials in connection with the firing at Jaito. The obvious determination of the disaffected section of political opinion in this country to use every effort to misrepresent the Government's attitude towards the Sikhs and to encourage the dissemination of the most mendacious stories of the events now giving cause for so much anxiety in the Punjab will not help the Sikh cause but it will certainly cause trouble for India. The Indian Daily Telegraph regrets that a warning to the second jatha in terms of the first warning has been issued. It is impossible to tolerate the shooting of religiously-minded men. When a martial race, noted for their great service to the British Raj and the Empire, are determined on the restoration of the Maharaja of Nabha, the Government might and ought to bend. It considers it a great lack of political vision in the rulers that they should have no other reply, even after the shooting at Jaito, than a repetition of the old order in the old spirit in the face of the stern preparation of the second Akali advance on a religious purpose. The Hamdam apprehends that the hostile attitude adopted by the Government towards a purely religious movement of the Akalis will strengthen their zeal all the more and remarks that rifles and guns may well conquer a country but they are powerless to win the hearts of the people. In another article the same paper says that the tragedy at Jaito has created extraordinary enthusiasm and excitement among the Akalis and it is no easy task now to keep it under control unless the Government gives some practical proof of an expression of regret on its part. The Desh Bhakta of Meerut in a strongly worded article describes the Jaito affair as the harbinger of India's freedom. The Medina deplores the action of the State authorities and remarks that it is an epilogue of the tragic drama enacted at Jallianwala Bagh. It describes the shooting incident as a great demonstration of imperialism and militarism in which the rights of humanity have been trampled under foot. The Hind Jadid says that the Nabha authorities have acted in a barbarous and cowardly manner and that it was very ungrateful on the part of the Government to shed the blood of such a devoted and loyal people. The Hindustani asserts that the Government action amounts to a challenge to the Indians and that India can furnish no greater illustration of patriotism, selflessness, and strict adherence to the creed of non-violence as recently displayed by the Akalis. The Al Khalil says that the Akalis by their bravery and non-violence have enlisted the sympathy of the Indians of every shade of opinion. The Zulqarnain, on the other hand, avers that the Akalis aim at establishing their own government in the Punjab and holds it a good omen for the Musalmans that they are not inclined to support the Akalis. Qazi Abdul Latif in a signed article in the Aftab condemns the Akali movement as dangerous to the peace and tranquillity of the country and refuses to believe that the Akalis remained non-violent in the recent tragedy. He justifies the action taken by the Nabha authorities and remarks that under the pretence of going to Gurudwara the Akalis in reality wanted to make a raid on the State. The Aj remarks that the Jaito shooting is the revised edition of the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy. It shows that the spirit of Sir Michael O'Dwyer and General Dyer is still alive among the British officials in India. Lord Reading has not only very ably maintained the reputation left behind by Lord Chelmsford but has added to it. The relatives of the dead and the souls of the wounded must be singing praises to the success of the Reforms and the utility of cooperation! In another article the same paper congratulates the bureaucratic administrator of Nabha on having earned the credit of interfering with the Akhand Panth by opening fire upon the Sikhs. It is not a new thing with the bureaucracy, says the paper, to itself perpetrate injustice and then open fire in the name of the maintenance of "law and order" upon those who protest against its injustice. Dr. Kitchlew and Principal Gidwani who had proceeded to the scene of occurrence were arrested in order that India may be prevented from knowing the account of this gruesome tragedy from the pen of an eye-witness. Here is an example of Lord Reading's justice, liberality and love of India! The Desh Bhakta condemns the firing on the Akali jatha proceeding to Jaito as a demoniacal act on the part of the Nabha authorities and remarks that for some years past it has become quite a common occurrence in India to fire on and kill innocent and helpless people. But now the people should no longer remain apathetic. We should be ready to help whole-heartedly those who are sacrificing their lives in the cause of the country otherwise the Indians will be swept out of existence altogether. The Bharat Jiwan says that if the reports regarding firing on the Akalis are true the bureaucracy should hang down its head in shame. Many people will be led to think that it is by such acts that the bureaucracy is driving a nail in its coffin. The Vartman remarks that the shooting at Jaito demonstrates that the rulers of India have bid good-bye to wisdom and prudence. It refers to the communiqué of the Government and says that it appears to be untrue and affords ample ground for suspicion. Several statements made therein seem to have been fabricated. Government will have to repent of its action in the end. In a subsequent article the paper remarks: It is clear from the situation in the Punjab that any halt in the Akalis' struggle at present will prove as retrograde a step as the Bardoli halt. Just as a re-awakening has not been caused in the country even now after the suspension of satyagraha at Bardoli it is quite probable that the suspension of satyagraha at Jaito may cause similar slackness and indifference among the Akalis which it will not be easy to remove afterwards. The Anand also condemns the shooting at Jaito and asks the Government of India to act wisely and adopt measures for conciliating the Sikhs.

Political propaganda.

The Pratap emphasises the need of carrying on agitation in the villages so as to make every village a small republic. With regard to the kind of workers required for the purpose, the paper observes: We do not want demagogues to work in the villages but real and unostentatious workers. Nor do we want those who want to serve the country by vilifying the Government or by seeking the path of courting imprisonment. These days people have begun to trade upon jail life and unfortunately it has succeeded in making leaders of incapable and unprincipled persons. The greatness of a village worker lies in his constructive and not destructive work, in his devotion to duty and not in hooliganism. The Swadesh says that though the civilians claim to be the protectors of the Indian masses yet despite the crushing poverty of the latter which is responsible for disease, distress and high rate of mortality among them, they have taken no steps to remove it. They have not so far appointed even a commission to enquire into the question but instead got the Lee Commission appointed for the increase of their own pay. It is indeed a peculiar way of expressing solicitude for the interests of the masses. The Nyaya says that the country wants to advance forward, but the bureaucracy places obstacles at every step. When it fails in its diplomacy it opens the doors of the jails and uses rifles and machine-guns. It regards the Indian patriots as worse than thieves and dacoits and murderers and does not hesitate to condemn them to severest punishment.

Khilafat crisis.

WHILE the comments of the non-Muslim papers on the Khilafat crisis are marked with sympathy and caution, the Muslim press views the affair with unmixed grief and concern. The Pioneer says that the attitude of the Angora Turks towards the Khilafat furnishes conclusive proof that Mustafa Kemal Pasha and his followers who are in a majority in the Angora Assembly are imbued with the narrowest ideals of Turkish nationalism and are indifferent to the religious and political significance of the Khilafat which means so much to the Muslims elsewhere. It is clear that nothing short of a revolution and overthrow of Mustafa Kemal Pasha's Government could restore the Khilafat in Turkey and of this there seems little likelihood. The future of the Khalifa will depend on the action which may be taken by the Musalmans outside Turkey. But whatever action may be taken the Angora Assembly may be expected to hold aloof from it. Commenting on Mr. Muhammad Ali's statement the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the Maulana's speech on the new situation created by the recent action of the Turkish Government would rouse resentment against the Government of India because an opportunity was not given for the Indian view to be placed before the Angora leaders. It is also unfortunate that cruel censorship, to which the telegrams of the President of the Indian National Congress are subjected, should have resulted in a very important telegram not being despatched at the proper time. The speech of Muhammad Ali is thrilling with excitement suppressed but not suppressible. Turkey is bound again to be in the throes of a revolution, and while the sword of the brother is turned against brother, the European would have all his own way. The Advocate says that the Hindus who espoused the cause of the Khilafat under the guidance of Mahatma Gandhi cannot but sympathise with their Musalman brethren at this critical juncture. What exactly is the course to be followed by the Muslims of India is yet too early to see. The Aj apprehends that the news of the effacement of Khilafat will create a sensation in the Muslim world and will cause a shock to the Musalmans. It sympathises with the Musalmans and advises them not to be led away by excitement to do anything indiscreet in the heat of the moment. The Vartman, on the other hand, asserts that the motive behind the action of the Indian Musalmans in trying to maintain the Khilafat institution is to realise in the near future their dream of the establishment of a large Muslim empire. The Medina says that the Turks have destroyed their house with their own hands and their spiritual greatness and religious prestige have ended with the abolition of the Khilafat. We can never agree with them that the Muslim public has no right to challenge their decision and interfere in this matter. The Hamdam does not regard the decision of the Assembly as binding on the Muslim world and urges the necessity of sending a deputation of Muslim politicians and Ulema to Muslim countries and of convening a conference to decide the question. The Oudh Akhbar is surprised at the hasty decision of a question which concerned the entire Muslim world and remarks that any active participation in this controversy by the Indian Musalmans is likely to create differences. Writing in a similar strain the Haqiqat regards the Khilafat as essential for pan-Islamism and exhorts the Indian Musalmans to elect some other dignified Muslim ruler for this office. In another article the same paper regrets that the decision of the Angora Assembly has driven the last nail in the coffin of the Khilafat movement in India and that it is calculated to nip in the bud the Muslim efforts for the emancipation of Jazirat-ul-Arab. A deputation of the Khilafat Committee should at once start for Angora, and after conferring with the Turks should decide the question in a way satisfactory to the Muslim world. The Arya Varta regards the divorce of politics from religion as essential for the political advancement of a country and advises the Indian Musalmans not to render their position still weak by taking any hasty step in this connection. The Muraqq-i-Tasweer of Fatehpur says that the Khilafat has been abolished at a very opportune time. The Indian Musalmans should now cease to take interest in this question and should no more send Indian money to Turkey. They should now devote themselves to the task of emancipating India. The Al Khalil justifies the decision of the Angora Assembly remarking that under the present circumstances the presence of the Khalifa in Turkey was not compatible with a democracy. The Advocate says that it cannot be gainsaid that the abolition of the Khilafat institution is an ignominy and dishonour to the Musalmans of India who have during the last three years carried on the Khilafat movement with considerable zeal and self-sacrifice. The Leader opines that the confusion created can be easily solved by the Turks agreeing to revise the decision, and it seems to us that the best course for the Indian Khilafat leaders in the circumstances is to go on deputation to Turkey without any loss of time, after consulting, if necessary, the members of the Angora deputation in India.

The Labour Government.

The Aj notes with satisfaction that since the assumption of the offices of the Premier and the Foreign Secretary by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, a fresh life has already been infused into British foreign policy and much has been done to improve the European situation which had been badly muddled by the arrogant, short-sighted and self-willed Lord Curzon.

Constitutional advance.

The Arya Varta opines that the constitutional deadlock brought about in the Central Provinces Council represents a splendid victory of the Swarajists if in consequence of it the Government is forced to dissolve the Council and the Governor rules over the province according to his own sweet will. India wants full responsible government and cannot be satisfied with bogus Reforms. The Haqiqat has no faith in the stability of coalition of the Swarajists and Independents and advises the former to persist in their policy of obstruction which is sure to influence the Labour Government in the long run. The Leader commenting on the obstructionist policy says: If the truth is to be told the Swarajists have established nothing except their lack of consistent policy and courage to face the consequences of the policy of obstruction. If the policy of blind obstruction had been persisted in, it would beyond question have strengthened the hands of the opponents of Indian progress both in India and England, and correspondingly weakened the position of the friends of Indian aspirations.

Imperial budget.

The Haqiqat remarks that so far as Indian interests are concerned this year's budget is very satisfactory and the opposition of Swarajist members can never be successful in getting it rejected by the Assembly. Expressing its satisfaction at the budget the Oudh Akhbar remarks that it deserves no opposition by the Assembly. It advises the Swarajists to refrain from obstruction if they want to escape the accusation that they are placing obstacles in the path of India's progress. The Anand remarks that though some efforts have been made to meet public wishes in the Imperial Budget, the concessions made are so few and small that they cannot satisfy the people. The Vartman says that the Imperial Budget has been framed by the Government to achieve its own political end and represents an attempt to throw dust into the eyes of the members of the Assembly. If the members of the Assembly have any manhood and patriotism their plain and clear duty is to reject this despicable budget, lock, stock and barrel. The Anand says that the enormous deficit in the revenue from the salt-tax last year shows that Government gained nothing beyond discredit in this deplorable matter and that the enhancement of the tax unquestionably reflects on the political sagacity of Lord Reading and the financial skill of Sir Basil Blackett. It urges that this palpable blunder should be set right this year.

Lord Olivier's statement.

The Hamdard says that the constitutional advance in India is possible only on the lines indicated by Lord Olivier and advises the leaders of the country to sink their differences and unite to frame a scheme acceptable to the Labour Government. It will never do to forfeit the sympathy of the Labour Government by obstructionist tactics in the councils or by accentuating Hindu-Muslim differences outside them. The Pratap holds that Lord Olivier's statement is an eye-opener to the Indians. Those who believed in the idealism of the Labour Party will now have to change their attitude. The Vartman thinks that the Secretary of State's statement is marked by a complete violation of the principles of the Labour Party. It has not only disappointed but also insulted the Indians. It is a typical illustration of socialistic diplomacy. The statement, however, will do good to India inasmuch as it will disillusion the Moderates and the Independents with the result that the hands of the Swarajists will be strengthened and they will be able to carry out successfully their policy of obstruction. The Swadesh, while admitting that the statement is sympathetic, points out that the cooperation of Swarajists and Nationalists with Government has been sought therein only on the basis of mere words. Lord Olivier is badly mistaken if he thinks that Indians will any longer be taken in by them. The Medina resents the speech of Lord Olivier and sarcastically remarks that so far as public peace and tranquillity is concerned the British angels and saints are as good as Satan and Haman. If a list be prepared of all the promises made by Great Britain it would appear as the ravings of a madman and a grand demonstration of idiocracy. The time has now come when the victims of capitalism and militarism should unitedly rise and break asunder this spider's web. The Oudh Akhbar says that the Labour Government is adopting the very best measures to solve the present complications and that nobody who has read the full speech of Lord Olivier can criticise the attitude of the Labour Government. The Azad remarks that the Secretary of State for India has tried to see every question from the Indian point of view. The Indians should value the sentiments expressed by him and encourage him in his good-will for India. The Mansur describes Lord Olivier's speech as sorely wounding the feelings of the Indians and remarks that they should expect nothing at the hands of any party in England. The Mukhbir-i-Alam says that Lord Olivier's speech was not only contrary to the expectations of the Indians but has dashed to the grounds all the hopes of the Indians for emancipation. The Al Khalil observes that Lord Olivier's speech has disillusioned the Indians. He condemns the imprisonment of Mahatma Gandhi but supports the very Government who committed the cruel act.

The Akali agitation.

The Indian Daily Telegraph resents the action of the Nabha authorities in refusing permission to Mrs. Gidwani to speak to her husband in her mother tongue and says that Principal Gidwani is a British subject, but he has no protection against the Nabha Jail Manual being forced upon him. These incidents will remain in the minds of the people and cannot be easily effaced. If there is statesmanship in the Government of India, it will strive to tackle the Akali problem not through the grapeshot at Jaito but by negotiations at Dehra Dun with a view to restore his kingdom back to Maharaja Ripudaman Singh and thus setting the British free to face the ills they are heir to from the Government of India Act instead of flying to those they know not of. In its Saturday issue the Indian Daily Telegraph congratulates all concerned for avoiding the shock of another tragedy at Jaito. Indian leaders, bred in the atmosphere of compromise, may be reminded that there can be compromise with the Akalis only if Maharaja Ripudaman Singh is restored to the throne of his fathers. "This is my house," said the Guru to Nabha, and that house can never be the house of Mr. William Johnstone. Commenting upon the Jaito tragedy the Azad avers that the shooting incident has all the more aggravated the grudge borne by the Sikhs. If a loyal community like the Sikhs has turned against Government the latter is entirely at fault. The Haqiqat says that the result of the struggle is doubtful and that there are indications of Government's suffering a disgraceful defeat in the end. The Tohfa-i-Hind condemns the repressive measures adopted by the Punjab Government against the Akalis and sarcastically remarks that the brutal treatment meted out to the Sikhs is the most fitting reward for the loyal services rendered by them. The Abhyudaya says that mere expression of sympathy with the Akalis in their sufferings on the part of the Congress cannot help them in their present distress. The only way of expressing genuine sympathy towards the Akalis is to help them directly with men and money. The Bhartiya Lokmat refutes the allegation made in the official communiqué that the shahidi jatha possessed weapons and the Akalis were the first to open fire at Jaito and remarks that one is led to believe that Government fabricated this falsehood in order to find an excuse for the calculated murder of the peace-loving and non-violent Akalis. The Pratap remarks: We can blame neither the Nadir Shah of Nabha nor Lord Reading whom Mr. Johnstone had seen only three days before the Jaito incident for the indiscriminate shooting of the Akalis. The responsibility for this cold-blooded murder of the Sikhs falls on the shoulders of those of us whose preachings incite the people to fight but whose conduct shows that while they can court suffering and pick up quarrels they cannot bring about national unity or organisation which is necessary for bringing their struggle to a happy conclusion and for averting the disaster which may befall the country consequent on their actions. The Abhyudaya writes: The Nabha authorities are undoubtedly guilty of shedding the blood of innocent British subjects. They also stand discredited for arresting and maltreating women. The repetition of the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy at Jaito is the outcome of the callousness and inhumanity ingrained in the authorities. The Government of India too cannot be absolved from responsibility for this tragedy. The Bhavishaya considers the official communiqué regarding the Jaito shooting affair as wholly misleading and full of misrepresentations. The Akalis who are pledged to non-violence had no weapons with them. Obviously the allegation that they opened fire first is baseless and has no foundations whatsoever. The Akalis never deviated from the path of non-violence. The Swadesh describes the Jaito incident as a repetition of the Jallianwala Bagh affair and says that it shows that the British bureaucracy in India attaches no more value to Indian lives than to turnips and radish. This is a second mean cowardly and reprehensible attack on the helpless and unarmed Indians pledged to non-violence. The responsibility for this bloodshed lies on the head of Lord Reading and Sir Malcolm Hailey who had been consulted before the tragedy was enacted. Despite the clamour and agitation for the last four years the bureaucracy has not changed its heart and has continued to exhibit brutality and callousness. The Aj supports the sending of fresh jathas to Jaito and thinks that Mahatma Gandhi's advice about the suspension of satyagraha is not based on a correct or up-to-date knowledge of affairs in Jaito.

Legislative Assembly.

Commenting on the split between the Independents and Swarajists the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Assembly becomes toy soldiers of Pandit Motilal Nehru again,—yesterday's obstruction was only a clever spring-work, that only emphasised mockery more. The scene that comes from the Assembly must make the Swarajist party look supremely ridiculous. The country now awaits the return of these political buffoons of the Legislature to undertake mass movements in the real country. Pandit Motilal Nehru seems to have lost all for a moment when he threw himself at Sir Hailey's feet for approval of his action. It disapproves of the statement of Pandit Motilal Nehru and says that the Swarajist Party have harmed the cause of and above all darkened the political reputation of Pandit Motilal Nehru if they continue to be aimless logs tossed about in political waters. The Pioneer says that the Swarajist leaders are uncomfortably aware of the fact that if owing to any extraordinary combination of circumstances the British left this country, the time would have arrived for them to make a hurried exit themselves. The rulers of India would have none of them. Commenting on the refusal of the grants in the Legislative Assembly the paper says: The speeches made sufficiently indicate the lack of a sense of responsibility characterising the Swarajists. There would be regret because the decision would appear to be a manifestation of unreason and resentment because it would constitute a check on the orderly and harmonious progress of India to responsible self-government.

The Congress.

Commenting on the Congress scheme for the creation of an independent secretariat the Leader says that it should be patent to the most unsophisticated that what Mr. Asaf Ali's scheme aims at is the establishment of a parallel government. There is at present absolutely no chance of its success and there is no need for us to deal with it seriously. But it indicates in what an unreal world some of our "leaders" live.

Restoration of Berar.

The Kshattriya Mitra says that if the Nizam had introduced responsible government into his existing territory his pledge to grant autonomy to Berar would have carried some weight. It doubts whether the inhabitants of Berar will ever agree to be ruled by the Nizam on account of his religious and communal bigotry. The Gyan Shakti urges the Viceroy not to consent to the restoration of Berar to the Nizam without consulting the people to be affected by the change. As the Hindu subjects of the Nizam are highly dissatisfied with him owing to his religious bigotry and his boycott of certain Hindu papers the Government of India will do well not even to consider the demand.

The Maharaja of Kashmir:

The Kshattriya Mitra says that the Kshattriya community is greatly excited over the rumours set afloat regarding the grant of the title of His Majesty to the Maharaj of Kashmir and the virtual transfer of his authority to a Council mostly composed of outsiders and asks the Kashmir Durbar and the Government of India to publish communiqués to contradict the rumours to reassure the public mind.

United Provinces Budget.

The Hindi Kesari disapproves of the United Provinces budget pointing out that the expenditure on survey, police buildings, and the Empire Exhibition is most lavish, while very little has been provided for the extension of the education. It urges that there is still much room for retrenchment in other departments on the lines followed in the Revenue department. It inquires why the Secretariat staff is not reduced when two Ministers and two Executive Councillors have been added to the Government of the province. It remarks that lavish expenditure on unnecessary objects on the one hand and increase in taxation on the other only mean that the poor people are to be crushed.

Political propaganda.

The Desh-Bhakta protests against the criticism of the Morning Post regarding the indenting of some goods from Germany by the Government of India and the resolution of the Bombay Corporation in regard to the boycott of British goods and says that they are indicative of the black hearts of the Whites and also of the fact that Englishmen want to exploit India by all means both fair and foul and are never desirous of making it free. The Morning Post gets besides itself and dreams of leaving India at justifiable acts of Indians, but never utters a word against the atrocities perpetrated by the Whites on the Indians in the Colonies. Such a policy of the Whites leads one to suspect that they want to extirpate Indians like the aborigines of Australia and other countries and to take possession of their country for good. The demonical tragedy in Nabha shows that even the greatest Power in the world cannot succeed in its efforts to deprive Indians of their rights provided they stand united and are ready to sacrifice their lives unstintedly. The Shakti says that if the Liberals and the non-cooperators combine and present a united demand to Government it will be compelled to come to terms with them. It asks the leaders to take immediate steps to organise the country once again so as to infuse fresh enthusiasm into the people and make them renew their struggle with better results than in 1921. The Dehati charges the Government with responsibility for the murders committed by misguided patriots, for, after all, their activities are a direct consequence of the autocratic subjection imposed upon the country by it. It is only by the grant of swaraj that such murders can be put an end to. The political consciousness of the Indians has been stimulated and they can no longer be kept slaves by sword and machine-guns. The British statesmen should ponder over the consequences likely to accrue from trampling upon the rights of the people and besprinkling the soil of the country with their blood. If the British statesmen continue their present policy, and if the soil of India continues to be drenched with the blood of its own children, as has recently happened in the Punjab, the proclamation of the liberty of India will be made not by Britain but by the Indians themselves and the contents of which are already being written in history in the drops of their blood. Dwelling upon the Indianisation of the Army the Arya Varta critises the military policy of the Government and asks whether within the last two hundred years not a single Indian has been found fit for the post of Commander-in-Chief. Such would not have been the case if the Government had acted honestly. The Najat accuses Great Britain of exploiting India's wealth to satisfy her lust of territorial aggrandisement and remarks that the income derived by taxing the poor Indians is lavishly spent on the luxuries and comforts of high-paid English officials.

Khilafat crisis.

THE Muslim press in general condemns the decision of the Nationalist Turks and with the exception of the Mashriq rejects the Sharif's claim to the Khilafat. The Hamdam argues that the question of the prestige of Islam is bound up with the question of Indian emancipation. The Indian Musalmans by courageously discharging their duties in respect of the Khilafat will not only revive the splendid traditions of Islam but will also ensure the freedom of their country. In another article the same paper commends the statement of Mr. Muhammad Ali to thinking Musalmans and resents the action of the Government in refusing passports to the members of the Khilafat deputation and detaining the telegram sent by the leaders to Mustapha Kemal Pasha and remarks that the Indian Musalmans are justified in suspecting that the enemies of the Turks have a hand in the abolition of the Khilafat. At another place the paper says that until the proposed Conference of Musalmans gives its decision the deposed Sultan, Abdul Majid, should be recognised the lawful Khalifa by the Indian Musalmans and that Sharif Husain is not a fit person to hold the sacred office of the Khalifa as he cannot be trusted to safeguard the prestige of Islam and protect the sacred places. The Medina says that the unstatesmanlike decision of the Angora Assembly has created chaos and confusion throughout the Muslim world, the practical proof of which has been furnished by the attitude of the Sharif. He does not deserve to become a Khalifa and the sacred office can be entrusted only to that Muslim Power which is free and independent in every sense. In another article the paper expresses its surprise at the indiscretion and lack of foresight displayed by Arabia, Egypt and Morroco in their scramble for the Khilafat. The Haqiqat takes to task Shaikh Mushir Husain Qidwai for advising the Musalmans to recognise Sharif Husain as their Khalifa and remarks that the Amir of Afghanistan is more suitable for the office. The Al Khalil characterises the action of the Nationalist Turks in turning out the members of the Ottoman dynasty in such a disgraceful manner as a great moral blunder and remarks that if Mustapha Kemal Pasha had any respect for Islam he would have willingly consented to assume the office of Khalifa. Deploring the hasty action of the Angora Assembly the Al Balagh and Mansur strongly refute the arguments of Ismet Pasha that the sympathy of the Indian Musalmans for the Turks was not the result of pan-Islamism but of the great power and prestige which the Turks enjoyed. The Hind Jadid sounds a discordant note and regards the decision of the Angora Assembly as based on prudence and foresight from political and religious considerations. It has disappointed the European conspirators and given an opportunity to the Muslim world to elect a Khalifa according to the democratic principles of Islam. The Tohfa-i-Hind advises the Khilafat Committees not to give the mills of Seth Chhotani to the Red Crescent deputation but to spend their sale proceeds on some important movement in India. The Aligarh Gazette, however, is of opinion that the Red Crescent deputation should not be made a victim of the Musalman's displeasure and that the Indian Musalmans should subscribe largeheartedly for a cause on which depends the honour and prestige of Islam. The Hindustani avers that if the Musalmans had even dreamt of the unjustifiable step taken by the Turks they would have confined their activities only to the achievement of Swaraj. The Rahnuma expresses its satisfaction at the steps taken by the Central Khilafat Committee in assuring the deposed Khalifa of the allegiance of the Indian Muslims and of the faith they still have in him. The Iqdam says that the Turks are justified in abolishing the office of Khalifa but their hasty decision without convening a conference of the Muslim world is calculated to deal a severe blow to the cause of pan-Islamism. The Hindu press, on the other hand, views with approval the abolition of the Khilafat as tending to strengthen the Turkish Republic as well as to decrease the extra territorial patriotism of the Indian Musalmans. The Pratap says that the abolition of the Khilafat should bring home to the Indian Musalmans the need of concentrating their attention on Indian affairs, seeing that Turkey or Arabia will never come to their help in the hour of need. The Abhyudaya points out that the Turks did the right thing in the interest of their republic and remarks that there are only two courses open to such of the Musalmans as are opposed to this action of the Turks.

The one is that if the Turks agree and Mustapha Kemal Pasha has no objection, the Musalmans may elect him as the Khalifa and the other is that either King Husain or Amir Feisul may be elected to this office. The Gyan Shakti says that the abolition of the Khilafat by the Turks in utter disregard of the wishes of Indian Musalmans must convince the latter that the infidel Hindu who did so much to help the Khilafat movement is much better than the Turks. The Muhammadans will do well yet to unite with the Hindus and work for the good of the country. The Bhavishya holds that the action of the Turks in abolishing the Khilafat will affect favourably the whole of Asia and particularly the Muslim countries. The Anand says that the abolition of the Khilafat should serve as an eye-opener to Indian Musalmans who should henceforward look upon India as their motherland and give up all extra-territorial patriotism. The slap administered to them by Kemal Pasha should convince them that the Turks do not care at all for them. The Khilafat Cmmittees should now be dissolved and all energies concentrated on the agitation for the attainment of swaraj. The Vartman consoles the Indian Musalmans by pointing out that the office of the Khalifa has not been abolished; only it has no place in Turkey. The Aj opposes the election of the Sharif of Mecca and the Khedive of Egypt to the Caliphate on the ground that both of them are mere puppets in alien hands and have played false to their own co-religionists. It urges that in fact there should be no Khalifa at all in future, the present era being that of nationalism and not of autocracy. The Independence says that the school of independent thinkers to which the Young Turks belonged were Nationalists first and Musalmans afterwards and they never cared for the Khilafat, which they considered as no better than a medieval rag. And, therefore, small wonder that at the first opportunity they have deposed the autocrat of Turkey and dismissed the Khilafat. On the deposition of autocracy in Turkey, all friends of freedom and democracy will give their joyous greetings to Mustapha Kemal Pasha. On his dismissal of the Khilafat from Turkey opinion in and outside Turkey will of course be divided.

Help for the Moors.

Commenting upon the Spanish campaign in Morroco the Hamdam exhorts the Indian Musalmans to help the Moors who are struggling for liberty against a big European Power. The Turks are now powerful enough to look after their own affairs and those who were in favour of organising an "Angora Legion" should now offer their services and fight side by side with those who gave the first lesson of Muslim civilisation to Europe. It suggests that a medical mission should at once be sent to Morroco and the work of organising a "Morroco Legion" should be started.

Lord Olivier's statement.

The vernacular papers continue to express dissatisfaction on the statement of Lord Olivier. The Desh Bhakta says that whatever plausible arguments Lord Olivier may adduce to postpone the establishment of responsible government in India, it is certain, in view of the growing political awakening in the country that the more the Government indulges in repression or the Secretary of State in smooth and oily phrases the more rapidly India will march towards liberty. It is the autocracy of the bureaucracy, the paper asserts, and not the services of British statesmen and of British industrial and mercantile community which has brought about the present awakening in the country. The latter have only exploited the country and impoverished it. The Kartavya holds that Lord Olivier's statement has made it quite plain that no compromise can be effected between the Nationalists and the authorities, unless the latter are compelled to do so. It urges that all political parties should combine to retaliate against the insult offered to India by the rejection of the proposal for a round table conference. The Prem says that the Secretary of State's statement will surely serve to disillusion the Moderates and the Independents and that Britain let slip a golden opportunity to conciliate Indian public opinion. It urges that India should henceforward depend upon her own exertions alone for the attainment of swaraj. The Bharat Jiwan sees a velvet gloved iron fist in Lord Olivier's statement and an attempt to cause dissensions between the Swarajists and Independents. It says that the Secretary of State's sweet words should serve to remind them that the basic principle of British statecraft is deception and trickery and urges them to continue to adhere to their joint policy and programme. The Tohfa-i-Hind regrets that the speech of the Secretary of State for India has disappointed and perturbed both the Liberals and the Swarajists and is calculated to aggravate the unrest in India. All political parties in India should now unitedly exert for convening a round table conference. The Al Bureed describes the speech as disappointing to the Indians who had entertained high hopes from the Labour Government and remarks that even the Moderates cannot feel gratified at his speech.

Constitutional advance.

In a leading article headed "A Plea for constitutional advance" the Leader commends the views expressed by a writer in the Round Table magazine and says: It is probable that if the appointment of a Royal Commission had been announced the policy of obstruction in the Assembly would not have secured even the small majority of votes that it has. The Government does not seem as if it cared much whether the wreckers were able to command a majority or not because it has decided upon pursuing a determined policy of not yielding to coercion. But it cannot stand still. Either it must go back or come forward. No one can say which course it will follow, but statesmanship points out to the latter course alone as the right one to be followed. The Swadhin points out that if the Labour Government does nothing to satisfy the strong Indian public opinion in favour of further constitutional advance, which has already been flouted by the rejection of the proposal for a round table conference despite the willingness of Nationalists to follow constitutional methods, even the Liberals may be compelled to change their methods. The Aj remarks that Mr. Richard's statement in Parliament that the British Cabinet did not contemplate revising the Government of India Act before 1929 must open the eyes of the Liberals and the Independents and convince them that no party in England will deal justly by India unless it is compelled to do so by virtue of the superior strength of the Indians. It advises the Liberals and the Independents to accept non-cooperation, which is the only means of acquiring the required strength. The Pioneer characterises the obstructionist tactics of the Swarajists and Nationalists in the Legislatures as a set-back to the Reforms and points to the adverse impression produced on the British Parliament and the British Press and remarks that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's speeches show that he is equally alive to his obligations in this respect, and that he is the very last man to be misled or coerced by obstructionist tactics in granting a constitutional advance against his better judgment. That is the position with which the Indian politician who has recklessly played the wrecking game is sternly confronted.

Indians in the Colonies.

Commenting on the proceedings in the Council of State on the question of Indians abroad the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the debate is remarkable not for any new arguments advanced by either side, but by the extremist note that a Liberal leader like Mr. Sastri thought it necessary to sound: and also because of the sad moaning from two Indians placed in high position in the persons of Sir Narashimahesawar Sarma and Sir Muhammad Shafi. Of no two Indians could it have been said that they are more thoroughly out of touch with Indian sentiment on the subject than these trusted advisers of bureaucracy. The Leader regrets the statement made by Mr. Thomas on the Kenya problem and says that apparently the Colonial Secretary fails to understand that the Kenya question involves moral and political principles of the greatest import to the future of the Empire. It warns the Labour Government and says that never were statesmen in office faced by a graver responsibility to take right decisions informed by insight and foresight. Will they show that they are statesmen and not mere hand-to-mouth politicians living from day to day on rule-of-thumb practice?

Restoration of Berar.

The Haqiqat exhorts the people of Berar to follow the example of the people of Akola district and convene meetings expressing their desire of being transferred to the rule of the Nizam. It, however, regards it unnecessary to find out the wishes of the people as no such step was taken in the case of the people of Benares State. The Anand Prachark says that if the Nizam really loves his people he should first of all establish responsible government in his present territory and then make such promises to the people of Berar as he can hardly hope to fulfil. It now rests with the Indian Princes to support the cause of Indian emancipation by granting home rule to their people.

Imperial Budget.

In a leading article headed "Swarajists and Indian Budget" the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the unpopularity of the Reforms and the budget alike is due to the fact that the former are a farce in the sense that they do not concede to Indians anything beyond a mere voice to criticise the Government's policy, while the latter is a hoax in the sense that the members of the Assembly and the Council have no voice, much less a choice, in its framing. Commenting on the rejection of the Finance Bill the Leader says that the method chosen by Pandit Madan

Mohan Malaviya and the present system of Government to obtain a really responsible government is calculated to defeat its own end. But neither logic nor consistency nor regard for consequences seems to be the strong point of the moving spirits of the party and it committed another mistake of much greater magnitude in rejecting the Finance Bill. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya enunciated a policy of blind obstruction when he declared that he could not support taxation either now or in the near future until the Government of India Act was revised. The Pioneer says that in rejecting the Finance Bill the heroic majority of 60 persuaded themselves that they were once more establishing some indefinite principle and making a notable "gesture" to the world. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the effect on the country of the rejection of the Finance Bill would be a consciousness of their own superiority in unceremoniously spurning what Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya called sham and fraud. It asserts that India would not desist speaking out her mind and showing her hand simply because Parliament might be displeased, or Premier MacDonald has gone back on his words regarding India and has asserted that Parliament would not be coerced by obstruction. The Indian nation too would not be coerced by any angry gesture from Parliament. The Government have to shun the sham and the fraud, and go back to undiluted autocracy again. And if it falls into the lot of the Labour Government to do this India would have known the worst: "Never expect anything from the British nation." The Bharat Jiwan urges that the salt tax should be brought back to its old level and that reductions should also be made in provincial contributions, the resultant deficit to be made good by substantial cuts in the military budget, which can easily be effected by partial substitution of cheaper Indian troops in place of the costly British troops. It further urges that the increased postal rates which cause hardship to poorer classes and loss to traders should also be reduced, while imports of steel and iron more heavily taxed and the existing duty on foreign gold retained. The Aj disapproves of the change in the attitude of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru in respect of the budget grants and remarks that although it is not possible for the Swarajists to carry on obstruction without the help of the Independents, yet they should refuse all grants consistently with their pledges to the voters.

The Weekly Mazdoor says that the debate on the Railway Budget in the Assembly should open the eyes of all the Union workers in all the railways in India and Burma to see that their main duty is to post the real facts to the Assembly members to overcome the jugglery of the railway officials and their kith and kin in power to protect them at the cost of the Indians.

The Legislative Assembly.

The Vartman disapproves of the wavering attitude displayed by some Independent members of the Nationalist party in the matter of creating obstruction in the Assembly and remarks that the Independents have been allured by the siren-song of Lord Olivier and that in his statement they see a dream of the dawn of a millenium in India. If this illusion is not dispelled soon the obstructionist tactics might never see the light of the day. The Aj says that the Swarajists have had enough of tall talk and it is time they took to action. Threats of obstruction will not do; they will have to resort to obstruction. Every member of the Swaraj and the Independent parties should oppose each and every item of the budget until all political prisoners are released and effect is given to Pandit Moti Lal Nehru's amendment.

The Swaraj Party.

Commenting on the split between the Swaraj party and the Independents in the Legislative Assembly the Advocate says: Sandwiched between the criticisms of the Moderates on the one hand and the die-hard no-changers on the other the lot of the Swarajists is anything but enviable. The paper does not believe that there has been any climb down on the part of the Swarajists. It was, on the contrary, a straightforward explanation of the tactics which the Swarajists have been forced to adopt in the peculiar circumstances of the case. The policy adopted by Pandit Moti Lal Nehru is at once wise and courageous and has already yielded results which will ere long be justified in the eyes of the people at large. The Indian Daily Telegraph is gratified that the Swarajists' steam roller has begun to grind down the Bengal Budget. The Swarajists have taught Minister Haq good manners: he made a handsome apology: the Swarajists are not merely wrecking engines for they also elevate those who come in touch with them. The Haqiqat advises the Swarajists not to change their programme whether the Independents support them or not and remarks that they will incur public displeasure if they give up their policy of obstruction in the Assembly. In another article the same paper suspects the Swarajists of leaning towards a policy of cooperation with the Government. It advises Pandit Moti Lal not to sacrifice the principles of his party for the sake of coalition as it will lower the Swarajists in the estimation of the public and strengthen the position of Government.

The Akali agitation.

The Desh Bhakta maintains that although the Akalis had remained non-violent they were fired upon unjustifiably and treated very cruelly. It alleges that according to one report some of the wounded Akalis were burnt alive, yet Lord Curzon holds that Akalis have not been sufficiently repressed. It welcomes further repression as it will tend to stir up the blood of the Indians, remove the lethargy holding sway over them and make them devise measures for their liberation. The Prem contends that the disobedience of the unjust order of the Nabha authorities does not at all establish the necessity for opening fire on the Akalis and tries to make out that the official communiqué is full of misrepresentation and misstatements. It remarks that the Nabha authorities may primarily be to blame for this terrible and inhumane bloodshed, yet the Government of India cannot be absolved from responsibility for it. It urges the Akalis not to relax their struggle or else they will commit a blunder worse than the Bardoli halt. The Kartavya points out that the public cannot believe the official communiqué which contained many baseless and unsupported allegations. If the advance of the Akalis was to be stopped they could be arrested but there was no need at all for opening fire on them. Surely the bloodshed at Jaito is the outcome of the shortsightedness, cruelty and inhumanity of the Nabha authorities, but the Government of India too is responsible for it, as the Administrator of Nabha is one of its own officers and has acted in consultation with it. The Bhartiya Lokmat remarks: What a fine example of British justice it is that while the Government upheld the sentence of death passed on Gopi Nath Saha for murdering an Englishman by mistake, despite the appeal for mercy made by his mother, it patted on the back of Mr. Johnston who ordered the peace-loving and non-violent Akalis to be scorched by bullets! Did not Mr. Johnston deserve worse punishment than hanging for perpetrating the heinous crime of murdering the Akalis? The Jaito incident is a repetition of the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy. The Independence says that the Nabha question cannot rest where it does today notwithstanding the ruling of the Assembly and the visible embarrassment of the Governor-designate of the Punjab. An India-wide agitation must be started thereby illustrating that the maligned Swarajists and the Congress care as much for the Indian Princes and their liberties and rights even as they care for the indefeasible privileges of the people. The Nabha question must be made a national issue. Even as the partition of Bengal was annulled by the pressure of public opinion, Maharaja Ripudaman Singh would not have to "rot" at Dehra Dun for long.

Benares municipality.

Commenting on the correspondence between the Commissioner of the Benares division and the municipal board regarding the suppression of the municipality, the Leader says that it is astonishing in the present era when the country is demanding the establishment of full responsible government suggestions should be made for the suppression of a municipal board on such wholly reactionary grounds. It suggests that the board should be given more time before a final adverse judgment is passed on it. It certainly deserves generous financial assistance to enable it to clear off in whole or in part liabilities created without regard to sound finance by its predecessors under official auspices. The decision should be left with the rate-payers who are primarily concerned in the municipal administration.

The U. P. Council.

The Aj condemns the refusal of permission to Pandit Yajna Narayan Upadhya to speak in Hindi in the U. P. Council and says that in fact India exists for the officials and not the officials for India, otherwise the few English officials could well learn Hindustani without requiring the whole country to learn English.

The Muslim Waqf Act.

The Hamdam remarks that the new Act, while granting no power of interference to the Government, has given facility to the public for controlling their religious endowments and tying the hands of the dishonest trustees in misappropriating the national property. The objection regarding the expenses of audit has some weight but the Ulema will do well to ponder over the question and inform the Government and the public of their decision. A correspondent writing to the same paper supports the memorial submitted by the Allahabad people and advises the Musalmans not to take any such step as may be calculated to invite Government interference. He suggests that the best way of doing away with the dishonest trustees is to establish a department attached to the Muslim League to decide the cases of dishonesty.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman remarks that if Indians want to liberate their country, to break the chains of slavery and to attain a position of equality among the nations of the world, they should fix complete independence as the goal of the Congress and devote themselves wholeheartedly to its attainment. The Desh-Bhakta draws upon the Nizam's letter to the Viceroy for the restoration of Berar to show how deceitfully the English acquired India and how the British Government overpowered by self-interest has always played false even to its friends. It remarks that the British Government which could not keep itself to the path of rectitude at the very outset cannot be expected to deal justly by India. The Bharat Jiwan has a contributed article in which the writer puts in a strong plea for the organisation of cultivators to improve their existing deplorable lot and to utilise it in carrying the no-tax campaign to a successful end in case it is undertaken by the Congress in future. In another article in the same paper Babu Sampurnanand of Benares says that Indians want revolution and not evolution and that whatever the Prime Minister might say to the contrary it is only to unconstitutional agitation that England yields.

Khilafat crisis.

THE Khilafat question continues to engage the attention of the Press. The Leader opines that the chances of the Muslims of the world coming to an agreement on the Khilafat question and electing one common Khalifa are remote. The same paper publishes a contributed article by Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan who justifies the decision of the Angora Assembly in abolishing the office of Khilafat and remarks that it is difficult to withhold sympathy from the Turks in their earnest efforts to give their nation a chance for self-development and self-expression. He warns the Indian Musalmans as to the European propaganda which is naturally directed against Ghazi Mustafa Kemal and his Government. The new spirit and movement cannot be agreeable to the late opponents of Turkey who will not fail to exploit the deposed Khalifa in order to excite Muslim feeling against the Turks, and thus to isolate them for their own purposes. Khan Bahadur Azizuddin Ahmad writing in the Pioneer says: Let the Indian Muhammadans realise that the Khalifa now dethroned was not a descendant of the Great Prophet. King Husain of Mecca is such a descendant and it would only be an act of justice if he is recognised as a Khalifa. He is the custodian of the holy places and as such should receive our whole-hearted support. In recognising him as Khalifa, Khilafat would be restored to its original home. No other candidate is more legitimate than King Husain. The Satyagrah holds that the abolition of Khilafat cannot help influencing the Muslims in other countries. It is bound to bring our fellow-countrymen to their senses, to stop separate propaganda and communal quarrels and join others who are working for the uplift of their mother-country whole-heartedly. The Haqiqat takes to task Sheikh Mushir Husain Qidwai for supporting Sharif Husain's claim to Khilafat and thereby putting Islam to disgrace in the eyes of others. The Sharif is looked upon with hatred and contempt throughout the Muslim world and it will be sheer shortsightedness to make him a Khalifa. The Al Bashir says that the hasty decision of the Angora Assembly and the treatment meted out to the Khalifa betray a feeling of vindictiveness on the part of the Nationalist Turks and there is every apprehension that the abolition of the Khilafat will alienate the sympathies of the Indian Musalmans. In another article the same paper remarks that it will be quite contrary to the injunctions of Islam if the Musalmans grudge help to the Red Crescent deputation simply because the Turks have abolished the Khilafat. The Indian Musalmans can never realise the expediency which compelled the Turks to take such a drastic step. The Al Bureed avers that the decision of the Angora Assembly has given rise to intense indignation and consternation throughout the Muslim world and remarks that the deposed Khalifa should not resign the office of Khilafat until the Muslim world arrives at a final decision. The Mukhbir-i-Alam regards the Sharif's claim to Khilafat as premature and hopes that the Turks will soon realise their fatal mistake and reinstate the Khalifa. The Al Khalil asserts that Sharif Husain lacks personal qualities necessary for a Khalifa and remarks that King Faud of Egypt has a preferential claim to the office if he succeeds in freeing himself from British influence. In another article the same paper expresses apprehension that the proposed conference of the Muslim world will not be able to solve the question of Khilafat in a way acceptable to all the Musalmans. The Mashriq advises the Musalmans to acknowledge Sharif Husain as their Khalifa and remarks that the Khilafat has ever been the cause of discord and dissensions among the Musalmans, and that if it had been a useful institution the Turks would not have abolished it. The Tabligh describes the decision of the Angora Assembly as contrary to the dictates of morality, justice and religion and remarks that it leads the Musalmans towards a grave danger and that there is every apprehension of a civil war breaking out in Turkey. The Anand Pracharak justifies the action taken by the Angora Assembly and challenges the right of the Indian Musalmans to impose their will upon Turkey. It asks if even now the Indian Musalmans will not realise that their interests are bound up with India, that the Turks cannot come to their aid in the hour of need and that it is mother India which has a first claim upon their attention. The Vartman warns the Indian Musalmans against the attempts of the Statesman and of certain double-dealing Britishers of the type of Lord Curzon to set them against Kemal Pasha in connection with the abolition of Khilafat. It points out that Kemal Pasha took the momentous step only in the interest of the future of Turkey and the Muslim world and that it is a great blunder to call him an enemy of Islam. It urges that if the Indian Musalmans entertain any suspicion about his motives they should send a deputation of religious divines and political experts to confer with him and then decide upon the course of action to be followed by them. The Aj ridicules the claim put forward in the manifesto issued by the Khilafat Committee and the Jammait-ul-Ulema in reply to the telegraphic message of Kemal Pasha, that the Musalmans of the world have a right to interfere in the affairs of Turkey and impose upon her the duty of protecting the Khilafat and remarks that the Indian Musalmans should realise that their obduracy will tear to shreds the Islamic unity, the preservation of which is the very object of the Khilafat movement.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: India would read with hushed voices and beating heart the threat that Gandhi has administered to South Africa and through South Africa to England, that India may go out of the Empire if justice and fair play be denied to Indians in South Africa.

Lord Olivier's statement.

The Swadhin opines that Lord Olivier's statement is a peculiar medley of sympathy and ignorance. His remarks on the Akali agitation show that he has been completely duped by the bureaucracy. His recognition of the unjustifiability of the enhanced salt-tax is however an adequate proof of his sympathy with the poorer classes. The Sewak remarks that the Secretary of State's statement has dashed to the ground all the hopes of India and should serve as the last warning to Indians that it is in India itself that their arena of struggle lies and that they will have to break the last chain of slavery with their own hands. The Utsah says that Lord Olivier's rejection of the proposals for a round table conference and the appointment of a Royal Commission will prove beneficial to the country inasmuch as it will lead the Indians to re-concentrate their energies on the non-cooperation movement and make the Moderates return to the Congress fold.

Constitutional advance.

Commenting on Lord Curzon's recent speech in the House of Lords on constitutional advance in India the Leader says that it represents a complete denial of the right of self-determination on which a section of Indian politicians has been laying so much stress. Indeed, the whole speech of Lord Curzon shows that he is completely out of touch with the forces that are at work in this country. The acceptance of the extremely cautious and reactionary policy advocated by him can only lead to disaster. The Independence says: We have reason to believe that Simla-Delhi are today more powerful than Whitehall or Downing Street in the matter of further Reforms. We make this statement on the very best authority. We may also say that Sir Malcolm Hailey who is generally suspected to be a reactionary in Indian circles is not opposed to but is as firm about an immediate further advance of the Reforms even as he is firm on the maintenance of law and order. God grant both the Government and our leaders courage and vision to meet each other half-way setting at rest suspicions of overwrought Englishmen, that we want to turn them out "bag and baggage" and of pessimistic Indians that they want to keep us down with the "Junker's jack-boot." The Pioneer says: A more serious question is, where would India be if the British connection were severed, or at least where would the politicians be who expend their energies in baiting the existing Government and Government officials?

Imperial Budget.

The Indian Daily Telegraph holds that the action of the Council of State in playing the willing tool of the bureaucracy in carrying out the mandate of the Government for unanimously passing the recommended Finance Bill will scarcely call for any remarks in the country: it will not affect the political situation by even a ripple. It is valueless. The Independence describes the rejection of the Finance Bill by the elected members of the Legislative Assembly as "a climax in the all too brief history of the Reforms and also of British rule in India" and remarks that if this spirit of esprit de corps was carried into the country in a vigorous campaign, the Nationalists would achieve what the no-changers, Swarajists and all have at heart and arrest the growing demoralisation of a people made weak and tame by time and fate. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and the other Pandit of Allahabad have admirably succeeded in keeping the Nationalist party intact and uniting all the members in throwing out the Finance Bill. By so doing the Legislative Assembly has put the Government on their own responsibility to find money to continue the administration. In indecent haste the Government reintroduced the amended Bill in the Assembly only to be subjected to the same determined treatment. The Surya ascribes the rejection of the demands for grants on the first two days in the Legislative Assembly to the obduracy of the Government itself and remarks that it is no good submitting the budget to the Legislative Assembly when the suggestions of its members are not only altogether ignored but even resented, as is evident from the Commander-in-Chief's speech on the Military budget. The Oudh Akhbar describes the rejection of the Finance Bill by the Assembly as a splendid victory of the Nationalists and as an inevitable result of the attitude adopted by the Government towards the demand for a round table conference, which forced the Swarajists to adopt a policy of obstruction. Government should at once turn its attention to the present situation in India or it will have to make preparations for its premature departure. The Hamdam regards the re-introduction of the budget in the Assembly as a great insult to the members who had once given their decision. In view of the procedure adopted by the Viceroy no sane Indian can have any doubt that the Reforms are a mere farce and fraud and that it will amount to a victory of the Swarajists, if the present Government of India Act is repealed and the Councils are dissolved.

The Angora deputation.

Commenting on the refusal of passports to the Angora deputation the Pioneer writes that it is difficult to accept without reserve the suggestion that the deputation is entirely religious in character, when two prominent Hindu politicians, who have been distinguished by their hostility to the Government of India, are included in its personnel. A passport carried with it the request of His Majesty's Government that the administration of the country in which it is used will give every assistance and help to its holder. No reasonable man can expect the British Government to commit themselves in that respect on behalf of Indian subjects who have shown themselves hostile to British rule. Further, it says that it does not believe, however, that the mass of responsible Muhammadan opinion in this country will endorse the view that the case of Indian Musalmans can best be advocated by the Ali brothers and their politically-minded associates. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The revelations of the Home Member on what can only be described as the passport scandal will be read with dismay by the public who are now face to face with a new engine of political repression. The Government of India claim the right to keep back any representative Muslim from going to Angora on the ground of his political opinions. Pan-Islamism in India must wait at the ante-chamber of the Home Member of the Government of India to get a passport before supporting the Khilafat. This is the latest evidence of the hidden hand to thwart the aims and aspirations of political and religious champions in India, outside India.

Legislative Assembly.

The Pioneer says that the decision of the Legislative Assembly regarding the immediate repeal of the Bengal Regulation III clearly indicates a refusal to give support to Indian officials who are doing their duty in the face of anarchical terrorism, the extent of which can only be appreciated by those who are well acquainted with Bengal's sinister reputation on that account. The Hamdam has no hope that the Government will act upon the resolution passed by the Assembly for repealing the repressive laws and remarks that the way in which the national demands are at present being ignored and the united voice of the nation is not allowed to assert itself is sure to create feelings of unrest and disappointment in the country giving rise to revolutionary conspiracies. The Leader remarks that the unedifying spectacle presented in Delhi during these two months by the fourteen Liberal members of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State should be the last of its kind.

The Bengal Legislative Council.

The Leader says that Lord Lytton acted rightly in explaining to the Bengal Legislative Council his own constitutional powers with regard to the reserve and transferred departments of the Government and in informing it as to what he can do in connection with both these departments in case the entire budget was thrown out, as threatened by the Swarajists and their henchmen in the Council. There is no better way of inculcating a sense of responsibility among the electorates than by making them reap the consequences of the action of their representatives. The Government would place itself entirely in the wrong if the suggestion of the Englishman to amend the Government of India Act so as to give to the Governor in the transferred departments the power of certification which he possesses in the reserved departments is accepted. If the electors are of opinion that Government should do nothing for education, sanitation, industries, etc., why should it undertake responsibilities in these beneficial directions and open itself to the charge of trying to consolidate its position by discharging the duties of a civilised Government, and also of acting autocratically? The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The Bengal Ministry is shattered to the winds. It is a case of merciless application of the surgeon's knife. It would be a sad confession, indeed, of utter bankruptcy of political vision and far-seeing statesmanship if the reply to this extreme gesture of popular mistrust and contempt for the "sham and the fraud" of the Reforms should be the quiet transfer of the ministerial departments to the reserved half and running the show as if nothing had happened.

The United Provinces Council.

Commenting on Lieut. Shaikh Shahid Husain's explanation regarding the attitude of the Taluqdars in connection with the rejection of the Land Revenue and Settlement grant in the Provincial Council the Pioneer says: We cannot say that we are greatly impressed by this explanation which seems to make a distinction without a difference. If the Taluqdars desired to press on the Government certain criticisms of the settlement scheme their obvious course was to move a nominal reduction, and if it had been carried their protest would have been quite as effective as that actually made. The Leader does not approve of the vote carried in the United Provinces Legislative Council against the Local Government's demand for a grant under the head of Land Revenue—Survey and Settlement. If the grant is not restored by certification, says the paper, the effect of the Council's vote will be to bring to a dead stop all work, in progress and pending, in connection with the re-settlement of districts, without regard to the merits of cases and even when the result of re-settlement may be a reduction of assessment. The vote under criticism has not rendered easier the task of those who want to see land revenue included in transferred subjects. The Independence reports the rejection of Court-Fee and Motor Taxation Bill in a bold head line as "Swarajists' victory in the United Provinces Council."

The Swaraj party.

Commenting on the abandonment of obstructive programme in the Legislative Assembly, the Independence remarks: If the country had returned the Swarajists in large numbers, the entire programme of obstructive non-cooperation from within could have been put into operation. The public should not hastily misjudge the Swarajists who are making the best of a bad situation. In view of the absence of capable Swarajist leaders in the Provincial Legislatures the Haqiqat remarks that the activities of the Swarajists in the Assembly cannot be productive of much useful and effective results. It advises the Swarajists to make preparations for launching a more vigorous opposition in the Assembly and the local Councils during the coming July session. In another article the same paper says that if Swarajists concentrate their full energy on the "Reserved subjects," their difficulties will be removed to a great extent and there will be greater chances of their success. The Aj ascribes the sudden suspension of obstructionist tactics in the Assembly to the inability of the members of the Independent party as a whole and also of a few members of the Swaraj party itself to give countenance to a policy of an aggressive character and refutes the idea that the supension of obstruction is the outcome of an understanding between Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and the Government. The Vartman says that the dramatic somersault committed by the Independent members of the Assembly by refusing to carry on obstruction after they had successfully practised it for two days has resulted in the suspension of obstruction by the Swarajists and in the consequent break-up of the Nationalist party. It remarks that the Swarajists are mistaken in still supplicating the Independent members to support them. They should now realise their position and leave the Councils to do more effective work outside them. The Kartavya urges that now that the obstructionist tactics in the Legislative Assembly have had to be given up in consequence of differences in the Nationalist party, the Swarajists will do well to leave the Assembly and devote themselves to the fulfilment of the constructive programme. The Anand points out that Pandit Moti Lal's abandonment of obstructionist tactics in the Assembly despite the pledges given to the voters at the election time represents a somersault characteristically peculiar to the politics of the Swaraj party. It urges that since the Swarajists can henceforward do nothing beyond imitating the Liberals, they will do well to merge themselves in the Liberal party and carry out its programme. The Aj opines that one thousand and one deputations to England would not have produced that effect on the British public which has been done by the activities of the Swarajists in the Councils and remarks that whether the Swarajists can justify their existence or not they have by their activities brought home to the people that the only means of compelling the British to pay heed to their grievances and aspirations is to carry on agitation vigorously in India itself.

The Muslim League.

The Aj is opposed to the revival of the Muslim League and remarks that it is a great mistake on the part of a staunch Nationalist like Mr. Jinnah to suppose that a separate political organisation of the Musalmans is essential for the solution of the Hindu-Muslim problem. It apprehends that the revival of the Muslim League will cause such political dissensions as can only be removed by General Dyer.

The Frontier Enquiry Committee.

The Pioneer says that the report of the Frontier Enquiry Committee must be regarded as indicating the difficulty of prescribing for one part of India axioms and doctrines considered unimpeachable in another. Both the majority and minority reports unconsciously contribute to this achievement. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The report reads more like an academic controversy between two schools of thought. The conclusion of the majority and the minority are almost diametrically opposite. As for the opinion of the public, there can be no two questions: the opinion of India is the opinion of the minority report of Mr. Ranga Chari and Mr. Samarth, although Muslim opinion is likely to be divided.

The Akali agitation.

The Independence asks: Will it not be extremely advisable alike for "reasons of State" and for the maintenance of "law and order" and for the pacification of the Sikhs who have contributed much towards the upkeep of British rule in India to settle the Nabha question by restoring the Maharaja? Criticising the strong measures adopted by the Government against the Akalis the Al Khalil says that the Government has now been forced to yield and to come to an understanding with the very Parbhandak Committee which was once declared unlawful. This shows that perseverence and sacrifices have far-reaching effects and that undue repression and obstinacy always lead to discomfiture. The Pratap opines that considering the callousness with which Mr. Johnston took so many lives it is more than brutal to say, as has been done by the investigating official, that it was natural for him to open fire. A greater lie than this was never told before that the Akalis were the first to open fire. The findings of the investigating official do not come on us as a surprise. The very appointment of a Civilian to investigate into the Jaito shooting affair had filled us with misgivings. The Utsah writes: The arrest of Dr. Kitchlu and Mr. Gidwani and the refusal of Government to allow a debate in the Legislative Assembly on the Jaito incident show that Government wanted to conceal its guilt. Government is filling the cup of its sins. May this cup overflow soon so that the sinners may taste the fruits of their misdeeds. The Surya holds that the Government will ultimately have to yield to the Akalis in their religious struggle and urges that it will therefore do well to concede the demands which it will be forced to yield after all. Such an action on its part will save its own prestige and prevent the spread of unrest in the country. The Vartman publishes a message alleged to have been sent by "Raja" Mahendra Pratap to the Akalis, in the course of which he says: "It is the duty of those who are still living to follow the example of the martyrs who were killed at Jaito, so that no one may charge us with cowardliness. Heroes know not fear or retreat. Our struggle has now become a question of life and death. Whatever may happen, it will be a matter for deep shame to beat a retreat now. You must not think that while I ask others to sacrifice their lives I myself fear death. I am always prepared to die and if you stand on your legs I shall at once be in your midst and shall face the enemy."

Civil disobedience.

The Indian Daily Telegraph infers from Mahatma Gandhi's advice to the Akalis to suspend the despatch of fresh jathas to Jaito that there will be no civil disobedience or no-tax compaign yet—unless somewhere any critical situation should arise, as in Tanjore, for instance, where spontaneous combustion has taken place.

Improvement Trusts.

The Leader says: We shall congratulate the Government, in particular the Hon. Minister in charge, if they take the bold and wise decision not to bring to an abrupt and regrettable end the unfinished work of the Trusts. We may reluctantly reconcile ourselves, though not without strong protest and opposition, to a short-sighted and timid decision to yield to clever manoeuvring by interested opponents of the men who preside over the Trusts. But of the present confused thinking, of the lack of courage, of consistency and of a constructive policy, we have not one good word to say and we doubt if anybody can have.

The Benares municipality.

The Aj draws the attention of the citizens of Benares to the proposed supercession of their municipal board and urges them to take measures to preserve their civic liberties, however restricted though they may be. They should take increased interest in municipal affairs to help the board to effect improvement and to protect it as far as possible from official interference. The Vaitman remarks that the Commissioner's proposal to suspend the Benares municipal board constitutes an insulting attack on the rights of the citizens of Benares and is opposed to the democratic ideas and principles of the time and urges the inhabitants of Benares to start a vigorous agitation for the protection of their just rights.

Political propaganda.

The Hamdam does not believe that India can attain liberty by cooperating with the English. It remarks that cooperation with the British means to cooperate with them in political crimes, in strengthening the military organisation of the Government, in sending the national workers to jail and in filling the pockets of the bloody General Dyer. The germs of injustice have entered the present system of Government and as long as they are not removed cooperation with it amounts to cooperation with injustice. The British statesmen will do well even now to change their angle of vision and leaving aside ideas of Imperialism remove the legitimate grievances of the people. The Hind-i-Jadid in a strongly worded article says that as a punishment for our misdeeds a hard-hearted, selfish and shameless nation is ruling over us, which does not tolerate the freedom of any other nation except its own though it is styled as the greatest champion of liberty. It exhorts the Indians to rise up, put on khaddar uniform and enlist themselves in the peaceful army of the Congress and to remember that India will be free only on the day when no British made goods are found in the Indian markets. The Holi festival has been seized upon by some Hindu papers to compare the present times in India with the days of King Hiranya Kashyap and to urge that Indians should have recourse to satyagraha like Prahlad to get rid of their miseries. The Bhavishya points out that at present the same despotism, pride of power, injustice, oppression and irresponsibility prevail in the country as were witnessed during Hiranya Kashyap's reign. It refers to the victory of Prahlad over Hiranya Kashyap, his father, and asks Indians to undergo like Prahlad all sorts of hardships and suffering for their emancipation. The Abhyudaya remarks that the message which the Holi brings for us is that for the attainment of our ideal, for the victory of our principles and for the protection of truth we should cheerfully welcome and undergo even the most terrible sufferings and tortures. The Holi also impresses upon us the truth that even a small boy, if he is truthful, firm, determined, courageous and is possessed of soul force, can make the mightiest sovereign bow before him. The Prem says that the Holi festival is observed throughout the length and breadth of India even in the present degenerated times in holy memory of the victory of Prahlad over his tyrannical father and King, Hiranya Kashyap, by means of satyagraha and to teach the world the lesson of self-help and equality, to make autocratic rulers respect public opinion and to convey a message to the people to pursue the right path. The Aj disagrees with those Nationalist leaders who urge that the Holi must not be observed at the present time, which is more suited to mourning than rejoicing and remarks: Though it is true that never before did India witness such terrible, oppressive and humiliating days, yet it will never do to cry and mourn. We must be cheerful even at the time of mourning. The observance of the Holi festival will infuse enthusiasm into the people which is so urgently required. A correspondent writing in the Shakti says that the facility with which Lord Reading has been accommodating himself to the ever-changing Government in Britain shows how Englishmen can change even their principles to serve the interests of their country, while the Indians fight shy even of the cause of swaraj and freedom.

Khilafat crisis.

THE Khilafat question continues to agitate the Muslim press, which is generally opposed to the Sharif's claim to the Khilafat. Maulana Abdul Bari's message to the Arab people has accentuated the bitterness of feelings against the Sharif and several papers have charged the Maulana with inconsistency and fickle-mindedness. The Medina accuses the Maulana of showing inconsistency in congratulating the Arabs on the one hand and laying stress on the necessity of an Islamic Conference on the other. It describes the Maulana as an unscrupulous champion of Sharif Husain and warns the Indian Musalmans to be on their guard against Sharif Husain's propaganda. In another article the same paper suggests that the Conference of the Muslim world should be convened at Delhi as India is the only Muslim country which has not yet espoused the cause of any candidate for the office and remarks that if King Fuad of Egypt accepts the office of Khilafat, the question will become all the more complicated and then it will be simply absurd to convene any such Conference. A correspondent writing to the Al Khalil takes Maulana Abdul Bari severely to task for espousing the cause of Sharif Husain and justifies the decision of the Angora Assembly in abolishing the Khilafat. He remarks that the question of Khilafat has at last assumed an aspect for which the enemies of Islam have been trying for the last 25 years and for which they had taken Sharif Husain on their side. Those who believe in the Khilafat of Sharif Husain are the enemies of Islam and are in fact trying to take part in the war which will be fought between the Sharif and the nationalist Turks in future. The Haqiqat says that the grievances of the Turks are genuine and they are justified in abolishing the Khilafat which was ever a source of great trouble to them. It has no hope that the Turks will revise their decision even if the deputation headed by the Ali brothers succeeds in reaching Angora. The Hamdard deplores the present scramble for Khilafat in Arabia and Egypt, which is likely to create dissensions among the Musalmans and remarks that in view of the attitude of other Muslim countries it is impossible for the Islamic Conference to come to any particular decision to suit the Muslim world. The Hindustani Times takes exception to the views expressed by Maulana Muhammad Ali at Aligarh regarding the abolition of Khilafat and remarks that he has sown the seeds of discord and animosity among the Indian Musalmans and the Turks. It is against sending any deputation to Angora and advises the Indian Musalmans to devote their energies to their internal organisation within India. In another article the same paper condemns Khilafat Conference held at Calcutta and remarks that the Indian Musalmans will be ruined by blindly following Maulana Muhammad Ali as on the one hand they will alienate the sympathy of the Muslim world and on the other incur the hostility of the English. Qazi Wahid Uddin of Satrik, district Bara Banki, in a signed article to the Hamdam justifies Maulana Abdul Bari's action from the religious and moral point of view in congratulating the Arabs on electing Sharif Husain as their Khalifa. He remarks that the Sharif is an independent ruler and has a preferential right to the office. The Najat says that Great Britain desires Sharif Husain's election to the Khilafat for the purpose of furthering its policy of exploitation in the East. During the Great War no Muslim ruler so much injured the cause of Islam as did the treacherous Sharif and his past misdeeds never entitle him to the office. The Aj remarks that by trying to place the burden of the protection of Khilafat on the shoulders of unwilling Turkey the Indian Musalmans are weakening the power of Islam. Such an action on their part instead of uniting the Musalmans of various countries will only create estrangement and dissensions among them. The same paper in another article says that the Indian Musalmans should now give up their extra-territorial patriotism and their dream of a pan-Islamic Empire and should make common cause with other Indian communities in the attainment of India's freedom.

Muslim deputation to Angora.

The Medina is dissatisfied with the attitude of Government in the Assembly on the question of passports and remarks that the members of the Assembly will be well advised to direct the attention of the Labour Ministry to this matter. The Hamdam says that the officers of the Medical department in Bengal are discharged, as reported, not only will these men be forced to seek employment in an already overcrowded market, but the people of Bengal will have been deprived of the beneficent services of these officers. The electorate will thus be in a position to realise more clearly the extent to which the welfare of the people of India has been compromised as a result of Swarajists' activities in the Councils. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that evidently the plan of the bureaucracy is to starve the nation-building departments and to say that they are starving because the Swarajists have thrown out the budget.

The Reforms.

The Al Bashir says that the Sawarjists have exposed the futility of the Reforms and it will be a blessing to India if the present Reforms are withdrawn as soon as possible. The country has gained nothing through them except increased expenditure and taxes and the time is now gone when the Indians could be coaxed with such toys. The Haqiqat observes that the Swarajists have to a great extent achieved success in the preliminary stages of their scheme. In view of the obstinate attitude of the Government the policy of the Swarajists can hardly be expected to undergo a change. The Government will be well devised to realise its mistake at once and not to put the patience of the Indians to further test by trampling upon their aspirations. The Oudh Akhbar regards the Reforms as quite useless and unprofitable and remarks that it will be blindness to think that they can bring about the political salvation of the country in spite of seeing the injurious character of the present system of Government. The Al Khalil says that the authorities in India and England have now begun to show signs of yielding to the demands of the Indians and that India can attain salvation through the exertions of the Swarajists alone. The Anand says that the situation created by the Swarajists in the Central Provinces goes to establish that the assertions of the opponents of Reforms belittling their importance are quite baseless. It further remarks that the Swarajists are entirely mistaken if they think that their wrecking or obstructionist tactics will compel the Britishers into surrendering all their powers to them in utter disregard of their own interests.

The Akali agitation.

The Oudh Akhbar ascribes the present enthusiasm amongst the Sikhs to the repressive policy of the Government in connection with the Gurudwaras and advises the Government to adopt practical measures to allay the unrest prevailing among them. The Iqdam avers that the Akalis will doggedly and firmly continue their struggle until the demands of Khalsaji are satisfied.

Release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani.

The Hamdam expresses its gratification at the reduction of the term of imprisonment of Maulana Hasrat and remarks that every minute of his continued imprisonment is painful to the people who are longing to see the Maulana released to devote himself once more in guiding them in their national affairs. The Vartman says that the resolutions regarding the release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani in the Legislative Assembly and the Bombay Council bespeak the universality of feeling in favour of the Maulana's release and that if the Bombay Government has any regard for public opinion it should release him at once.

Extortion in Almora.

The Indian Daily Telegraph referring to enquiries in Kali Kumaun says: It is indeed very gratifying to learn that the official enquiry under the supervision of a responsible senior Tahsildar left nothing to be desired. The open and regular enquiry conducted by the Tahsildar is an event of unparalleled significance to the mountaineer's mind. This demonstration of British justice will besides breaking the stronghold of non-cooperation in Kumaun, once again restore the peasant to a loyal frame of mind to pursue the even tenour of his life with contented happiness.

Political propaganda.

The Medina says that the oppressed "black" people of India have now realised that the British Empire is not kindly disposed towards them and wants to keep them under perpetual subjugation and slavery. The British people cannot bear the sight of the poor Indians being prosperous. They want to exact something more from the scanty pockets of the Indians and to add to their own comfort and luxuries by imposing additional burden on them. In another article the same paper says that every Indian patriot is now keenly desirous of liberating India and the discovery of bomb-making factory at Calcutta, the Bolshevik case at Cawnpore and the Council wrecking activities of the Swarajists are in fact the different ways in which India's desire for liberty is being manifested. The Government can very well keep the persons under confinement but is powerless to suppress the ideas of liberty and freedom.

The Bhavishya writes: The Holi festival is not meant for slaves for they have no right to participate in festivals. If they do so they are fit to remain slaves for ever. It is the blood-stained Holi with what they are concerned at present. They had hardly forgotten the Holi of the Punjab (Jallianwala Bagh) when the Nabha authorities presented another Holi at Jaito. It is such Holi that they will have to observe repeatedly. Why then should they be so keen on observing their traditional Holi festival. The Pratap publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap in which he says that he has a genuine hatred for bloodshed but for the prevention of more bloodshed he considers it to be indispensable that the idea of true heroism should not be lost sight of, and that while there should be some people to preach mercy, there should be also others who should meet the enemy's violence by violence. The Hind-i-Jadid warns the Government to realise the dangers of the present situation and not to incur further humiliation by exerting itself in the ludicrous and impossible task of stemming the tide of liberty. There is still time for Government to secure the cooperation of the Indians, but we know that our advice will be a cry in the wilderness as the peoples who rely too much on material force are doomed to destruction.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the fortnight ending the 19th April, 1924.

The Indian debate in Parliament.

THE Leader styles the debate in the House of Commons on Lord Curzon's motion as inconsequential. It asserts that the statement of Mr. Richards will cause great resentment among the Swarajists and remarks with satisfaction that the Swarajists will be excluded from consultation in respect of further Reforms. They cannot consistently with their policy complain if they are not consulted in the evolution of the present constitution. It should be clear to the Swarajists that their tactics have failed and that the best course for them is to accept the Reforms with as good grace as possible and concentrate their effort on improving them. If responsible and influential statesmen are properly approached by a deputation of Indian leaders it should not be very difficult to secure the appointment of a Royal Commission a few months hence. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the result of the debate in the Commons does not improve the complicated situation in which the people find themselves. The only moral in Viscount Curzon's motion is that the Swarajists have succeeded in spreading alarm in the Conservative circles. The Independence says that Mr. Richards' speech clearly showed the desire to meet, parley with and placate the Swarajists. The debate has cleared the political sky. Time is not yet for Labour to move definitely, but that good time can be precipitated by action in India. If Gandhi joins the Swarajists and a front of steel opposes the "steel frame," the sun of swaraj will rise to greet India one pleasant morning. In its Saturday's issue the paper says that the futile debate in the House of Commons and the evasive speech of Mr. Richards once again brings home that India's salvation lies in the hands of Indians themselves. In a signed article Mr. Ranga Iyer says that Mr. Richards' is the best speech that India has read for some years.

The Lausanne treaty.

Commenting on the ratification of the Lausanne treaty the Pioneer says that Turkey has fared far better than she has deserved. The harmony of Great Britain's future relations with Turkey will depend on the manner in which the Turkish Government and the Turkish people respond to the British Premier's friendly and courteous appeal. The Leader says that of all the nations defeated in the last Great War Turkey has come out best. In the new era in the history of humanity which we believe has been ushered in since the conclusion of the war the almost miraculous recovery of its national independence by Turkey marks the first serious set-back the West has received in its policy of moulding the destinies of the entire East and the beginning of a divine process which in course of time may enable Asia once more to play a proud part in the spiritual and moral advancement of the world. Its people are throbbing with new life and passing through the agony of a re-birth. While the future is shrouded in mystery, it is full of hope, for the depressed and the downtrodden are proclaiming that they shall suffer wrong no more.

The Khilafat.

The Hamdam says that Great Britain may not be concerned directly with the abolition of the Khilafat but the party in power at present in Turkey has surely been influenced by the attitude of the enemies of Islam in this matter. The nationalist Turks have anticipated the feelings of the political parties in England and by abolishing the Khilafat they have directly assured them that they do not aim at territorial aggrandisement but want to live in peace and freedom in their own country. A correspondent writing to the same paper from Mecca describes Sharif Husain's Khilafat as the commencement of a great intrigue and exhorts the Musalmans to condemn and protest against his Khilafat. The Mashriq remarks that the dangerous step taken by the Turks is sure to excite the feelings of the people of Mosul against them and the public opinion being opposed to Turkey the question of Mosul will not be decided according to the wishes of the Turks. The Haqiqat in a communicated article justifies the decision of the Angora Assembly in abolishing the Khilafat which had ever proved prejudicial to the interests of the Turks. The Indian Musalmans as a matter of fact do not require any Khalifa at all as they are unable to carry out his orders. No self-respecting Musalman can help condemning Sharif Husain as a traitor to Islam and expressing his feelings of bitter hatred against him. The Mansur in a contributed article remarks that the Musalmans will have no objection to accept Sharif Husain as their Khalifa if he atones for his past misdeeds, extricates himself from the yoke of British slavery and abstains from taking a subsidy from Great Britain.

Muslim deputation to Angora.

The Al Khalil regards the refusal of the Government to furnish passports to the deputation as an interference in the Khilafat question. By placing obstacles in the way of the deputation the Government is indirectly espousing the cause of Sharif Husain and hence any act of the Indian Government which tends to prevent the departure of the deputation is viewed by the Indian Musalmans with suspicion and indignation. The Najat asserts that the attitude adopted by the Government in the matter of passports is a clear indication of the fact that the Government wants to add to the difficulties and troubles of the Musalmans. It does not like to see the settlement of the Khilafat question and wants the Musalmans to remain disorganised so that there may be no fear of the bogey of pan-Islamism. The Hamdam says that the Government by refusing to grant passports to the deputation is aggravating Muslim discontent and is naturally strengthening suspicions against itself that it had a hand in the abolition of the Khilafat. The Sewak says that the refusal of passports to the members of the Muslim deputation to Angora is tantamount to interference in religious matters. If the Government does not consider some of the members of this deputation to be its subjects it should also forgo the right of taxing them.

Indians in the Colonies.

Mr. Duncan's speech on the Class Areas Bill has been severely criticised. The Leader says that it only serves to bring into prominent relief the sinister import of the latest measure devised by the Union Government to throttle Indians in South Africa. The whole history of the treatment accorded to Indians points to the implacable resolve of the Whites to get rid of Indians by fair or foul means but it must be obvious to all that the Union Government's policy is hardly calculated to avoid 'friction.' It can only prepetuate a sense of deep humiliation and injustice among the Indian community which cannot make for happy relations between the two races in South Africa. The Boer spirit is a grave danger to the Empire and if India today has to coolly pocket the insult of a Class Areas Bill, things will not remain the same as they are for all time to come. In another article headed "A broken pledge" the paper says that the action of the Union Government constitutes a glaring breach of a distinct pledge given by General Smuts to Mr. Gandhi. Referring to the statement of Mr. Duncan that there was no intention to ruin the Indian community, the paper asks: Who will attach any value to these disavowals in the face of the deliberate and persistent anti-Indian campaign of which there has been growing evidence on all sides? No amount of camouflage will hide the reality. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Mr. Duncan's speech shows the extent of the Minister's capacity in twisting facts.

Satyagraha at Vaikam.

The Independence welcomes the satyagraha campaign at Vaikam and says that if the Government of the Maharaja persists in the foolish course of pandering to priest-craft, we are afraid he will be asking for increased trouble. In another article the paper says that the Maharaja's Government is really giving new life to non-co-operation. The Leader says: If the Travancore Government yields to this novel though not unfamiliar form of non-violent warfare, and allows the untouchables to use freely the prohibited road, it would not necessarily mean the removal of their untouchability, for in northern India the movements of the untouchable classes are nowhere restricted, and yet their untouchability remains unaffected.

The Swaraj party.

The Leader in a long article says that the Swarajists' policy in the Assembly during the last session has made the task of the bureaucracy actually easier than it would have been if discriminating opposition had been offered. Blind obstruction in the Councils, whatever other unknown virtues it may possess, has not the merit of giving the maximum of trouble to the official benches. The Swarajists have made the Government fearless, for it has nothing more to fear. It asserts that the failure of ill-considered political movements and tactics has led to a great deal of demoralisation, and even the leaders of the advanced wing are impressed with the complexity of the situation which has been largely created by their own policy.

It advises them to revert to the old policy of the Congress and thus render practically unnecessary the existence of a separate Liberal party which was organised in the interests of the country to keep up the banner of the old Congress. Referring to the action taken by the Bengal Government in consequence of the refusal of supplies, the paper says that if the officers who are to be discharged and their dependants curse the Bengal Swarajists for depriving them of their bread and throwing them on the streets and are unable to appreciate the patriotic nature of the Swarajist policy, they cannot be blamed for their lack of public spirits. After the almost cataclysmic fate that is going to overtake the thousand and odd Indians in the Bengal civil service, cannot the European public servants cite the incident as partly justifying their apprehensions about the security of their tenure under a popular Government in India and their demand for a greater measure of protection than they have at present? In another place the paper says that the wrecking tactics have fallen absolutely flat. They have in the Central Provinces actually resulted in a distinct set-back and threaten one in Bengal too. The Independence continues to support the policy of obstruction and says: The Liberals had their price and they were cheaply purchased. The Swarajists too have their price and they are willing to be bought! But are the Government prepared to pay the price? The price is nothing else and nothing less than self-government. The market in which the Swaraj party could be bought is the Round Table Conference. The Bharat Jiwan points out that the Swarajists have done nothing wrong in following obstructionist tactics in the Councils. They have thereby only exposed the autocracy of the bureaucracy and proved the Reforms to be a farce and fraud. In another article the same paper holds that the first session of the Legislative Assembly has not gone in vain and that it has fully brought home to the Government that unless it meets the wishes and aspirations of the people it will continue to face obstruction on the part of the Swarajists. In yet another article the paper says that the passage of the Finance Bill in the Council of State shows how its members are mere puppets in the hands of the Government and what value they attach to liberty. Commenting upon the Swarajists' opposition to the budget the Haqiqat apprehends that if the transferred departments are abolished a general misery will prevail throughout the country on account of unemployment and the Swaraj party will incur popular hatred. The Government will carry on anti-Swaraj propaganda by enlisting these unemployed persons as volunteers. The Swaraj party must revise its policy otherwise its efforts of wrecking the Reforms will not only prove futile but also harmful to its own future interests.

No-tax campaign.

The Shakti remarks that the Council activities of the Swarajists can bear fruit only when they in concert with the Congress launch out a no-tax campaign. This will be no unconstitutional action on their part, but they should take every precaution that the people are not thereby led into violence. The Abhyudaya says that what the Swarajists have achieved in the Legislative Assembly will go in vain if they do not now carry on an agitation outside the Assembly and the Councils and persuade the people to announce in unequivocal language that they cannot support any taxation so long as they are not conceded the right to control expenditure. If the country is unfit today to resort to civil disobedience it will have to do so tomorrow and it will be a waste of time not to make preparations for what must inevitably take place sooner or later.

Boycott of British goods.

The Aj remarks that in view of the obstacles which our British rulers are placing in the attainment of swaraj and the unjust repression which they are practising upon us we must hold it to be our supreme duty to boycott British goods.

Hindu-Muslim unity.

The Independence says: Our Muslim friends can surely profess pan-Islam without at the same time its clashing with the agitation for swaraj. In fact swaraj will make the Muslim nations of Asia safe and contented. The Vartman remarks that the extra-territorial patriotism and pan-Islamic dreams of Indian Musalmans have always been an insurmountable obstacle in the way of the attainment of Indian swaraj and that they are calculated in no inconsiderable measure to prolong the term of India's slavery.

Cawnpore riot.

The Pioneer supports the action of the authorities and says that the official statement will strike the unprejudiced reader as a plain unvarnished record of facts. The order to fire, which was given by an Indian magistrate, was only decided upon with manifest reluctance after the mob had started throwing stones and brickbats and had got thoroughly out of hand. The Independence uses alarming headlines, such as "Brutal charge on unarmed mill-hands," "Firing without justification," "Dead bodies burnt in boilers." The official version read with the non-official version, reads like a far-fetched justification of a grave action which, we sincerely hope, the authorities would be able to justify before the bar of public opinion. The reference to the rumour of dead bodies thrown in the boiler and the attempt to arrest the wounded in the hospital would ring in the ears of India for long. The Cawnpore police, in the thick of Bolshevik atmosphere, seem to have lost all sense of proportion and imagined in the brickbats of a few hundreds the determined action of cold-blooded Communists. When the echoes spread throughout India of the happenings at Cawnpore, the reputation of this province would be as much stinking, unless the Government take strong action, as the land of Dyers and Frank Johnstons. The Indian Daily Telegraph is inclined to believe the non-official version and urges upon Government the necessity of instituting an independent enquiry. The Leader points out certain discrepancies between the official and non-official version of the Cawnpore riot and says that real facts can be ascertained by a searching enquiry. The Indian World says: The tragedy was a mock heroic tragedy for which the whole blame lies with the local authorities who seem to have had no backbone to stand in patience a dispute which has little to do with politics and yet has to be quelled by a sort of martial heroism. The sight of a big crowd with a clouded mind regarding terms of their engagements upset the mental equilibrium of the Superintendent and the City Magistrate who took to a short cut to a settlement. Such men deserve to be pensioned off at once, as it is such men who are responsible for bringing about much misunderstanding and bad blood in the country. And above all the Collector totally shirked the responsibility and hid himself under a bush in order to avoid any direct hand in the matter. What shall we say of him? The vernacular press in general has strongly condemned the firing at Cawnpore and questions the justification to have recourse to firearms. The Aj holds the mill manager morally responsible for the casualties among the labourers and remarks: The District Magistrate eloquently praises the peaceful attitude of the police in his communiqué. If the free use of canes and batons, the trampling of labourers by horsemen and the shooting of the unarmed strikers can be described as the peaceful attitude or the "coolness" of the police, we wonder what else can be described as an aggressive attitude on its part. The Vartman says that the massacre of the poor labourers of the Cawnpore Cotton Mills forcibly reminds us once again of the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy and that it was apparently organised to crush the growing awakening among the Cawnpore labourers. The communiqué of the District Magistrate, like all official communiqués, is a piece of grotesque partiality and has been issued with a view to justify firing. The accounts of the tragedy furnished by Congress leaders and other eye-witnesses, however, conclusively prove that the firing upon the labourers was quite unjustifiable and unnecessary. The Pratap writes: There was no need on the part of the police to enact a drama of terrible brutality when as a result of blank firing the crowd was already dispersing. This heartlessness of the police reminds us of Dyer and Smith and makes our blood boil. The Cawnpore firing is an eloquent commentary on the effect given to Mr. Ranga Chariar's resolution in the Assembly regarding resort to firing. The Arya Mitra holds that there was no justification for firing. If the labourers had got excited, surely there were other methods to pacify them. The labourers were neither armed nor organised and hence they could easily be dealt with without having recourse to firing. The Abhyudaya remarks that a perusal of both the official and the non-official versions of the Cotton Mills tragedy makes it clear that firing upon the labourers was not indispensable. "We find that the order for opening fire has become as easy and necessary in the eyes of the authorities as chhota hazri." One Satya Bhakta writing to the Aj says that the Cotton Mills tragedy and the massacre of the poor labourers is a link in the chain of the Bolshevik movement, whether the labourers through their ignorance may realise its significance or not. The Haqiqat deplores the bloodshed at Cawnpore and remarks that such incidents are calculated to increase the public hatred against the Government. A committee commanding the confidence of the public and specially of the labourers, should soon be appointed to enquire into the matter. The Oudh Akhbar is indignant at the incident and says that in view of the brutal oppressions perpetrated by the police upon the mill-hands it cannot be said that the police protects the life and property of the people. The facts disclosed do not justify the firing and such incidents are in reality the root-cause of hatred and dissatisfaction against the British Government. In another article the same paper says that firing should only be permitted against robbers, dacoits and rebels and not against honest labourers. The Azad remarks that it was impolitic on the part of the mill-hands to show so much obstinacy in the matter of bonus and this obstinacy becomes more objectionable when viewed in the light of the fact that no profits had accrued to the Cotton Mills this year. It is difficult to judge whether the order for firing was justifiable or otherwise, but it is certainly to be regretted that the Government on such occasions has recourse to no other alternative but firing.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman remarks that the rapid spread of the Bolshevik movement from Europe to Asia has falsified the prophecies of the French and English Socialist leaders that being unsuited to the present times Bolshevism would die a natural death. The paper expresses the conviction that Bolshevism is a terrible weapon which through the dictatorship of the proletariat first of all ruins the capitalists.

Political propaganda.

Deploring the present lull and slackness in the non-cooperation movement the Hamdam advises Mr. Gandhi to inculcate a spirit of toleration and forbearance amongst the workers and remarks that it was only want of discipline and organisation which brought about the failure of the movement. The Zulqarnain, on the other hand, takes exception to the views expressed by the Hamdam and remarks that the failure of the movement was due to the lack of education among the masses. They are incapable of adopting satyagraha or understanding its principles and under such circumstances the goal of swaraj is still far off. The Hindustani Times describes the swaraj movement as harmful to the Musalmans unless they are strong enough to safeguard their own interests. To obtain swaraj the Hindus have on the one hand pitched the Musalmans against the Government to weaken the foundations of the English rule and on the other hand they are eliminating them from all departments of life so that on the attainment of swaraj the Hindus may have undivided sway over India. The Vartman, while it does not disapprove of non-violent methods, thinks that armed revolutions also can be effected in a peaceful manner and cites the instances of the recent revolutions in Greece and Persia in support of its contention.

The Indian debate in Parliament.

THE Indian debate in the House of Commons has aroused little enthusiasm in the press. The Pioneer is satisfied that Mr. Richards' speech made it plain that there must be a generous attempt to work the existing Constitution before the question of any further advance could be considered. According to the paper there is no substantial support in the British Parliament at present for an immediate Royal Commission, still less for the Round Table Conference favoured by the Swarajists, or, indeed, for anything beyond the Government of India's inquiry into the actual working of the Act. The sole effect of the Swarajist policy of persistent and intensive obstruction has been to raise serious doubts in the minds of reasonable men in the British Parliament whether the Indian Legislatures are really fitted to exercise the responsibilities already entrusted to them. Without the cooperation of Indians progress is impossible and a set-back is inevitable. The Swarajists in their insensate resolve to intimidate the Labour Government in granting full Dominion status at once have done incalculable harm to the country's interests. They have effectively brought home to the British Parliament the danger of any further constitutional advance for some time to come. According to the Advocate the Labour Government has succeeded in secreting its trump card for the present. The paper sees in the Under Secretary's speech no cause to be pessimistic. However much the Moderates may revile the policy of the Swarajists, it is evident that the Swarajist policy has told, and told in a wonderful manner. It does not depend upon the good grace of the British Parliament for the salvation of India. The destiny of India wholly depends upon her own people. The Aj remarks that the debate on Viscount Curzon's motion in the House of Commons confirms the conviction that even the Labour Government, particularly the present one, will not deal justly by India of its own free will and also indisputably proves that Mr. MacDonald's Ministry will carry on the administration of India with the help of the Imperialistic Conservative members of the Parliament. It, however, points out that the day is not far off when as a result of the non-cooperation movement the bureaucracy will be compelled to yield to public opinion. The Medina says that the Swarajists' activities have perturbed political circles in England. It is possible that the united strength of the Labour and Liberal members may break a few links of India's chain of subjugation and slavery and appease the Indians by granting them further Reforms. The Hamdam is gratified that Great Britain has been influenced by the present situation in India and views with deep concern the strained relations between the representatives of the people and Government. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the debate initiated by Viscount Curzon was influenced by the activities of the Swarajists who have overawed the British statesmen. The Indian Liberals can never say that the Swarajists have failed in their protests.

The Lausanne Treaty.

The Aj approves of the ratification of the Lausanne Treaty and regards it as indicative of the restoration of friendly relations between Britain and Turkey. In this connection the paper asks the British statesmen to cultivate harmonious relations with Asiatic nations in the interest of the British Empire, for with the growth of political consciousness the Indian public will not readily take up arms against any Asiatic nation.

The British Empire Exhibition.

The Pioneer characterises the Empire Exhibition as a pageant of Imperial production and resources. It can serve as a common meeting ground for the representatives of all the multitudinous races included in the Commonwealth of British nations, where they gain a fuller knowledge of each other and of the whole of which they form a part. Referring to Reuter's report that Indian passengers who arrived in Liverpool were not able to reach the Exhibition in time, the Independence says: India not being happy in her freedom and power as the Dominions, must naturally be rather late in the Empire show. "Better late than never"—but let not "too late" be writ on England's dealing with the jewel in the Crown. The Leader hopes that the Indian Court will be an eye-opener to many who looked down upon India and Indians and make them appreciate all the better India's aspirations for freedom, so that she may have ampler opportunities of rising to her full stature and giving expression to her national genius in more exquisite works of art. The Oudh Akhbar observes that visitors to the Empire Exhibition will know how easy it is to bring India's status as an industrial and manufacturing country to the level of the world's best countries.

The Khilafat.

The Khilafat question continues to agitate the Muslim press. The Najat reprints from a Berut paper the secret correspondence between the Sharif and Sir Arthur MacMahon during the war in which the latter is alleged to have written:—"I want to assert it once again that King George V was much pleased to hear that the Islamic Khilafat has once more come back in the hands of a pure Arab who is a descendant of the Prophet." The Medina reproduces from the Al Akhbar of Egypt a communicated article on the Khilafat in which it is stated: Sharif Husain's sons have forced their ignorant Arab subjects to accept their father as their Khalifa. Being deceived by the Englishmen they took advantage of the opportunity and raised the banner of revolt against the Khilafat and thereby dealt a severe blow to their Muslim brethren. Sharif Husain's claim to Khilafat is absurd and the decision of the Angora Assembly does in no way affect the allegiance of the Muslim world to the deposed Khalifa until the question is finally decided. The Anand Pracharak remarks that the abolition of the Khilafat and the humiliation and disgrace heaped upon the deposed Khalifa by the nationalist Turks have proved that all the allegations brought by the Khilafatists against the British statesmen were groundless and unjust. The Musalmans would have surely proclaimed a jehad if any non-Muslim Power had disgraced and humiliated the Khalifa in this way. The Aligarh Gazette says that it is the duty of the Khilafat Committees to give monetary help to the deposed Khalifa and his family. The Hind-e-Jadid says that the Musalmans can never accept the Khilafat of the treacherous Sharif who has sold his faith and religion to the European Powers and who still after proclaiming himself a Khalifa relies on the support of these Powers. The Al Bureed asserts that the Sharif's Khilafat will result in creating dissensions and disunity among the Musalmans and the Muslim world will become a prey to the intrigues of the enemies of Islam.

Muslim deputation to Angora.

The Aligarh Gazette is astounded at the inclusion of the non-Muslim element in the Angora deputation and advises the Government to stick to its decision regarding the passports as the participation of any non-Muslim in the affairs of the Khilafat is tantamount to gross absurdity.

Satyagraha at Vaikom.

The Haqiqat strongly protests against the action of the Travancore authorities and regards it as tyrannical and unjust to restrict the untouchables to certain fixed roads in the city and remarks: With what face can we demand swaraj on the plea of equality, liberty and democracy unless such ugly blots on Indian civilisation are washed off. The Arya Varta exhorts the public to raise men and money to keep up the satyagraha campaign and carry it to a successful end according to the wishes of Mahatma Gandhi. The Bhavishya remarks that by the prohibition of the use of public roads by non-caste Hindus the Travancore State is not only casting a blot on Hinduism but also on humanity at large. The Aj says that the country attaches the same importance to the Vaikom affair as it does to the Akali satyagraha and watches it with equally great eagerness. It is incomprehensible why the authorities should interfere in this social matter when the people have every right to decide all social questions.

The Liberal Conference.

While the Leader has been filling its columns with the proceedings of the Liberal Conference at Allahabad other papers do not appear to have taken any serious interest or to have lent their support to the resolutions passed in the Conference. The Pioneer does not see anything new in the presidential address and says that the audience were merely regaled with a reiteration of arguments and dissertations that must by this have become stale by familiarity. The chief interest for most people will centre in the President's trenchant attack on the obstructionist tactics of the Swarajists, and in his plaintive insistence on the immediate necessity for the appointment of the Statutory Commission. The Leader congratulates the President of the Liberal Conference on his "very able" and comprehensive address and is confident that he will be called upon to serve his province and his country in still higher positions in the years to come. The paper is in agreement with the President in nearly everything he said and wants to emphasise the President's urgent plea for further constitutional advance without avoidable delay. Referring to the speeches of the Liberal leaders the paper says: All these speeches together with the masterly delivery of the President make out for an immediate and substanial constitutional advance, a case so strong that we would like to have a reasoned and informed reply from the opponents of Reforms instead of the usual merely superficial, fallacious and prejudiced harangues and homilies that we get. The Conference was on the whole a creditable success. It has done valuable public service and we offer our congratulations to every one from the President downwards who contributed to that success. The Advocate remarks that the presidential address was on the whole a well-considered and sober pronouncement and remarkably free from attacks on the Swarajists and non-cooperators in general. The paper does not agree that the policy of Liberals in deserting the Congress was a wise one or that the decision of the Swarajists to enter the Council with a view to end or mend the Reforms can in any way prove that the policy of the Liberals was right. It is impossible to appreciate the unpatriotic action of the Liberals in seceding from the Congress on account of differences of opinion. The Independence styles the Liberal members of the Conference as "political babies" and says: The speech of the President is "weighty," which in a sense is true, judging from the thick paper on which it is printed and the 57 pages it occupies, weighty indeed for an audience of 128, exaggerated into "a Conference." It is not an original thought, no life or light, no lead; not even one bold phrase stands out of the address. The most pathetic part of the speech is when he imagines that the Liberal principles would "vindicate" themselves. God forbid any such calamity! Liberal vindication will be annihilation of the national cause. But that its provincial President should entertain them even after the rude shaking they have received, shows that Liberal conceit has not been knocked down. Vanity! thy name is the Liberal League! The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the most important part of the address is the President's criticism of the Swarajists. It ascribes the defeat of the Liberals at the poll partly to the tremendous sacrifices undergone by the Swarajists and partly to the Liberal record which was one of burning incense at the bureaucratic altar which only incensed the deity to a policy of increasing coercion. If truth be told the Liberals have fallen by their own deeds and they cannot rise by vilification of the Swarajists. Mr. Srivastava's address lacks purpose or initiative. It does not give a lead to the Liberals to move abreast with the currents and movements in the country. It imagines that Fate will once again float the Liberals to fame and power. Never was there a more futile pronouncement. According to the Hamdam the United Provinces Liberal Conference has served no useful purpose beyond giving its contemporary, the Leader, an opportunity of filling its columns with bold headlines. The address of the President evokes only hostile feelings towards the Liberal party. The truth is that moderation is now dead and that the last elections gave the verdict that the Liberals were no more wanted. The defeat of the Liberals was not due to the vilification, as asserted by the President, but to their having co-operated with an alien bureaucracy in the imprisonment of the popular leaders and the enforcement of repressive laws. They shook hands stained with Jallianwala Bagh blood. The Aj remarks that the presidential address of the Liberal Conference is a vivid reflection of the mendicant mentality of the Liberals. It is full of inconsistencies and betrays self-diffidence and dependence upon others. That the Liberal policy is infallible, irreplaceable and indispensable is the burden of the address. It proposes no new programme and its only object is to support the Liberal policy and unsparingly criticise every other political programme.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Al Bashir deplores the Arya Samajist activities to vilify Maulana Muhammad Ali and frustrate the efforts at Hindu-Muslim unity and remarks that such things have opened the eyes of even the greatest Muslim nationalists who are now realising that the existence of the Arya Samaj leaders and their organisation is greatly injurious to the interests of their country. The Aligarh Gazette resents the interest taken by Mr. Gandhi in the propagation of Hindi and remarks that as Hindi is the first question which has caused so much difference between the Hindus and the Musalmans, it is proved that so far as the Muslim sentiments are concerned Mr. Gandhi has not returned a wiser man from jail. The Hamdam, on the other hand, asserts that the boldness and candour displayed by Mr. Gandhi in expressing his views regarding the delicate question of Hindu-Muslim unity is alone responsible for the popularity enjoyed by him among the Muslim public which is ever ready to undergo any sacrifice for Mr. Gandhi. In another article the paper advises Mahatma Gandhi to take steps for securing the immediate stoppage of the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements which are in fact political moves in the garb of social reform.

The Akali agitation.

Commenting on the arrests of jathas at Jaito the Pioneer says: Were not the whole course of this preposterous agitation so serious in its unsettling effects on the ignorant mass of the population, such proceedings would of themselves dissolve the movement in a cloud of ridicule? But so marked is the capacity of the revolutionary agitator for depriving his dupes of all pretensions to a sense of humour, that it may be doubted whether rebuffs of this kind will damp his ardour or even permanently discredit him. The Hamdam says that the Sikh representatives view with suspicion the intentions of the Government and regard the measures adopted for removing their grievances as quite insufficient. The Punjab Government is showing utter lack of statesmanship and foresight in this affair. The silent curses of thousands of destitute Sikh families, whose bread-winners are in jail, cannot but leave the Government unaffected.

Restoration of Berar.

The Abhyudaya says that even if it is admitted that the occupation of Berar by the Government of India was a piece of highhandedness, it is incomprehensible what right the Nizam has to demand its restoration and the Government of India to concede the demand. Are the people of Berar sheep and goats that one Government should sell them or make a gift of them to another? Being human beings it is their birthright that their opinion should be given the first place in arriving at a decision in the matter.

Maulana Hasrat Mohani.

The Medina strongly protests against the hardships and restrictions imposed upon Hasrat Mohani in spite of the Bombay Government's order to treat him as a special prisoner and remarks that it is foolish on the part of the Government to think that by oppressing him it will compel him to apologise. The Al Khalil condemns the action of the Bombay Government and remarks that the announcement regarding the treatment of the Maulana as 'a special prisoner' was a sheer falsehood. Writing in a similar strain the Al Bureed demands the immediate release of the Maulana to allay the dissatisfaction prevailing among the public and advises the Bombay Government to take notice of the reprehensible action of the Jail Superintendent in imposing hardships and restrictions upon the Maulana.

Muslim Waqf Act.

Mr. Zafar Husain Bilgrami in a signed letter to the Hamdam says that the Musalmans of Agra, Etawah, Farrukhabad and Bijnor regard the enforcement of the Muslim Waqf Act as contrary to the wishes of the endowers and against the tenets of Islam. It is calculated to create great unrest in these Provinces and the Government will be well advised to consider the question thoroughly before taking any step. The Zulqarnain, which supports the Act, asserts that the trustees of a big Waqf at Allahabad have appointed paid agents to secure the signatures of ignorant Musalmans to the memorial and to organise an opposition to the enforcement of the Act so that the authorities may be influenced by such an unreal agitation.

Cawnpore riot.

Objecting to the use of firearms against the mill-hands the Al Bashir lays stress upon the necessity of giving them moral training and remarks that if no attempt is made to ameliorate their condition then the time is not far when they will be the first to imbibe Bolshevik ideas and carry them amongst the agricultural classes. The Mazdur of Cawnpore says that if the police had simply stood guard at the Cotton Mills and allowed the labourers to remain seated within the compound no serious consequences would have followed. But the mounted police trampled upon them, provoked them by freely using canes and batons and shot them like beasts on the pretext that they threw stones. It asks as to who is responsible for their massacre and whether Government will do justice by inflicting the severest punishment on their murderers. The Kartavya points out that in the official communiqué regarding the firing in the Cawnpore Cotton Mills an attempt has been made to conceal the facts. If the police authorities had been so minded there would have been no bloodshed at all. They did not care for the lives of mill-hands, otherwise they would not have fired above the waist. It is absolutely necessary that a satisfactory explanation should be forthcoming to account for the working of the boilers till midnight if the rumours regarding the disposal of dead bodies by their means are to be contradicted. It is to be hoped that mill-hands will take a lesson from the firing incidents at Cawnpore and Bombay and realise that they cannot prevail against brute force unless they organise themselves into a strong body. The Desh-Bhakta writes: At one time even robbers and dacoits considered it unjustifiable to fire upon unarmed people, but now it has come to be the main principle of the bureaucracy to side with the capitalists and to fire upon helpless people, if it serves its own ends. It has become easier now to open fire on the weak and helpless people than to cut turnips and radish to pieces. The strikers were not to blame at all. The Bhartiya Lokmat remarks that so long as the officials are not made responsible to the people for their actions and so long as the steel-frame of an alien bureaucracy is there to pat them on the back, such incidents as the Cotton Mill firing will continue to occur. It is the repetition of such incidents which will open the eyes of such of our brethren as are easily led away by the Government's deluding policy.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman remarks that the statement of the head of the Russian delegation at the British Bolshevik Conference is pregnant with solid truth and true Bolshevik spirit. It shows clearly that as long as Britain does not confer freedom on India and other dependent countries there can be no lasting political understanding between Russia and Britian. The Aj opines that it is impossible that the British Government will be able to effect any lasting peace with the Soviet Government without accepting in part the Bolshevik principles. The Mazdur of Cawnpore publishes a poem invoking Lenin to descend from heaven into India to save the poor cultivators and to overthrow the existing bureaucratic system of Government by means of a peaceful, bloodless and non-violent revolution. Referring to the Bolshevik case at Cawnpore the same paper says that it is altogether impossible for the bureaucracy to suppress Bolshevism. If the arrogant bureaucracy does not give up its absurd ways it shall soon have to shed tears of blood at its misdeeds. Yet in another article the same paper describes the rich as dacoits who suck the blood of the poor and asks them to wake up for their end is near with the awakening of the cultivators and labourers and the rapid spread of Socialism. It says that not only in Europe but in the home of every cultivator and labourer in India children are being reared as future Lenins. There will be an upheaval soon and the end of capitalism and despotism is close by.

The Leader says: The nationalist movement in India is in essence a protest against the economic exploitation of the country and the system of racial domination that has been, established for facilitating it and it is therefore a reproach and not a credit to British rule A new bi-weekly in Hindi, entitled Mazdur, has been started at Cawnpore, which aspires to be a Socialist organ and is an open advocate of the propagation of Bolshevism in India. In announcing its policy the paper says: The Mazdur has come into the battlefield. It will raise the battle-cry of Socialism, fearlessly wage a war for the destruction of capitalism and despotism and try to hoist the flag of Socialism in every home of India. In an article headed "There will be revolution within twenty-four hours" the paper welcomes revolution as the sole hope of the poor and to free them from the tyrannical hold of the rich. It says: O Revolution come on, come on without delay. But you should place your bloodstained clothes and arms at the feet of Mahatma Gandhi and come dressed in a white robe. . . . The world will soon witness the day when there will be a revolution within twenty-four hours. In yet another article the same paper describes how labourers in Russia and Germany and England have secured victory against their tyrannical oppressors and tells them that if they were to withdraw their cooperation from the Army which totally depends upon their support, revolution can become a mere plaything for them and all destructive brute force can come to naught. The Bharat Jiwan in the course of an invocation to Lord Ram on the occasion of the Ram Naumi festival says: Having deluded you O Lord, the foreigners are besmearing your dear country, India, with blood. India loves you because you destroyed Ravan. O destroyer of the wicked! Once more show your wrath. Once more take up arms and behead cruel demons.

Once more make India free of its burden. The Bhartiya Lokmat remarks that the recrudescence of the bomb-cult and the appearance of Bolshevism in India are the outcome of the repressive policy of the Government. It is the irresponsible underlings of the bureaucracy who are creating a dangerous situation in the country. The present bureaucracy itself is responsible for creating an atmosphere of violence in the country by destroying the non-violent and peaceful Gandhian atmosphere. The Vartman expresses the conviction that Indians have no right to demand swaraj until they have cultivated a martial spirit along with the spirit of non-violence.

The British Budget.

According to the Pioneer, the first budget of the Labour Government contains no surprises and no sensations. The financial position disclosed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer is a remarkable tribute to the reproductive power of the British people and to the patience of the tax-payer under the heavy burden which has been laid upon his shoulders. The budget is essentially a free-trade budget. The Leader says that the Labour Government's budget is a free-trade and a poor man's budget. The Government deserves to be warmly congratulated on producing a poor man's budget without sacrificing the principles of sound finance. In commenting upon the substantial reductions in taxation, the paper sorrowfully remarks: In India there has been no corresponding relief from taxation, although the people of this country, owing to their extreme poverty, are far less able to bear a heavy incidence of taxation than those of England. With regard to Mr. Snowden's remarks about Imperial preference, the paper says that the announcement of policy will come as a disappointment to some of the Dominions, but so far as India is concerned it will be welcome.

The Labour Government.

The Haqiqat regrets that so soon after coming into power the Labour Government has begun to ignore its programme and promises and warns it that credit once lost cannot be regained by a policy of mere coaxing. The Najat remarks that the Labour Government has sacrificed all its promises to appease its opponents and that the Indians have only disappointment and failure awaiting them if they still rely on others. Commenting on the statement made by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald at the Annual Conference of the Independent Labour Party, that Indians should trust the Labour Government, the Aj remarks that India is prepared to trust the Labour Government, but where is the room for trust? Even during the régime of the Labour Government Indians are being indiscriminately arrested, Indian labourers were shot down at Bombay and Cawnpore and at Jaito fire was opened upon unarmed Indians. How can Indians trust the Labour Government when the bureaucracy is getting more and more irresponsible every day.

The Khilafat.

The Al Bashir says that at a time when the Angora Assembly has cancelled even the small pension given to the Khalifa and while he is living in exile as a beggar, it is a matter of great shame for the Indian Musalmans to content themselves with a mere recital of the Khalifa's name in Friday sermons. If they have any sense of shame left in them, the Muṣalmans of India and the Khilafat Committee should defray the expenses of their Khalifa. Protesting against Sharif Husain's claim to the Khilafat the Medina remarks: Islam is as much indebted for its downfall to its enemies as to its own friends. If Christianity produced Gladstone, Lloyd George, Curzon, Balfour and Churchill to annihilate Islam then there were enemies even within the house of Islam itself who were equally responsible for its destruction. The Haqiqat reproduces from the Aman Afghan of Afghanistan an article stating that the Turks by their short-sighted action have antagonised the Muslim world for which they will have to repent for ever. They should revise their decision at the Islamic Conference, restore the Khilafat and save the Muslim world from misery and disruption. The Hamdam says that if the Musalmans were organised the Government would not have dared to refuse passports to the deputation. The abolition of Khilafat will prove a blessing to us if it results in creating a determination among the Musalmans to organise themselves.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Leader justifies the non-payment of poll-tax by Mr. Joshi in Mombasa and says: Were the policy of the Local Government helpful, the Indians would probably not have taken to non-payment of one of the taxes as they have done. But instead of aiding in bringing about reconciliation and harmony and making a genuine attempt to adjust the political relations and interests of the two communities, what the

INDIA OFFICE

Local Government under successive Governors has done is to constitute itself the champion of European interests. It is the despair of ever-expecting justice at the hands of the Local Government that has led Indians to take this extreme step to vindicate their position as equal subjects of His Majesty. Protesting against the Class Areas Bill the Medina remarks that the white settlers cannot tolerate to see the progress of the Indians who are punished and segregated from the white population for the simple fault of their claiming equality. When they could not oppose Indians by just and equitable means they began to impose restrictions upon them. The Hamdam writes: We are not allowed to pass our days peacefully within "our own Empire." We are oppressed and humiliated in the Colonies but we receive the kicks silently like slaves. If we shed tears, heave sighs and raise protests we are branded as agitators and brewers of racial hatred and are confined in jails.

The British Empire Exhibition.

Referring to the comments of the extremist press, the Pioneer says: The refusal to recognise that the Exhibition has enabled India to give a wonderful advertisement of her resources, industries and crafts, is particularly perverse at a time when the encouragement of Indian industries is so specially urged upon the Government. The Aj asserts that India has no part in the British Empire Exhibition, although nominally a few representatives from India who are virtually the representatives of the British Government in India have joined it. How can India find a place in the Exhibition when she is a slave of the Empire? At the very outset the Exhibition was opened by the singing of the national song. Britain may rule the waves and make others slaves, but why should it be declared that the British Empire is a League of various nations on the basis of equality and fraternity? We should recognise our true position and refrain from making our slavery look more humiliating by participation in such functions as the British Empire Exhibition.

Muslim deputation to Angora.

The Hamdam resents the restrictions imposed by the Government which in its opinion amount to a refusal to grant passports and remarks that Great Britain is bent upon bringing about the disintegration and dismemberment of Islam. The Medina describes the Government action as a clear interference in religious matters and remarks that Great Britain which has always a hand in all the unrest and excitement created in the Muslim world, will be responsible for the difficulties which the Muslim world will face in future, and the dangerous consequences of refusing to grant passports will be attributed to the Government of India. The Mashriq is, on the other hand, gratified that Government by refusing to grant passports to the deputation has done a great favour to the Musalmans as lakhs of rupees would have been wasted on the journey. The Aligarh Gazette asserts that the deputation has in view some secret object harmful to India. The people should be thankful to Government that by refusing to grant passports it has to a certain extent saved India from a colossal conspiracy which the enemies of Islam were hatching. The Aj says that it is a gross injustice to refuse passports to the Angora deputation. By keeping the right of granting or refusing passports in its own hands the Government has in a way imprisoned all Indians within the country. No condemnation of this atrocity on the part of the Government can be too severe.

Constitutional advance.

The Pioneer says: If the achievements of the Legislatures during the past three years are cautiously examined it will be seen that the Reforms have not failed where they have been worked in the spirit in which they were devised. Were a Royal Commission now appointed the data upon which it would have to work would be scanty, the little available being calculated to demolish rather than to strengthen the claims put forward by Liberals and Swarajists alike. The real remedy lies in a favourable examination and reconsideration of their attitude by the representatives of the limited electorates in the Central and Provincial Legislatures. They must not shirk the issue, but facing it squarely they must realise that the failure of the Reforms, if it ultimately comes to be an admitted and accepted fact, means their own failure as exponents of India's ability to proceed to democratic self-government. The Advocate says: The Swarajists offered not only to clear up misunderstandings but even to co-operate in a round table conference, but the Government has disdainfully recoiled from the idea of grasping the proferred hand. If misunderstandings still exist the Swarajists are not to blame.

The Aj condemns the memorandum submitted by the European Association of Calcutta to the Secretary of State for India protesting against the grant of further Reforms to India and remarks that whatever the Association might say or in whatever light it might explain the position to the Secretary of State, the Indian public is certainly not satisfied with the bureaucracy. It is as clear as daylight that Indians want swaraj and their efforts to attain it will ever continue. The Vartman says that the memorandum is full of mean and unfounded attacks against the Swaraj party and its leader Mr. C. R. Das. The wrath of the European Association is concentrated on the Swaraj party but it should know that not only Mr. C. R. Das and other Swarajist leaders but every Indian nationalist is at present a votary of revolution and freedom. Indians have begun to recognise the truth that no nation ever won freedom without revolution. The Shakti points out that the demand of the Swarajists for a round table conference was rejected simply because the Moderates opposed it and presented a separate demand for a Royal Commission and urges that all political parties should sink their differences and combine to present a united demand and make all possible sacrifices for liberty; otherwise the attainment of swaraj is impossible.

Satyagraha at Vaikom.

The Leader disapproves the tactics adopted by non-cooperators at Vaikom and says: Their method is in essence the method of coercion, of compulsion and of force, and is calculated to stiffen and not weaken opposition. It is anti-democratic, because it seeks to achieve its object not by persuasion, nor by education, but by the display of a spirit of intolerance and domination. The Pioneer also disapproves of the attitude of the passive resisters and says: What is wanted is "a change of heart" among the caste Hindus, and a great deal of solid educative work will have to be undertaken before this can be brought about and inveterate prejudice sanctified under the cloak of religion be swept away by the influx of progressive and democratic ideas. The Advocate says that the sympathy of all India is with the satyagrahis and hopes that the Travancore Durbar as well as the caste Hindus of Vaikom will see the justice of the claim and allow the use of the public road in question to the suppressed classes also. The Oudh Akhbar resents the Pioneer's attempt to make the State authorities to stick to their present policy and hopes that the latter will not ignore a universal principle of humanity under the influence of the unlawful threats of an obstinate class. The Arya Mitra urges that every thinking Indian should express full sympathy with the satyagraha of the untouchables at Vaikom and that the Arya Samajists in particular should support it and condemn the interference of the authorities in the matter.

The Tariff Board Report.

The Pioneer says that the proposals of the Tariff Board would definitely commit the Government and the Legislature, so far as the steel industry is concerned, to a policy of protection for an indefinite period. Their proposals mean that the needs or claims of the producers alone are to be taken into consideration at the end of the triennial period; the consumers' interests, no matter how seriously they may be affected by the tariff, will be regarded as of secondary importance and will probably be ignored as conflicting with the pledge of continuity of policy which it is proposed to give to the manufacturer. If India were a genuine democracy in which the masses had the same political power and the same political intelligence as they have in Great Britain it is safe to assume that protection would stand as little chance of acceptance in the one country as in the other. The Leader says that the report is a very ably written document and bears evidence of the great care and thought bestowed on the thorough examination of the complicated question in a spirit of impartiality not unmixed with caution. The Tariff Board has done its duty and it is hoped that there will be no further delay in embodying the recommendations of the Board in a Tariff Bill which would be passed during the next session of the Indian Legislature. One of the major causes of the growing distrust between the Government and the people is the impression that in matters of industrial development the former is more or less an agent of British industrialists and capitalists and that under the existing system the economic emancipation of the country is impossible. Considering the rich deposits of iron-ore in the country, the paper hopes that the adequate protection of the steel industry will in a short time lead to the establishment of more firms of the magnitude of Tata's. According to the Indian Daily Telegraph, caution appears to be the watchword of the Tariff Board recommendations, which the paper considers are not extravagant. If Simla does not go as far as the Tariff Board, public disappointment will be acute. The Independence says: Without a tariff wall, the Tata steel undertaking will fall to the ground and the hand of the clock of industrial development set back by 20 years at least. But the collapse of the Tata industrial enterprise will give another opportunity to the patriotic agitators to place before the public the industrial policy of the Government which cannot stand a moment's scrutiny. It urges that effect should be given to the recommendations of the Tariff Board. That is the least that the Government can do as a penance for their past policy and panacea for future troubles. The Hamdam expresses its satisfaction that the Government is desirous of protecting the steel industry and hopes that not merely the Tata Company will be patronised but smaller capitalists will also be given a chance. It suggests that protective tariff should be levied on textiles also so that the poor weavers of the country may be able to reap adequately the fruits of their labour.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hindustan Times asserts that owing to the present weak position of the Musalmans in India the premature advent of swaraj will militate against the interests of Musalmans and jeopardise their national existence and that even a partial withdrawal of the British influence at this juncture would prove a serious menace to India's future prosperity. The Kartavya opines that the Hindu public will not accept the mandate of Mahatma Gandhi if he will ask it to favour the Muhammadans at its own expense at the proposed Hindu-Muslim Conference. Unless the Muhammadans change their heart and give precedence to national interests the struggle for swaraj cannot be pushed forward. The Arya Mitra urges that in deliberating upon the Hindu-Muslim problem the conference should attach the same importance to Hindu religious sentiments as to those of the Muhammadans, that no pact should be framed permitting cow-slaughter or stopping music in temples; that the decisions of the Congress should be so practicable as to be acceptable to the masses and that the Hindu sangathan movement should by no means be stopped.

The Akali agitation.

The Oudh Akhbar approves the appointment of Sir William Birdwood as the president of the Committee and remarks that the Sikh community will be well advised to send its best representatives to ensure a satisfactory law for the management of their Gurdwaras. The Haqiqat advises the Government to give up its policy of ruthless repression so that the fire of unrest and agitation prevailing in the country for years may be quenched and the people may live in peace. The Aj points out that the statement of an impartial individual like Mr. Zimand on the firing on the first Shahidi jatha clearly exposes the falsity of the Government communiqués on the subject. It may be noted that Mr. Zimand had previously stated on oath to the District Magistrate of Lahore all the facts that now appear in his statement and yet his evidence was ignored and all blame was thrown at the jatha and the murderers were eloquently praised.

Muslim Waqf Act.

Mirza Irfan Ali Beg writing to the Agra Akhbar says that the Musalmans of Agra desire the enforcement of Waqf Act in these provinces as it will save the trustees from unnecessary suspicions entertained against them and will cause the endowments to be managed properly. The Hind Jadid of Jaunpur exhorts the people of its district to raise a strong voice in favour of the enforcement of the Waqf Act in these provinces. The Hamdam has received a fatwa of Maulana Abdul Kafi of Madrasa Subhania, Allahabad, in which the proposed Waqf Act has been declared contrary to religion.

"Raja" Mahendra Pratap.

The Tohfa-i-Hind publishes a letter of "Raja" Mahendra Pratap in which he writes:—"The British Government through my relations conveyed to me the message that if I wanted to come back to India the Viceroy would grant me a pardon. But I cannot leave the work unfinished though I may die in the attempt. If I am arrested I shall die the death of Christ. I am at war with the English as long as they are in India and it is impossible for me to live under such a cruel Government." The Masur reproduces another letter from the Pratap in which it is remarked:—Kabul is the arena of conflict among Russia, England and Muslim countries. Already in the last month the English politics had to suffer discomfiture and the Afghan and Russian ideals triumphed.

The Begum of Bhopal.

The Arya Mitra says that the recent order of the Begum of Bhopal penalising renegation from Islam by three years' rigorous imprisonment and fine is a direct negation of religious liberty in the Bhopal State and asks whether the Muhammadans will raise their voice of protest against such an improper, unnecessary and mischevious order specially when they are so susceptible of religious intervention on the part of the Hindu princes.

Labourers and kisans.

The Mazdur publishes an article headed "An open challenge to Lord Reading on behalf of labourers" in which the Viceroy is reminded that although he made loud professions of dealing justice to Indians at the time of his advent into India he indulged in repression as much as his predecessor. With the coming of the Labour Government into power it was expected that justice will be done to Indian labourers but instead they are being made victims of bullets. If the labourers are given their rights as early as possible they will have to be killed in thousands of places and yet it will be impossible to withhold their rights. The Bhavishya says that the existing system of government is no good when the kisans suffer innumerable miseries. If the kisans were educated and knew their interests foreign traders and such of the Indian traders as play the traitor to their country would not have been able to export grain, which is the staple food of the country, to foreign countries and India would not have become impoverished. The paper exhorts young men to visit the villages and educate and awaken the kisans. The Haldhar says that the bureaucracy which is run by the earnings of the peasants tries to devour them, and if they heave a sigh machine-guns are levelled at them, fire is opened, unarmed persons are killed and finally they alone are held guilty and sent to jails to grind at the wheel by the Government which is called their Ma bap. For the emancipation of kisans and for the redress of their grievances it is necessary to free India from foreign domination.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman asserts that the victory of the Bolsheviks in the year 1917 has proclaimed to the entire world that the labourers have full "legal" right to destroy the capitalistic governments by swords and revolvers and to realise themselves full compensation for their labour. Every labourer whether he has heard the name of Bolshevism or not has on his lips nothing but the bitterest words for the rich and the severest abuses for the Government. This is the self-originating plague of Bolshevism which is firmly spreading to all the four directions and the sixteen corners of the world.

Cawnpore riot.

The Pioneer says that the report issued by the District Magistrate of Cawnpore on the circumstances attending the riot at Cawnpore Cotton Mills will strike any unbiassed reader as a singularly lucid and comprehensive document. The Independence without commenting on the report asks if it would not have been better if instead of a purely official enquiry a mixed committee of officials and non-officials had gone into the unfortunate question. The Advocate calls it a white-washing report and says: The public has had so many instances of this kind that it seemed a foregone conclusion that the official report would justify the police firing in toto. One can read between the lines of the report the eagerness on the part of the District Magistrate to justify the action of the police in opening fire. The paper hopes that in the interests of the fair name of the Government Sir William Marris will not allow the matter to rest where it is, but will take further steps to make police officials in similar circumstances more considerate of the lives of poor unarmed men. The Indian World of Cawnpore says: Prominent headlines appear in different papers about the murder of a British Corporal by two Egyptian natives and sensation is felt in every British heart. But when inopportune shooting was the cause of the murder of a few innocent lives at Cawnpore the other day, matters seem to have been hushed up without much ado. Men who were responsible for the crime are reigning gloriously on their respective gaddis and we doubt not are preparing themselves for another flight of their murderous fancy. What a contrast! The Hamdard justifies the action taken by the authorities and requests the District Magistrate to institute an official enquiry to find out how far the police had transgressed the limit. The Government should not only release the arrested millhands but should also persuade the employer to re-employ them. The Azad asserts that the British India Corporation is morally bound to render adequate relief to the families of the persons killed and wounded in the disturbance and requests the Government to release the arrested persons at once.

Political propaganda.

In a lengthy article the Hind-i-Jadid compares the British rule with that of Ravan and the Ali brothers with Rama and Lachhman who saved the world from the tyrannies of Ravan. The Aj is against foreign propaganda, remarking that no nation of the world is free of imperialism and that it is impossible that America or France or Japan can influence England to confer freedom on India when they themselves are committing atrocities upon and perpetuating the slavery of their dependent countries. One Mahtab Singh Varma writing in the Desh-Bhakta says:—"If I had the least authority in the world to have so much power that I could kill tyrants, I would have felt no hesitation in killing first of all those tyrannical brethren of my own who oppress their own countrymen, but unfortunately I have neither and hence keep quiet consoling my conscience." The Aj remarks that the repeated firing on Indians by the bureaucracy shows that it attaches no value to the lives of Indians and has no other means of ruling India than bullets and that Indians too have no fear of bullets, guns and cannons in asserting their rights. It is also indicative of the growing weakness of the bureaucracy. Both the growing weakness of the bureaucracy and the assertion of their rights by Indians are happy signs for the country. The Vartman says that in no other part of the world (except India) we may find such people as will give twenty-five crores of rupees annually to the Government to help it in its military administration when their average income per head is barely thirty rupees. It is from this money that machine-guns are purchased with which they are shot down as at Jallianwala Bagh and again it is from this money that General Dyer, the man who shot them, receives his pension.

A new weekly in Hindi entitled Haldhar has been started at Etawah to awaken the kisans and prepare them for a revolution which will be accomplished through non-violent satyagraha of a mass character. Its main objects are to spread political education among villagers, and make them fearless satyagrahi citizens, to remove untouchability and strengthen the Hindu-Muslim unity, to teach the cultivators the best way of exercising their franchise and to promote their interest in the Congress.

NAINI TAL:
The 3rd May, 1924.

ZAFAR OMAR,
Publicity Officer, United Provinces.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED AT THE GOVERNMENT BRANCH PRESS, NAINI TAL.

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 18 of 1924.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 10th May, 1924.

The Indian debate in Parliament.

THE Abhyudaya remarks that the recent debate in the House of Commons has exposed the bureaucracy in its nakedness and has conclusively proved that during the régime of the Labour Party also the policy of England towards India will be the same as has been advocated from time to time by Viscount Curzon, Lord Peel, Earl Winterton and Sir Malcolm Hailey. It seems to be a settled fact that it is Simla and not Whitehall which is deciding the policy to be followed in regard to India.

The Khilafat.

The Haqiqat opines that despite all his propaganda Musalmans will not recognise Sharif Husain as the Khalifa unless he makes proper atonement for his past misdeeds and thoroughly removes the suspicions which the Musalmans entertain against him. The paper expresses surprise that the Jammait-ul-Ulema has not yet convened any conference to decide the question and has not given any lead to the Indian Musalmans. The Medina refutes the claims of Sharif Husain to the Khilafat and says that he is not only a slave himself but an agent of Britain for enslaving the whole of the Jazirat-ul-Arab. Imam Yehia and the Sultan of Najd will commit a great political blunder if they leave him alone. If the internal politics of Arabia are in a disturbed condition the Khilafat of the Sharif cannot be successful even in Arabia itself despite any support from Britain. The same paper apprehends that the conference of the Muslim world to be held in Cairo to decide the future of the Khilafat will never be allowed to discharge its religious duties and obligations unhampered. It is idle to expect that the Musalmans who were not allowed to proceed to Angora will be permitted to take part in the Cairo conference. It describes the refusal of passports to the Angora deputation as a clear interference in religious matters and says that no Musalman can tolerate such repression. The Dilchasp takes the Turks to task for ignoring all the services rendered to them by Indian Musalmans and emphasises that they have never shown any sympathy with the Muslims of India and other countries. Neither have they done any service to Islam. They themselves are responsible for their downfall.

Anglo-Iraq Treaty.

The Mansur infers from the reports received that the enlightened and educated people of Iraq are opposed to the Anglo-Iraq agreement. The people of Iraq must have realised by now that all the hopes of freedom offered to them by Britain were false. Britain wanted to transfer them from the control of Turkey to its own slavery. Now that it has succeeded in its designs it tramples down the national sentiments of the people, but the spirit of freedom awakened among them cannot be suppressed. The Al Bashir opines that Britain will support Sharif Husain in case a tribal warfare breaks out in Arabia. It warns the Arabs against civil strife which will only weaken them and strengthen the enemies of Islam and their hold on the Jazirat-ul-Arab. It points out that so long as Sharif Husain and his dynasty continue in power, the Arabs who have not known peace and tranquillity since the withdrawal of the Turkish control can never be liberated.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Satyagraha remarks: If the Indians are not welcome to the purse-proud and power-blind Europeans, let us devote our attention to Asia. It is therefore a very good move of Dr. Rabindra Nath Tagore to pay a friendly visit to China. Both China and Japan and India have a good deal in common and have a great future before them. Every near approachment and understanding between the people of these countries will help the future development of the world on the ideals of the East. The Medina prays for the success of the campaign of non-payment of poll-tax started by the Indians of Kenya and says that so long as the curse of slavery lies on India justice cannot be expected for her.

3 JUN. 19[illegible]
INDIA OFFI[illegible]

Constitutional advance.

Commenting on the administration of the Municipalities in Bengal the Pioneer remarks: The municipal boards are now entirely in the hands of Indians, and many of them have a majority of non-cooperators. Yet they have become a bye-word for inefficiency. Presumably the self-same causes would operate in the Provincial and Imperial Legislatures if complete swaraj were attained. The case for an immediate constitutional advance is certainly not strengthened by the results of municipal swaraj which are only too patent to all who have the misfortune to live under its jurisdiction. The Leader disapproves of the veil of secrecy over the Government of India inquiry into the deficiencies of the Government of India Act and asks: Why should the Government of India conduct their own inquiry in secret and why should the personnel be exclusively official? Do the Government of India fondly believe that the presence on the committee of two Indian members of the Executive Council constitutes a true or an adequate representation of Indian opinion? Two or three non-official Indians ought certainly to be put on the committee in order that it may be taken seriously by the public and that it may accomplish useful work. It also suggests that one Swarajist leader should be invited to serve on the committee. The paper concludes the article in the following words: Even a self-sufficient bureaucracy, satisfied with its own conceit, can afford to avoid the superfluous mistake of wantonly increasing distrust and discontent. The Najat says that the memorandum of the European Association of Calcutta to the Secretary of State misinterprets the present situation in India and thereby amounts to an open treachery of the Europeans against the Indians. The Swadesh ridicules the arguments urged by the European Association of Calcutta against further Reforms in India and remarks that the country wants swaraj and that it will not rest without attaining it despite any amount of interested clamour on the part of Europeans. It sarcastically remarks that the Europeans are surely the representatives of the mute Indian masses, when their only aim in life appears to be self-indulgence and the vilification of the Swarajists.

Satyagraha at Vaikom.

In a leading article the Pioneer opines that the collapse of the movement at Vaikom seems to be only a question of time and says the only practical result of this bloody agitation hitherto has been to intensify the feeling of caste Hindus in southern India against any concessions to those whom they regard as scarcely within the pale of humanity. Much patient and arduous educational work will be necessary before the pride of the Hindu Pharisee, who daily thanks his gods that he is not as those degraded untouchables, can be overthrown. The Hamdam expresses satisfaction that the Travancore State authorities are not perpetrating such atrocities on the Satyagrahis as are the lot of political prisoners in the British India and that as a result of such sympathetic treatment the satyagraha campaign is going on peacefully. The paper takes Swami Shraddhanand to task for not participating in the campaign despite his pledge to devote the rest of his life to uplifting the untouchables.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Najat condemns the Hindu sangathan movement as harmful to Hindu-Muslim unity and says that if the Hindu leaders will not put a stop to this organisation, other communities will adopt counter-measures with the result that the struggle for national freedom will be pushed back and the country will be confronted with a danger the mere sight of which will be worse than death. The Hamdard expresses disagreement with the views of its contemporary the Hamdam that the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements should be abandoned as interfering with Hindu-Muslim unity and points out that the Hindus are in every way justified to propagate their religion and strengthen their community just as the Muhammadans are at liberty to exercise similar rights.

The Tariff Board report.

The Medina hopes that the report of the Tariff Board will be accepted and India will get an opportunity to work up its industrial resources successfully. It thinks that for some time the Indians will be confronted with difficulties, but ultimately they will have a well established steel industry in the country and will be freed from the clutches of foreigners. The Garhwali approves of the recommendations of the Tariff Board and expresses the hope that the Government accept and give effect to them.

Restoration of Berar.

One Mr. Sakhawat Husain writing in the Hamdam justifies the demand of the Nizam for the restoration of Berar and condemns the Congress Committee of Berar for protesting against it. He urges that in order to counteract the effect of such an action some eminent Congress leader should express his views on the question in a responsible manner.

The Liberal Conference.

The Bharat Jiwan says that the small attendance at the United Provinces Liberal Conference shows what confidence of the Indian public the Liberals enjoy. The presidential address and almost all the speeches that were made on that occasion were marred by mendicant mentality and by unjustifiable attacks on the Swarajists or the non-cooperators. It is, however, satisfactory to note that the President urged the immediate revision of the Reforms. The Hamdard opines that there was nothing new and suggestive in the presidential address at the Liberal Conference which only echoed the oft-repeated views of the Liberal leaders. It, however, pays a tribute to the Liberal policy and holds the attacks of the President against the council activities of the Swarajists to be justifiable.

The Swarajists and Liberals.

The Leader remarks: It is a pity that, thanks to the Swarajists, the Legislative Council now knows only a Sita Ram without his brave zealous colleagues of the old Council, and instead, is filled with ignorant men, indifferent men, inexperienced men, and perverse men. In another article the paper deplores the lack of earnest workers among the Liberals and asks the leaders of the Liberal Party how any political party anywhere in the world can hope to prosper if some of the men at the top, who expect to be recognised and followed, are to be so fatally apathetic as Sir Chimanlal Sitalvad and some other Indian Liberal leaders notoriously are. If no one of them will do anything active, if none of them gives practical proof that he realises that the conditions of public life and public work have enormously changed since its younger days and that political dilettantism is in these strenuous times only an euphemism for political suicide, why then the party is doomed and not all the statesmanship of its leaders will save it from ruin. The Kartavya says that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's encouraging words to Indians at the annual conference of the Independent Labour Party are the outcome of the Swarajists' activities in the Assembly and the Central Provinces Council. It asks the Swarajists to prepare the people to refuse the payment of the taxes which have been rejected in the Assembly if they want to accelerate the attainment of swaraj.

Bolshevism.

The Mazdoor remarks that the recognition of the Soviet Government by England after so many efforts to bring about its destruction and the convening of the British Bolshevik conference in London for the restoration of friendly relations between the two Powers, are equivalent to licking the expectorated saliva. The Haldhar insinuates that the condition of the British Premier that the Soviet Government should not carry on seditious propaganda in the British Empire mainly referred to India and remarks that sedition in India does not owe its origin to any outside propaganda. The present unrest in India is the result of the deprivation of the wealth and the rights of the Indians by the bureaucracy. As long as the aspirations of Indians are not met, any treaty with the Soviet Government will not be of any material help to Britain. The Vartman remarks that there is nothing appalling in the principles of Bolshevism. The inhabitants of every country may call themselves Bolsheviks and propagate the Bolshevik doctrines. It is not necessary that the establishment of a Bolshevik system of Government should involve bloodshed. Those who want to deprive the labourers of these rights of citizenship even in the present era of democracy are but respectable-looking burglars. In another article the same paper describes Bolshevism as a quiet and a peaceful organisation and remarks that its principles are so noble and grand that the best Parliamentary or Republican States appear to be a poor apology for Government as compared with it. In yet another article the same paper holds that the capitalistic Governments are themselves compelling the labourers to adopt Bolshevism and says that the labourers have begun to worship Bolshevism in order to destroy the inequality that exists between them.

Mr. C. R. Das' election.

The Aj remarks that to those who knew the official attitude in regard to Mr. C. R. Das' election to the Bengal Council it was a foregone conclusion that this election would be set aside by the election Commissioners. But the decision of the Commissioners in itself is not so important as is the fact that the date for the bye-election has been fixed late in June. The diplomatic move underlying it is that Mr. C. R. Das may not be able to oppose the supplementary budget grants which will come before the Council in May. But it has to be seen how far the bureaucracy of Bengal succeeds in its designs.

The Cawnpore riot.

The Oudh Akhbar regrets that contrary to all expectations attempts have been made in the lengthy report of the District Magistrate to justify the action of the police and the Magistrate. It refuses to believe the assertion made in the report that the strikers were helped by Bolshevik agents. The report will not satisfy the public, as it is based on the evidence of unreliable witnesses to the exclusion of that of influential persons of the city. The Mazdoor considers it a false hope to expect that justice will be done in the matter of the Cotton Mills firing incident. If Government wants to ascertain true facts and to do justice it should, suggests the paper, remove all the officials and men concerned in the massacre and order an impartial enquiry into the matter.

Political propaganda.

One Thakur Chandan Singh writing in the Satyagraha (Dehra Dun) says: India is situated between the Devil and the deep sea. Between the heavy mills of her own depravity and incapacity below and of crushing foreign exploitation above, the hopes of our children and of our posterity seem lost in despair. Anarchy with independence is sometimes preferable to peace with ruin. Life without liberty and livelihood is no better than death. What is the lot of us, men and women of India? Crawling orders and gradual extinction at home and blood-curdling humiliations and indignities all the world over. The Najat publishes a contributed article which says:—The establishment of (friendly) relations between England and Russia will prove harmful to the internal affairs of India. Britain will become strong enough to suppress all our movements and difficulties will arise in the attainment of swaraj. Britain will have no opponent left in Europe and will be able to move its white forces easily against India. Britain will come to realise the value of India's friendship, if on the contrary any other Power in alliance with Russia challenges it in Asia. The Aj ridicules the idea of some of the Indian politicians that a complete Indianisation of services would mean swaraj and remarks that as long as the real power is in the hands of aliens we cannot have swaraj even if each and every post in the public services is held by the Indians. On the other hand such an arrangement will tighten rather than loosen the fetters of India's dependence because by it the bureaucracy will get so many Indians as slaves to torture their own brethren. Under an Indian Republic we have swaraj even if all the officials in the public services are aliens and under the British bureaucratic system of administration we have dependence even if all those officials are Indians. In another article the same paper remarks that perhaps no other country in the world than India has greater need to bear in mind the just principle of Mr. Hitler, the popular German leader, that "disloyalty to Government or the violation of its laws is no offence but treachery to country is a heinous crime." Those who are fond of ruling others or those who think it their duty to bow their heads to Government may see in Mr. Hitler's principle a gunpowder magazine of sedition and violence but to those whose sole concern is to do good to their country it is a wholesome homily on their duties. The Bhavishya remarks that the lack of political education and organisation among the kisans who constitute two-thirds of the Indian population is the main obstacle in the way of the attainment of swaraj. If the kisans are strongly organised and political education is spread among them the attainment of freedom will be greatly accelerated because the kisans are the pillars of the Indian nation. The Desh-Bhakta says that thousands of non-cooperators in India believe in non-violent non-cooperation as a policy. They are votaries of non-violence, but hold bloodshed as indispensable for the liberation of the country. They realise that if non-violent non-cooperation secures them their desired object—swaraj, it is no good having resort to the last reprehensible resource of bloodshed. The day is still far off when they will have to decide whether they choose the sword or the Parliament for their emancipation. In another article the same paper writes:—The lap of the most holy motherland is blessed only when its children cheerfully sacrifice their dear lives and thereby attain true salvation. Do those who suck the blood of helpless children (of the motherland) by oppressing them enjoy a peaceful sleep? Those ungrateful people who interfere with the liberty of a country are like treacherous demons.

The Khilafat.

KHWAJA BASHIR AHMAD KHAN writing in the Hamdam challenges the authority of the Indian Musalmans to criticise and condemn the decision of the Angora Assembly and remarks that the Indian Musalmans on account of their slavish mentality and ignorance cannot realise the simple fact that by opposing the Turks they are doing no service to Islam. The delicacy and the importance of the questions do not admit of even the slightest protest being raised against the Turks. The Musalmans of India who never acknowledged Sultan Abdul Majid Khan as their Khalifa and who helped Great Britain against Turkey in destroying the institution of Khilafat have no right now to condemn the action of the Turks. Referring to the Sharif's proclamation at the time of his entry into the Great War the Haqiqat remarks: This rebellious action of the Sharif at a time when the Musalmans were sacrificing their lives to preserve the prestige of Islam was extremely reprehensible. His revolt against the Turkish Empire was unpardonable as at the time it was the duty of every true believer to ignore the defects and shortcomings of the Turks and to oppose their enemies to the best of his might.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Pioneer is hopeful of good results from the labours of the Colonies Committee and regrets the efforts of some Indian journals to deprecate the personnel of the committee, but it hopes that such an attitude would not deter the committee from giving their whole-hearted attention to the problems with which they have to deal. It is by negotiation and consultation rather than by rhetorical press and platform campaigns that India can consolidate her position. On the other hand, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: Those who cherish the belief that the Indian Colonies Committee, which has been sent to England at the expense of the Indian tax-payer, will be able to bring about any real betterment in the status and treatment of Indians in South Africa or Kenya, will, we are afraid before long, be sadly disillusioned. It believes that the colour bar will remain in spite of all efforts to make concessions and hopes that a self-governing India and the advancement in education of the African will in time destroy all barriers based on selfish and illogical pretensions.

Constitutional advance.

The Leader quotes extensively from Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's book "The Government of India" and urges the acceleration of Reforms in order to establish self-government in India. It is not satisfied that the bureaucracy has given the Reforms the support they deserved and asserts that everything possible was done to dilute Mr. Montagu's generous conception with Tory and bureaucratic reluctance, jealousy and suspicion. And after Mr. Montagu himself was martyred, the spirit in which it is done has also undergone a material deterioration and a "niggling frame of mind" has been inscribed on the portals of Government Houses and Secretariats. In a sense and in a way, Government have been engaged since 1922 in explaining away the promises and wriggling out of the commitments of 1921. For proof of this no one need travel beyond the United Provinces. The spirit of administration is what it was: haughty and aloof, exclusive and suspicious, autocratic and bureaucratic. Far from the Government and the people regarding each other more, they trust each other less. There can be but one end to all this: Self-government. To deny it is impossible. Therefore, to delay it is unwise. To that end ought all wise men to work, and every obstacle must be swept away. Referring to the Reforms Inquiry the paper insists that this first stage of the inquiry should be merged in the second that is indicated in a recent announcement. Forthwith the scope of the committee should be extended so as to comprehend the whole subject of amendment of the rules so as to effectuate all the advance that is possible under the present Act and further to indicate the nature of and the extent to which the committee are prepared to recommend a revision of the constitution by an amendment of the Act itself. It goes without saying that the constitution of the committee itself should be reformed so as to bring in a strong element of competent and representative non-official Indians. The Pioneer says: Those who are clamouring for an immediate constitutional advance towards the ultimate goal of complete self-government in the Provincial and Central Governments would do well to pause awhile and consider the actual results of self-government in a field in which it has been already attained. Commenting on the Albert Hall speech of Mr. Baldwin the Indian Daily Telegraph says: There is nothing to choose between the views expressed in this and that of the notorious 'steel frame' speech of Mr. Lloyd George, except that the latter being a Liberal showed a less vein of reactionary spirit. Whatever it is, we can only say that any reactionary spirit under the specious mask of incapacity of India will only serve to complicate the situation still further. It urges that India should immediately be placed on the safe road to Dominion status. And unless some forward step is taken without further delay in right earnest it is afraid the Government may find it too difficult to restore the confidence that has been almost lost. Let us sincerely hope that England will not create such a situation here as she did in Ireland by her obstinacy. Commenting upon the Committee of Inquiry into the Government of India Act the Hamdam remarks that those who have closely studied Lord Reading's régime and the mentality of the officials at Simla can well understand the nature of the committee and anticipate the value and importance of its recommendations. The Government of India Act as amended by official committees will as well fail in commanding popularity as did the Act itself. In another article the same paper criticising the speech of Mr. F. F. James at the meeting of the European Association remarks that the Government has no power to guarantee the retention of a sufficient number of Europeans in the public services. The Ministers of Government may brag ever so much but no nation can rule another for long when once the feeling of self-respect has been aroused in the latter. The Oudh Akhbar is dissatisfied at the secrecy enveloping the Reforms Inquiry and regrets that the committee is only a departmental one and is absolutely devoid of non-official element. The Indian public can never be satisfied with the result of such inquiry. The Haqiqat is at a loss to understand the policy of the Government and the utility of holding the sessions of the committee in camera. It has little hope of any improvement being effected in the Government of India Act and remarks that as long as there is a lack of harmony and unity among the different sections of politicians and communities in India the period of ten years fixed by the Government to revise the Reforms should be regarded as unalterable.

Vaikom Satyagraha.

The Hamdam characterises the treatment meted out to the "untouchables" as the greatest insult to humanity and a great stigma on Indian civilisation and exhorts the people not to slacken their efforts in uplifting the untouchables.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hindustan Times advises the Muslim Swarajist leaders to devote themselves to the protection and propagation of Islam otherwise the Musalmans will regard them as the enemies of Islam and refuse to acknowledge them as their leaders. The Arya Varta hopes that Mr. Gandhi while expressing his views on the Hindu-Muslim relations will abstain from making remarks against the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements which are likely to injure the interests of the Hindus. It advises both the communities to follow a give and take policy and be prepared for sacrifice in the common cause. The Mashriq remarks that the continual outbreak of Hindu-Muslim disturbances in the United Provinces is a disparaging commentary on the dignity and administration of the Local Government and the utter silence of the members of the Council shows that they are deaf and blind to these events. It suggests the appointment of a committee of influential Hindus and Musalmans in each district under the District Magistrate to take precautionary measures against the activities of mischief-mongers. The Arya Mitra appeals to Mahatma Gandhi to pay heed to the atrocities of the "Muslimshahi" on the Hindus at various places and asks whether the Hindus are born to be trampled down and thrashed by others. Is it not astounding that the Hindus should not be allowed in their own country to parade in public streets with music on the occasion of their festivals? Swaraj will be of no use if Hindus become extinct as a result of Muslim aggression. Hindu-Muslim unity is a misnomer if under its cover Hindus are oppressed and not allowed to assert themselves. Mahatma Gandhi should in the name of justice espouse the cause of the Hindus and prove their saviour. The Pratap holds that a spirit of hostility and retaliation has crept into the Hindu organisation movements and urges the Hindu Mahasabha to remove it, remarking that if it makes excuses in this connection it will be guilty of treachery to the country.

The Tariff Board Report.

The Pioneer says that in case a Select Committee is appointed to consider the Bill designed to give effect to the recommendations of the Tariff Board it will be the duty of the committee to consider whether the object which the Tariff Board had in mind could not be attained by some other device less open to criticism. Referring to the coming discussion of the Tariff Bill in the next session of the Legislative Assembly the Pioneer says: This was inevitable, for ever since the debate on the Fiscal Commission's report, the Government have shown that they have decided to put themselves in the hands of the vocal minority which is urging protection on the country out of blind political animosity without considering or regarding the political effects of such a course on the bulk of the population. The Swadhin fully approves of the recommendations of the Tariff Board regarding the protection of the Indian steel industry and urges that they should be carried out even if India has to make some sacrifices for it.

Restoration of Berar.

A correspondent writing to the Hamdam describes the protest of the Berar people against the restoration as an act of gross disloyalty, as in reality they are the subjects of the Nizam, and remarks that only certain disaffected and interested persons are engineering such protests. The Zulqarnain advises the Nizam to start a counter-propaganda so that the people of Berar may not be misled against him.

The Swaraj party.

The Leader continues to oppose the Swarajists and says: The Swarajists of today were the blatant non-cooperators of yesterday. The Mahratta boasts that the bureaucracy has been hit hard by the Swarajists, that it is feeling humiliated and defeated and that there are signs that it is going to surrender. But if the Swarajist policy has made the bureaucracy feel that the very foundations of their Government are crumbling, why has a sudden change been quietly introduced into it as evidenced by the notices of resolutions which the Swarajist members of the Assembly are reported to have given. If there is any set of politicians whose principles and policies are more evasive, uncertain and unreliable than those of any other party, it is the Swarajists, who have been constantly shifting their ground, and no one knows where they are going to stop. The Kartavya is dissatisfied with the continuance of the Swarajists' existing programme. In no other province than the Central Provinces can the obstructionist party be carried out successfully. It is altogether inconsistent that while the Swarajists rejected the budget in the Legislative Assembly, they do not call upon tax-payers to refuse payment of taxes. So long as the constructive programme is not fulfilled on the one hand and the satyagraha campaign is not launched out on the other swaraj cannot be attained.

The British Empire Exhibition.

The Zulqarnain hopes that India will reap immense economic benefits through the Exhibition as lakhs of people will see the industrial products of the country. The Hindustani, on the other hand, remarks that other countries will take India to be rich, rob it by turn, prey all the more upon the Indian people, who already do not get even stale food, and trample them down completely. The Hindi Kesri says that the British Empire Exhibition may well serve to display the power, greatness and expansion of the British people but cannot be a demonstration of the mutual love and affection of the various parts of the British Commonwealth. As India has boycotted the Exhibition it will only emphasise the difference between the whites and the blacks and their respective positions as the rulers and the ruled.

Maharaja of Kashmir and the Musalmans.

The Hamdam resents the remarks of the Maharaja that he is not in favour of creating special facilities for any particular community and that the Musalmans should learn to rely upon themselves. It remarks that the Maharaja of Kashmir should know that if the Musalmans desire to be helped in the matter of education and services they do not beg alms from the treasury of another nation but want that the taxes which have been paid from the hard-earned money of 90 per cent. of the Musalmans should be utilised for their good.

The Begum of Bhopal.

The Kartavya opines that the new order of the Begum of Bhopal penalising renegation from Islam is a most unjust and reprehensible one and represents the height of communal prejudice. Her Highness should realise the consequences if a similar order were to be passed by Hindu princes and she will do well to cancel this order immediately. The Arya Varta protests against the rumoured order of the Bhopal State for prosecuting any one who renounces Islam and remarks that such actions all the more widen the gulf between the two communities. It exhorts the Muslim leaders to resent such an order and try and have it withdrawn.

Akali agitation.

The Chhattri says that the growing audacity of the Akalis is due to the leniency on the part of the Government. The result of releasing the jathas after arresting them is that they again renew their nefarious activities. The Mashriq justifies the action taken by the Nabha authorities and remarks that they exercised extreme forbearance and opened fire in self-defence. It advises the Government to act with firmness and quell the ever-increasing rebellion of the Akalis. The Kartavya urges that in view of the assertions of Mr. Zimand, Dr. Kitchlu and the Congress Committee that the Akali jatha had no arms excepting the kirpan and that the crowd accompanying it did not attack the State force, the British authorities should either prosecute those who are alleged to be aggressors or the Administrator of Nabha who opened fire on the innocent Akalis. The Aj says that the appointment of a committee to settle the Akali question is a mere lip-sympathy on the part of the Governor of the Punjab. Not even one thousand and one such committees can settle the Akali question unless all the Akali leaders are released, the Gurdwara Committee is allowed to carry on its activities as before and the Nabha question is satisfactorily solved.

Civil disobedience.

The Aj remarks that if we can remove the poverty of this country and inculcate among the masses the spirit of liberty we shall be able to organise the people and launch a campaign of mass civil disobedience or a no-tax campaign against this mighty and irresponsible Government. It is not possible to carry on civil disobedience successfully without preparing the people for it.

Non-cooperation.

In a series of articles headed the "Message of Non-cooperation" the Independence contrasts the respective merits of obtaining freedom by violent and non-violent means and prefers the goal of non-cooperation as suited to the genius of the East. India is evolving a political philosophy of non-violent national efforts. It is a philosophy which once formulated is bound to revolutionise world-thought. It is based on the temperament and the culture of the East. The East unlike the West has ever tried to quench and subdue the brute in man and not to develop and worship it. Therefore the worship of the brute force as implied in the organised imperialistic militarism of the West is foreign to Eastern culture. And India has undertaken to demonstrate to the world that the real evolution of humanity does not lie in aping the brute and even surpassing it in its violent and selfish tendencies, but that it lies in the subordination of these tendencies to the higher human instincts. The paper points out that a great danger lies in the likelihood of India losing her self-control. Violence begets violence and the austerest moral discipline comes to naught when once the blood is up. The enemies of India may take advantage of her moral resolve and visit her with the severest physical inflictions. These inflictions may provoke her into a violent retort and thus demoralise and destroy altogether her non-violent national campaign. If the violence of repression will be so great as to goad India into a breaking away from all her intellectual leadership then that violence may bring along with it its own Nemesis. It may prove a shorter though a less human cut to India's national goal. In the course of an article headed "How Hungary wrought her freedom" the Independence says: The Hungarian movement is pregnant with morals for India. Our Dases and Gandhis are India's Deakes. And under their banner India's freedom is assured.

Cawnpore riot.

The Haqiqat asserts that the armed police was not justified in firing upon the labourers besieged inside the compound of the Mill after the crowd of mill-hands was dispersed. It further remarks that the public can never be satisfied with the one-sided report of the Magistrate and suggests that a fresh enquiry should be held.

Forest administration in Kumaun.

The Shakti says that though the bureaucracy promised on the occasion of the coolie utar agitation and the last elections to open the forests yet now it appears that this pledge was only made by the deceitful bureaucracy to trick the people inasmuch as proposals seem to be afoot to stop even the sale of firewood by villagers. It is nothing but utter disregard of public opinion to do so when the three members of Kumaun in the Provincial Council have urged for the abolition of the Kumaun circle. The Kumaunese should wake up and make a firm determination to secure their rights in the forests.

Municipal administration in the United Provinces.

Commenting on the Government resolution on municipal administration the Pioneer says that municipal administration has become a bye-word for inefficiency. Unless a radical change in the methods of municipal administration is forthcoming in the immediate future, the inefficiency of municipal administration is likely to prove a serious obstacle to India's constitutional progress. Referring to the financial condition of the municipalities the Leader asks: Are the municipalities not to receive even educational grants for meeting a part of their recurring expenditure on education? The Government derives a large amount of income from excise duties levied within municipal limits. Are not the people of the towns entitled to a portion of the receipts from this source? It thinks that the emphatic and unqualified statement of Government with regard to financial help requires modification. Speaking of the achievements of the last boards the paper asks: But what about the record of the Government of India and the Local Govèrnment? Did they not produce bankruptcy budgets and was not the record of the Government of India characterised by the present Finance Member as resembling a rake's progress? The Indian Daily Telegraph advises the municipal boards to undertake action in regard to water-supply and drainage at least from the sanitary and hygienic point of view. Unless considerable headway is made without further delay of improving public health the matter will go from bad to worse.

Political propaganda.

The Leader says: One of the greatest objections of Indians against the existing system of Government is that it involves a ruinous drain upon India's moral and material resources. The Government and its henchmen in the press have been denying that it involves any drain but have, on the other hand, been emphasising the great and untold benefits the system has conferred upon the country and advertising the growing prosperity of India under British rule. The Haldhar accuses the British Government of observing racial discrimination and urges that in order to remove this humiliating evil the Indians should devote themselves to the attainment of freedom. The Vartman remarks that liberty and swaraj have always been attained by physical prowess and never by mendicancy and speechification. The British will never leave India and the Indians should follow the straight and tried path of getting rid of them. The same paper says that the acquittal of C. J. Walker at Poona, who was charged with having murdered an Indian villager, is no new thing. We have always been witnessing such British justice. This farce of British rule cannot deceive us for long. The Shakti points out that so far as politics is concerned there is no untouchable class, and if there is one, it is formed by traitors to the country whether they be Rajas, Khan Bahadurs or Rai Bahadurs. It is only too true, as has been declared by the German leader, Hitler, that disloyalty or violation of law is no crime, but that treachery to country is the greatest sin. For the purpose of strengthening nationalism it is the cultivators and the labourers who will have to be educated and organised and a crusade will have to be started against the heresy which condemns any particular class of people as outcasts. India will progress only when its people despite their mutual differences present a united front to the external enemy. The Aj refers to the shooting of Indian labourers in British Guiana and remarks:—It is a truism to assert that the lives of Indians have no value. Whether at home or abroad they are made victims of the bullets of the whites who shoot them down like quails and partridges. What to say of the British Dominions when in their own home fire is opened on them on trifling grounds. The Desh Bhakta in a strongly-worded article criticises the policy adopted by Great Britain in India and asserts that prior to the British rule the Indian villagers were not so poor and sickly and that they passed their lives very comfortably.

European situation.

THE Medina remarks that owing to the nationalist party coming into power in the new elections in Germany, the reparation question has again become complicated and acute, and if the situation continues to remain critical the time is not far when the European Powers will again be embroiled in another terrible war.

The Khilafat.

The Muslim University Gazette says that the European Powers are now trying to take advantage of the present uneasiness and anxiety prevailing among the Musalmans and setting up their own nominees for the Khilafat. Writing in a similar strain the Medina asks the diplomats of Europe to bear in mind the clear injunctions of Islam that if there are two Khalifas in the Muslim world, one of them must be beheaded. The Haqiqat publishes a letter by Maulana Abul Kalam Azad in which it is remarked:—Islamic Khilafat in fact means Islamic 'State.' The President of the Turkish Assembly is in reality the Khalifa of the Musalmans and as long as Türkey is independent and proclaims itself to be a Muslim State the seat of the Khilafat is also there. The Hamdam exhorts the members of the Khilafat Committee to make adequate arrangements for the allowance of the late Khalifa Abdul Majid, and remarks that any scheme for this purpose will meet the approval of the Muslim public whose expression of their confidence in the late Khalifa would greatly influence the Turkish Republic.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Independence writes: We frankly confess our inability to appreciate the whining and petulant tone with which many of our people have been accustomed to complain of the treatment which our countrymen receive at the hands of the white residents of the different Colonies and Dominions of the Empire. National self-respect would demand either complete reticence or manly opposition to these indignities. But what is the good of whining that we are treated as "Pariahs in the Empire." Even the "pariah" has his self-respect. In describing the unhealthy condition under which Indian immigrants live in British Guiana the Indian Daily Telegraph says: No wonder that immigration which causes such an amount of suffering and degradation should be higly unpopular among their countrymen in India. The question now is whether this should not altogether be stopped.

Constitutional advance.

Commenting on the report on the administration of Bengal the Pioneer says: The inability of the Indian Legislatures to utilise and develop the powers already within their reach is, indeed, a significant commentary on the absurdity of the vociferous clamour which is being indulged in on all sides for a further immediate constitutional advance. It will be time enough for the British Parliament to consider the desirability of a constitutional advance when it can be shown that the Indian Legislatures fully realise and utilise their existing powers. The Leader says: Under the system of diarchy the Governor is vested with too much power and unless he is prepared to cooperate with the Ministers and to recognise the principle of joint responsibility and joint deliberation, the Legislature cannot either determine the character of the executive or control the general lines of its policy. Besides, the Legislature has no control over the services. This is one of the vital defects of the dyarchical system and it is no use overlooking it. The Governor must be reduced to the position of a constitutional head of the Government and the services brought under popular control before the Legislature can fully wield the influence and the power which it does under democratic constitution. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the Indians have no clear ideas about the political advancement of the country and much will depend upon the attitude of the upper classes and the way in which they utilise the powers already in their hands. There can be no doubt that the franchise is so high that it is only the rich that can hope to represent the people. The aristocrats thus have an easy opportunity of being the political leaders of the country, but their thorough identification of their interests with the bureaucracy as against the necessary and beneficial measures on behalf of their people has gradually led to the shifting of the political centre of gravity to the other classes. The gradual progress towards self-government will find them stranded, bereft of political power and influence. The Leader commenting upon the recent communiqué on the Reforms Inquiry says that the communiqué is a typical secretariat product. It asks why have not the Government of India gone one step farther and published the text of the letter to Local Governments? Past experience, going back to the Curzon Universities Commission of 1920, bids us beware of eyewash committees formally to register conclusions previously reached. There is one sovereign remedy to allay suspicions if they are unfounded or merely morbid. That remedy is publicity. We would equally urge the prompt publication of Local Governments' despatches as soon as they are received at Simla. Our last word to the Government of India is that if the whole of this affair continues to be shrouded in mystery, as if it were either an unsavoury divorce scandal or a delicate diplomatic negotiation, no knowing Indian can think that they are serious about this business on which they are ostentatiously engaged. The Pioneer also finds it difficult to understand why there has been such delay in explaining the exact nature of the first committee's inquiry and says that no great harm would have been done by the publication of the terms of reference which do not appear on the surface to have deserved the mysterious character given to them in certain papers of a highly suspicious frame of mind. The Medina has no faith in the Reforms Committee and remarks that the pressure of the Swarajist members alone can be effective in securing the necessary instalments of responsible government from the British Cabinet. Commenting upon the terms of reference of the Reforms Committee the Hamdam remarks: The only object of the committee is to take precautionary measures against the difficulties which the Government has to face on account of the majority of the nationalists in the Council. The Hindustani describes the Reforms Committee as sham and remarks that where there is no Congress leader or responsible Hindu or Musalman on the committee the Englishmen are sure to give their arbitrary decision. A correspondent writing to the Zulqarnain remarks that the Reforms introduced by the British Government are by no means a sham. They provide ample scope for gaining administrative experience. We should take advantage of what we have and prepare ourselves for the next stage. Swaraj can never be achieved through the methods adopted by the Swarajists. The Oudh Akhbar advises the Government to accept the demand for a Round Table Conference on the condition that no consideration will be paid therein to the question of immediate constitutional advance, only the question of time for granting full responsible government to India will be discussed. The Garhwali says that the Reforms Committee consisting as it does of all official members can do no good to the people. It will only accentuate the disappointment of the people and thereby lead to further vigorous agitation. The Indian leaders should take advantage of the Labour party being in power and agitate in England itself for further constitutional advance. The Swadhin is utterly dissatisfied with the personnel of the Reforms Committee and says that its recommendations cannot inspire public confidence. If the Viceroy could not include non-officials in the committee he should have at least appointed one or two Ministers.

Vaikom Satyagraha.

The Tabligh says that the movement deserves the support of every truth and justice-loving person as it has been started to safeguard and protect the primary rights of humanity. The Muslim proselytising associations should particularly turn their attention towards this and rise equal to the duties imposed upon them by their religion in inculcating upon the depressed classes the ideas of freedom, equality and brotherhood as enjoined by Islam. The Tohfa-i-Hind characterises the order of the Travancore State as not only contrary to the injunctions of the Vedas and Shastras but also as an insult to humanity. It means that a Hindu State is openly directing the Hindu nation to embrace Christianity or Islam as in that case alone they will be allowed to pass on the prohibited roads.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Bir Hindu resents the letter addressed to Mahatma Gandhi by Hasan Nizami advising him to embrace Islam and describes the proselytising propaganda of the Musalmans as an absurd mania and sarcastically remarks that the only benefit which a Hindu can draw from the friendship of the Musalmans is to lose his dharma. We are at a loss to understand why the Musalmans are so much incensed at the Shuddhi movement when they themselves indulge in such activities. The Bhavishya asserts that the Musalmans are largely responsible for the communal disturbances as they want to exercise at the present time those privileges which they did not enjoy under their own rule. It holds that any number of national pacts will not bring about the desired unity between the Hindus and Musalmans which can be established only through the strong organisation of the Hindus. The Abhyudaya says that in all the Hindu-Muslim disturbances the Musalmans are generally the aggressors. They always take the offensive in plunder and violence. It is because they have life in them. The Hindus are the sufferers because they are weak and cowardly and fear death. It is the Musalman leaders who sowed the communal dissension and are therefore responsible for the Hindu-Muslim disturbances. Referring to the looting of Hindu shops at Jaunpur the Vartman remarks that at the present time the condition of the Hindus is such that they can be counted neither among the living nor among the dead. The proper course for them is to move forward or become extinct. If the Hindus want to continue their existence they should raise civic guards and the entire Hindu population should help them. If they fail to do so they will continue to be thrashed and plundered.

Muslim organisation.

The Medina lays stress upon the necessity of reorganising the Muslim League to solve the internal political problems of the Indian Musalmans and remarks that the construction of the national structure along with the untiring efforts for the achievement of swaraj is the one essential duty of the Indian Musalmans. The Haqiqat approves the scheme for the organisation of the Musalmans as chalked out by Dr. Kitchlu and hopes that this important question will be thoroughly considered at the next session of the Muslim League. The Hamdam pays a tribute to the unselfish patriotism and colossal sacrifices of Dr. Kitchlu and hopes that his scheme will not remain on paper only but will guide the Musalmans on the right path at this most critical time. The Aj is opposed to the revival of the Muslim League and remarks that the Congress can achieve the object for which it is sought to revive a defunct body. The well-wishers of India's nationalism should support the cause of the Congress and do away with all other institutions instead of adding to their numbers.

Restoration of Berar.

Commenting upon the letter of Rai Bahadur Babu Shankar Dayal, M.L.C., regarding the restoration of Berar, the Haqiqat regrets that the views of sensible and justice-loving Hindus are not given adequate publicity, otherwise the British Government would learn that there is a sufficient number of such Hindus in India who heartily support the demand of the Nizam. The Naiyar-i-Azam resents the attitude of the Hindu press towards the restoration of Berar and remarks that their comments are not based on good faith. They cannot bear to see the progress and prosperity of a Muslim State and are unmindful of the feelings of hatred which their writings are likely to create among the Musalmans. In another article the same paper says that as long as Berar is under British influence it is impossible to ascertain the true sentiments of the Berar people and that in fact the Government is not prepared to allow the Native States to take the initiative in granting Home Rule to India.

Demolition of mosques at Bharatpur.

The Muslim press in general condemns the action of the Maharaja of Bharatpur in demolishing the mosques and exhorts the Government to intervene in the matter. The Zulqarnain asks the Government if it is waiting for any particular agitation on the part of the Musalmans and remarks that it is the duty of the Government to take notice of it before the Musalmans start convening meetings and knocking at the doors of the Government. The silence maintained by the Government is contrary to the British spirit of toleration. The Haqiqat regrets that in this unhappy country there still exist such condemnable persons who on account of their religious bigotry are demolishing the foundation of unity. A correspondent writing to the Hamdam says that the injunctions of the religion in this matter are clear and if nothing is done the Musalmans will be obliged to resort to retaliatory measures to the best of their might. The Tabligh remarks that the extreme religious bigotry and hard-heartedness of the Maharaja of Bharatpur will certainly succeed in filling to the brim the cup of the Musalmans' patience. By means of the Princes' Protection Act the Government wants to safeguard the rights of the Indian Rulers, but the Government is also the protector of the religious rights and the personal property of the people of the States and should not remain silent. The Al Bureed says that the Musalmans are noted for sacrificing their lives for their religion and that if nothing is done to prevent the mischief, the matter will go out of control and there is every apprehension that the Bharatpur State will become the scene of disturbances.

The Begum of Bhopal.

Referring to the order of the Begum of Bhopal the Muslim University Gazette remarks that it is a purely Islamic question and that the non-Muslims are not justified in complaining about it. The Begum of Bhopal is noted for her religious toleration and it is sheer short-sightedness to vilify the State by putting forward fictitious grievances. The Medina supports the order of the Begum and remarks that it is the duty of every civilised Government to save its subjects from the poisonous effects of the change of religion. The Awaz in a strongly-worded article describes the Begum as the younger sister of Aurangzeb and remarks that she has been attacked with religious frenzy. It appeals to Lord Reading to send her to some hospital to undergo mental treatment.

Akali agitation.

The Haqiqat says that after a bitter experience of one and a half years the Punjab Government has been with difficulty made to believe that it is a hard task to suppress the Akalis and that the continuance of the struggle instead of being useful will prove injurious to its interests. The Agra Akhbar, on the other hand, asserts that the Akalis by their unlawful and oppressive actions have greatly harassed the authorities, the Hindus and the Musalmans. They have brought the charge of firing against the Nabha authorities simply to strengthen their agitation. The statement of Mr. Zimand, the American correspondent, is far from truth and no just-minded person can help describing it as ridiculous and one-sided. The Kartavya says that if the Punjab Government will effect a compromise with the Akalis it will not only save itself from a serious trouble but will deserve the gratitude of the whole country. If the Punjab Government will only set aside its false pride it will find no difficulty in solving the Akali problem.

The Reforms.

The Swadhin says that since the toy of Reforms has been given to Indians the cost of administration has greatly increased without any corresponding gain to the people. The expenditure on various committees and commissions since the Reforms has been a mere waste inasmuch as no effect has so far been given to their recommendations.

Civil disobedience.

The Vartman writes: Can any Indian believe that England which is selling its honour and principles for the sake of imperialism will ever confer such freedom on India as will cause economic or political injury to itself. Why then should the Indians be so patient? We cannot do for a moment without freedom. Satyagraha is the most suitable weapon for its attainment. Let the Indians get up and win freedom at the cost of their lives.

Proposed legislation.

The Kartavya condemns Dr. Gour's Bill in the Legislative Assembly raising the age of consent to 14 years as wholly opposed to the Hindu religion and exhorts the Hindus to oppose it vigorously. It warns the Government also against accepting the Bill and urges that it should prohibit even the introduction of such measures in the Assembly. The Hind-i-Kesari is opposed to the Leave of Absence Bill and says that if passed it will add to the financial burdens of India. In view of this the retrenchment policy of the Government is a mere farce. The high officials for whose good this Bill is being passed are provided all possible facilities at the cost of lakhs of rupees for the preservation of their health and if they cannot do without leave, they had better retire permanently. The Abhyudaya urges the kisans of the Agra province to carry on a vigorous agitation to get the defects in the Agra Tenancy Act removed.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Abhyudaya says that by requesting Mahatma Gandhi to become a Musalman Maulana Hasan Nizami has insulted the Mahatma's intelligence, if not the Mahatma himself. We do not know what is the motive behind the Maulana's request and how could he venture to make such an impudent request. The Kartavya opines that the Maulana's letter is full of meanness, impudence, hypocrisy and diplomacy and represents a reprehensible attempt to destroy the cosmopolitan character of the Mahatma's personality. It is a characteristic of Islam that such bad ideas originate in the minds of Muslim leaders.

The Universities' Conference.

Commenting on the Viceroy's speech at the Universities' Conference the Pioneer says: It was an invigorating idea of the functions of a University that Lord Reading held up before his audience for their contemplation. It particularly appreciates His Excellency's expression, 'extend the Empire of Reason in India until it is coterminous with the Empire of India itself' because in India sentiment is predominant: reason is at a discount. The claims of sentiment are too strong for the claims of reason. It hopes the Universities' Conference at Simla will devise a satisfactory solution. But the odds are that sentimentality, allied to prejudice, will be too strong for them, and that the popular predilection for a cheap and worthless degree and for easy examinations will continue to militate against any attempt to transform the Indian University degree into a reliable hall-mark of learning and culture. The Leader styles the Viceroy's address as eloquent and says: Much can be achieved by combined effort and by the pursuit of right ideals, but we are afraid that unless Government is prepared to spend more on education, substantial results cannot be achieved. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the inaugural address of Lord Reading is well worth the occasion. When some of the English universities fall short of the standard it is unnecessary to say anything of Indian universities, poor imitators of the West. Thus any stigma cast on the universities in India is an insult directed towards the West. Anyhow the condition of Indian universities is far from satisfactory and it would take a number of years to attain to that idealistic perfection and several Newmans will have to be born here.

The Swaraj party.

The Leader continues to attack the methods of the Swaraj party. In a leading article headed "Quick change artists," it says that the Swaraj party is a shifting entity. So many times have they changed since the inception of their party after they raised the banner of revolt against the Gandhian policy at Gaya, that one may well ask whether they have any principles at all or whether they only live from hand to mouth, trusting to the hourly changes of the political weathercock to supply them with both principles and policies. The Advocate replying to the article says that the Leader has never missed any opportunity to attack the non-co-operation movement, but its arguments and criticisms have been mostly puerile and devoid of the logic of commonsense. In another article the Advocate says that the Swarajists have, purely by means of a constitutional method, brought about a situation in which the bureaucracy cannot but move forward towards devolution of its powers to the people of India. It advises the Labour Government in England to take courage into both hands and listen to the advice of the national leaders of India rather than to that of the irresponsible and die-hard bureaucracy.

Forest administration in Kumaun.

The Shakti asserts that the forest policy of the Government is indeed a very peculiar one seeing that while one day villagers are allowed to sell firewood from forests the other day it is declared to be a punishable crime. It urges that if the forests belong to the people they should be administered by themselves and not by fat-salaried officials. The forests should be for the people and not the people for them. The forest officials oppress the people even more than patwaris and peshkars. The forests may well be preserved but not at the expense of human beings.

Political propaganda.

In a leading article headed "The British Trusteeship" the Leader remarks: Reason, justice and commonsense, let alone the principles of liberty and self-determination, urgently require that the existing extremely unsatisfactory and irritating system of government in India be put an end to and Indians allowed to manage their own affairs. The Najat says that after closely studying the trend of events and pondering over the popular opinion the conjecture of a British Member of Parliament that England will lose India as it has lost America, Ireland and Egypt does not appear unjustified. The suspicions of the Indians against the ruling party have now reached their limit. The Hamdam lays stress upon the necessity of again starting a propaganda in England in favour of India as her enemies are taking advantage of the ignorance of the English public regarding Indian affairs and are trying to create misunderstandings against India. A powerful organ is needed to supply correct information and lay bare the real facts before the British public. The Hindustani writes: Will coercion and oppression be always effective and can any Government, however strong and firm its system of administration may be, exist for long without the good will and the consent of the people? Our countrymen should never slacken their struggle and one day the Government will have to come to its knees and listen to our voice provided we learnt to stand on our own legs. The Aj condemns the opium policy of the Government of India and remarks that by encouraging the consumption of opium the Government of India is ruining our countrymen and other Asiatic nations and it utilises the proceeds derived from its traffic in perpetuating their political dependence. It is the duty of the Indians to start a vigorous but peaceful agitation to put an end to the sinful opium traffic. The Pratap writes: Although we are constantly fighting among ourselves and are bound with the chains of subjection, we are not prepared to applaud our conquerors in all respects and to condemn ourselves altogether. Nor do we hold that our future is in the hands of our rulers and that we have to follow the path laid down for us by them: we have come to realise that one country cannot be the arbiter of another's destiny. If it is the will of God that India should be free no one can keep her in serfdom. The Haldhar remarks that the new anti-Japanese legislation of the United States is a covert challenge to the whole of India. All the Asiatic nations should give a united answer to this challenge. It has become customary with the Western nations to insult and humiliate the Eastern nations. If all the Asiatic nations form themselves into a league and if the latter undertakes to help every Asiatic nation in the hour of need, the Western nations will cease to do injustice to Asia. Commenting on the acquittal by the Bombay High Court of one Walker charged with murdering an Indian, the Prem says that India has been witnessing such farces of justice from the very early days of British rule in India. She is quite fed up with such farces enacted by Governor Generals from Lord Clive downwards to Lord Reading and she only prays to be spared such samples of justice in future.

The Lee Commission Report.

THE Pioneer describes the report as essentially a compromise which should be welcomed by moderate opinion both in the services and among Indian politicians. It gives the British official much, though not all that was claimed on his behalf by his Service Associations. The paper urges that the recommendations being unanimous there can be no valid reason for delay in putting them into operation. In another article the paper says that the Home Member did well to remind the members of the Legislative Assembly that it should be necessary for the Secretary of State to take decisions on matters of urgency in advance of any discussion by the Assembly and remarks that there is no longer any reason for further delay in redressing the grievances of the services, and it is to be hoped that the Secretary of State will pass immediate orders. Any delay would naturally give rise to suspicions that an attempt may be made to whittle down the Commission's recommendations for the financial relief of the services and would be bound to react prejudicially on recruitment, which has already been virtually brought to a standstill. The services look to the Secretary of State for prompt action on the report as a matter of bare justice, and we do not think that they will look to him in vain. The Indian press, on the other hand, is unanimous in condemning the report as unsatisfactory. The Leader remarks that the Commission has resulted in the further imposition of a heavy burden on the hard-pressed Indian tax-payer to satisfy the clamour of the superior services and to make them contented. Its recommendation in this respect must be regarded as very unsatisfactory. The recommendations relating to the Indianisation of the Indian Civil Service and the Police are extremely cautious and are incompatible with the early establishment of responsible self-government. The paper concludes its criticism in the following words:—Though some of the recommendations mark an improvement over the existing state of affairs, they are not such as can satisfy nationalist sentiment or will be compatible with substantial constitutional advance in the near future. In fact if they are accepted they will be a serious obstacle in the way and only prolong the agony. We still hold the view that the question of the organisation of higher services should be considered along with that of constitutional advance, as the two are inseparable. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that the report will convince one that it is predominantly a service report, though of course a few crumbs are thrown here and there perhaps to silence and satisfy the Indian members. This, we are afraid, is an attempt to throw another apple of discord among Indians instead of reconciling them. Unless the Government make drastic amendments in the light of public criticism, India will only be poorer by the Lee Commission. The Hamdam says that the recommendations of the Lee Commission will not produce any commotion in India which has already witnessed so many Royal Commissions and their recommendations. Considering the expenditure on the Commission, poor India is not benefited by it in the least. Whether the Indians get enough to eat or not the Commission has provided on a lavish scale for the services. It urges upon Government not to take any action until it has been fully considered by the Indian public. The Oudh Akhbar regrets that in spite of the hue and cry raised by the Indians, the Lee Commission has presented an unsatisfactory and depressing report. With regard to the recommendations that action should be taken promptly, the paper sarcastically remarks that it is no use delaying the action when it is decided to rob India. The relief proposed by the Commission is mainly for the benefit of Europeans, and Indians can never be satisfied with it. The Aj remarks that the report has turned out to be more terrible than was anticipated and is designed to make the nation a slave of its own servants. It is directed to flout Indian public opinion and make the officials the irresponsible and despotic masters of the country for ever. It is the best means of practically nullifying the pledge of the British Government to confer swaraj on India. The recommendation of the Commission that the Ministers are not to have any control over the officials of the all-India services under them, boils our blood and it would be astonishing if any one in India supports it.

The Khilafat.

A correspondent writing in the Hamdam deals with the Khilafat question from the Turkish standpoint and remarks that those who condemn the decision of the Angora Assembly should first try to understand the present constitution of the Turkish Republic. To act upon the suggestion of the Indian Muslims was tantamount to taking such financial responsibilities as were quite beyond their capacity. If the Muslim world is desirous of placing the Khilafat institution on a basis in which they may have a right to be consulted then they should chalk out a practical scheme and defray the costs of its establishment according to their share. The Haqiqat publishes the statement of the deposed Khalifa Abdul Majid made to a correspondent of the Al Akhbar of Egypt in which it is remarked: The Turks have rebelled against God, His Prophet and the Quran and have broken their pledges. There is every hope that the Khilafat will become a more powerful institution as it will now come into the hands of the people. The Mansur reproduces the letter of Maulana Fazlur Rahman of Patna in which it is remarked that the Khalifa is the designation of the head of the Muslim Republic and hence Mustafa Kemal Pasha is in every sense of the word a Khalifa. He will not hesitate to accept the office provided the Muslim world promises to give him practical and material help. The Paigham asserts that the present Turkish constitution is quite in keeping with the Shariat but the Musalmans have opposed it without due deliberation simply because they are the neighbours of a nation which has been leading a life of slavery from a long time.

Indians in the Colonies.

In a leading article headed 'Indians in the Empire' the Independence says: If the people of India take the same line of thinking in regard to European civilisation and contact with European races as these Colonials take of Indian civilisation and contact with Indian people, what will be the fate, ultimately, of the association of many races which is now called the British Empire. If the Empire is to endure, it must settle betimes these ugly questions. And in the settlement of this question irresistible pressure must be brought to bear upon the Government of India to adopt retaliatory measures not only in the matter of immigration, but also in the matter of trade facilities against those Colonies which behave in the way that South Africa or East Africa is doing. In another article the paper says: The conditions in British Guiana, not to mention Fiji, are not such as to remove all misgivings, and if emigration be encouraged now, repentance will be unavailing afterwards.

Constitutional advance.

The Leader quotes from an article written by Mr. Gwynne who advocates the early appointment of a Royal Commission, and remarks: If such a Commission had been promised during the last debate in the Assembly on constitutional advance, the wind would have been taken out of the Swarajist sail and the Finance Bill would not have been rejected. But the Government has not been in the habit of doing things in time. Hence it allowed a valuable opportunity to slip away. Even now it is not too late to make the announcement in a graceful manner. The Hind Jadid expresses its surprise that the Indian deputation which is to wait on Mr. Ramsay MacDonald does not include Lala Lajpat Rai and remarks that if the Premier is really desirous of coming to an understanding with the Indians he should invite Mahatma Gandhi and Maulana Muhammad Ali as they are the only leaders who command the confidence of the Indians and who can correctly voice the sentiments of the people.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Medina describes the deeply-rooted religious bigotry as the real cause of the Hindu-Muslim disturbances and is at a loss to understand how the Hindus whose dharma teaches ahinsa (non-violence) can tolerate the bloodshed of their countrymen for the sake of the cow. The Musalmans can allow the Hindus to play on musical instruments before the mosques but they can never barter cow-slaughter with the stoppage of music before the mosques as proposed by Mr. Gandhi. Writing in a similar strain the Al Bureed accuses the Muslim leaders of strengthening and supporting the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements by failing to properly carry out the commandments of Islam simply for the sake of unity and remarks that in every disputed case the Musalmans showed a spirit of toleration and sacrifice and the Hindus never failed to take advantage of it. It is quite a wrong reasoning of Mr. Gandhi that the Hindus should stop playing on musical instruments before the mosques and the Musalmans should cease to slaughter cows and the Musalmans are themselves responsible for putting the question of cow-slaughter before the Hindus in a wrong form. The Haqiqat describes the educational backwardness of the country as the sole cause of disunion. The Mashriq remarks that the declarations recently made by the Arya Samajists go to prove that this year's Bakr Id will be the repetition of the incidents at Karbala and that the Musalmans will have to pass through a serious ordeal. There is almost a unanimous outcry in the Hindu press against the alleged forcible abduction of Hindu women and children on the part of Muhammadans for conversion to Islam and it has led to the publication of exhortations to the Hindus to reconcentrate their attention on the Sangathan movement. One Ratanvati Debi of Allahabad writing in the Arya Mitra warns Hindu women to be on their guard against the designing and unscrupulous disciples of Khwaja Hasan Nizami who appear to be bent on ruining them and to be ready to punish those who attempt outrages on them. The Surya says that as a result of the activities of Muhammadans to convert Hindu women and boys to Islam in an objectionable manner the relations between the two communities are getting more and more strained. The Hindu leaders should give up their lethargy and devote themselves to the organisation of their community, while the Muhammadan leaders should restrain the rowdy element of their community from forcibly abducting Hindu women and children. The Prem points out that far from relations between Hindus and Muhammadans being established on a harmonious footing they are being embittered by the scheme of Khwaja Hasan Nizami for the conversion of Hindus being enforced in a most objectionable manner. The forcible abduction of Hindu women and boys for purposes of conversion has become a feature of the times in almost all the provinces. Responsible Muhammadan leaders should stop such activities in the interests of the country. The Hindu Maha Sabha too should raise corps of Hindu volunteers to put an end to these atrocities. The Lokmanya twits the Hindus on their patience and forbearance in putting up with the outrages of Muhammadans against their women and temples and says that it is meaningless that their love of peace should deaden all religious, communal and personal feeling. They should proclaim with one voice that they are Hindus first and Indians afterwards. They should no longer remain indifferent to the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements and learn to sacrifice their all for the sake of religion. The Bhavishya urges that in order to place Hindu-Muslim unity on a satisfactory basis all the Indian Musalmans should abandon cow-slaughter and consumption of beef, while the Hindus should refrain from taking out religious processions in case the Hindu festivals coincide with the Muhammadan ones. The Abhyudaya says that by his letter to Mahatma Gandhi inviting him to become a Musalman Khwaja Hasan Nizami has not only acted impudently but has also insulted the Mahatma. We want to know whether the Muslim leaders are prepared to condemn the Khwaja Sahib or not, because if such absurd things are not stopped at the very outset they assume a serious aspect later on.

The Muslim League.

The Pioneer describes Mr. Jinnah's presidential address at the Lahore session of the All-India Moslem League as stereotyped. With regard to the demand for the immediate establishment of Dominion responsible government in India, the paper says that this demand would carry greater weight if it could be shown that the Indian Legislatures had fully realised and utilised their existing powers under the Government of India Act. The surprising thing is that any man can proclaim in one breath that Hindu-Moslem unity and the removal of untouchability are vital for the attainment of swaraj, and in the next put forward a demand for the immediate grant of full Dominion status for India. The Leader says that if the revival of the League leads to the deposition of the priest in politics it will make the task of the settlement of communal differences easier. With regard to the resolution on the representation of minorities the paper says: The wisest policy at the present juncture is not to disturb the Lucknow Pact. The Hindus are much more self-conscious and better organised at present than they were in 1916 and nothing but a bitter controversy is likely to result if the Muslims, not content with what they have got, put up their claims and demand more from the Hindus. The Indian Daily Telegraph praises Mr. Jinnah for his indefatigable efforts at reviving the Moslem League into a living political body. Mr. Jinnah's presidential address gives a definite understanding that the new Moslem League will exert itself to the utmost to bridge the communal gulf, which is, unfortunately, already too wide to engulf India's destiny. His earnest appeal for Hindu-Muslim unity burns with patriotism which is the ideal to which he ever lived.

The Tariff Bill.

The Pioneer is dissatisfied with the debate on the Tariff Bill and says: The remedy proposed by the Government is, however, open to grave criticism, and the speeches made at Simla on Tuesday can only be regarded as confirming the view that in the Tariff Bill the Government are sponsoring a measure which is likely to have a disastrous effect on the economic development of India. The Aj remarks that the free trade policy has impoverished India and the Indians will naturally support the protectionist policy. It does not matter if we have to pay Re. 1-4-0 to one of our own brethren in consequence of the adoption of the policy of protection but we shall never pay Re. 1 to those who hate us, who subject us to indignities in their Dominions and who consider us as inferior to themselves. This may be wrong from an economic point of view but we want to be guided only by political considerations.

Restoration of Berar.

The Mashriq regrets that in spite of so many concessions granted to the Hindus by the Nizam the Hindu press is vehemently opposing the restoration of Berar and remarks that it is a question between a Native State and the Government of India and does not admit of a plebiscite. When the people's opinion was not taken when Berar was ceded to the British Government why then should it be made a condition precedent to its restoration?

The Begum of Bhopal.

The Hindustan Times expresses its indignation that the Hindus are preparing to start satyagraha and remarks that the order of the Begum is quite in keeping with the injunction of Islam. Hindu law is observed in the Hindu States where cow-slaughter is a crime punishable with death, but the Musalmans have never protested against such orders. The Begum of Bhopal's order penalising renegation from Islam continues to be severely criticised in the Hindu press. The Lokmanya regrets that the Muhammadan leaders who harp so much on the discordant note of Hindu-Muslim unity have not so far raised their voice of protest against the most arbitrary, the most unjust, and the most insulting order of a Muslim ruler. It asks whether the Begum of Bhopal has realised the consequences of her Islamic bigotry if the Hindu princes were to issue similar orders in their States. It will be well if Her Highness recovers her mental balance even now. The Arya Mitra remarks that this order reminds one of the days of slavery in olden times and is nothing but a veiled attempt to interfere with the Shuddhi movement. The Hindus in the Bhopal State are in serious trouble owing to the spirit of religious intolerance obtaining there. Innumerable Hindus have already been converted to Islam there by objectionable means and many Hindu women have been led astray. Will no Muhammadan leader raise his voice of protest against such unjust dealings of the Bhopal State? The Anand describes the order as wholly indefensible on moral and political grounds and remarks that it is a tangible example of religious bigotry that while no action is taken against those who forcibly convert Hindus to Islam the converted is to be punished if he seeks readmission into Hindusim. The paper wonders why the Government of India does not take steps to get this order rescinded as interfering with the policy of religious neutrality.

Demolition of mosques at Bharatpur.

The Mansur remarks that it is the duty of the Government of India to interfere in this matter and to make the Maharaja understand that to demolish the religious buildings of the Musalmans or to defile them means that he is digging his grave with his own hands.

The Swaraj party and Mr. Gandhi.

Commenting on the statement of the policy of the Swarajists the Pioneer says: Mr. Gandhi has changed very little: his sense of the practical has not been developed during his retirement and he still aims at revolution although he lays more stress than before on the conditions to be established before revolution can be made a live issue. The truth is that the divergence of view between him and the Swarajists is increasing. Mr. C. R. Das, and Pandit Moti Lal Nehru are plainly in a quandary. It is pathetic to think that they are drifting with their followers into the stream leading to cooperation. The Leader is jubilant over the difference of opinion between Mr. Gandhi and the Swaraj party and says that both parties have appreciably climbed down. It calls the incident a definite victory for the constitutionalists. When we turn to the Swarajist statement we find that, in spite of the brave words used, the climb-down has been much greater than in the case of Mr. Gandhi. The paper asks the Swarajists how can they distinguish themselves from other progressive constitutionalists who entered the Councils with a view to build up national strength by working the Reforms. The modified policy of the Swarajists appears to us to be more ludicrous than their original policy. With non-cooperation on their lips their policy has been increasingly cooperative. Rightly have they been described as quick-change artists. In another article headed " Swarajists and Liberals " the Leader says that the Swarajists have altered their policies with wonderful rapidity and as the futility of one method after another employed by them has been demonstrated, they have gone on changing those methods with the same facility with which one changes one's clothes from day to day. They are no longer non-cooperators and followers of Mr. Gandhi. Referring to the recent decision of the Central Provinces Swarajists the paper says that the party is covering itself with ridicule by its constant shifting of ground and by the puerile explanations offered in support of the same. At another place the paper asks: If the quest for effective non-cooperation from within has brought the Swarajists to agree to serve on select committees in a period of seven months, in how many more months will they be persuaded to agree to non-cooperate from a still more inner circle by the acceptance of offices? The Aj remarks that the existence of a fundamental difference of opinion between Mahatma Gandhi and the Swarajist leaders is most regrettable but it is gratifying that this difference of opinion has been expressed by both the parties in a very amicable manner. If both the parties work out their respective programmes side by side and in a harmonious spirit the country will not have to suffer much injury.. In another article the same paper says that when the No-change party and the Swaraj party can remain within the Congress despite a fundamental difference between them, there is no reason why the Independents and Liberals should keep themselves aloof from it. The same paper commenting on Mahatma Gandhi's protest against the resolution of the Congress regarding the boycott of British goods, points out that Mahatma Gandhi's ideal is too high and ignores practical considerations. So long as those who rule over us do not deal justly by us the desire to boycott them may smack of a retaliatory spirit but is not unnatural. In yet another article it remarks that obstruction in the Councils and the boycott of Empire goods may smack of retaliation and may therefore offend against the ideal of non-violence yet they are all right in practical politics. Our goal is freedom and not ahinsa (non-violence). We can make necessary changes in the methods we have adopted for the attainment of this goal. Commenting on Mr. Gandhi's statement in which he has expressed his intention of retiring from the political life the Al Khalil observes: It appears that the present situation has fully disappointed him. His great movement has failed and he finds it impossible to revive it. Such an opinion expressed by such a resolute and firm-minded man depicts very well the future of India and shows that the rays of hope are now so small that they can be seen only through a microscope. The Oudh Akhbar does not believe that Mr. Gandhi will like to leave the nation in the lurch at a time when there is question of life and death for it. It further remarks that the Indians should also refrain from doing anything which may so disappoint Mahatmaji as to shirk the leadership of a disobedient nation. The Medina differs from the views expressed by Mr. Gandhi regarding the boycott of British goods and remarks that the right exercise of anger is a necessary element of human nature and that it is quite in keeping with human nature to express indignation and hatred against the coercive and repressive policy of Great Britain.

Civil disobedience.

The Vartman applauds the decision of the Gujrat Conference to fulfil the constructive programme and remarks that the preparations of the Gujrat people show that mass satyagraha will undoubtedly be practised in Gujrat this year. The workers in other parts of the country should follow the lead given by Gujrat and once again create that enthusiasm which prevailed in the non-cooperation days. The previous agitation removed the fear of jail from the minds of the people and let this agitation remove the fear of death. The Haldhar remarks that if the Swaraj party really wants to secure swaraj it will have to carry a no-tax campaign for which the organisation of the kisans is indispensable. We must remember the words of the English poet who said: This world is not for beggars but for those who struggle, fight and conquer.

Bolshevism.

The Independence asserts that Bolshevism has been a success because it has kindled a hope—and a mighty hope—in the minds of the masses. The soundness of some of the Bolshevik principles has been generally recognised and a new policy is being introduced. The Hindustani says that the selfish policy of the Kings and the members of their Government is responsible for the spread of Bolshevism throughout the world.

If the capitalists and those who had the reins of the Government in their hands had not tried before the war to drain the wealth of the country and leave the people to die of starvation then anti-imperialism and anti-capitalism (now described as Bolshevism) would not have seen the light of day. The wrath of God descends on that Government the people of which are dissatisfied and displeased with their rulers. The Haqiqat observes that the responsibility for the spread of Bolshevism in Europe is not chiefly on Russia but in reality on the Allies who imposed very hard terms on Austria and Germany with the result that the labouring classes of these countries were suddenly plunged into deepest misery.

The Cawnpore Conspiracy case.

The Indian World says: It was all but expected that the four accused in the Bolshevik case would be condemned by the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore. The whole outlook in India requires a thorough change and such charges on such imaginary agitations and conspiracies well show to what extent the British mentality blunders on fanciful scares. The stone wall partition that has been built between the rulers and the ruled is mainly responsible for such misunderstandings between the two communities. Treatment like this towards four young men from the four corners of India intensify the volume of disaffection in the country, and the prestige of British justice is gradually being lowered in the estimation of the public. The Vartman says that the sentences in the Cawnpore Bolshevik Conspiracy case are not only terrible but most unsatisfactory and likely to create excitement. The delay in the Viceroy replying to the petitions of the accused for transfer of the case to another court as they had no confidence in the impartiality of Mr. Holmes is interpreted by the paper as being nothing else than a conspiracy of the bureaucracy against the accused. To us the charge of conspiracy, says the paper, appears to be quite baseless. The capitalistic bureaucracy does not wish that socialism should be preached in this country but can the diffusion of knowledge and light be prevented in this manner? The Aj argues that the accused cannot be held to be conspirators or to have formed a conspiracy and remarks that the decision of the Sessions Judge is a mere example of miscarriage of justice which should be rectified.

U. P. municipalities.

The Aj complains of paucity of funds in the municipalities of the United Provinces and remarks that as long as the existing administration of the country remains top-heavy all the money of the people will be spent on its maintenance leaving nothing for works of public utility.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Oudh Akhbar draws special attention towards the Committee's recommendation regarding the ejectment of defaulting tenants after giving them 15 days' notice and advises them to pay due regard to the difficulties of the tenants and to abstain from ejecting them on trifling grounds. They should not exercise their powers under the new Act in such a way as to cause unrest among the tenants or to cast a baneful effect upon their relations with the tenants. One Balkrishna writing in the Aj asks the kisans of the Agra province to express their grievances in respect of the Tenancy Act in view of the proposed legislation to amend it and start an agitation for its removal.

Native States.

One Govind Narayan writing to the Bhavishya asks the Indian Chiefs to wake up and try to remove the grievances of their subjects before any serious agitation is started by the latter. They should have nothing to do with Western civilisation and patronise national dress and language. They should pay heed to the following warning which was given them by "Raja" Mahendra Pratap through an open letter sent by him from Germany:—You know that your foreign Government is not stronger than the Kaiser of Germany and Austria and the Czar of Russia, but the Kaiser fled and the Czar was murdered and the merchants lost their all in Russia. Your brothers are going forward if you do not cooperate with them the same will happen to you. The Swadesh remarks that if the rumour that the Maharaja of Jhind has been forced to proceed to England and that he will never return to India be true no protest against this autocratic action of the Government can be too strong and urges that the Government of India should at once clear its position in the matter, if it wants to avoid an agitation in this connection.

The Lee Commission Report.

WITH the exception of the Pioneer which supports the recommendations of the Lee Commission and urges their being carried into effect without delay, the press is united in condemning the report as unsatisfactory. The Pioneer considers it to be a treaty between two parties who have each honourably agreed to forgo even demands which they consider reasonable in order to arrive at a unanimous finding and says that the sooner the Government make it known that they intend to stand by the report as a whole, the better will be the chance of securing that alleviation of Service dissatisfaction and political tension at which the Commission aimed. Referring to these remarks the Leader asks: What is this treaty? Who authorised the members of the Commission to act as plenipotentiaries, and on whose behalf? The Anglo-Indian papers find it less easy to look beyond their nose and see whither their interested arguments lead. It is true now, as ever it was, that the greatest props of Indian extremism are the majority of the Anglo-Indian papers. In another article the same paper says: The sooner these untrustworthy friends realise that educated Indians are not children to be toyed with or frightened but are men equipped with knowledge and endowed with the faculty of thinking, the more they will avoid writings suffused over by the spirit of condescension and extremely frugal of arguments. We are sure educated Indians as a whole will firmly stand by their own well-considered policy without being discouraged by the regrettable lapse of the four Indian members of the Commission or tempted by the alluring suggestions of papers to be practical or reasonable. At another place the paper says: It is unfortunate—this very circumstance is no credit to England—that Indian opinion is still without the power to make its point of view prevail. But it will make that point unmistakably clear, and the one certain consequence of disregard of it by the British Government will be a further alienation between the Indians and the British. The Advocate considers the recommendations of the Commission totally opposed to public opinion and sarcastically remarks that the "steel frame" must be strengthened and preserved, for on it depends the safety and tranquillity in India. The Indian tax-payer is to meet this extra burden for the sake of the contentment of the English officers serving in India. According to the Hamdam the recommendations of the Commission are highly disappointing and unacceptable in every way. The Indian members of the Central Legislature ought to exert themselves to their utmost to oppose the passage of these recommendations into law unless they are radically changed. If in spite of all opposition and obstruction the recommendations are forcibly thrust upon India, like the Rowlatt Act, the members should unite with the Swarajists and adopt a wholly destructive programme. The Medina writes: The cunning players of Europe make all kinds of moves on the chess-board of politics. The British Government has attained perfection in the game. On every occasion a net of deception is spread to subjugate weak nations and strengthen the lust for territorial acquisitions. The nations of the East have become thoroughly aware of Britain's stratagems and are exerting themselves to get rid of its deceitful tactics. It is possible to counteract the magic spell of the ruling sorcerers, but when cunning and ruling tactics are both to be found in a single Power it is beyond the might of an oppressed and subject-nation like India to succeed against them. The enhancement of the salaries, allowances, bonus, etc., of the English members of the services will throw an additional financial burden on India. The Aj considers the report of the Lee Commission as extremely disappointing and remarks that it had never before come across a report like this which is so directly calculated to injure the interests of the public and promote those of the officials. In no other country in the world do the officials enjoy such facilities and privileges as have been recommended by the Lee Commission. The report is in effect a gross insult to public opinion and constitutes a mean and crooked attempt to place the officials of the all-India services over the heads of the representatives of the people. The same paper in another article exhorts the members of the Legislative Assembly to reject the report and urge the immediate grant of swaraj. We are not unaware, says the paper, that the recommendations of the Commission will be brought into operation even if they are rejected by the Assembly. We have urged rejection because by doing so the Indians will be saved from the sin of tightening the bonds of India's dependence. Indeed, it is political suicide to support any proposal which may tend to free the bureaucracy from the control of public opinion.

The Khilafat.

The Naiyar-i-Azam reproduces the views of an Egyptian scholar who says that the Khilafat is the very keystone of the national life of the Muslims and is their instrument to overawe their enemies. Its abolition is tantamount to committing suicide. If there is no reasonable ground for depriving Abdul Majid of the Khilafat he should continue to be regarded as the lawful Khalifa. Commenting upon the statement of Maulana Shaukat Ali recently published at Bombay the Hamdam remarks that the Central Khilafat Committee will render a most important service to Islam if it succeeds through its deputation in making the party in power at present in Turkey accept anew the responsibilities of the Khilafat. It is a religious duty of the Musalmans to emancipate the Jazirat-ul-Arab from non-Muslim domination, and as the greater portion of it is in the possession and occupation of Great Britain, Maulana Shaukat Ali is right in remarking in his letter to Mr. Shueb that the only method to achieve the end is non-cooperation and civil disobedience. Non-cooperation and civil disobedience are surely powerful weapons provided they are wielded simultaneously throughout the whole country, but besides this it is necessary for the emancipation of Arabia that the Arabs themselves should be made to cooperate to achieve that end. Maulana Shaukat Ali has correctly voiced the sentiments of true Musalmans regarding the Shariff's Khilafat who can never acknowledge the ally of the enemies of Islam as their Khalifa.

Constitutional advance.

In commenting on the condition of municipal roads in the United Provinces the Pioneer remarks: The inefficiency of municipalities in India, in which Swarajist principles have had free play for some time past, can hardly be said to furnish convincing arguments as to the fitness of Indians for complete self-government in the provinces, still less in the Central Legislature. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the terms of reference of the Reforms Inquiry Committee are exceedingly narrow. And it is now clear that the Government of India do not want to consider any change for real progress that may involve a recasting of any portion of the Act. The Leader remarks: There is a growing number of people who have come to believe that swaraj can never be won by the willing consent of those who have constituted themselves their trustees and are unwilling to part with power. Lord Olivier would do well if he tells India what exactly he proposes to do, how far he is prepared to go in the present. Let us know where he stands and where we should stand in relation to him. So far he has been beating about the bush and creating an impression of his ignorance of men and things Indian. The Surya is utterly dissatisfied with the manner in which meetings of the Reforms Inquiry Committee are being held in camera at Simla and says that the Liberals are first of all adopting all constitutional means, including a deputation to England, to compel the British people to grant swaraj to India and if they fail to achieve their object they will appeal to the civilised opinion of the world laying before it the doings of the British and will then follow the same methods as were adopted by the English themselves in securing their liberty.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on Mr. Gandhi's statement on the Hindu-Muslim relations the Advocate says: His views on the thorny question of Hindu-Muslim tension are characterised by impartiality and straightforwardness and the remedies which he suggests are different on vital points from those contained in the draft Hindu-Muslim Pact drawn up by Mr. C. R. Das. The question of Hindu-Muslim unity is of the highest national importance and in this matter neither a policy of drift nor of premature haste should be followed. One Mr. Shauq Qidwai in an open letter in the Mashriq takes Mr. Gandhi to task for meddling in the purely Islamic question of the Khilafat. He is further accused of deceiving the Musalmans and using them as tools for the establishment of the Hindu instead of the English raj. The writer opines that Hindu-Muslim unity is an impossibility and Musalmans have nothing to gain if Dominion self-government is granted to India as in that case the Hindus on account of their majority will have greater political powers. As expressed by Maulana Hasrat Mohani the Muslims want complete independence because in that case the Musalmans of the frontier and Afghanistan will be able to protect their Indian brethren from the tyrannies of the Hindus. Mr. Gandhi has caused immense misery in the country through his non-cooperation movement. The Anand notes with regret that though the Musalmans are adopting various means, fair and foul, to ruin the Hindus, the latter are quite indifferent to the situation and take no counter-measures for their self-protection. It exhorts the Hindus to reconcentrate their attention on the organisation of their community, the Shuddhi movement and the uplift of the untouchable classes, if the designs of their opponents are to be frustrated and they are to become a living community.

The Muslim League.

The Hamdam opines that Mr. Jinnah's presidential address at the Lahore session of the All-India Muslim League is most statesmanlike and deserves the earnest consideration of his community and countrymen, specially the portion dealing with Hindu-Muslim unity as the foremost condition for the attainment of swaraj. The Medina lays stress upon the necessity of Muslim organisation and remarks that it is the duty of Jamait-ul-Ulema to carry out the work of the propagation of Islam and to devote its entire attention to the prevention of the renegation of the Musalmans. No other association than the Muslim League can successfully remove the internal difficulties of the Indian Musalmans and safeguard their interests from the onslaughts of their countrymen.

The Tariff Bill.

The Pioneer says that the debate on the Steel Protection Bill provided once more an example of the value to the Swarajists of coming face to face with men who can furnish them with facts and actualities in reply to the extravagant absurdities which on the Congress platform and in the Congress Press have been accepted as the essence of wisdom. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that the proposed tariff, if carried into effect, is one of the biggest blows struck at British industries. Protection should be given to such industries registered in India in rupee capital with a reasonable proportion of Indian Directors in the Board and which provide facilities for training young apprentices. Unless these safeguards are taken protection is sure to bring in greater evil. Foreigners are sure to exploit India at the cost of Indian consumers. According to the Independence the policy of the Government is not protective in the sense in which the word is understood and interpreted in action by any national government. It does not think that the Government will, for instance, protect Indian cloth against foreign cloth because we know that they are not prepared to encourage the Indian manufacturer at the expense of the English manufacturer. That is why we say that the Government have not abandoned their Imperialist policy for a nationalist one. The Swadhin points out that those who oppose the adoption of the protectionist policy on the ground of its hitting the poor hard do so only out of selfish considerations otherwise they would surely have protested against the enhancement of the salt tax which pressed so hard on the poor. It says that when Mahatma Gandhi, than whom there is no greater friend of the poor, has advocated protection, Government can safely legislate for the protection of the Indian industries on the lines of the recommendations of the Tariff Board. The Aj expresses the conviction that protection is indispensable for making India independent and self-contained so far as trade and industry are concerned and hopes that the Tariff Bill will be carefully considered by the Assembly and passed into law notwithstanding the opposition of the European traders.

The Taxation Committee.

The Leader says that the personnel of the Taxation Committee is very unsatisfactory. No equitable system of taxation can be evolved unless data are first ascertained as to the economic condition and the taxable capacity of the people. The appointment of a Taxation Committee ought to have followed and not preceded an economic inquiry. But the cart has been put before the horse. The paper asks: Is this committee a mere formal instrument for recording after the show of an inquiry the decisions and conclusions already arrived at? Grave doubts are being entertained as to the real object of this inquiry and we on our part will not be surprised if it is followed by a tightening of the screw of taxation.

The Swaraj party and Mr. Gandhi.

The Independence remarks: To say that the Congress executive should be divorced from the virile touch of the Swarajists would argue almost as if the great Gandhi himself wished their downfall. The Azad observes that the recent statement of Mr. Gandhi shows that he has climbed down to a great extent. He no more holds the Council entry to be a sin. There is a difference of heaven and earth between the former and the recent statements of the Swaraj party. Very soon the Swarajists will become full-fledged Liberals and this will surely be very beneficial to the country. The Oudh Akhbar publishes a contributed article in which the writer deplores the rupture in the Congress camp and apprehends that Mahatma Gandhi may lose his political position and be recognised only as a religious leader. It is not likely that the Government in India or in England will be influenced by the threats of the Swarajists. On the contrary it is to be feared that their policy may jeopardise the possible gains which the Liberal deputation which has proceeded to England may be able to secure.. The Government too is not right in holding that if a proper propaganda is carried on the people will not vote for the Swarajist candidates in the next elections. The Medina deplores that while the Indians are desirous of emancipating their motherland and of freeing themselves from the heavy chains of slavery, there is lack of unity among the leaders. It is nothing but a sure indication of India's misfortune that its best brains and hearts are not agreed on any one policy. It exhorts the Indians not to indulge in party prejudice but to adopt a policy of mutual toleration and reconciliation and to find means of making India happy and prosperous. The Vartman considers the failure of the Juhu negotiations as most unfortunate to the country and apprehends that the differences between the Swaraj party and Mr. Gandhi are now going to assume a form of permanent cleavage thereby causing a situation which will deal a severe blow to the enthusiasm of the people and react on the resuscitation of the national movement. It remarks that the bureaucracy will not kneel down as long as all the forces of the country are not unitedly directed against it. For ridding the country of the administration of an alien bureaucracy national unity is indispensable, and to secure this end we cannot follow more than one path at one and the same time. The Partap remarks that the Juhu conversations have resulted in placing two separate programmes before the country. There is no doubt a fundamental difference between the view-points of the two parties, but there is nothing on the basis of which they may be called to be antagonistic or opposed to each other. If with the common goal in view both the parties carry on their respective work earnestly and determinedly it will have to be said of them that they are complementary to each other. The Bharat Jiwan says that all talk of a rift in the Congress lute is superfluous, for Mahatma Gandhi will never allow the interests of the country to be jeopardised by mutual dissensions. If the Swarajists succeed in their programme so much the better, otherwise both the Swarajists and the no-changers will join hands to prepare the country for satyagraha. The Bhavishya supports the view of Mr. Gandhi and opposes those of the Swarajist leaders remarking that no other programme except that of Mahatma Gandhi is more beneficial to the interests of the country at the present juncture. The Kurmanchal Mitra remarks that the Swarajists are traitors because on the one hand they attack the Liberals in season and out of season and on the other they are deliberately forsaking the principles of non-cooperation, and by causing a split in the non-cooperation party they are rendering it so weak as to jeopardise the success of Mahatma Gandhi's programme.

Lord Olivier's letter to Mr. Satyamurti.

The Pioneer says: It is difficult to decide which was the greater indiscretion, Lord Olivier's, in writing to Mr. Satyamurti, or Mr. Satyamurti's in publishing the contents of a private letter from the Secretary of State. The plain declaration on the part of the Secretary of State, that His Majesty's Government hitherto had not taken into consideration for a moment the question of any modification of communal representation, should set at rest the misgivings which were naturally aroused among Indian Muhammadans by his indiscreet letter. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: There is nothing new in Lord Olivier's explanation. It was taking a foolishly exaggerated view to say that such exchange of views between the Secretary of State and politicians would place the Viceroy in a false position. The paper is gratified that the Secretary of State has been able to express his conception of the influence and position of the Swarajists in no uncertain terms. The Mashriq says that the disapproval of the Secretary of State of separate communal representation in his letter to Mr. Satyamurti shows that the Government of Lord Reading has not as yet informed him of the Hindu-Muslim tension and of the losses which the Musalmans suffer on account of their minority. Surely it is a misfortune of the country that separate representation has become a necessity. But such a deplorable state of affairs can be ended only when equal rights are granted to both the Hindu and Muslim communities. The letter of the Secretary of State shows that what the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms have failed to accomplish the Labour Cabinet is about to solve and thus create disturbances in the country.

The Bengal Provincial Conference.

Commenting on the resolution in praise of Gopinath Saha, the murderer of Mr. Day, the Pioneer remarks: The support accorded by Mr. C. R. Das and his followers to this preposterous resolution cannot fail to prejudice the Swarajist party in the eyes of the British people and the British Parliament, and may be confidently expected to bring home to them the futility of any attempt to bring about improved contact between the Government and a party whose members acclaim the ideals which actuated a murderer even though they are careful to condemn his crime. The Leader severely condemns the action of the Bengal Provincial Conference in passing this resolution and says that the motive of the crime as distinguished from the crime itself was held up to praise, does not take away from the folly and the impropriety of the resolution. Indeed, irresponsibility could go no further—even among present-day Congressmen. Yet these be the adherents of the creed of Gandhian non-violence.

Refusal of passports.

The Aj protests against the refusal of a passport to Babu Shiva Prasad Gupta of Benares and insinuates that he has been refused a passport because Government dislikes his politics. It remarks that it is extremely callous to place any hindrance in the way of Babu Shiva Prasad as he is going abroad in the interest of the health of his wife. Since the Government of India has been vested with the authority of granting passports it has practically stopped the visiting of foreign countries by Indians. The case of Babu Shiva Prasad should not be allowed to rest where it is and steps must be taken to get this injustice removed. We, Indians, will have to ponder over the consequences of this action of the Government and its inner significance and then decide as to how long we want to remain under such a system of administration of such aliens who think that the good of the country lies in hurting our self-respect and suppressing our freedom every moment.

The Cawnpore Conspiracy case.

The Pratap opines that there was nothing whatsoever in the papers produced on behalf of the Government on the basis of which it could be said that the accused conspired to overthrow His Majesty's Government in India. It remarks that the accused are no doubt the advocates of the principles of Socialism but it in no way means that they want to overthrow His Majesty's Government in India.

The Shia Waqfs Committee.

The Hamdam while welcoming the appointment of a committee to safeguard Shia endowments urges that according to the recommendation of the Provincial Council the Government should soon enforce the new Muslim Waqfs Act in these provinces and should also appoint a committee for the amelioration of the condition of Sunni Waqfs or for the supervision of the Muslim Waqfs it should appoint a committee consisting of the influential and trusted non-officials of both the sects.

Political propaganda.

The Aj remarks that if the Labour Ministry resigns, as is not unlikely, no one in India will shed a tear for it because during their very short régime the Labour Ministers have shown to the Indians that it is futile to expect justice from the British, and that whichever party may be in power in England, India will have to depend on herself for her emancipation. The Vartman insinuates that the open threat of Colonel Gidney to the Governor of the United Provinces and the Government of India that if the Anglo-Indian ticket collectors convicted in the Tundla case were to be whipped by an Indian, all the Anglo-Indians in Government service would resign, was the outcome of the fear on his part that since the Tundla affair had caused great excitement among the Hindus it was not unlikely that they would bribe the executors of the sentence of whipping with a view to get the convicts flogged so severely as may result in their death. It refers to the action taken by the United Provinces Government on the telegram of Colonel Gidney and remarks: If a black were concerned in the matter such a request would probably have been consigned to the waste paper basket and there would have been no change in the administrative procedure; but this case was, if not of the whites, at least of the Anglo-Indians, and as such the face of justice has been blackened by permitting the whipping to be carried out by Anglo-Indians. Many congratulations to the Governor on holding the scales of justice so impartially. The Hindu Kesari publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra

Pratap in the course of which he states: The Amir of Afghanistan is a well-wisher of the freedom of India and under no circumstances does he want to interfere in the internal affairs of this country. It is altogether baseless that the Amir will invade India if there is any revolution therein. The utmost that Afghanistan wants is that the frontier Afghan tribes should be included in that country and that the sea-coast of Baluchistan should be given to it. It does not covet a single inch of Indian soil. If in future Afghanistan under any bad ruler may desire to invade India, it is certain now that Russia will then invade Afghanistan and will never allow it to obtain a footing in India. Hence India should no longer fear an external enemy. Its destiny is now altogether in the hands of its own people.

The Lee Commission.

THE Pioneer is dissatisfied with the attitude adopted by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and other members of the Assembly in the discussion on the Lee Commission Report and says that the Assembly in September will be confronted with the test of its appreciation of the essential qualities of government. The development of Indianisation depends for its success on the retention of European agency. If the Assembly persist in showing itself blind to the realities of a financial position which has been clearly perceived by the European and Indian members of the Commission, it will publish to the world that it is afraid of its responsibilities or at least does not recognise them as such. In another article the paper maintains that the grievances of the Services are real; their redress brooks no delay. The Assembly will certainly do themselves no good with public opinion in Great Britain by any attempt to deny justice to British officials by repudiating the report. Such a "gesture" would be quite ineffective. The Leader entirely agrees with Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya that the political and administrative recommendations of the Lee Commission cannot be separated from the larger subject of progress towards responsible government. It advises the Liberal party organisations in other provinces to meet at an early date and formulate and publish their considered opinions on this most important and equally unsatisfactory report. In another article the paper says: A concerted attempt was being made to stampede Government into acceptance of the Lee Commission Report without giving sufficient time to Indian opinion to examine the far-reaching issues raised by it. To the supporters of the Services' extravagant demands, it is almost incomprehensible why Indians should not go into raptures over the 'compromise' and not only accept the recommendations forthwith and without demur, but consent to give retrospective effect to the financial proposals. We trust the Assembly will give a good account of itself when the report is discussed on the merits in September. The Indian Daily Telegraph is gratified at the decision that no action will be taken until the report is fully considered by the Legislative Assembly in September next. The Haqiqat condemns the Lee Commission Report as wholly disappointing to the Indians and insinuates that the Indian members of the Commission signed the report in utter disregard of the interests of the country to serve their own selfish ends. The Swadhin is dissatisfied with the report and says that in case the recommendations of the Commission are accepted, it will only increase agitation in the country. The Commission's recommendations regarding the Indianisation of Services show that its members hold that India will still take a long time before Dominion self-government is granted to her. The report in effect represents a very unfair compromise between Indians and Europeans and saddles India with a burden which she can ill afford to support in her present financial conditions. The Aj says that the Lee Commission has once more demonstrated that India exists for the Civil Service and not the Civil Service for India. The Abhyudaya remarks that the report not only deprives the children of this country of their bread and gives it away to the foreigners, but it also insults the Indians by attributing to them the charge of unfitness. If the recommendations of the Commission are put to operation the result will be that India will not be able to get freedom before another forty or fifty years to come. In the meantime she will have to starve her children in order to find funds to provide for the increased emoluments of the alien officials with the result that by the time she is granted swaraj she will have become hopelessly insolvent. The Anand remarks that instead of recommending the total abolition of the recruitment of Civilians in England to facilitate the march of India on the path of swaraj the Commission has recommended only 50 per cent. Indianisation of all the Services and thereby delayed the attainment of swaraj by Indians. It expresses the hope that the report will be vigorously opposed in the Legislative Assembly and says that the Government of India will do well to respect Indian opinion in the matter, otherwise the existing unrest will be accentuated and the task of administration rendered difficult. The Swadesh says that while the grievances of the civilians caused by the Reforms have been removed by the Commission we want to know what has been done to relieve the Indians of the crushing burden of taxation which has been their lot in consequence of the inauguration of the Reforms. All that we find is that the Commission has saddled India with an extra burden of one crore and a quarter rupees. The Garhwali remarks that the recommendations of the Commission regarding the Indianisation of Services are marked by narrow-mindedness, illiberality and distrust. Referring to the increases in the emoluments of the Services, it remarks that it is a significant commentary on the bureaucracy in India that while millions of Indians go without even bare necessities of life, more than a crore of rupees are proposed to be spent for providing comforts to the Services. Referring to the additional expenditure proposed by the Commission the paper remarks: This extra imposition has nothing of surprise and strangeness about it when it is remembered that the Indian money is being looted in broad daylight through trade, services, pensions, military expenditure and the location of the gold reserve in England.

The Khilafat.

The Shia College News severely takes to task Mr. Muhammad Ali for using foul epithets against the nationalist Turks and Mustafa Kemal Pasha in connection with the abolition of the Khilafat and praises them as great protectors of Islam. It also accuses Mr. Gandhi of inciting Mr. Muhammad Ali and ridicules his remark that Khilafat depends upon India. The Indians have no capacity to solve any problem and India has nothing to do with the decision of the Khilafat question.

The Mosul Conference.

The Haqiqat observes that there is only one way of an amicable settlement. Each party should display a spirit of tolerance and respect the just demands of the other. Britain cannot strengthen its position in the Middle East without the help and support of the Turks. If the Conference breaks down even for once the Bolshevik leaders of Russia will try to take advantage of the differences between the two parties and make the situation all the more complicated. The creditors of Turkey will also suffer if Britain insists upon the possession of Mosul. The Medina remarks that if the British Government does not render the negotiations successful and does not abide by justice serious unrest will be created in the Muslim world and all the responsibility for it will be with Britain. The Turkish press is well aware of the cunning moves of Britain and openly refuses to submit the Mosul questions to the League of Nations for decision. It is not easy to succeed against the deceitful stratagems of the British, but it is equally difficult for them to withstand the sword of the Turks. The Oudh Akhbar accuses Britain of being unjustly convetous of Mosul. It says that it is needless to remind Sir Percy Cox that the Turks hold the Mosul problem to be a question of life and death with them. If Britain displays a strong attitude against the Turks the latter will retaliate in connection with the debt they owe to the former. The Turks are demanding a territory over which they have a claim both from a racial and a national standpoint.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on the Calcutta riots the Pioneer says: So long as it is possible for baseless rumours to bring about friction and eventually lead to rioting and loss of life, the different communities which go to make up the geographical expression known as India can never be welded into a genuine democracy. Swaraj will come when communal unity has been achieved and untouchability has been removed. Referring to Mr. Gandhi's statement the Leader maintains that in trying to avoid hurting Muslim susceptibilities he has displeased the Hindus who feel that they have been judged harshly while those who are more responsible for the tension have been let off lightly. So the Mahatma, instead of creating a favourable atmosphere for the solution of the difficult and delicate problem, has unintentionally made it more tense. The Medina takes Khwaja Hasan Nizami to task for his book, Dai-e-Islam and observes that he has brought disgrace on the Musalmans who have done nothing to deserve it. The paper complains that although Mr. Gandhi expressed disapproval of the Khwaja's writings he took no notice of Swami Shraddhanand's doings. The Hindustan Times criticises Mr. Muhammad Ali for applauding Mr. Gandhi and says that all Musalmans have come to realise that Maulana Muhammad Ali's policy is very injurious to the Indian Muslims. It lays stress on the Anglo-Muslim unity and warns the Musalmans against the Hindus, who, it asserts, are desirous of establishing a Hindu raj and enslaving the Muhammadans. It opines that if the English are assured of the absolute loyalty of Indian Musalmans the question of the Jazirat-ul-Arab will at once be decided according to the wishes of the latter, as the former are anxious to keep Arabia under their control with the sole object of protecting their rule in India. One Muhammad Murtaza writing in the Agra Akhbar warns the Musalmans not to be duped by selfish congress-wallahs and says that their fate under swaraj can best be imagined, when even now they are compelled to suffer every day miseries at the hands of the Hindus who form a majority. They must thank God that they enjoy every religious and secular liberty under the benign British rule. The Hamdam commends to the attention of both Hindus and Muhammadans Mr. Gandhi's statement on Hindu-Muslim unity and hopes that the Aryas of the Punjab will be so impressed with his arguments that they will no more impede the progress of India by abusing other religions and will stop at the earliest possible moment the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements, which, as remarked by Mr. Gandhi, have most injured the country. The paper does not share Mr. Gandhi's opinion that the present disturbed condition is the forerunner of a calm atmosphere. The Mashriq warns the Musalmans against the attempts of Aryas to swallow them up and exhorts them to devote themselves to the propagation of Islam and not to listen to the Khilafatists who still try to keep them in the dark. The Medina fully agrees with Mr. Gandhi that the immediate cause of the communal disturbances is the lack of realisation on the part of Indians of the true import of non-violence. Mr. Gandhi has rightly remarked that in order to strengthen Hindu-Muslim unity the parties should banish ideas of violence from their minds. The Anand complains how Muhammadan bad characters are being utilised to secure converts among Hindu women and boys to Islam by force or by deceit and urges that meetings should be held in all quarters of cities and other places to put Hindu women and boys on their guard against such unscrupulous persons and to take legal proceedings against them. Although the Abhyudaya would not throw the entire blame for the prevailing communal dissensions on the Musalmans, it finds fault with the Muslim leaders remarking that whenever the Hindus commit the slightest mistake their leaders do not hesitate to condemn them, whereas the Muslim leaders not only view with equanimity the gravest mischief committed by their co-religionists but that the entire Muslim world comes to their aid. It is this attitude of the Musalmans which stands in the way of the Hindu-Muslim unity and swaraj.

The Reforms Inquiry Committee.

The Aj commends the action of Pandit Motilal Nehru in declining to accept the offer of a seat in the Reforms Inquiry Committee and remarks: The proposal to appoint the mover of the Round Table Conference resolution as a member of the Reforms Inquiry Committee could emanate only from the fertile brain of Lord Reading. But Pandit Motilal is too shrewd to be deluded and entrapped by the noble Lord. The examination of the defects in the working of the Government of India Act, which is the sole function of the Inquiry Committee, can be carried on by the officials themselves and does not at all concern the representatives of the people. In another article the same paper sternly takes to task Mr. Jinnah for accepting the offer and remarks that it is surprising that the leader of the Independent Party who supported the Round Table Conference resolution should have agreed to work in the Inquiry Committee which has been appointed by the Government in total defiance of the Round Table Conference resolution. Will Mr. Jinnah and his party be satisfied with merely the removal of the difficulties in the working of the Government of India Act? Does not Mr. Jinnah realise that the Inquiry Committee is but a move on the part of the bureaucracy designed to frustrate the Indian demand for swaraj?

The Swaraj party and Mr. Gandhi.

The Leader forecasts a serious split between Mr. Gandhi and the Swarajists in the near future and remarks: If a split occurs in the Congress, as seems almost unavoidable, and Mr. Gandhi decides to withdraw from it, then it will mean another revolution in the politics and organisation of the Congress and also a further weakening of what is still left of its influence and authority. At another place the paper says: The probability appears to be that either Mr. Gandhi and his no-changers or Messrs. Das and Nehru and their Swarajists will leave the Congress: a dire potentiality that leaves us cold. The Advocate hopes that Mr. Gandhi will take every factor of smooth and efficient Congress work into consideration, before insisting on the Swarajists to clear out of the Congress executives. The Oudh Akhbar publishes a communicated article in which the writer praises Mr. Gandhi for expressing disapproval of the boycott of British goods and expresses the hope that the Swarajists will now refrain from moving their resolutions in the Assembly regarding the boycott of British goods. The writer also expresses gratification that the Swarajists have now begun to soften their attitude towards the Reforms and the cooperators. The Haqiqat opines that the statements of both Mr. Gandhi and the Swarajist leaders show that no settlement is possible between the Swarajists and the no-changers. Let us see how long these differences continue to ruin and injure India? The Garhwali approves of the statement of the Swarajist leaders as against that of Mr. Gandhi and points out that much more can be accomplished from within the Councils than outside them. It expresses the hope that the Swarajists, under the able leadership of Mr. Das and Pandit Nehru, will suceeed in advancing the political progress of the country through the Councils. The Abhyudaya remarks that Mahatma Gandhi's statement that the Swarajists should resign from the Congress executives is not only improper but is also destructive of the elementary principles of democracy. Any attempt to remove the Swarajists from the Congress executives will prove fatal to the Congress. The Anand says that Mr. Gandhi's demand to the Swarajists to resign offices in the Congress will deal a death-blow to the Swaraj party, which must realise that it has neither the support of the Congress nor of Mahatma Gandhi. The Kartavya remarks that Mahatma Gandhi, being the high-priest of non-cooperation, his view that Council entry is opposed to the principles of non-cooperation must be held to be sound and correct. It is doubtful whether the Swarajists will accept the advice of the Mahatma to concentrate their energies on the constructive programme. All signs point to the conclusion that agitation will not be carried on vigorously until the Swarajists have been convinced of the futility of councils, and join the no-changers in preparing the people for Civil Disobedience. The Haldhar is opposed to the view that the divergence between the programme of Mr. Gandhi and that of the Swaraj party will prove harmful to the struggle for swaraj and remarks that so long as the object of both of them is the same and both hold non-cooperation to be the best means for its attainment, there is no room for disappointment. Nationalism cannot be destroyed by divergence in programme or by the formation of parties. It is the divergence in the object and the means for its attainment which destroys nationalism. For our part, we regard the formation of two parties within the Congress as beneficial to the interests of the country for the British Government will be compelled to confer swaraj only when it is harassed by being attacked both from inside and outside its fortress.

The O'Dwyer-Nair case.

The Pioneer remarks that it is unfortunate that the case has revived memories of unhappy events in the Punjab about which Englishmen and Indian politicians will probably always remain in fundamental disagreement. Commenting on the judgement the paper says: Those who have carefully followed the evidence with an unbiassed mind will be disposed to agree with the verdict of an overwhelming majority of the jury. The result of the trial may be regarded as a complete vindication of Sir Michael O'Dwyer and his administration. The paper regrets that Mr. Justice McCardie should have displayed a marked bias in favour of the plaintiff. This is much to be regretted, as it has done a great deal to rob the verdict of any influence upon Indian opinion, and has given Indian politicians and journals an opportunity, of which they have not been slow to avail themselves, for indulging in bitter and envenomed comment on his conduct of the case. The Leader in a long article headed "What justice" says that the verdict is bound to strengthen extremist forces and correspondingly weaken those who, notwithstanding disappointments frequent, numerous and serious, have been devotedly attempting to keep a party of constitutional reformers still alive. It emphasises that wherever there is a conflict between Indian and European interests, as in the case of the Lee Commission, or when justice is to be done between the British and the Indian view of the public conduct of public officers, disappointments to Indians is generally the result. The result of the case is that to the Indians Sir Michael O'Dwyer is not the less of an O'Dwyer than he was, whereas Sir Sankaran Nair, though defeated in a court of law, has distinctly gained in stature as an independent and patriotic Indian. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that the verdict is political and not judicial. The testimony of the Punjab, read before the jury, might be brushed aside, but not from the mind of India which will long remember and which will constitute a black mark on the British administration here. It is unfortunate that the impression should spread in this country that where political issues are involved, an Indian cannot obtain justice in England. This specimen of justice must leave in this country a lasting impression behind. It is almost with a touch of awe and superstition that we feel that Sir Sankaran should have met punishment at the hands of the one civilian whose name was execrated throughout India on the eve of his departure. The judgement will rouse deep feelings in this country. The Advocate remarks: The judgement once more brings home to the people of India how far the British sense of justice is liable to be warped when the racial element comes in. The paper suggests that a public fund should be raised in India with the object of showing the nation's sympathy with Sir Sankaran Nair. The Oudh Akhbar regrets the decision and remarks that instead of soothing the wounded feelings of the Indians it has added insult to injury. Indians should now be convinced that even law courts of England cannot mete out justice to them against European officials. The Zulqarnain says that the deposition of Sir Michael O'Dwyer shows that during his régime undue coercion was practised in enlisting recruits. The libel case has revealed to the British public the other side of the picture also which was as yet hidden from their view. The Aj remarks that the decision in the O'Dwyer-Nair suit has been as was anticipated. It was clear from even Reuter's messages that Mr. Justice McCardie, the presiding judge, had started from the very beginning to take sides with the plaintiff. We had never before heard of any Judge so openly siding with one of the contending parties. The decision in this suit has a wide significance. It means that the oppressed Indians cannot expect justice even at the hands of the British law courts.

The Akali agitation.

The Leader remarks that the Akali struggle has lasted three long years and the country is apparently no nearer a solution of it than it was at the beginning. It suggests the formation of a new committee which would include public men of the calibre of Mr. Hasan Imam, Sir Shadi Lal and Mr. Bhulabhai Desai. The Desh Bhakta advises the Government to appease the Sikhs by accepting their demands and by restoring Nabha to the ex-Maharaja. There is still time for Lord Reading to save himself from the stain of the murder of the innocent and to compel the Punjab Government to accept the terms of the Akali leaders, otherwise the Indians will class him along with Lord Curzon and Lord Chelmsford.

The Bengal Provincial Conference.

Mr. Das's statement with regard to the Swarajists' resolution praising Gopinath Saha, the murderer of Mr. Day, has not convinced the press of the wisdom displayed by the Congress meeting. The Pioneer says: Mr. Das should be well aware of the effect which such a resolution is likely to produce on the feeble and vain-glorious mentality of excitable and unbalanced youths of the type of Gopinath Saha, who are easily led astray by love of notoriety and false sentiments and become ready instruments of crime in the hands of more astute conspirators in the background. In another article the paper says: The hypocritical lip-service to non-violence in the preamble of the resolution will be brushed aside with contempt in the neophyte's ecstasy at the prospect of earning a martyr's crown. The Swarajists' condemnation of the crime will be ignored; their open admiration of the murderer's motives will be remembered and will prove a source of inspiration. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: It is curious that the indignation against Mr. Das for the Serajganj resolution is not manifest against the British Judge, who went out of the way to certify the action of General Dyer at Jallianwala Bagh. This is how racial feeling is worked up unconsciously in this country. The Leader says: It is indeed a very serious matter that an organised political body should have passed a deliberate resolution, supported by the vote of the leader of the party, in praise of the perpetrator of a murder or of his motive in acting unpardonably as he did. It does not think that the translation now made changes the position or improves it perceptibly, while the defence is characteristic of the lawyer as well as the Bengali in Mr. Das. But we are sure Bengalis as a whole have not yet made Mr. Das their sole trustee or the custodian of their honour, and their interests and Mr. Das's high falutin will not go down with the large majority of our Bengali fellow-countrymen. A first-rate blunder has been made: let it be honestly recognised and candidly admitted. The Advocate says: The resolution in appreciation of Saha's courage shows which way the wind is blowing in Bengal.

Refusal of passports.

The Swadesh describes as utterly high-handed the action of the United Provinces Government in refusing passports to Mr. and Mrs. Shiva Prasad Gupta who were proceeding to England for the improvement of the health of the latter and in assigning no reasons for its decision. It asks whether the regulations relating to passports are only for the benefit of the Government's protéges and whether all other persons are to be treated as internees in India. This attack on the individual civic liberties of the Indians must be repelled as early as possible.

The flogging in the Tundla rape case.

The Medina condemns as disgraceful example of racial discrimination the decision of the Local Government regarding the flogging of the two Anglo-Indian convicts in the Tundla rape case. The paper adds: How shameful it is that the back of the free and ruling people is held to be dearer than the chastity of the slaves and the ruled. The Hamdam remarks that so long as such race prejudices are present among the Anglo-Indians they cannot appreciate the feelings and demands of the subject-people of India and it is idle to expect any sympathy from them in any national movement. The Abhyudaya condemns the action taken by the Local Government and remarks: Unless the Government issues orders similar to those issued in the case of the Tundla Anglo-Indian convicts that in future no white man will be employed to flog the Indians, it will be said that it conceded the request of the Anglo-Indians not out of a sense of justice but under the force of threat. Writing in a similar strain the Partap remarks: Neither Colonel Gidney felt any shame in making the request that the whipping of the Tundla convicts may be carried out by Anglo-Indians nor did the Local Government give a better account of itself by conceding such a shameless request. Can the whipping of these Anglo-Indian convicts by a white instead of a black in any way minimise the heinousness of their crime? We feel pity at the perversity of those who think that by affording protection to the riff-raffs of society they can uphold their national prestige. As to the Government it has given an excellent proof of its 'impartiality.' The Swadhin remarks that the decision of the United Provinces Government regarding the flogging of the Tundla Anglo-Indian convicts draws a special line of demarcation between the rulers and the ruled and stamps the latter with the seal of inferiority. Such a state of affairs is the outcome of the poverty and subjection of Indians who have thereby lost their self-respect and have been reduced to the position of beasts and are treated as such by the Government.

Political propaganda.

The Haldhar publishes a message from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap to the kisans of India in which he exhorts them to carry on the work of village organisation, establish panchayats and take up the administration of the villages in their own hands. He also asks the national leaders to take up the cause of the kisans and try to ameliorate their lot, pointing out that in removing the prevailing evils they should not be actuated by a feeling of personal hatred against the zamindars and the capitalists but by a religious and humane motive. The Vartman remarks that the revolution which had died as a result of the incarceration of Mahatma Gandhi is now going to be revived with this difference that it will not now aim at the destruction of the present system of administration; because the bitter experiences of the Swarajists have convinced the people that a change in the present system of administration is not sufficient, that it is humiliating for the Indians to remain content with their lot as "false citizens" under an alien Government in this era of "democracy" and "self-determination" and that they can enjoy the rights of true citizenship only when they get the government of their country into their own hands. The time is near when this white revolution of ours will produce its effect and by frustrating the moves of the British Imperialists bring India nearer to liberty.

The Lee Commission Report.

THE Indian Press continues to criticise the recommendations of the Lee Commission. The Najat avers that the acceptance of the recommendations of the Lee Commission will render India for ever a slave to the English who will henceforward have a permanent share in the administration of the country. If the Government has already decided to certify the report, even if it is rejected by the Assembly, there is no use presenting it for discussion. The truth is that India is dependent and the Government rules over it in an arbitrary manner. The Al Bureed remarks that the most notable feature of the report is the additional burden of about a crore of rupees which has been thrown upon the shoulders of the poor Indians, the responsibility for which lies with the Indian members of the Commission. The Mashriq regrets that the report contains nothing which may safeguard the rights of the Musalmans and exhorts the leaders to convene meetings to protest against the report. A correspondent writing to the Oudh Akhbar remarks that there is no reason why the Indians should be deprived of that medical aid which has been recommended for the Europeans. He further suggests that the Indians serving in far-away provinces should be given travelling allowances when proceeding home on leave. The paper is gratified that Sir Alexander Muddiman has postponed action on the recommendations of the Commission till discussions on the report have taken place in the Assembly. The Prem remarks that the recommendations of the Lee Commission are a sad commentary on the principles of justice and impartiality. What an irony of fate is it that while promises are made to meet the aspirations of the Indians, measures are being taken to perpetuate their subjection and poverty? The organ of the Benares Liberals, the Surya, says that the Lee Commission has favoured the Services at the expense of the Indian tax-payer. It further remarks:—The English have not contented themselves with doubling the taxation as compared with the pre-war days. They have crippled us in every way by capturing all our business. They open fire whenever they like and increase taxation at their sweet will. Indians will do well to sink their differences and be ready to oppose these injustice-dealers, bearing in mind that there is no nation which will not quail before their united power. In the opinion of the Pioneer the complaint against the proposals of the Lee Commission has been carried on, ever since they were made public, with a bitterness and an anti-British rancour which show plainly that those who are organising it cannot or will not take the trouble to understand that the grievances of the British official are no figment of the imagination, and that the presence of the British official in India will be essential for very many years to come.

The Khilafat.

The Iqdam justifies the action of the nationalist Turks as quite in keeping with the principles of Islam and remarks that the Indian Musalmans are very ungrateful in abusing a nation that has been for centuries undergoing all sorts of sacrifices for their religion. Munshi Ahmad Ali Shauq in a signed article to the Oudh Akhbar remarks: The Musalmans of India cannot recognise Sharif Husain, who is a traitor and a rebel as their Khalifa. We have no faith in his words and actions and it is a sheer injustice to Islam to support his cause.

The Mosul conference.

The Najat is sanguine of the Turkish success in the conference and advises Great Britain to give up its coveteousness for oil fields and greed for territorial aggrandisement in order to maintain peace and order. The Hindustani also justifies the claims of the Turks and remarks that the restoration of the territory to the Turks is the only way of maintaining peace and order in Iraq. The Medina alleges that Great Britain has bribed the representatives of Mosul and protests against the question being submitted to the League of Nations as it is a tool in the hands of Great Britain. The Hamdam deplores the breakdown of the Mosul conference and accuses Great Britain of being greedy of oil fields. It further remarks that the Turkish demands are based on right and justice as opposed to Great Britain's, which are based on selfishness and greed.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Pioneer says: It is difficult to see how full Dominion status can ever be attained while Hindus and Muhammadans are at loggerheads, though if India has to wait for swaraj until Hindu-Muslim unity has been achieved, she will probably have to wait till the Greek Kalends. Mahatma Gandhi's statement on Hindu-Muslim unity has evoked adverse comments in most of the Hindu papers. The Gyan Shakti says that Mahatma Gandhi is entirely in the wrong if he holds that Shuddhi forms no part of Hinduism and that the Hindus are utterly dissatisfied with his views on the question of re-conversions. He has unjustifiably espoused the cause of Muhammadans and attempted to flatter them. His attacks against the Satyarth Prakash, Swami Dayanand and the Arya Samaj are altogether unfounded and baseless. He has taken no notice of Khwaja Hasan Nizami's book, Dai-e-Islam, which openly advocates the kidnapping of Hindu women and children but has seriously found fault with Swami Shraddhanand. He has criticised the Satyarth Prakash instead of the Qoran which declares itself to be the sworn enemy of the Hindus. The Anand opines that the statement will displease most of the people and create ill-feeling also. Mahatma Gandhi's remarks on the Shuddhi movement are one-sided and will carry no weight with the Hindus. The Kartavya remarks that the statement has been inspired by a sincere desire to do good to all the communities and embodies an incomparable exposition of the Hindu-Muslim question. Mahatma Gandhi has rightly remarked that Hindu-Muslim disturbances will be stopped if both the communities earnestly believe in the principle of non-violence. The paper, however, disagrees with the Mahatma's view regarding conversions and urges that though Hinduism is not a proselytising religion it can certainly assimilate those who were once included within its fold. It expresses surprise that Mahatma Gandhi made the wrong allegation that Arya Samajists too kidnap Muhammadan women for purposes of conversion. The Vartman points out that it is the timidity and cowardice on the part of the Hindus which have made them the easy victims of the oppressions of Muslim goondas. All talk of swaraj is idle until the Hindus are strong enough to defend themselves. The Rajput asserts that wherever Muhammadan officials preponderate Muhammadans seek quarrels with Hindus in the hope that they will be supported by those officials and that Hindus have little hope of justice when communal cases are tried by Muhammadan officials. It urges the local Government not to keep more than one-third Muhammadan officials in any district and to transfer them to other districts if they exceed that number in any particular district. The Gorakshan says that the fact that most reprehensible steps are being adopted to propagate Islam shows that this creed is the weakest and lowest of all other creeds. Islam embodies many absurd teachings and that is why Muhammadans exercise deceit in spreading it. Islam is full of hypocricies otherwise Musalmans must have protested against the outrages on women which are being so frequently perpetrated in Bengal. The Hamdam says that Mr. Gandhi has expressed his views honestly and courageously and hopes that the Musalmans will follow the path shown by him and will remain patient and calm in spite of the excesses of the Hindus. In another article the same paper interprets the views expressed by Swamiji on the statement of Mr. Gandhi as the vain pratings of a bigotted and selfish man and remarks that they reflect the Anglo-Indian point of view. The Haqiqat says that the prevailing mutual dissensions could be removed if Mahatmaji were to start afresh any such movement which might suddenly turn towards it the attention of the nation but unfortunately he still insists on following non-cooperation. The Arya Varta regrets the views expressed by Mr. Gandhi and remarks that he has been misled by the Musalmans. The Al Bureed holds the Hindus responsible for the present communal tension and remarks that Mr. Gandhi has committed a mistake in condemning the Musalmans.

The Muslim League.

Commenting upon the presidential address the Tabligh remarks that in spite of the hostile activities of the Hindus the Musalmans, for the sake of the general interest of the country, are still keenly desirous of Hindu-Muslim unity. It lays stress on the internal organisation of the Musalmans and regrets that the League has nothing to say regarding the oppressed Moplas. The Hamdard is gratified at the revival of the League and suggests that the Khilafat committees should be abolished and their funds handed over to the League. It asks the Musalmans to honestly abide by the resolutions passed by the League. The Al Bashir takes the League to task for neglecting the important question of the emancipation of the Jazirat-ul-Arab and remarks that if Great Britain succeeds in strengthening its influence over Arabia India can never become free. It further remarks that the League is guilty of maintaining criminal silence regarding the atrocities perpetrated upon the Moplas and predicts that the League will remain as useless as before.

Lord Olivier's letter to Mr. Satyamurti.

Commenting upon the Secretary of State's letter to Mr. Satyamurti the Hamdam says that Lord Olivier's verdict has raised more apprehensions among the Musalmans than among the non-Brahmans (of Madras) because his views are calculated to shake that assurance which was from time to time given to the Musalmans by the Imperial Government and the Government of India. Under the present circumstances the Musalmans are quite justified in insisting upon separate representation.

The Swaraj party.

The Leader continues to attack the Swaraj party. In a leading article headed "That united party" the paper says: Mr. Kelkar's statement amounts to an utter repudiation of the original Swarajist policy and the substitution in its place of the policy of the much condemned Moderates. As sappers and miners of Mr. Gandhi they are digging trenches which may become the second line of defence of the bureaucracy and may bury the non-cooperation movement. The question that requires answer is not whether the Swaraj party is united, but whether it is true to the pledge it gave to the electors. If it is not, can it escape the charge of having secured election under false pretences? Referring to Mr. Das's statement on the Serajgunj resolution the same paper says: The implications of the Serajganj resolution are horrible to contemplate and the sooner Messrs. Das and Co. admit their mistake the better it would be for the reputation of the party. If the bravery and self-sacrifice of Gopinath Saha are to be objects of admiration to the Swarajists, why do they not also pass a resolution applauding the patriotic motives of those who commit political dacoities accompanied by brutal murder? Where do the Bengal Swarajists propose to draw the line? The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: We are sure that if they would calmly survey the present situation, the Swarajists would find that their political ascendancy today, marked as it undoubtedly is by fine achievements and patriotic resolves, has not secured for them any stronghold on the popular mind. On the other hand, either due to lack of diplomacy or a thoughtless disregard for calm forethought, they have been alienating every interest around them. They are against the present system of government, their very life depends upon their remaining against the Government, until its spirit changes. Therefore, we are not surprised that the bureaucrat looks askance at the Swarajist. We are not surprised also that the Liberals are daily pouring ridicule and abuse on them. If the Liberals are today wallowing in the mire, disowned by the people and by the Government whom they most loyally served, it is due to the unrelenting election campaign of the non-cooperators. But are the Swarajists wise in alienating their brother non-cooperators? And are they not almost deliberately doing it by assuming what can only be described as an offensive attitude against Gandhi. There is no use disguising the spirit behind the reference to Pontius Pilate and the angry gesture about the Swarajists being left to settle their own morals. The Pratap remarks that the Swaraj party has fallen far below its position. There is now no difference between the Swarajists and the Liberals. The attitude of the Swaraj party is certainly indefensible. It is alienating the sympathy of the country. It is a mistake on its part to think that the Councils are the be-all and end-all of its existence. The Kartavya supports Mr. Gandhi's suggestion regarding the resignation of their offices by Swarajists in the Congress, pointing out that the National Assembly has suffered in popularity by the Swarajists retaining offices. It urges that if mutual bitterness is to be avoided the Swarajists will do well to act upon Mahatma Gandhi's advice. The Surya observes that in view of fundamental differences between Mr. Gandhi and Swarajist leaders, the latter have no alternative left but to join forces with the Liberals in the national struggle and work on constitutional lines.

Constitutional advance.

The Leader disapproves the writings of the Anglo-Indian papers with regard to further constitutional advance and says: It is not by any means difficult to imagine that if all political parties unanimously resolved to wait for further progress until 1929 what the attitude of these worthies of the Anglo-Indian Press will be in that year. With their infinite resources they will even then as vigorously oppose further advance as they are doing now. Barring one or two honourable exceptions among them the rest of them are hostile to our aspirations and must be treated as such by Indian public opinion. Referring to Mr. Sastri's statement in England the Pioneer says: It seems unfortunate that Indian public men in delivering themselves of opinions in the English Press should be so reckless in their statements, and even Mr. Sastri's reputation can hardly be proof against conviction of lamentable ignorance, if nothing worse.

Lord Reading's ban on the dhoti.

The Abhyudaya characterises the order of Lord Reading prohibiting attendance at the Viceregal function with dhoti on as an outcome of a fit of insanity on his part and remarks that the impropriety of the order at once becomes glaring when it is considered that the dhoti is the national dress of the Indians and it is already permissible in official bodies like the High Courts and the Legislatures. The Aj says that this order of the Viceroy is equivalent to a proclamation that our national dress is uncivilised and improper. All Indians should protest against this order and make it a point not to attend any of the Viceregal functions unless and until it is withdrawn.

The O'Dwyer-Nair case.

The Leader derives satisfaction from the Prime Minister's statement in Parliament that the findings of the jury in the O'Dwyer-Nair libel action did not contain any indication or suggestion that General Dyer was not fairly dealt with. The Hamdam asserts that in spite of great changes in the system of government the racial prejudices of the British public can never cease and that the Indians will ever be considered as black people for whom the door of justice is shut. The Medina says that the most serious aspect of the decision is the absence of shame in the heart of Justice McCardie for the inhuman and shameful tragedy enacted at Jallianwala Bagh. The Haqiqat exhorts the Indians to render financial help to Sir Sankaran Nair in spite of his unpopularity amongst his countrymen and remarks that such incidents add to the unrest and dissatisfaction prevailing in India. The Hindustani condemns the decision as grossly unjust and based upon racial prejudices and remarks that it has taught a lesson to the Indians that those who support the aliens against their countrymen will meet with the same fate as has befallen Sir Sankaran Nair. The Najat hopes that the decision will disillusion the Liberals as the very fact of being an Indian is regarded as a crime under the British law. The Abhyudaya holds that the decision in the O'Dwyer-Nair case is a fresh example of the hollowness of British justice and that by his eloquent eulogy of Sir Michael O'Dwyer and General Dyer, Mr. Justice McCardie, the presiding judge, has sprinkled salt into the wounds of the Indians. The Aj remarks:—The more we consider the behaviour of Mr. Justice McCardie the more reprehensible it appears to us. The plain and simple meaning of the opinions expressed by him is that the action of the military even, if it sheds rivers of blood in the name of the defence of the Empire, will in future be considered as justifiable. What a fine example of justice? Indeed, Justice McCardie has outdone the majority of the Deputy Magistrates in this country who dance at the bidding of the police. The Bharat Jiwan sarcastically says that the decision in the O'Dwyer-Nair case is one of the best examples of British justice. Every Indian knows from the time the Tilak-Chirol case was decided that we, the slaves, cannot have a just hearing anywhere. It is to be hoped that the Liberals will learn a lesson from this case.

Restoration of Berar.

A correspondent writing to the Haqiqat regrets the attitude adopted by Lord Reading in the matter of Berar and is at a loss to understand why the Nizam's memorial has not yet been submitted to the Secretary of State for India. The Viceroy by his action is antagonising even those who trust and admire him. In another article the same paper suggests that Sir Ali Imam should now return to India to win over Indian public opinion in favour of the restoration of Berar.

The Serajgunj resolution.

Referring to Mr. Das's statement in explanation of the Serajgunj resolution praising Gopinath Saha, the Pioneer says: To our mind, indeed, this apotheosis of a half-baked unbalanced student, whose lack of mental equilibrium and overweening vanity led him to commit the crime of murder, is positively nauseating, and is calculated to inspire every weak-minded degenerate in Bengal who chooses to regard himself as divinely appointed to be the saviour of his country, to go and do likewise. The Leader says that the statement made by Mr. Chaudhuri, chairman of the reception committee of the Bengal Provincial Conference, is certainly very damaging to Mr. Das who, in trying to justify a blunder, has only further entangled himself. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the resolution does not in reality approve the action of Gopinath Saha but simply acknowledges his sense of patriotism which carried to the extreme misled him to commit such a base act. This recognition of his patriotism while his action was condemned in the very beginning ought not to have been made the cause of so much agitation and excitement. In reality such individuals are worthy of being termed the devotees of their nation and country. The Aj remarks that although the resolution of the Bengal Provincial Conference regarding Gopinath Saha defied the Congress pledge of non-violence and was inopportune, improper and unnecessary and impolitic; yet it cannot possibly be said to contain any incitement to murder. The European Association is trying to make capital out of this resolution and Mahatma Gandhi has already expressed his strong disapproval of it. If the former prejudices Indian public opinion against Bengal and the latter encourages Government to resort to ruthless repression, Bengal will have a very hard time of it. It is the duty of the whole Indian nation to stand by Bengal as one man bearing in mind that they should do nothing which may strengthen the cause of their opponents.

Vaikom Satyagraha.

The Pioneer remarks: If half the effort that has been misdirected in the non-cooperation movement towards the premature attainment of swaraj had been directed to this end, India would now be far nearer the realisation of the political aspirations of her politicians. If the problem of the depressed classes were solved, Hindu-Muslim unity achieved, municipal and district board administration rendered really efficient, and a sincere and intelligent attempt made to work and develop constitutionally the powers already in the hands of the political leaders, instead of childish efforts at smashing the administrative machine, India's claim for Dominion status would be irresistible and no British Government could ignore it.

The Cawnpore Bolshevik Conspiracy case.

The Surya condemns the decision in the Cawnpore Bolshevik Conspiracy case as a travesty of justice which has been perpetrated simply because the Indians are a subject people. It asserts that the documents produced in the case do not at all establish the charge of conspiracy against the convicts. The Hindi-Kesari remarks that all the circumstances connected with the case show that it was a veritable farce of justice.

The United Provinces capital.

The Leader says: Rumour is strongly rife that it is intended to remove to Lucknow the offices of the Secretaries to Government in the Public Works department, both in the Irrigation and the Buildings and Roads branch and that the transfer will materialise as early as October next. This proposal, which has been hatched in secret, will, if given effect to, be the thin end of the wedge which will ultimately entail the removal to Lucknow of the entire Secretariat and the seat of Government. The high-paid European officials, ignoring the great inconveniences which the clerks of these offices will be put to, have set their hearts on this project evidently for no other or better reason than that the capital of Oudh abounds in super-social amenities for them.

The Lee Commission Report.

THE Pioneer regrets that Indian papers cannot be induced to look at any other aspect of the Commission's labours than the financial one. If they could, they would appreciate the fact that the Lee Commission have in effect adopted the "O'Donnell" circular's arguments in favour of European recruitment. The vital importance of their recommendations on questions of provincialisation and recruitment has not yet been fully realised. To prophesy without reservation is unwise, but it is difficult to resist the conclusion that the pace of Indianisation will be far more rapid than the Commission expects. In another article the paper says: As the Commission has recommended a sweeping policy of Indianisation, the proposals for adjusting—albeit on very modest lines—the financial conditions of the Services will represent increased expenditure which can in years to come be only reduced by a comparatively small amount. In the higher special appointments it is obvious that the payment of Indians and Europeans at the same rate is desirable, but where the time scale operates, it is really doing the imported official an injustice to give to a colleague living in his own country the same emoluments. Moreover, from the standpoint of the finances of India, it is actually bad business. Nor does it enable the country to derive one of the main advantages which ordinarily should accrue from a policy of increased association of Indians in the administration. This apparently was part of the price paid for unanimity among the signatories of the Report. Referring to the support given by the Pioneer to the recommendations of the Lee Commission the Leader says: The Pioneer has no doubt—we dare say it is right—that the Indian opposition to the Lee proposals is futile. Why then does it dip its pen in gall every day to decry the Indian view? Why cannot it repose in the serene confidence that the privileged Services' interests are very secure in the keeping of their countrymen at Simla and Whitehall? Because probably its writing staff basking in a mean of three figures have lost all faith in electric fans and iced drinks which do not give them the needed peace of mind. The newly started paper from Lucknow, the Rising India, remarks: Our countrymen have rightly lost their faith in the utility of the so-called Royal Commissions, the sole object of which is to tighten the shackles of serfdom even more and more on our unfortunate country. The niggardly fling of 50 per cent. of the posts to the Indians in the Indian Civil Service is a clever bait. It is a clever policy to placate the indignant feelings of the Indian politicians. But the move, as detrimental to the future and as cunning as fox, cannot elude the shrewd imagination. The Anand Pracharak regards the recommendations of the Lee Commission as necessary to induce Englishmen to join the Indian Civil Service and remarks that the Indians are unfit at present for administrative work and the presence of the English is necessary to teach them the lessons of self-government. The Aj remarks that the acceptance of Sir Sivaswamy Iyer's resolution regarding the effectuation of the Lee Commission Report makes no difference in the situation seeing that the recommendations of the Commission will be put into operation despite any decision of the Assembly.

The Khilafat.

Khwaja Ghulam Nizam Qadri in a lengthy article in the Hamdam regards the existence of Khilafat as a religious necessity for the Musalmans and remarks that if Abdul Majid is not reinstalled as a Khalifa, the best thing under the present circumstances would be to acknowledge Sharif Husain as the Khalifa of the Musalmans. The Medina approves of the statement of Maulana Shaukat Ali for the revival of the Khilafat Committees and hopes that he will soon translate into action what has hitherto been confined to speeches only. The Haqiqat avers that after the abolition of the Khilafat the existence of the Khilafat Committees has become a greater necessity.

The Mosul Conference.

The Haqiqat remarks that the obstinacy of Great Britain was the cause of the breakdown of the Conference and warns her that the abolition of the Khilafat has in no way alienated the Muslim sympathies from the Turks and any step taken against them is sure to cause unrest throughout the Muslim world. In another article the same paper observes that the Turks are quite justified in their demands and that the Mosul question cannot be settled as long as Great Britain holds a mandate over Iraq. The Najat is sanguine that the Turks will never yield to the unjust demands of Great Britain and apprehends that the Anglo-Turkish tension will throw the entire Muslim world into great commotion.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Indian papers are jubilant over the defeat of General Smuts. The Advocate says that the defeat of Premier Smuts indicates that anti-Indian feelings are becoming more prominent day by day in South Africa. The Hamdam hopes that the régime of General Smuts' successor will prove beneficial to India so far as the condition of the Indians in the Colonies is concerned. The régime of General Smuts has been notorious for injustice shown towards the Indians and his exit from the Union Government has a direct bearing on the affairs of India.

Anglo-Iraq agreement.

The Oudh Akhbar says that though the stipulation in the agreement that Great Britain will guide the foreign policy of Iraq and will have a voice in her military affairs relieves the Iraq people from many responsibilities, it reduces the importance of the rule of Amir Feisal to insignificance. Nobody can say that Great Britain will respect the assurances of good faith given by the High Commissioner of Iraq and fulfill its promises. The Medina remarks: This talisman cannot last long and those who are opposed to the agreement will soon adopt an agressive attitude. If the question of Mosul is decided against the Turks, Iraq will become another Ireland. The Najat remarks that the Iraq people have betrayed a lack of political sagacity in accepting the agreement and that by drawing up the agreement in charming words Great Britain has spread a net to entangle the necks of the people of Iraq.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Pioneer says: It is to be hoped that the fracas at Delhi will serve as a warning, and that there will be no further disturbances on the approach of the Bakr Id. Communal disturbances do not furnish a convincing argument to the British people in favour of India's fitness for further constitutional advance; though the effect of a comparatively insignificant fracas like that at Delhi is far less than the effect of a "gesture" like that of Mr. C. R. Das in his apotheosis of a murderous degenerate. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: Muhammad Ali's fighting comment on the Hindu-Muslim tension, with all the weight that the utterance of the president of the Indian National Congress must command, will go screeching among the mass of Government officials and the protagonists of the communal struggle. He has not minced matters; he never can. He has brought his whole weight to tear the veil and place before his countrymen the veritable devils at work at the Bakr Id riot factory. The Medina resents the attitude of certain Hindu members of the Congress towards the Ali brothers and remarks that if the Hindus cannot repose confidence in them, they can repose no confidence in any other Muslim leader. The Hamdam says that if the resolution to be moved against Maulana Muhammad Ali is supported in the Congress Committee, we should for ever banish all hopes of swaraj. If Mahatmaji does not succeed in having the resolution withdrawn a critical situation fatal to the national demands will be created. A correspondent writing in the Mashriq observes that the seed of unity sown by the leaders has everywhere yielded a harvest of dispute and dissensions. The Musalmans should note that Lala Lajpat Rai's departure to England and the secret meetings convened by the Hindus are meant to injure the interests of Musalmans. The Hindostan Times alleges that the letter of the Secretary of State for India to Mr. Satyamurti regarding the separate communal representation is the result of the anti-Muslim activities of the Hindus. In a communicated article the Zulqarnain warns the simple-minded Musalmans to open their eyes and to be on their guard as the alluring net of swaraj is being spread for them. The Musalmans being in the minority their existence depends upon their alliance with the Englishmen. The Hindustani condemns the propaganda of Khawaja Hasan Nizami and advises the Government to prosecute him for his book Dai-i-Islam. The Al Bureed says that the Musalmans have become aware of the deep policy of the Hindus and they can now no longer be duped by false allurements of any unreal unity. The Abhyudaya bitterly complains of the kidnapping of Hindu women and children and of assaults committed upon them by Muslims, and remarks that if the Muslim leaders condemn such mean actions of their co-religionists and raise a voice of emphatic portest against them, peace can be restored in the country and the Hindu-Muslim tension removed. If they fail to do so, the Hindus should devise means for self-protection. They should realise that their very existence is at stake, and if they cannot defend themselves they will not only ruin themselves, but will also be the cause of the country's ruination. The Prem says that though Mr. Gandhi has discussed every question frankly and earnestly in his statement on the Hindu-Muslim unity, many of his views cannot command public approval. He has severely criticised the Hindus but has exercised undue restraint and moderation in speaking of the Muhammadans. His attacks on Swami Dayanand, the Satyarth Prakash and the Arya Samaj are quite uncalled for and unjustifiable. His views on shuddhi are also untenable as shuddhi was practised long before Islam and Christianity came into existence. Hindus alone are not to show forbearance over the question of cow-slaughter. Muhammadans too should exercise the same generosity in the matter. The Kartavya remarks that Mahatma Gandhi's statement on the Hindu-Muslim unity is impartial, and that though it may not commend itself to all the people it embodies a sound and correct exposition of the question. It points out that Mahatma Gandhi has rightly remarked that cow-slaughter cannot be stopped by force and that the Hindus should trust to the good sense and generosity of the Musalmans for the solution of this problem. It disagrees with the Mahatma's view that music before the mosques is as painful to the Muhammadans as cow-slaughter is to the Hindus. This question of music before the mosques has been given prominence by the Muhammadans only since the last year simply to seek quarrels with the Hindus and can by no means be given the same importance as the question of cow-slaughter.

The Swaraj party.

The Indian Daily Telegraph contains a signed article by Mr. Ranga Iyer who defends the Swaraj party and describes the work done by it under the leadership of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru in the Legislative Assembly. While defending the leader of the party he accuses the Liberals of starting an anti-Nehru campaign and says: Who does not remember the proud declarations of vainglorious Ministers who were discovered and turned out, though meantime they were fully exploited to suppress the non-cooperation movement? Presuming on the proverbial shortness of public memories, these discredited politicians and place-hunters are appealing to the public to prefer the Liberals to the Swarajists. To mention other inconsistencies of our Liberal reviler, I need only mention in this article that Mr. Chintamani's inconsistency proved disastrous to the province. Conceding for a moment that Pandit Moti Lal Nehru was inconsistent in not opposing the Tariff Bill, his inconsistency has saved a national industry and paved the way for a protective policy. But those who have read the election manifesto of the Swaraj party are aware that the Swarajists were pledged to unmitigated obstruction only if they had an absolute majority. The Iqdam deplores the prevailing difference between the Swarajists and Mr. Gandhi and remarks that if the parties do not come to an understanding the progress of the country will be retarded. The Haqiqat says that Mr. Gandhi has declared a regular war against the Swarajists and his condemnation of the Serajganj resolution has severely injured the prestige of the Swarajists. If the Swarajists establish a separate organisation of their own they are sure to fall in public estimation.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Leader says: His hypnotic spell is broken. Only yesterday he was the unchallenged master of the mass mind of India. But today his influence has considerably declined. His case once more illustrates the extremely fleeting nature of popularity in the field of politics.

Constitutional advance.

In a leading article headed "The Reforms Enquiry" the Pioneer says that the Committee have emerged into the light of publicity after curious hesitations which have given cause for some anxiety regarding the Government's intentions. Criticising the Government resolution the paper says: To study the working of the Reforms with the sole object of discovering in what respect they could be altered in order to advance the constitutional machine, regardless of the dangers exposed, is to invite disaster. The Committee will do well, therefore, to keep in mind the tendencies which have made the Act, in some respects, difficult to work and to refrain from recommending the removal of defects except those conclusively proved to be inherent in the Act and not due to extraneous causes. The Leader replying to the above article says that the Pioneer has appointed itself the dry nurse of the Committee. The morbid anxiety is pathetic. And if we could be reasonably hopeful of our own countrymen's early success in attaining the advanced stage of self-government which the best interests of the country demand, we should even feel some pity for those who are making themselves so childishly unhappy. Even then, pity, not sympathy, for there can be no sympathy whatever with their point of view or their motives and purposes as there can be no agreement with their old-world opinions. Referring to the memorial presented to the Secretary of State for India the Haqiqat says that today the British Government is in the hands of persons who have again and again expressed their sympathies with subject nations, hence we are justified in expecting that the Indian question will be more satisfactorily solved than the Egyptian question. The Azad hopes that the memorial will fully prove to be effective and measures will be adopted to allay the Indian unrest. The Najat disapproves the demand for Royal Commission and observes that the Government can now have no reasonable plea for not considering the demand for liberty as the different political parties of India are now united in their demand. The Haqiqat has no misgivings about the result of the memorial and expects no generosity at the hands of the British statesmen.

Congress politics.

The Rising India says that the Congress has suffered a severe shock. It has in its fold persons who put no belief in the constructive programme and whatever was left there is being killed by their inaction and indifference. The parties that have of late grown up have very little in common, though the leaders still issue statements which are not true and are calculated to deceive the people all the more and by stampeding work, they are likely to throw greater misery on the nation. Hence this paper will serve as a friendly critic to those who swerve from the path of duty. Referring to Mr. Gandhi's resolution in the forthcoming meeting of the All-India Congress Committee the Leader says: The Swarajists are shrewd people. They know and recognise the dangers of bearding the lion in his own den, and we shall not be surprised if, making a virtue of necessity, they will enter a formal protest that the All-India Congress Committee has no jurisdiction to override the decision of the Congress itself, and then, for the sake of unity and out of deference to the position and services of Mr. Gandhi, again issue one of their customary statements to a bewildered public. We recognise that while as a man of peace he loves unity he still hates all hypocrisy, and that if only he could be persuaded that this atmosphere of camouflage is not to the good of healthy public life we believe he will refuse to pay such a heavy price for that unity. In another article the paper says that Mr. Gandhi's resolutions raise fundamental issues and the first two are bound to be opposed by the Swarajists, and probably the third also which implies a censure of the supreme Congress executive on those who passed the Serajganj resolution. The Swarajists have been sailing under false colours, but the Mahatma cannot tolerate shams and is determined to put an end to all hypocrisy, as far as possible, in the Congress. If he fails in his purpose he will have a separate organisation of his own. The Bharat Jiwan views with alarm the growing difference between Mahatma Gandhi and the Swaraj party and says that the country will suffer most grievously if the Congress is split up into two distinct bodies. It urges that members should be re-elected for the executive committee of the Congress and the majority party should control the Congress while the minority party should help it in its work. Secession from revolt against the Congress will only prove the unfitness of Indians for swaraj and give cause for jubilation to the bureaucracy. The Abhyudaya remarks that if the resolution of Mahatma Gandhi to remove the Swarajists from the Congress executives is passed by the All-India Congress Committee it will augur ill to the country. Mahatma Gandhi will do well not to widen the gulf, but find out means to enable both the parties to fight unitedly the nation's struggle for swaraj. The Aj remarks that no other person than Mahatma Gandhi is at present more qualified for the presidentship of the next session of the Congress and urges that pressure should be brought upon him to accept the office. The Vartman opines that the proposal to turn out the Swarajists from the Congress executive will prove highly detrimental to the interests of the country.

The O'Dwyer-Nair case.

Referring to Mr. Justice McCardie's judgment the Indian World says: It is this sort of unfair judgment which has been increasing the gulf between the European and the Indian, and until and unless such views are openly thrown aside by both the nations, a union based on love and mutual helpfulness is impossible. But where is the mind and where is the man to take up this noble task? The Haqiqat remarks that as "Gandhi and Anarchy" was written under the inspiration of the Government, it is but right and reasonable that the costs and damages decreed against Sir Sankaran Nair should be borne by the Government. The Desh Bhakt says that the Indians who are accustomed to always praise and applaud the Government and thus bring sufferings on their countrymen should open their eyes and make a firm resolve never to support British policy. The Azad remarks that the decision of the suit has exposed the real character of British justice. It asks the Indians to present to Sir Sankaran Nair the sum which he has spent in connection with the libel suit. The Bharat Jiwan remarks that Mr. Justice McCardie has done flagrant injustice in the O'Dwyer-Nair case which has made it clear that in cases between whites and blacks the latter can never expect justice done to them. The Bhavishya says that it is characteristic of British justice that in all disputes between the Indians and the Britishers the latter are always made to win. The moral is plain. A black may sacrifice his life for the sake of the Government, but when it is a matter between him and a white all his services are forgotten. The Pratap writes: We are pleased with the decision in the O'Dwyer-Nair case for it has shown in what light do the authorities enebriated with ruling power even now view the Punjab tragedy. We are against the proposal to raise funds to meet the damages claimed of Sir Sankaran Nair by Sir Michael O'Dwyer. The money of this country must not go into the pockets of murderers and oppressors. If Sir Sankaran feels that injustice has been done to him he should better practise satyagruha and refuse to pay a single pice in the name of damages. The Aj is gratified at the notice given by Mr. Lansbury of a resolution to be moved by him in Parliament demanding the removal of Mr. Justice McCardie from the Bench and remarks that if the British have any love of justice they will not allow Justice McCardie to continue to remain in office any longer and will get the decision in the O'Dwyer-Nair case reconsidered. The Bharat Jiwan urges that if the proposal to remove Mr. Justice McCardie from the Bench for his conducting the O'Dwyer-Nair case in an unjudicial manner is carried out, it will convince the world that justice is still valued in the British Empire. It says that the Government of India will display itself to be the real sympathiser of the country if it accedes to the resolution of Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha to defray the costs in the case. It will also show that its action against General Dyer and others was just and proper.

Restoration of Berar.

The Abhyudaya characterises the advice of Hakim Ajmal Khan to the Congress to take up the cause of the Nizam in connection with the question of Berar as indiscreet and remarks that it does no credit to Hakimji to advise the Congress to support the demand of the Nizam when the people of Berar do not want to be ruled by him.

Demolition of mosques at Bharatpur.

The Hindustan Times takes to task Maulana Muhammad Ali for maintaining silence regarding the Bharatpur affair and remarks that the Bharatpur State has furnished a good example of future swaraj. It exhorts the Musalmans to take a deputation to the Government and implore it to order the Maharaja to rebuild the demolished mosques. The Tabligh apprehends that the failure of the deputation which waited on the Maharaja will compel the Musalmans to adopt similar means for the protection of their mosques as the brave Akalis have adopted for their gurdwaras. The liberty of the non-Hindu subjects of the State has been permanently endangered by the policy of the Maharaja. The Medina remarks that the consent of the Muslim subjects of the State cannot justify an action which is contrary to religion. The Maharaja has disgraced Islam itself. There is one and only one critical time for the Musalmans and that has been brought about by the Maharaja.

The Serajganj resolution.

The Pioneer says: Mr. Das's apotheosis of a murderer is vindicated by his countrymen, and every immature and impressionable young man in Bengal will henceforth regard a half-witted student of homicidal tendencies as a national hero and a patriot martyr. It only remains to accord Gopinath Saha the posthumous title of Deshbandhu and we are surprised that this idea does not seem, as yet, to have occurred to his admirers. The Indian World says that to the layman, excited and disaffected as he is, such legal sophistry as displayed by the Bengal Provincial Conference may encourage him towards similar or more boisterous adventures. The Indian is not yet ripe for liberty or independence, and it is the duty of our leaders to pay more attention towards reconstruction of Indian character than fighting such showy battles which end in nothing else but chaos. The Leader says: We are sorry for the Bengal Congress Committee who have upheld the notorious Serajgunj resolution. They preferred this disservice to the country to any offence to Mr. C. R. Das's amour propre. This may be anything. It is not sound political sense. The founders of the Congress may well turn in their graves at the sorry spectacle it has presented during the last six years. The Iqdam condemns the resolution passed by the Bengal Provincial Conference and says that Gopinath Saha's action was not the outcome of patriotic sentiments. It is simply absurd to condemn the action and applaud the motive and his cowardly act is calculated to injure the interests of the country. The Haqiqat remarks: The friends and admirers of cruel and tyrant Sir Michael O'Dwyer should feel ashamed in raising objections against the admirers of the patriotism of Gopinath Saha. The Bharat Jiwan says that the resolution regarding Gopinath Saha in the Serajgunj Conference deserves to be wholly condemned for no motive however lofty can be held to be any valid justification for an ignoble deed. The Kartavya, on the other hand, holds that the Bengal Provincial Conference acted improperly in passing the resolution, specially in view of the national pledge of non-violence and because it was liable to be misunderstood by the general public and likely to produce harmful results.

The Steel Protection Act.

The Bhavishya is elated at the passage of the Steel Protection Bill and opines that it will greatly facilitate the development of indigenous industries. The greatest benefit which it has done is that it has opened the door for the protection of other injustices also. The Bharat Jiwan says that the Steel Protection Act will greatly benefit the steel industry in the country, but that it will frustrate its own object if it results in the establishment of the supremacy of capitalism, the degradation of working classes and the investment of foreign capital in the steel industry in India.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman portrays a gloomy picture of the miserable condition of the Indian kisans and remarks that if the world is mutable, if oppressions and tyrannies have an end and if Empires and Governments are not indestructible, the old conspiracy of the bureacuracy and it protéges the zamindars, to reduce the kisans to misery must one day come to an end. What is wanted is that the kisans should be organised after the manner of the Borsad satyagrahis and that a no-tax campaign should be started in all those places where the condition of the kisans is miserable. Such a step will not only succeed in removing the grievances of the kisans but will also impart necessary training to them and make them true national soldiers who will fight to the finish the nation's struggle for swaraj. The same paper publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Satya Bhakta says: Socialism is the only means of removing the sorrows of the world. In order to remove the sufferings of the poor it is as much needed in India as it is in England and America. It is necessary that a socialistic movement should be started in India and the swaraj agitation should be conducted on lines consistent with the principle of Socialism. The Pratap publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap who insinuates that the British are desirous of establishing their hold upon Tibet and remarks: If the British succeed in their design one more chain will be put round the neck of India. It will also cause injury to Nepal and Bhutan. All Indians should, therefore, unitedly carry on an agitation in respect of Iraq and Tibet. The entry of the British into these two countries constitutes an attack on the civilisations of the Musalmans and the Buddhistic Hindus. A deputation of the Hindu Maha Sabha should visit Kathmandu and Lhassa with a view to find out the real situation, and if the Maha Sabha fails to do it, let a few energetic youths of the country take up the task.

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 26 of 1924.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 5th July, 1924.

The Khilafat.

REFERRING to the proclamation of the Sultan of Najd, the Hamdam advises the Khilafat deputation to present itself before him in order to acquaint him with the views of the Indian Musalmans and remarks that the opinion of an independent Muslim ruler on a question of world-wide importance will be more valuable than the views of the rest of the Muslim world. In another article the same paper expresses its gratification that the Khilafat committee has resolved to take up the work of Muslim organisation and exhorts the Musalmans to respond liberally when a practical scheme is placed before them. It advises them to take a lesson from the Akali movement and turn their attention first of all to the Muslim Waqfs, the proper management of which can yield crores of rupees annually. The Garhwali refers to the decision of the Nizam to grant a pension to the deposed Khalifa and insinuates that there is a diplomatic move underlying this decision. It considers it likely that the seat of the Khilafat may be transferred from Turkey to India.

The Mosul Conference.

The Al Bureed dislikes the policy of Great Britain on the Mosul question and does not hope that the Turks will accept the decision of the League of Nations. The British Government should not for a moment think that the abolition of the Khilafat has alienated the Muslim sympathies and that the Musalmans will not support the just demands of the Turks. The Najat says that in view of the mandate over Iraq the League of Nations does not command the confidence of the Turks. Great Britain has spread a net of deceit and cunning over the whole of Arabia and it gives subsidies to the Arab rulers and maintains secret relations with them.

Egypt and the Sudan.

Referring to the declaration of British policy with regard to the Sudan the Pioneer says: There are good grounds for anticipating that if the Egyptians' demand for the incorporation of the Sudan in Egypt were granted they would have cause before long bitterly to rue their temerity. Within a few years at most the Egyptians would probably find that it involved the loss of their independence and the incorporation of Egypt in the Sudan. The present generation in Egypt have evidently forgotten the Mahdi. The Leader says that England will not easily relax her hold nor will Egypt easily acquiesce in the status quo. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The resignation of Zaglul Pasha, as a protest against the British Labour view of the Sudan, is a warning to the Swarajists in India that there is no use responsively cooperating with the bureaucrats. This "gesture" from the Egyptian patriot is a lightning streak in the dark political clouds above all subject countries. Even Labour looks through imperial spectacles.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Medina is gratified at the defeat of General Smuts who was the follower of the repressive and disturbing policy of Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Curzon, and remarks that Indians should not expect any better treatment at the hands of his successor. Their deliverance lies in their own sacrifices and it is concerted action alone which can relieve them from Western Imperialism.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the comments of an English-edited paper on the Hindu-Muhammadan quarrels the Leader cites the case of the States of Hyderabad and Kashmir where in the absence of a third party there are no communal quarrels and says: If there were a third party in either of these States we have no doubt appeals would be made to it to keep the peace and our contemporary would no doubt give it the same wide publicity. A government or a political community which considers its primary function to do the police work but to take no active part in the peace-making process excepting by calling in aid the sanction of the penal law is very different from a government or a political community which recognises its obligation in actively helping in the restoration of peace between communities which have fallen out. Therein lies the whole trouble. The Haqiqat resents the attitude of the Arya Press towards Mahatma Gandhi whose unselfish and patriotic devotion to the nation and country has ever been beyond dispute. The Aryas are chiefly responsible for the present communal tension and instead of being displeased with Mahatma Gandhi they should ponder over their own activities. The Hindustan Times dwells upon the necessity of Anglo-Muslim alliance in India, as after gaining power the Hindus will not regard the Musalmans even equal to untouchables and remarks that as long as the Government had the full support of the Musalmans it had no fear of any opposition. The Oudh Akhbar says that any one who takes interest in the communal disputes at present wants to keep the Indians under subjection and slavery and is the greatest enemy of the country. The responsibility for these disputes mostly lies on the Press which is destroying the national movement. The Hamdam condemns the Arya Press for publishing filthy literature directed against the Musalmans and remarks that for the creation of an atmosphere of unity and toleration it is necessary that the Arya Samajists' spirit should be crushed. The Medina describes the cow-question as the basis of communal disputes and says that out of 42 lakhs of cows slaughtered in India every year only 2 lakhs are utilised by the Musalmans, 10 lakhs by others and 30 lakhs are exported. It is a matter of surprise that the Hindus give preference to the question of cow-protection over swaraj because as long as they remain in slavery they cannot save 30 lakhs of cows from being slaughtered. The Aj ascribes the prevailing communal tension in the country to the system of communal representation and holds the abolition of this system to be indispensable for the elimination of the tension which is eating into the vitals of the national life. It exhorts the leaders of both the communities to direct their efforts towards the speedy abolition of the obnoxious system of communal representation, pointing out that the number of the representatives of the various communities in the Councils and other representative bodies may be fixed, if so desired, but instead of separate electorates there must be only one common electorate.

The Reforms Inquiry Committee.

The Hindustani commends the action of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru in refusing the membership of the committee which does not command the confidence of the Indians. His action shows that the Swarajists are firm in their creed of wrecking the Councils. The Medina says that the object of the committee is only to remove the difficulties which owing to the defects in the Government of India Act, the Government is feeling in counteracting the opposition of the Swarajists. We are fully confident that the committee like the Lee Commission will leave no stone unturned to strengthen the iron grip of the bureaucracy. The Aj protests against the appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman as the President of the Inquiry Committee and remarks that the proper, right and just course for Lord Reading was to appoint Sir Muhammad Shafi as the President instead of Sir Alexander Muddiman because the former is the oldest member of the Viceroy's Executive Council and is also a member of the Inquiry Committee itself, whereas the latter is a new man. Sir Muhammad Shafi was ignored because he is an Indian and a non-white. It is an insult to him but Indians have become habituated to bow their heads to the white officials. What can we expect from a committee in the very constitution of which an attempt has been made to prove the unfitness of the Indians.

The Congress Committee meeting.

Writing on the eve of the meeting the Indian Daily Telegraph said: Even more important than Hindu-Muslim question is the question whether Indian nationalism should be the formidable bulwark before which bureaucracy trembled during the days of non-cooperation movement or whether we should strengthen the system which we are all striving to destroy by further dividing our forces. To add to the religious differences by fomenting political differences is a confession of utter incapacity to attain swaraj. Religion is the path to Godhead; politics in India today is the path to swaraj. Every man wants it, and yet two men are not prepared to agree to work together. This is the situation. If Gandhi cannot solve it, then perish India. In the opinion of the Pioneer the session of the All-India Congress Committee at Ahmedabad has come and gone, without any very epoch-making result having been achieved to justify the importance attached to its deliberations by the Extremist Press. The general public will look in vain for any tangible indication of an appreciable change in the relationship between the satyagrahi and the Swarajist wings of the non-cooperators. The general effect of the meeting of the Congress Committee seems to be that every one remains in the same position as before. Unity was preserved, on the surface at any rate, and for a time, but the significance of the third resolution was whittled away until practically nothing was left of it. Nominally the victory rests with Mr. Gandhi, but it was a Pyrrhic victory which leaves the status quo practically unaltered. And so a schism has been averted, and Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Das, after their knightly tilt at one another, have lowered their weapons and agreed to be comrades in arms once more though each is to be at liberty, as before, to follow his own road regardless of his comrade's predilections. In another article the paper says: It will be interesting to see whether the pledge of personal loyalty to Mr. Gandhi will prevent the development of the fissiparous tendencies all too apparent. The chances of his appearing as the wrecker of the Congress seem not so very remote, but whether that quaint body is destined to have that experience at the hands of its former dictator, or whether it continues to contribute, to the gentle merriment of the public, by endorsing resolutions which have as much relation to practical facts as the moon has to green cheese, matters little. The Leader in a long article headed "Stooping to conquer" says that the session of the All-India Congress Committee which opened with a sham fight has ended in loving embraces. There was a certain amount of anticipatory jubilation in quarters which are not friendly to Indian aspirations. The results of the All-India Congress Committee session will perhaps come as a disappointment and will produce a sense of bewilderment. But we were under no misapprehension as to what Mr. Gandhi was after. It was to assert his leadership in the Congress and to capture the Swarajists. He has succeeded in both. He wanted to establish his deadly grip over them by placing them under an obligation, and so he stooped to conquer. The Mahatma has once more demonstrated that with all his impractical fads, high spiritual theories and fine ethical conceptions he is first and last a politician and has no intention of renouncing his leadership of the advanced political parties. The vainglorious Swarajists may chuckle that their leaders have succeeded in inducing the Mahatma to surrender, but in our view they have fallen into his trap and they will find him gradually tightening his hold until their independence of action will be gone. With the capture of Mr. Das the Mahatma has also captured Bengal. It seems that Mr. Gandhi is again going to place himself at the head of the forces of discontent in the country. Writing after the statement of Mr. Gandhi in which he declared his "defeat and humiliation" the Leader says: There is no doubt that his own method and that of the Swarajists are incompatible, and that the two parties cannot remain in the same organisation. A conflict at Belgaum is inevitable. It is useless to prophesy as to what the result of that conflict will be. In another article the paper says: Thus one result of the meeting of the committee was to instal Mr. Gandhi once more in the Congress in a position of unchallenged supremacy. We would not be surprised if he shortly undertakes an extensive tour of the country to rally it once more to his standard. Whether his efforts to reorganise the discordant forces will succeed and whether he will be able to re-create the atmosphere of 1920 and 1921 is somewhat doubtful, but with the almost non-possumus attitude of Government towards the national demands and its unwillingness to take a substantial step forward, it would not be a very arduous task for him to create a difficult situation for it. The manner in which the Government has behaved since the collapse of the non-cooperation movement and the contempt it has shown for the progressive constitutionalists, has alienated from it even moderate opinion, and if Mr. Gandhi is able once more to raise a storm against it, it will probably have fewer supporters in the future. The constitutionalists have been rendered powerless by the short-sighted policy of the Government, and though their faith in their own policy is strong, they can hardly expect to influence the course of events when the triumph of reaction leads to the growth of extremism in the country in various forms and shapes. The best antidote for political distempers and racial distrust is responsible self-government and the earlier it is established the more it will conduce to peace and good-will between the two countries. At another place the paper says: There is no doubt that Mr. Gandhi was depressed by the decline of faith in non-violence among a section of the members of the committee and by the fact that his hands were tied by the Coconada Congress. But this does not mean that he surrendered to the Swarajists or that he will not assert himself at the Belgaum Congress. He made the best of a bad job and will in all probability make an effort at the next session of the Congress to give effect to his ideas. Commenting on Mr. Gandhi's statement the Pioneer says: Mr. Gandhi comes from the meeting at Ahmedabad a disappointed and disillusioned man. Far from stooping to conquer, as a certain Liberal organ, the Leader, has rashly asseverated, he has won a nominal victory in which all the substantial advantages remain with the defeated side, and which he himself is constrained to recognise as tantamount to a defeat. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Gandhi's political confession in Young India that he is humbled and defeated is one of the most remarkable documents that any political leader has written under similar circumstances in any part of the world. It is a rousing call to the country to shake itself from the nightmare oppressing it and follow the lead of a master mind. The force and power of expression, the almost dramatic touches in it give the article a high literary value. For incisive writing, couched in the simplest language, there is not another who can be compared to Gandhi. In a leading article headed "The death of the Congress" the Indian Daily Telegraph referring to the secession of the Swarajists from the Congress Committee meeting says: After the brilliant demonstration last March, when the civilised world heard with a recoil of the Indian Nationalists rejecting the budget, we find that we have touched the bottom of demoralisation. The Congress Committee by going back on the Delhi compromise have been guilty of treacherously handing over to the enemy the bravest and the most resourceful of their fighters. The obstinate attitude of Gandhi yesterday was almost antipodes to the compromise which Muhammad Ali whispered in hushed tone into the ears of the assembled delegates at Delhi in the sacred name of Gandhi. In a leading article headed "The Congress Compromise" the Indian Daily Telegraph says: But the spirit of revolt against Gandhi, which was so strong a characteristic of the Nehru standard in the Congress Committee, will not be easily forgotten. It represents a new spirit in the country. Young India is tired of dreaming and waiting and doing things according to the prescribed rituals laid down in the Gandhi political Upanishads. The echo from Egypt and the Sudan must be an additional disillusionment to the Swarajists not to expect anything from the present Parliament. Everything depends upon what the Swarajists resolve. The Advocate says: Mahatma Gandhi asserted his leadership and it was acknowledged by all the parties. The Swarajists have bowed to his decision. Mahatma Gandhi has once more showed to the world his high spiritual theories and fine ethical conceptions; he is first and last a politician and has no intention of removing his leadership of the advanced political parties. Much credit is due to Maulana Muhammad Ali for bringing about the compromise among all the parties and the peaceful way in which he carried out the deliberations of the meeting.

The O'Dwyer-Nair case.

The Indian Press continues to express its disapproval of the judgement in the O'Dwyer-Nair case. The Lokmanya characterises the decision in the O'Dwyer-Nair case as a striking example of British justice and remarks that this case very well illustrates how British judges commit travesties of justice in the name of truth and justice. This is the inimitable civilisation of those who make loud professions of culture and justice. Mr. McCardie has shown by his conduct in the case to what depths of degradation, injustice and chicanery even a judge can go. The Bhavishya remarks that although the partiality displayed by Mr. McCardie towards the plaintiff has succeeded in causing a small injury to an Indian it has branded the law courts of England with a stigma. What a pity that those who make loud professions of British justice have themselves exposed its hollowness? The only way by which this stigma can be removed is to remove Mr. McCardie from the Bench and appoint another judge to reconsider the O'Dwyer-Nair suit. The Aj is utterly dissatisfied with the Premier's statement in Parliament justifying the conduct of Mr. Justice McCardie in the O'Dwyer-Nair case and bitterly remarks:—Who can blame Mr. McCardie for his partiality towards the plaintiff when no less a person than the British Premier has justified his conduct? We Indians are ourselves to blame for our folly and shamelessness in expecting justice at the hands of those who are inebriated with ruling powers. The British Parliament which glories in the title of "The Mother of Freedom" may well be satisfied today with the McCardian justice but Britain will have to shed tears quietly one day when similar justice will be dealt to her. It pleases us enormously to see the downtrodden, oppressed and helpless India avenging in an invisible manner the atrocities perpetrated upon her by bringing about the demoralisation of the British Government. This is divine justice—this is the inevitable result of Imperialism. The Dwyerian bullets might be able te kill Indians—men, women and children—not in hundreds only but in thousands, but the entire military prowess and resources of the British Empire put together will not be able to save Britain from her growing demoralisation.

The Akali agitation.

The Pioneer says: The wickedness of using children as pawns in the political game should surely be apparent, for by no stretch of the imagination could they be considered to be capable of performing an Akand Path. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Ahmedabad meeting has most decidedly shown that Gandhi is placing himself at the head of Indian political thought. And Gandhi is behind the Sikhs. Let Sir Malcolm Hailey realise its significance. The Anand Pracharak alleges that the Akalis instead of aiming at the reform of the Gurdwaras are in reality trying to establish Akali raj in the Punjab. It takes to task the Coconada Congress for sympathising with the Akalis and appeals to the public and the Government to eradicate the Akali movement which is proving dangerous to the peace and order in the Punjab.

Restoration of Berar.

Kazi Aziz-ud-din Ahmad contributes a long letter to the Press in which he questions the wisdom of the Nizam in having resorted to propaganda work to strengthen his claim for the restoration of Berar. He thinks that the Nizam has been led astray by selfish advisers. The Tohfa-i-Hind expresses its surprise at the support given to the Berar question by a prominent congressman like Hakim Ajmal Khan and hopes that the Congress will not embroil itself in the question of its restoration. The paper thinks that the Government will not show such a lack of statesmanship as to restore Berar to the autocratic rule of the Nizam and ignore the just demands and religious sentiments of its people. The Abhyudaya congratulates the British Government on its decision as announced in the House of Commons to consult the people of Berar in the matter of its restoration to the Nizam before this question is finally decided. It remarks that it would not have been just if the fate of the people of Berar had been decided by the British Government without at all consulting them as if they were sheep and goats.

The Agra Tenancy Act.

A correspondent writing in the Hamdam remarks that the proposed amendment in the Act is likely to cause great loss to the zamindars. The periodical settlement and the occupancy rights of the tenants are responsible for widening the gulf between the zamindars and the tenants and if amendments are not made with due regard to the rights of the zamindars, the Government will be responsible for the consequences. In a communicated article the same paper remarks that non-occupancy tenants should not be given life interests in the land as it is neither useful to the zamindars nor to the tenants themselves. The well-wishers of the tenants and the zamindars should assemble at some place to exchange views on the subject and should show to the Government and the Liberals that they are alive and can safeguard their own interests. One Mr. Bal Krishan Misra, vakil, writing in the Kshattriya Mitra, refers to the disabilities of cultivators under the existing Agra Tenancy Act and urges that greater facilities should be provided to enable the cultivators to acquire the occupancy right. They should also be permitted to mortgage or sell this right. The writer also suggests changes in the rules governing inheritance of the right of occupancy, so that the mother, the daughter, the uncle of a cultivator may inherit this holding on his death.

The Cawnpore mill riot.

Commenting on the non-official report on shooting at the Cawnpore Cotton Mills the Pioneer says: It is a characteristic document, and illustrates the perversity of outlook which has become the dominant feature of non-official inquiries of this kind. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: Indian India will entirely agree with the findings of the committee, especially as they are based on evidence taken with patience before Commissioners who command popular esteem and confidence. The report is couched in dignified tone and is worthy of those who have signed it. It commends to the authorities the recommendations of the committee which, if adopted, might avert similar disasters in the future.

Situation in Europe.

REFERRING to the Anglo-French relations the Indian Daily Telegraph says: Indeed France has arrived at a stage of political thought when it is considered patriotism to think ill of England. The prospect of the London Conference lifting the veil from the hotbed of suspicions and distrust and showing to the world a united Europe entwined in the arms of peace and goodwill is indeed vague. According to the Pioneer the British Premier's statement in the House of Commons should cut the ground from under the feet of those unscrupulous French politicians who have been endeavouring to exploit Anglo-French differences in a partisan campaign against M. Herriot. There is not the slightest justification for the outcry which has been deliberately engineered in a section of the French Press with the object of discrediting and, if possible, overthrowing M. Herriot's Government. Referring to the Spanish reverse in Morocco the Leader remarks: If the Rifian State had been in Europe and if a European Power had tried by force to establish a protectorate over it, the world would have heard a great deal about it, but we hear little of the ethics or the justice of the war that Spain has been waging against a 'backward' non-European people whose only fault is that they intensely love their independence and do not wish to be exploited by the Spaniards.

The Khilafat.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: No one can read the summary of the correspondence between Maulana Shaukat Ali and the Government on the subject of the Khilafat deputation to Turkey without feeling, at one rush, the low ebb to which the strength of popular opinion has shrunk. Hindus and Musalmans have almost revelled in drifting from one another, as if to contribute to the holiday spirit of the bureaucrat, until today, over such a vital question as the Muslim delegation to Turkey, there is no effort on the part of the authorities to rescue the question of the Muslim delegation to Turkey from red tape. The Medina praises the Khilafat committee for its judicious selection of the members of the deputation to Angora and remarks that the representation of the Jamiat-ul-Ulema has enhanced the importance of the delegation. The deceptive and cunning tactics of the Government in the matter of passports have already been exposed, and it is now hoped that the Government will throw no further difficulties in their path. The Pratap strongly disapproves of the proposal to elect the Sharif of Mecca as the Khalifa and remarks that if the Muslim world decided to elect the Sharif, who deprived the Arabs of their freedom, with the help of foreign guns, and whose throne is even today being protected by British bayonets, as the Khalifa, then it will have to be said that Islam has lost its strength and vigour.

Egypt and the Sudan.

The Hamdam remarks that Great Britain has no right to hold the Sudan. The question can best be solved by a plebiscite as anything done against the wishes of the people will only aggravate the disaffection. The Medina regards Lord Palmour's utterance as a haughty declaration of the old British policy and says that Great Britain has no right to rule over the Sudan. It asserts that Great Britain has forced many Sudanese to express their unwillingness to be placed under the Egyptian Government. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that Zaghlul Pasha must have now realised that friendship with England is equivalent to striking a blow with an axe at one's own leg. It asks the Swarajists to take a lesson from the experience of Zaghlul Pasha before adopting a policy of cooperation with the Government. In another article the same paper characterises the speech of the British Premier as very disappointing and contrary to the principles of liberty. Commenting on the pronouncement of Viscount Grey to the effect that England could not relax her hold on the Sudan, as it is to her that the latter owes her progress and prosperity, the Vartman remarks: This pronouncement of Viscount Grey who is at best an Imperialist and a gentlemanly-looking political robber is full of pride in brute-force. It is futile to try to understand the argument he has advanced for the rejection of the Egyptian demand for the incorporation of the Sudan in Egypt because robbers, plunderers and the votaries of brute-force in fulfilling their despicable objects do not think how far their actions are reasonable, nor do they care how the civilised world will view their conduct. Obviously another conflict between Egypt and England is imminent, because the sway of brute-force cannot last long. Britain shall have to relax her hold on the Sudan just as she had to do in case of Egypt.

The Lee Commission Report.

In a leading article headed "The Lee Report and Provincialisation" the Pioneer says: If Provincial Services are established on a firm basis, the advance to provincial autonomy may be facilitated: without well-manned services the provincial administration would reach a chaotic state rendering advance in any direction impossible. An administration, whether Central or Provincial, must be able to rely on the services of trained officials independent of political influences and secure in the knowledge that proper service will ensure them protection from outside interference. The adoption of the Report's proposals for the provision of the safeguards mentioned should be complete and unhesitating: otherwise provincialisation will spell demoralisation of the Services in the transferred field and provincial autonomy will be indefinitely postponed. Khan Bahadur Qazi Aziz-ud-din writing in the Dilchasp complains that the Lee Commission has not safeguarded the rights of the Musalmans and remarks that if their share in the Indian Civil Service is not guaranteed, the Government will be responsible for leaving them in the lurch. The Government should have some posts reserved for Muslim candidates if they fail to secure an adequate percentage of posts by competition.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Tabligh alleges that the Aryas are busy in kidnapping Muslim children with a view to convert them to their religion. It also asserts that the Aryas are purchasing weapons in large numbers and advises the Musalmans not to ignore the question of their protection as Bakr Id is near at hand. The Hindustani, on the other hand, asserts that the Musalmans have established a secret organisation to kidnap Hindu children in order to convert them to Islam and remarks that in the interests of the country both Shuddhi and Tabligh movements should be stopped. Writing in a similar strain the Arya Patra remarks that the kidnapping activities of the Musalmans cast a slur on their religion and advises the Hindus not to allow their women and children to have any dealings with Muslim traders, teachers and servants. It deplores the seduction of a Hindu girl by Mr. Raza Ali, Deputy Collector, Cawnpore, and warns the Hindus to take a lesson from this incident. The Arya Varta remarks that the social evils prevailing among the Hindus are responsible for seduction of Hindu girls and says that thousands of Hindu widows, under force of natural cravings, are compelled to destroy their chastity. The Azad deplores the incident and remarks that the Deputy Magistrate ought to have kept himself aloof from this matter. It advises Government officers to act with foresight and prudence at a time when so much misunderstanding is prevailing among Hindus and Musalmans. The Gyan Shakti takes to task Mr. Gandhi for his opposition of the Shuddhi movement and accuses him of partiality towards the Musalmans. It says that while Mahatma Gandhi has opposed the formation of the Shuddhi Sabhas, on the ground that it tends to widen Hindu-Muslim dissensions, he has not discouraged the revival of the Muslim League and the existence of the Khilafat committees. It has been proved beyond doubt that the so-called Hindu-Muslim unity in which Mahatma Gandhi believed in the past was unreal and showy and that undue advantage was taken of it by the Musalmans in serving their own selfish ends. Now that they have achieved their object with the settlement of the Khilafat question they do not care for the alliance of the Hindus. If the Hindus have any wisdom in them they should devote themselves wholeheartedly to the Shuddhi and the Sangathan movements. The Pratap refers in condemnatory terms to the action of Mr. Raza Ali, Deputy Collector of Cawnpore, in converting a Hindu girl and remarks that this incident has strengthened the general belief among the Hindus that the Musalmans cannot be trusted in respect of women and children and that they try to take undue advantage of their weak position. But Islam never enjoins such things upon its followers. It is the goondas among the Musalmans who do such things. The treatment accorded to the widows in Hindu society is none the less responsible for the occurrence of such incidents. The Hindus must first set their house in order and then find fault with the Musalmans. Writing in a similar strain the Abhyudaya remarks: When educated Musalmans of the position of Mr. Raza Ali act in such manner, then it must be admitted that such activities are not confined only to the low-caste Musalmans or the Muslim goondas. The question, therefore, arises whether a person who commits such a despicable action is fit to hold the office of a deputy collector or not. An official certainly does not receive his pay from Government for carrying on proselytising activities like a private individual. Let some member of the Provincial Council take up the question.

The Bakr Id.

The Leader appeals to the thoughtful and patriotic members of both the communities to exercise the greatest restraining influence on the hot-heads of their respective communities to defeat the purpose of the mischief-makers wherever they may exist and make the forces of goodwill and concord triumph on the occasion of the next Bakr Id. Considering the immense harm already done to the cause which both the Hindus and Muhammadans have at heart, we do hope that they will exert their utmost to see that this year's Bakr Id celebration will be an entirely peaceful one. At another place the paper hopes that the appeal for tolerance and goodwill issued by some of the prominent Muslim leaders will not fall on deaf ears and that it will be more successful than similar appeals were last year. The Advocate says that it will be to the credit of both the communities if this great festival passes off happily and hopes that its appeal will not go in vain. The Indian Daily Telegraph supports the appeal issued by the Muhammadan leaders and says that it is a call for the best and most religious in both the communities and the response must be as wide as immediate. Every Hindu and Muslim with any influence ought to act at once in the spirit of the appeal.

The Congress Committee meeting.

The vernacular press is generally satisfied with the result of the Congress Committee meeting at Ahmedabad. The Oudh Akhbar expresses gratification at the reconciliation arrived at between the contending parties and hopes that the passage of the Gopinath Saha resolution in the Congress Committee will go a long way in removing the suspicions of the Anglo-Indians and the Government. The Hamdam says that the reconciliation shows that constitutional spirit and self-respect still prevail in the national organisation. The resolutions of Mahatma Gandhi should be carried out and the enemies of Indian aspirations should not be given a chance to utilise their power and deal a fatal blow to the national schemes. In another article the same paper exhorts the Indians to concentrate their energies on the constructive programme and remarks that India can secure political rights only through firm determination and self-reliance as it is idle to expect anything from Great Britain through petitions and empty threats. The Azad avers that Mr. Gandhi has gained an all-round victory at Ahmedabad and remarks that concerted action and a joint demand on behalf of all the political parties in India can alone force the British Premier to concede our rights. The Hindustani is gratified at the Akalis resolution passed by the Congress Committee and exhorts the people to become as self-sacrificing as the Akalis. It regards it impossible for men to remain non-violent under extreme provocation and demands that a limit must be prescribed for non-violence. The Haqiqat says that the no-changers, having done nothing for the constructive programme during the imprisonment of Mr. Gandhi, have no right to criticise the Swarajists for ignoring the same. The reconciliation appears to be a temporary one but for the present it has averted a great danger. The Al Khalil is at a loss to understand how Mr. Gandhi can accomplish anything with a handful of followers. The Anand opines that Mahatma Gandhi's stiff opposition of the Swarajists and his subsequent concessions to them was a clever political move on his part which resulted in uniting the Swarajists and the no-changers and making him once again the absolute dictator of the Congress. It will now be impossible for the Swarajists to act arbitrarily and they will have to follow the course prescribed by Mahatma Gandhi. In another article the same paper remarks that the proceedings of the All-India Congress Committee show that Mr. Gandhi is still respected throughout the country and that all the parties within the Congress are willing to follow his lead. Government would do well to overhaul the Reforms and confer further rights on the Indian people if it wants to avoid facing a serious agitation. The Aj congratulates Mr. Gandhi on the compromise, which is entirely due to the conciliatory attitude adopted by him. It is now the duty of the Swarajists to attach greater importance to Congress work than to activities in the Councils. The no-changers also should give up lethargy and come into the field of activities with redoubled energy. By their self-sacrifice and hard labour they can still convert the Swarajists into no-changers. In another article the same paper remarks that the proceedings of the meeting have shown that although a fundamental difference of opinion exists between the Swarajists and the no-changers on the question of Council entry still there is a unanimity of opinion among them in respect of the Congress programme. The Swarajists with the rest of the country are willing to obey Mahatma Gandhi and they have offered to him the absolute dictatorship of the Congress. Everything depends upon the Mahatma, and, if he chooses, the non-cooperation movement can once more gain its former strength. The Haldhar is gratified that the modifications made by Mahatma Gandhi in his original resolutions saved the Congress from a catastrophe. It hopes that both the parties in the Congress will now carry on Congress work vigorously under the strategy of Mahatma Gandhi and devote all their energies to the fulfilment of the Congress programme and the removal of the existing slackness. On the other hand, the Swadesh holds the compromise to be only nominal as the differences of opinion that prevailed among congressmen not only remain where they stood before but have been further strengthened. The Abhyudaya also does not attach any value to the compromise and does not consider it to be at all beneficial to the country. The truce is only temporary and is bound to be destroyed sooner or later. The Swaraj party and the no-changers are indeed diametrically opposed to each other and it is wrong to think that each is a part of the other. Only one party can occupy a predominant position in the country and the country will have to decide tomorrow, if not today, which party should predominate. Without such an arrangement the work of the Congress cannot be carried on in a satisfactory manner. The Vartman remarks that the tears which flowed from the eyes of Mahatma Gandhi at the meeting will fill the cowards with enthusiasm, strike terror into the sinners, electrify the public, and will bring about the fulfilment of his programme by the country within five months. These tears will make heroes of Indians whose sacrifices will uproot the injustice done by the British Empire and the foundation of Indian freedom will be laid on that day when the brave sons of Mother India will fill up with their dead bodies the ditches dug by the perpetrators of injustice.

The O'Dwyer-Nair case.

The Hindustani resents the statement of the Premier supporting the conduct of Justice McCardie and remarks that no reliance can be placed on British statesmen as they never do what they say. It is shameful that a great statesman like Mr. MacDonald is supporting General Dyer. The Aj remarks that as the book Gandhi and Anarchy for which Sir Michael O'Dwyer sued Sir Sankaran Nair, was compiled under the inspiration of the Government of India, it is but fair that the cost of the libel suit should also be borne by the Government of India. Let India spend a few more lakhs of rupees for Dwyerism!

Tarkeshwar satyagraha.

The Hindu Gazette of Hardwar describes the Tarkeshwar satyagraha as a protest of the Hindu community against hypocracy and exhorts Hindu youths to sacrifice their lives and property in vigorously carrying on the satyagraha against the Mahant who possesses great wealth and is supported by Government. In another article the same paper publishes the statement of the Mahant made to one of its representatives in which the Mahant remarked that being forsaken by the Hindus he took shelter with the Government, that he is prepared to come to terms and that the satyagraha cannot harm him as all the big zamindars of Bengal are with him.

The Punjab Press.

The Hindustani expresses its gratification at the communiqué issued by the Punjab Government regarding the necessity of taking measures against the newspapers who spread communal hatred and thanks Maulana Muhammad Ali for inspiring the Government to take such a step. The Hamdam says that not the Government but the Indians themselves are responsible for patronising such papers, and that instead of abusing the Government Indians should boycott the papers which spread communal hatred.

Restoration of Berar.

The ban imposed by the Nizam against the entry of the Mahratta into the Hyderabad State has provided the Aj with a plea to oppose the Nizam's demand for the restoration of Berar. It remarks: Although we are not opposed to the Nizam's demand and wish that justice should be done to the people of Berar, in view of his irresponsible and autocratic action in banning the Mahratta we must say that the good of Berar lies in remaining outside the terrible sway of the Nizam.

The Cawnpore mill riot.

The Advocate says: The report of the non-official enquiry committee should be taken to be true word by word. The whole blame lies upon the police officials who greatly misuse their power and show how callous and irresponsible they are. The whole responsibility for the incident lies upon the conduct of the police and makes it incumbent upon the high officials to deal effective punishment to the culprits. The Oudh Akhbar supports the recommendation of the non-official enquiry committee that an Act should be passed by the Legislative Council for the prevention of such riots in future and that as far as possible the police should not be allowed to interfere in such disputes, which should be settled by a reconciliation board appointed for the purpose and that firing should be absolutely prohibited. The greatest blunder committed at Cawnpore was the calling out of the armed police for quelling such an ordinary disturbance. The Hamdam credits the report of the committee as reliable and regrets that the Government sent no witness of its own before the committee. It hopes that the Government will favourably consider the recommendations of the committee with a view to prevent future disturbances which result in considerable loss of life.

Release of Parbati Devi.

Eulogising the services of Parbati Devi in the cause of the country the Medina sarcastically remarks that the United Provinces Government has gained the enviable credit of subjecting a woman to every kind of hardship in jail. Her sacrifices will form a memorable chapter in the history of the world. Although the Bharat Jiwan is jubilant at the release of Shrimati Parbati Devi before the expiry of her term of imprisonment, it is grieved to find that her health has been shattered, which it ascribes to the hardships she had to undergo in jail. It pays a glowing tribute to the services rendered by her to the national cause and prays that she may be able to rejoin the nation's fight for freedom. The Pratap remarks that by releasing Shrimati Parbati Devi, at a time when her term of imprisonment was about to expire, the United Provinces Government cannot certainly be credited with having taken a courageous and generous step. The Devi had to undergo great suffering in jail. Are not the Indian jails veritable hotbeds of brutality? We are not in favour of sending ladies to jail to be insulted by the brutes therein, but we must pay homage to the heroines who voluntarily went to jail for the sake of their country and cheerfully suffered all sorts of humiliation.

The Public Works Department reorganisation.

Commenting on the Government resolution on the report of the Public Works Department Reorganisation Committee the Leader says: There are agreeable features in the resolution, but the disappointments are easily more serious. On the whole we are justified in comparing this belated resolution as the result of the labours of the Committee of two years ago, with the proverbial little creature which was all that could be delivered by the mountain in labour. The person whom we can the least congratulate is that member of the Committee who is now the Hon. Minister in charge of the Public Works Department.

Bolshevism.

The Medina remarks: The Eastern nations have now realised the sad plight and oppressions to which they have been subjected by Imperialistic Europe. The time is not far when the paralysed and oppressed people of the East will revolt against European tyranny and domination and readily respond to Bolshevik propaganda. British statesmen should attend to the just demands and rights of Indians otherwise it will be impossible to overcome the irresistible Bolshevik influence. The Vartman remarks that the International Bolshevik conference has decided to cut the very roots of the British Empire by propagating the principles of Bolshevism in the Dominions, for it is upon the Dominions that the British Empire is based.

Situation in Europe.

COMMENTING on the London Conference the Pioneer regrets that the gloomy feeling which prevails in Paris and the misgivings which are being freely uttered in the French Press suggest that the French people have learnt nothing and are still content to live in a fool's paradise. It is difficult to see how any sane man can view the failure of the London Conference with equanimity. If that failure is the result of French obstinacy, France will be assuming a heavy responsibility and will, we fear, be destined to experience a sharp and rude awakening. And the first symptom of the economic paralysis which may be expected to creep over Europe will probably be seen in another precipitate decline in the quotation for the franc. The Hindustani views with apprehension the growing tension between France and Germany and remarks that the French demands being utterly opposed to German interests there is little likelihood of their being ever accepted by the latter. The Hamdam remarks that the political horizon of Europe has again become cloudy and the signs of a mighty storm are visible. It asks the statesmen of Europe to avert the danger of another war which is likely to jeopardize the peace of the entire world.

The Khilafat.

A correspondent writing to the Naiyar-i-Azam exhorts the Muslim world to do its duty by convening a conference for the speedy solution of the Khilafat question and remarks that the Khilafat is an important institution of Islam the maintenance of which is essential both from the spiritual and temporal point of view. Its abolition is irreligious and the deportation of the Khalifa and his family simply amounts to profanity.

Egypt and the Sudan.

The Medina says that the object of Great Britain in evacuating Egypt was to strengthen its hold upon the Sudan in order to deal a blow to Islamic prestige in Africa. It exhorts the African Musalmans not to give up their right to the Sudan as long as they are alive, as it is better to die an honourable death than to lead a life of slavery and starvation. The Haqiqat finds fault with the British policy and supports the claim of Egypt whose resources were employed for the material development of the Sudan. If Great Britain persists in its obdurate policy, it will meet the same fate in the Sudan as in Egypt.

The Delhi riots.

Commenting on the fracas at Delhi the Pioneer says that the communal disturbances strengthen the case of those who contend that India is not yet fit for a further constitutional advance. Communal tension and caste friction will continue to be the greatest obstacles to the attainment of swaraj until fanaticism has been sufficiently modified by persistent and tedious educational spade work for their causes to be removed. The Leader says: The capital of India has been disgraced by this outburst of communal feeling, which is the product of intolerance, ignorance and folly combined. The opponents of India's progress have been presented with further material for exploiting public opinion against the Indian demand for constitutional advance, and those who have indulged in insensate fighting have rendered a serious disservice to the national cause. It hopes that the vernacular papers and the champions of exclusive communal interests will exercise a wise self-restraint and will not aggravate matters by thoughtless comments or utterances and will thus localise the trouble. The Advocate says that the fracas at Delhi, in spite of the statement issued by Maulana Muhammad Ali, reveals that the masses have lost faith in the Ali brothers and so they paid no attention to their manifesto. In a leading article headed "The Delhi riots—Failure of Indian leadership," the Indian Daily Telegraph says: There is no hope of getting over the political significance of the happenings at Delhi. The atmosphere was surcharged. The authorities were prepared. Thank God they were, else the situation might have been unmanageable. The leaders were on the alert. And yet the dreaded thing has happened. This shows the impotency of leaders to influence and direct the populace. Remember, it is not the aberration of a stray vagabond. It is the whole mass being at the kindling temperature ready to burst into flames the moment a Muslim boy and a Kahar come into contact.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

A correspondent writing to the Tohfa-i-Hind deplores the attitude of Mr. Gandhi towards the Arya Samajists and remarks :—Is it because the Mahatma's war with the 'Satanic Government' has come to an end that he has now picked up a quarrel with the Aryas? If it is a political move on his part to revive Hindu-Muslim unity, he should know that this last attempt of his will prove as disappointing and unsuccessful as all the previous ones. The Zulqarnain in a communicated article takes to task the Hindus and the Musalmans for paying no regard to the statement of Mr. Gandhi and remarks that unless they give proof of their self-sacrifice and statesmanship they will be quite unfit for swaraj, which will rather prove injurious and fatal to their interests. It asks Mr. Gandhi to alter his programme in the light of the present situation. The Al Bureed interprets the alleged seduction of a Hindu girl at Cawnpore as a gross exaggeration and remarks that the Deputy Collector is not to blame as he duly asked her parents to come and take her back, and it was only on their showing indifference that he allowed her to change her religion. The Aligarh Gazette casts a fling at the Ali brothers for being abject followers of Mr. Gandhi and remarks that the blind support of Mr. Shaukat Ali to Mr. Gandhi at Ahmedabad and the act of Mr. Muhammad Ali of placing his head at the feet of Mr. Gandhi are greatly humiliating to the Musalmans. The Arya Mittra complains that the Muslim mind is at present wholly occupied in converting Hindu women and children to Islam. Khwaja Hasan Nizami's book Dai-e-Islam has created an upheaval in the religious world of the country and his destructive scheme has exasperated the Hindus and caused irretrievable injury to their religion. Hindus should remain as alert as ever and beware of the germs of Khwaja Hasan Nizami's venomous scheme.

The Hindu organisation.

Swami Satyadev writing in the Abhyudaya says that the organisation of the Hindus is the most effective means of making India free. Without it the freedom of India is an idle dream. Hindu organisation is not opposed to nationalism. It is an infallible means of establishing true Hindu-Muslim unity. It is on account of the weakness of the Hindus that other communities in India are not anxious to coalesce with them. But when the Hindus are strongly organised the Musalmans will also come under the flag of the Hindu organisation and abandon their extra-territorial patriotism. It is misleading to think that the Hindu organisation is against the ideals of the Congress. On the other hand, it is bound to strengthen the Congress, eradicate communal dissensions and transform India into one homogeneous nation.

Congress politics.

Referring to Mr. Muhammad Ali's appeal to Congress workers the Indian Daily Telegraph hopes that the appeal will act with particular force on a large section of the public. It does not, however, approve of Muhammad Ali's constant reference to Gandhi and his health. It will not do as Maulana Muhammad Ali has frankly said that he has no other programme than the charkha leading to civil disobedience. We sincerely hope he was not serious. We do not ourselves believe it. It would be fatal to the progress of the country if it were so. The nation asks for a fresh invigorating programme. The leaders must think it out. It is time that the leaders ceased to think of how to patch up their differences. The Advocate points out that it is useless to repeat the same statement again and again under the cloak of Mahatma Gandhi. The Hamdard remarks: An impartial observer will come to the logical conclusion that Mr. Gandhi has removed the penal clause from his resolutions simply with a view to keep the members under his control and that by acquiescing in cooperating with the Government he has not only admitted his defeat but has completely forsaken his principles as well. The discussion on the Sirajganj resolution has shown that there are only few persons who are prepared to accept Mahatmaji's doctrine of non-violence. The Aligarh Gazatte says that probably Mr. Gandhi never dreamt up to this time that there were also other leaders in India besides himself but the proceedings at Ahmedabad have now opened his eyes. In another article the same paper takes to task Mr. Gandhi for his appreciation of the so-called patriotism displayed by Gopinath Saha and asks where is the necessity of inculcating the principle of "non-violence" when even murder and bloodshed can be counted as acts of patriotism. The Hind-i-Jadid is gratified at the reconciliation between the contending parties at Ahmedabad and predicts that a new era of activities is soon to begin in India under the leadership of the Mahatma. It remarks that the time of trial has come when Indians should scorn all dangers and firmly advance forward. The Garhwali opines that Mr. Gandhi acted prudently in modifying his resolutions and remarks that what the Mahatma regards as his defeat is in fact symbolical of the true victory of his ideals and principles. It regards the compromise as only temporary and remarks that the sparks which burst out but were however promptly extinguished at Ahmedabad are the forerunners of a big fire which may break out at Belgaum. The Hindi Kesari remarks that an impartial review of the proceedings of the meeting of the All-India Congress Committee makes it abundantly clear that the meeting resulted in a victory in favour of the Swarajists and that 'Mahatma Gandhi failed to achieve anything whatsoever. Instead of getting new followers the Mahatma found to his utter discomfiture that the number of his old adherents had decreased. Indeed, the Mahatma is himself responsible for this unwelcome fall. The Aj vehemently opposes Mr. Gandhi's plan of excluding the Swarajists from the Congress by securing a majority against them at Belgaum and remarks that the existing constitution of the Congress is the most suited for the present time and any changes in it would be ill-advised and may prove fatal. If Mr. Gandhi considers his five-fold boycott as indispensable for the political salvation of the country and is determined to enforce it, then instead of accentuating party feelings and giving rise to acrimonious discussions by trying to oust the Swarajists from the Congress, he should unhesitatingly accept the dictatorship of the nation for the Swarajists are ever willing to follow him.

Mr. Gandhi.

In a leading article headed the "Evolution of Mr. Gandhi's politics" the Leader congratulates Mr. Gandhi on the remarkable change that has been taking place in his attitude towards Council entry. The Swarajists may now claim that the wisdom of their policy has been vindicated by the Mahatma. But the victory lies with the constitutionalists who from the very beginning opposed the Council boycott. The most opportune time for the Swarajists to come out of the Councils will probably never come, for Mr. Gandhi's programme is dead and the whole-hoggers are not likely to become active workers of that programme. If Mr. Gandhi does not realise this truth now he will do it later, and then he may by gradual stages, like his more astute Swarajist lieutenants, become a full-fledged constitutionalist. It expects that Mr. Gandhi's future policy will be to restore unity in the Congress by excluding all controversial items and by adopting a programme to which no one can take serious objection.

The O'Dwyer-Nair case.

The Bharat Jiwan remarks that Indians should feel ashamed that while an Englishman has sent a cheque to Sir Sankaran Nair, in reduction pro tanto of his bill of costs, as a sign of his respect for Sir Sankaran's feelings and his sympathy with him in the insult offered to him by the British judge, they have passed over the matter with equanimity. No one has thought of even raising a fund in order to help Sir Sankaran Nair at the hour of his distress. Can there be a more convincing proof of India's impotency than this? The Bhavishya also refers to the cheque sent to Sir Sankaran Nair and insinuates that either Sir Michael O'Dwyer himself sent it anonymously through a friend of his, in order to ease his conscience, or it was sent by Mr. McCardie as a demonstration of his sympathy towards Sir Sankaran with the object of allaying the prevailing dissatisfaction finding that there was no other means of escaping the criticisms levelled against him and the British law courts. Whatever may be the mystery this cheque cannot wash off the blot of injustice. The Desh Bhakta remarks that although the verdict in the O'Dwyer Nair suit will form a shameful chapter in the history of England, the sympathetic action of the Englishman who sent a cheque to Sir Sankaran will be recorded in letters of gold in the history of India.

The Punjab Press.

The Medina expresses its gratification at the action taken by the Punjab Government against certain papers and remarks that it ought to have been the duty of the public to stop the publication of such papers. The step taken by the Government is commendable in every way though the matter was at first ignored by it.

Situation in the Punjab.

According to the Pioneer the Akali extremists are watching the new Governor with undisguised interest. Although the Congress has blessed the movement, the bulk of the Hindus and Muhammadans in the Punjab are hostile to the Akalis and see in their aims an attempt to assert Sikh dominance to the danger of their own communities. By producing an atmosphere which will encourage the moderate Sikhs in their counter-propaganda against the Akalis, and by giving moral support to those efforts the Government can best hope to evolve a reasonable and sufficiently solid spirit among the Sikhs. No conciliation but steady pressure will presumably be the watchword; it is to be hoped that it will be linked up with a firm intention to distinguish between the enemies and the friends of the Government. Sympathisers with the Akalis should be taught that they cannot have their bread buttered on both sides. Government service, pensions, grants of land are inconsistent with the support of a movement which aims at destroying the source from which those benefits come.

Restoration of Berar.

The Haqiqat supports the view of Qazi Aziz-ud-din Ahmad that no propaganda should have been started for the restoration of Berar but remarks that once the mistake has been committed it will not be fruitful to stop it. It admits that the propaganda, not being conducted methodically, has done more harm than good to the State. The Paigham supports the demand of the Nizam who has ever been an ally of the Government and remarks that the refusal to restore Berar to him will show that all the promises of self-government made by the Government were meaningless and unreal.

The Cawnpore mill riot.

The Vartman supports the findings of the non-official enquiry committee and contrasting them with those of the official committee remarks: We emphatically protest against the evasive nature of the official enquiry and wish to warn the authorities that administration should not be thought to be so easy as that human beings may be indiscriminately shot down like beasts and then the whole matter may be conveniently hushed up. Any rule based on bullets cannot last long. Incidents like the cotton mill firing are being engrained into the hearts of the Indians, and if the culprits are not adequately punished and Government continues to display pratiality it will have to rue the terrible consequences of its actions sooner or later.

The convicts in the Bolshevik conspiracy case.

The Pratap complains that the convicts in the Bolshevik conspiracy case who were hitherto accorded special treatment are now treated as ordinary criminals and have been made to wear jail uniform and to put on the prisoner's ring and ticket. They were provided with such bad food that they could not possibly eat it and have been keeping hungry. It remarks that if it had been a matter with Europeans they would have been provided with suitable clothes and food in jail even if they were convicted for theft and the like. It is nothing but sheer meanness on the part of the Government to have made such a change in the treatment originally accorded to these political convicts.

The Jhansi district board.

The Aj congratulates the Chairman and the members of the Jhansi district board on publishing the annual report of the board in vernacular and remarks that of all the municipal and district boards in these provinces it is the first to adopt this commendable procedure. It will now be easy for the public of Jhansi to get a full knowledge of the work done by their district board and it will also be able to take greater interest in the work of the board. Other municipal and district boards in these provinces should emulate the example of the Jhansi district board.

The Agra University.

The Pioneer says: That Allahabad will benefit by the removal of this incubus to Agra can hardly be gainsaid, though it might have been supposed that it would have been quite feasible to organise the two sides of the Allahabad University on the lines of those of the University of London, which still retains its external side notwithstanding its growing pride in the development of the teaching and residential side of its activities.

The United Provinces Council.

A correspondent writing to the Oudh Akhbar views with disfavour the rumoured postponement of the United Provinces Council session in July and remarks that if the Council session is not held for a long time, there will be a great accumulation of work which will become unmanageable. It further creates suspicions in the minds of the people that the Government has no interest in the Council. The correspondent suggests that the rules regarding the Council sessions should be amended and the sessions should be regularly held after every three months. The Haqiqat regrets the postponement of the Council session on the ground of economy and remarks that the Councils have been established with the object of inviting the attention of the Government to the grievances and the needs of the people. But the Governor of these Provinces having taken a conspicuous part in the framing of the Reforms Act can more correctly judge the object of their establishment. If His Excellency Sir William Marris continues to be economical in this way then the Reforms will cease to exist for practical purposes in these Provinces though a great saving may be effected in the provincial revenues.

The Kisan organisation.

Lieutenant Nawab Muhammad Jamshed Ali, M.L.C., in a signed letter to the Haqiqat and other papers, apprehends that Kisan Sabhas will be a source of constant danger to the zamindar community as they will support their own demands and assail the rights of the zamindars. The only way of having their grievances redressed is to establish a joint sabha of the zamindars and the tenants and both parties should amicably arrive at a settlement which may ensure happy relations in future. Referring to the resolutions passed in a recent meeting of the United Provinces Kisan Sabha at Allahabad, the Mashriq expresses the apprehension that the increasing spirit of freedom amongst the cultivators may result in a speedy spread of Bolshevism in the country. It criticises the Government for ignoring the loyalty and services of the zamindars. It asks the latter to cease to oppress their tenants and to start an organisation for the protection of their rights otherwise under the régime of the Labour Cabinet in Britain they will be nowhere.

Political propaganda.

The Pratap publishes a letter from its special correspondent at Lhasa in the course of which he says that the British Government is endeavouring to get a hold over Tibet. The glamour of Western civilisation and the introduction of motor traffic and a telegraph line in Tibet by the British Government has attracted the Tibetans to some extent. The correspondent further says that he was informed by an official of Lhasa who is connected with the administration that the British Government had made the Dalai (Tashai?) Lama of Shigatsi its favourite and that it was apprehended that the British Government would set the Tashai Lama and the Dalai Lama against each other, and then under the pretext of justice and friendship it would adopt a hostile attitude against the latter, make a raid upon Lhasa and deprive the Dalai Lama of some of his rights. The correspondent remarks that such a contingency is not remote. The slavery of Tibet will be a fresh nail in the coffin of Asia.

Trade Unionism.

The weekly Mazdoor of Cawnpore in a leading article says: Our workmen and kisans bear the whole burden of the country and things are so arranged that no matter how hard they may work, they cannot escape from their awful position. All the fruits of their toil, all that could better their lot, give them leisure and consequently education, are swallowed up by the capitalist exploiters and official monopolists. Society in our land is so constituted that the more they work the more they (the capitalists and the official monopolists) enrich themselves while they (labourers) go on as beasts of burden for ever. This state of things must be mended or ended for the good of all. We must strike out a medium where the product, the profit, and the means of production should be common to all. This may look a bit like the spirit of Communism, but there is no other way than to put the above principles into practice if we wish to see our workmen and kisans content without starvation and their women and children clothed instead of being in rags, or naked.

The Khilafat.

THE Haqiqat has no hope of the revival of the Khilafat movement in India, which has already suffered an irreparable loss on account of the shortsighted action of the Turks. It was bound up with the non-cooperation movement and its fate was sealed when the latter failed. No Islamic Conference and no deputation to Angora can now revive the enthusiasm for the Khilafat and the emanciption of the Jazirat-ul-Arab. The Rohilkhand Gazette protests against the waste of public funds in sending a deputation to Angora and remarks that in view of maladministration of the Khilafat Fund in the past it is idle to expect that the Musalmans will once more be willing to make any sacrifice. The Hamdam regrets that the Government is still hesitating to issue passports to the members of the Khilafat deputation and hopes that it will take early steps in this connection. Writing in a similar strain the Hind-i-Jadid advises the Government not to prolong the question unnecessarily when once it has satisfied itself regarding the personnel of the deputation and remarks that any further delay on the part of the Government is likely to aggravate popular unrest. The Oudh Akhbar writes on the authority of the Al Aman that Sharif Husain has employed agents in India to advocate his cause and warns the Musalmans to beware of the dangerous propaganda of these agents. The Gayanshakti refers in condemnatory terms to the decision of the Khilafat Committees to devote themselves to proselytism and Muslim organisation and remarks that in the face of this decision the apprehension that proselytism and Muslim organisation are the ultimate goal of the Khilafat Committees, is not unwarranted. It is the duty of Mahatma Gandhi to emphatically protest against this decision and unless it is withdrawn it is incumbent upon all the Hindu members to resign in a body their membership of the Khilafat Committees.

Mosul and Iraq.

The Najat has no hope of any reconciliation between England and Turkey after the breakdown of the Mosul Conference and remarks that the only possible solution of the question is war for which both parties are making preparations. The Haqiqat remarks that as the Iraq people resent the British mandate, the Anglo-Iraq agreement will become as inoperative as the Anglo-Egyptian agreement. It is astounding that British statesmen have not yet fully appreciated the determination of the people of Iraq otherwise they would have relinquished their hold upon the country.

Egypt and the Sudan.

The Aj holds that the British Imperialists are determined not to relax their hold upon the Sudan and consequently any interference in this matter on the part of the League of Nations is unacceptable to them. The Pratap is convinced that Britain will never agree to the incorporation of the Sudan into Egypt and regards the proposed visit of Zaghlul Pasha to England as a barren effort. It asks Zaghlul Pasha to be guided by the views of his countrymen who have no faith in British diplomacy and to try to win back the Sudan—not beg for it. The moral of the recent assault on his life is plain if only he will profit by it.

The Indian debate in the House of Lords.

To the Pioneer the Indian debate in the House of Lords seems to have been a rather colourless affair. If there was nothing spectacular about the debate, it was by no means lacking in interest. The speech of Viscount Peel showed an accurate appreciation of the significance of recent events in India. In his observations on Mr. Das's amazing coquetries with the revolutionary party in Bengal the Secretary of State undoubtedly lays himself open to the criticism that he has failed to appreciate the danger of the Swarajist leader's attempt to canonise a murderer. That such a resolution could have been proposed in all seriousness is a striking testimony to the contagion of the cult of spurious patriotism inaugurated by Mr. Das. The Swarajists, however, will be able to derive little satisfaction from the attitude of the Secretary of State towards them and their leader. The Secretary of State is not favourably impressed with the methods of the Swaraj party. Indeed, those methods have done much to strengthen the case against any immediate constitutional advance so far as public opinion in Great Britain is concerned. The Leader characterises the debate as "unhopeful." The most important part of Lord Olivier's speech is its third section dealing with the political situation and constitutional reform. The paper is glad and relieved to know that the blunder is not to be committed of a prosecution of Mr. C. R. Das. But it doubts the wisdom as well as the propriety of the Secretary of State's commentary on that resolution. The Swarajists will note that while they are patted on the back their cause itself has received little encouragement and their methods are not commended as promising the results they have at heart. It is all Swarajists and no swaraj. Their theatrical display and 'ostensible' successes are being promptly met by amendments of the rules and by the temporary resumption of transferred subjects. This is the only result the Swarajists can show to the country which unsuspectingly took them at their word and placed its trust in them. All that has been said with regard to the amendment of the Government of India Act is mere toying or trifling with a momentous subject. Whatever intentions may lie hidden in the breasts of Mr. MacDonald and Lord Olivier, their public utterances down to date have been extremely disappointing and even surprising from a party that has proclaimed the principles and policies it has. Their net result is—nil: Indians are not to expect an early revision of the constitution. They must go on as they have been going on. Verily may the United Services Clubs at Simla and Calcutta and other important centres celebrate the occasion and drink with musical honours to the toast of 'Long live the bureaucracy.' The Indian Daily Telegraph says that Lord Peel, the late Secretary of State, failed even to make a forceful gesture of disapproval of Lord Olivier's Indian policy. Lord Lee also made his almost trembling contribution to the debate actuated, no doubt, by the exalted motive that his great life work in the organisation of an authorised loot of Indian revenues for the services should not be shelved indefinitely. The argument that the bond between England and India was weakening because of the discontent in the Services was perhaps the most formidable in the Peel quiver: it will cause a smile in India where the word civilian has almost become synonymous for an officer dressed in high authority who never cared for the bond at all. If Gandhi were the conscience-keeper of the Government then there would have been more peace and harmony in India today than we have. The most inexcusable portion of Lord Olivier's speech was his explicit statement that if the Reforms Committee should convince the Government of India he would not hesitate to so amend the Act. Lord Olivier has not cared to rally Nationalist support to his side to compensate for the organised howl that he is sure to start in his country and among his countrymen. He has done his best, on the other hand, to alienate the Swarajists by affecting to despise them and the leadership of Mr. Das. It is strange that Lord Olivier had nothing very serious or significant to speak on the Akali problem—the greatest problem of the hour. The Advocate remarks that Lord Peel, the late Secretary of State, cut a very sorry figure in the House of Lords when he failed to disapprove Lord Olivier's Indian policy. The debate in the House of Lords contains nothing of importance for India except the remarks made by Lord Olivier regarding the amending of Reforms. Lord Olivier altogether ignored to speak anything concerning the Akali question which is engaging the attention of the politicians of the day. The Hamdam says that, judging from the speech of the Secretary of State, it is clear that the Labour Party, in spite of all its professions of sympathy and friendliness towards India, has not yet even attempted to understand Indian problems. The expectations which were raised on the assumption of Government by the Labour Party are gradually being turned into disappointment. The present statement by the Secretary of State does not contain even the little sympathy which characterised his previous statements on the Indian policy.

Indian Mercantile Marine.

The Pioneer characterises the recommendations of the Indian Mercantile Marine as unpractical and says: Technical knowledge and expert training are essential requirements in the shipping trade as in others, but when it comes to seamanship and handling engines at sea, important personal factors are called into play, not the least of them being the management of men of diverse types in a diversity of conditions. Without the sea sense and the traditions evolving it, failure is certain. Until, therefore, the training ship has answered the question thereby raised and the conversion of the Royal Indian Marine into a combatant Indian Navy has revealed the extent to which men are forthcoming for the profession of the sea, it is idle to frame ambitious schemes for a completely or predominently Indianised mercantile marine. The Indian Daily Telegraph welcomes the recommendation of the Committee and says that one thing alone would help to bring into existence an Indian Mercantile Marine: that is Indianisation of the ownership and management of ships. If direct action is taken for the protection of Indian shipping in coastal trade, Indian investors would be forthcoming. One effective method of encouraging the growth is the licensing system insisting on apprentices being taken and appointed to high posts in the service.

The Delhi riots.

The Pioneer says: It is not surprising that the Delhi riots are influencing public opinion in England against the propaganda now being conducted by the numerous Indian delegates. The British people recognise that they are symptoms of a malady for the cure of which constitutional remedies are unavailing. In a leading article the Leader asserts that in the unfortunate happening at Delhi both the communities are more or less to blame. It, therefore, strongly deprecates the attempts that are being made in certain organs of the press to shift the entire responsibility on to the shoulders of one or the other community. The absence of any mass attempt to looting or incendiarism was a relieving feature of the situation. It is to be hoped that after the letting out of communal passions neighbourly feelings will be rapidly restored and both sides will realise the utter folly of such violent exhibition of intolerance which is equally dangerous and disgraceful in itself and besides strengthens the hands of the opponents of both the Hindus and the Muhammadans in their efforts at constitutional advance. The authorities had one of the most anxious and difficult situations to face, and if they had not made arrangements for emergencies the loss of life and the number of wounded would probably have been much greater. The administration did not break down as it did last year at Saharanpur with disastrous results. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Mahatma Gandhi's platitudes in his newspaper articles will not solve, neither will the militant spirit that Swami Shraddhanand seeks to breathe into Hindus to overawe the Musalman, solve the question. Something else has to be discovered. And even more important than the number of yards of thread reeled out of the charkha is the correct solution of the Hindu-Muslim problem. The Pioneer says that as a result of the recent riots Delhi today furnishes a striking object-lesson of India's need of the British administrator to hold the balance even and keep the peace between rival religious factions. Under any swaraj administration the riot would have assumed far greater dimensions; and it is the knowledge of this which is responsible for that strengthening of the prestige of the authorities. The vernacular press is unanimous in deploring the recent bloodshed in Delhi. The Hamdam accuses the Hindus of making preparations beforehand and remarks that such disturbances are calculated to injure the national movement and afford an opportunity to our opponents to rejoice at our distress. The Haqiqat regrets that the Delhi people did not in the least respect the precious tears which Mahatma Gandhi shed at the meeting of the Congress Committee. The Rahnuma holds both the communities responsible for the disturbance and exhorts the leaders to postpone their other activities and proceed to Delhi at once to remove communal tension and restore unity. The Hindustani says that such disturbances are likely to prejudice English minds against India's demand for swaraj. The Bharat Jiwan interprets the communal fracas at Delhi as a manifestation of the mutual distrust and hatred that exists between the Hindus and the Musalmans. It remarks that this mutual enmity is disastrous and has cut the very roots of the political agitation. The only means of removing it is to fix a common programme of work for both the communities and until it is done it is impossible to prevent the repetition of the deplorable occurrence at Delhi. The Aj remarks that Delhi has blackened the face of India. The Hindus and Musalmans of that place have by indulging in insensate fighting not only disgraced their communities but also strewn thorns in the path of swaraj by presenting the enemies of India with further material for exploiting public opinion against the Indian demand. The Abhyudaya remarks that if Hinduism and Islam mean that the Hindus and the Musalmans should fight against each other for trivial matters, then the effacement of Hinduism and Islam from India will not be seriously regretted. The Pratap complains that the Musalmans practised diabolical atrocities upon the Hindus during the communal disturbance at Delhi and remarks that fanaticism is a peculiar feature of Islam. If Muhammad, the Prophet, were to witness these doings of his followers his heart would be shocked by this religious fanaticism on their part. For the freedom of India it is indispensable that the Musalman bullies should be suppressed and the cowardice of the Hindus removed. So long as every individual in the country does not only feel that he is safe at the hands of his brethren but is also convinced that at the hour of calamity his countrymen will come to his help irrespective of religious and communal considerations, the yoke of subjection cannot be removed from the shoulders of India.

Ministers in Bengal.

In a leading article the Leader says: Do Ministers' salaries become a reserved item merely because of their inclusion in the major head of general administration when the recipients of the salaries are themselves transferred beings? We do not want Ministers to hold office nam ke waste, when their salaries are not voted, their financial demands for the working of their departments are rejected or unduly and unreasonably reduced, when a majority of their colleagues in the Legislative Council take the trouble to show in diverse ways that they are not wanted—that they are a new species of untouchables. In such an atmosphere no Ministers—not even Gladstones and Disraelis—can do useful service and when this is so, they should not nominally exist as Ministers. For this reason we were sorry that the two Bengal Ministers did not resign in March; we are sorry still that they have not yet done so.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Haqiqat exhorts the leaders to concentrate all their energies in removing the growing estrangement between the two communities, otherwise they can never succeed in achieving swaraj. Dwelling upon the necessity of unity between the two communities the Mehnat of Cawnpore remarks that the country is keenly eager for some sort of activity and once the activity begins all differences will vanish. Our ideal should not be cow protection but human protection as is expressed by the word swaraj. The Arya Mittra condemns the kidnapping of Hindu women and children by Muslims and remarks that it is extremely regrettable that the Government which calls itself the custodian of peace and order should look upon such demonical activities with indifference which is, however, no justification for the slackness of the Hindus in the matter of protecting the honour of their women and the prestige of their religion. If Hindus are so impotent and cowardly that they cannot protect themselves then it will be for the good of humanity that they should be annihilated.

Congress politics.

Referring to the resignations recently tendered by members of the Congress Committees on account of the spinning resolution passed at Ahmedabad, the Leader says: The effect of these resignations may be to make the executive bodies homogeneous, but it will not necessarily be greater activity on their part. They will now consist almost wholly of the unquestioningly faithful followers of Mr. Gandhi, those to whom his word is still law, as it was to all including the Dases and Nehrus until he was sent away to prison. The next few months will show whether the Congress organisations have become stronger or weaker by this drastic purge. The places of men like Bhagwan Das and others who have resigned in Benares will have to be filled up by lesser men, which cannot result in strengthening the executive. The Arya Varta is gratified at the success of the Swarajists at Ahmedabad and hopes that the reconciliation arrived at between them and the no-changers will prove to be a permanent one and will enable the Congress to concentrate all its energies and successfully fight out the battle of swaraj. The Abhyudaya congratulates Mr. Gandhi on his decision that the boycott of the Councils by the Swarajists at the present time will augur ill to the country and remarks that this decision is a vindication of the policy of the Swarajists and removes a great obstacle from the path of national progress. The Anand remarks that the revolutionary change which Mahatma Gandhi's views about Council entry have undergone goes to certify the superiority of the statesmanship and the political sagacity of the Swarajist leaders. The Swarajists may now triumphantly assert that Mahatma Gandhi has ultimately yielded to their view. The Vartman opines that the suspension of all the items of the non-cooperation programme except the propagation of khaddar, establishment of Hindu-Muslim unity and removal of untouchability is a sagacious political move on the part of Mahatma Gandhi bound to bring about the desired result. The special feature of this programme is its universality for every political party, every community and every individual in the country can participate in working it out and it is to this universality that it owes its efficacy. If only the whole country devotes itself to the fulfilment of this programme the need for satyagraha will never arise and India shall be able to attain freedom at the cheapest price.

Reforms Enquiry Committee.

The Leader agrees with the Bombay Presidency Association that the Reforms Enquiry Committee should publish a questionnaire for the guidance of public bodies and individual public men desirous of submitting memoranda to or giving evidence before the Committee and says that the suggestion is most reasonable and should be complied with as promptly as possible. It also asks for the publication of the despatches of local Governments. What can be sacrosanct about these documents that they should merely repose in Secretariat archives? All the light that is possible should be thrown upon the subject to facilitate right decisions. We can see nothing to commend in a policy of secrecy. The Hindustani says: The Indian agitation has made Englishmen realise that they will have no respite unless they accede to the demands of the Indians, but instead of granting immediate self-government they want to prolong the period of their merrimaking and enjoyment and to rob some more Indian wealth.

Referring to the allegations made by Sirdar Mangal Singh and Dr. Kitchlu that the Punjab Government is organising committees to interfere with the religious affairs of the people, the Hamdam remarks that these rumours proving true, the régime of Sir Malcolm Hailey will be a terrible reign of oppression. It seems that the brutal tyrannies perpetrated at Jallianwala Bagh and elsewhere during the Martial Law days have not been sufficient atonement for the great sin which the unfortunate people of the Punjab committed in strengthening British rule in India. It advises the Punjab people to cheerfully bear all hardships and not to betray the least sign of weakness, otherwise the British lion, which is notorious for attacking the weak, will tear them up into pieces. The Vartman remarks that since the assumption of the office of the Governor of the Punjab by Sir Malcolm Hailey the policy of repression has been reinforced and the proposal of his predecessor to enter into a compromise with the Akalis has been abandoned. Various kinds of conspiracies are being hatched to destroy the Sikh agitation. The crooked and reprehensible policy of the Government has already been exposed and the people of the Punjab have realised that the present Governor is a fit representative of Sir Michael O'Dwyer. Excessive ruthlessness and oppression have become the characteristics of the administration of the Punjab. What is still worse is that the Labour Ministry also relies on the policy of Sir Malcolm Hailey and his appointment as the Governor of the Punjab is a source of relief to it. It is thus abundantly clear that the Punjab has to pass a hard time. But are we prepared to face it? The Anand, on the other hand, is gratified that Sir Malcolm Hailey is earnestly endeavouring to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the Akali question. It suggests that the Akalis should be allowed full religious freedom and absolute right to reform their gurdwaras. The Medina protests against the sentences passed upon the Akalis in the Jaiton case and remarks that the courts of the Government can enchain the hands of the self-respecting Akalis but they are powerless to suppress their religious fervour. Their struggle is not likely to come to an end if the Government persistently continues to interfere in their religious affairs. The Hind-i-Jadid opines that owing to the failure of the Birdwood Committee the Government is vigorously trying to crush the Akali movement. It warns the Governor of the Punjab not to be misled by the flattering address presented to him at Amritsar or by the expressions of loyalty and devotion on the part of the newly organised party of the loyal Sikhs but to negotiate directly with the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee, which is the only representative body of the Sikhs, in order to arrive at a just and proper decision. The Mashriq is hopeful of the success of the Birdwood Committee and remarks that if the Akalis had not been duped by the enemies of the country who held out false hopes of Sikh raj, and if they had understood the dishonest moves of the Congress and the Khilafat agitators, the question would have been settled long ago. The Pioneer says: The recent reorganisation of the Akali Publicity Bureau has imported a strong Congress flavour into the announcements of that instrument of propaganda. It is, of course, clear that the Congress wire-pullers are anxious to make use of the Akali movement, for in it they see a quality which they themselves do not possess. The Congress agitators, ready to stir up hatred, are not prepared to make sacrifices themselves, but they would be very happy to assist the Akali to become the spearhead to their very wobbly staff. The Leader says: Any reasonable solution that Sir Malcolm Hailey may be able to put forward, should be considered with care and sympathy by everyone who is not anxious for a mere continuance of political trouble. The whole country is concerned that a speedy end be put to such an impossible situation as that which has existed between the Akalis and the Government of the Punjab. To our mind it is patent that the agitation is quasi-political; at least, it has become such. The public well-being demands peace above everything and Sir Malcolm Hailey will be entitled to the public support if he can achieve a reasonable solution of the problem.

Demolition of mosque at Bharatpur.

The Mashriq remarks that the Indian Musalmans cannot be satisfied unless the Government compels the Maharaja to rebuild the mosques. The Political Agent had no right to take the side of the Maharaja and address the Musalmans in the way he did. The British Government, in order to give proof of its love of justice, will do well to admonish the Maharaja.

U. P. Improvement Trusts.

The Leader says that the personnel of the Government Committee on Improvement Trusts is as unimpressive (barring the able and experienced and just-minded Chairman) as its scope is wide and its importance is great. The Committee have thus before them a vast possibility of doing good or evil, including the undoing of good already done. The paper does not think there was or is any necessity for such a Committee. But if there was to be, a body altogether more adequate to the purpose should have been assembled, as it could so easily have been. At another place the paper says: Weak calibre or antecedent hostility or imperfect knowledge or perverse mentality, is the mark of most members of the Enquiry Committee. The Committee does not contain a single member who has such knowledge of the working of Trusts as to be able intelligently and effectively to cross-examine witnesses. It is not too late for the Government to make good the omission by nominating any of the three Chairmen before the Committee begins to function.

The Cawnpore Mill riot.

The Pratap protests against the sentence of imprisonment passed on two of the Cawnpore labourers for instigating the mill-hands of the Cotton Mill to continue the strike and remarks that the sentence is a mockery of justice. It insinuates that all this is being done to remove the blame from upon the Police and the authorities, otherwise the Superintendent of Police, Cawnpore, and the City Magistrate, who ordered the firing upon the mill-hands, should have stood in the dock where these two labourers were made to stand.

The Kisan organisation.

The Mashriq apprehends that the growing spirit of freedom amongst the cultivators is likely to result in a speedy spread of Bolshevism in India. It finds fault with the Government for ignoring the loyalty and the services of the zamindars and advises the latter to organise themselves for the protection of their rights.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman remarks that Mr. M. N. Roy, who has been entrusted with the work of propagating Bolshevik doctrines in the Eastern countries by the Bolshevik International Conference, has pointed out that the programme of the Bolshevik party in India is to awaken the lower classes, to rid India of British rule, to confiscate land and give possession of it to the kisans, to hand over Railways and trade to labourers and to nationalise the Telegraph department. Mr. Roy's scheme appears to be sweeter than honey and more pleasant than paradise for the poor Indians. Is there any kisan who does not wish that the land he cultivates may become his own property? The condition of the Indian kisans is most miserable and they are seeking the support of a straw to get rid of their sufferings. There is every likelihood of their heartily welcoming this principle of Mr. Roy in the existing circumstances. Those who are following the trend of events among the labourers are aware that the labourers now want themselves to become the masters of the mills and factories. It is thus obvious that labourers are also prepared to accept Mr. Roy's scheme to a certain extent. The proposal to rid India of British rule appears to be alarming, but those who are acquainted with the activities of the Congress for the last four years know that this idea of Mr. Roy is not his own but is shared by many Indians. It is difficult to imagine the effect of Mr. Roy's scheme on India but there is no doubt that she will undergo a huge change within a few years.

The Indian debate in the House of Lords.

In a leading article headed "Lord Olivier on Mr. Das" the Leader says: The sum and substance of Lord Olivier's estimate of Mr. Das as a politician is that he is a political babe who believes in such silly nonsense as that the mighty British Government can be frightened by methods of force or by support of them. Such curious, doubtful and uncomplimentary defence of the Swarajist leader cannot tickle his sense of vanity, for, constituted as human nature is, one would prefer to be called a knave to being described as a fool. His lordship's observation that the operations of secret societies were detestable and that they did not ultimately strengthen any political party that dallied with them were meant for the consumption of the Swarajists especially, and it is for their leaders to repudiate, if they consider it necessary, the implications of Lord Olivier's speech as to the nature of their policy. Writing on the same subject the Pioneer considers Lord Olivier to have shown a lamentable inability to grasp the mentality either of Mr. Das or of the general Indian public, and thinks that his reference to the Serajgunj resolution will be regarded by the revolutionary elements in this country as an encouragement of political murder. For the condemnation of that form of violence merely on the ground of its futility, or of Mr. Das's alleged political simplicity, is so mild as to appear as no condemnation at all. In another article the same paper says that Mr. Das's canonisation of the murderer Gopinath Saha would afford encouragement to the revolutionary element in the Province was manifest from the outset; and it seems clear that the Secretary of State's contemptuous indifference to the political "gestures" of Mr. Das and his lieutenants has already been interpreted in revolutionary circles as a sign of weakness and vacillation. From one point of view the document which has been distributed among police officials in Bengal is ludicrous enough, and it bears on the face of it the unmistakable impress of the colossal vanity and passion for intrigue which have long been conspicuous features of the revolutionary movement in Bengal. The Secretary of State, however, and the British public would be making a great mistake if they regarded it merely as an object of derision. The British people will undoubtedly attribute the outbreak to Mr. Das's implied condonation of political murder. Already there are unmistakable signs that the wrecking tactics of the Swarajists have alienated many sympathisers in England with Indian political aspirations, and any recrudescence of the murder campaign at the present time would not only utterly discredit the Swarajist Party, but would involve a set-back, the effects of which might last for years to India's political progress. Referring to the condemnation of Mr. Das's attitude towards the Bengal revolutionaries the Indian Daily Telegraph says: This incessant cry for the prosecution of Mr. Das is, we fear, overdone. It discredits all talk of England ever helping India to attain swaraj. The question in Parliament about the forthcoming visit to England of Mr. Das also betrays Dasphobia; perhaps there would be no passport difficulty in this case, as the absence of this master revolutionary for a short period from India ought to give sleepful nights to Lord Olivier's countrymen here. The Aj remarks that Lord Olivier's non-committal reply to Lord Peel's motion regarding the prosecution of Mr. Das is indicative of the fact that he passed it away in ridicule. His eulogy of a person whom Lord Peel did not hesitate to stigmatise must have caused him mental irritation, and what a pity that Lord Curzon who came to his help met the same fate! The Anand says that the Indian debate in the House of Lords is illustrative of the fact that Parliament has changed colour and is not prepared to confer further rights on the Indians at an early date.

The Lee Commission.

The Aj opines that the Lee Commission has attempted to perpetuate the supremacy of the Europeans by rendering equality and fraternity impossible between Europeans and Indians. We are ever willing to treat the British as our equals, says the paper, but we cannot accept their supremacy. We are formidable opponents of this racial supremacy and hold it to be our sacred duty to destroy it through proper and peaceful means. The decision of the Secretary of State for India to keep secret the evidence before the Lee Commission has blasted what little hope Indians still had of justice at the hands of the British.

Khilafat Committees.

Referring to the reorganisation of the Khilafat Committees the Leader says: The main purpose of the Khilafat organisation would appear to be not to preach non-cooperation with Government to right the Khilafat wrong, but to do constructive work for promoting the welfare of the Muslim community. It is well that the Muslim leaders, who at one time thought more of the Jazirat-ul-Arab and of Turkey than of India, are now turning their attention to matters of domestic concern and are realising the wisdom of the adage that charity begins at home. With regard to the Committee's appeal for funds the paper says: The Committee, before asking the Musalmans to contribute to its funds, ought to let them know as what has become of Mr. Chhotani's saw mills, which were taken over by the Committee.

The Delhi riots.

In a leading article headed "The lesson of Delhi" the Pioneer refers to passages in Hakim Ajmal Khan's latest statement and says: This testimony to the importance of taking resolute action against propagandists deliberately spreading inflammatory rumours and fabrications comes, it will be seen, from that class of opinion which is ready, at the slightest provocation, to accuse the Government of undue severity and oppressive action. With regard to the Hakim's admission that those responsible for the Delhi riots are unrepentant, the paper asks whether he does not realise that such an attitude has been encouraged by the atomsphere of defiance of authority, disrespect for the Government, and racial hatred created by misguided "patriots" preaching revolution as a means to self-government. It appeals to those Indians who claimed to possess some sense of responsibility and judgment to see that if the masses are to be led away from the danger of communal animosity, the arm of the law should receive support from the intelligent section of the population whenever it is employed in asserting the weight of authority against malignant disseminators of untruth and inflammatory misrepresentation. And, above all, every effort should be made to spread enlightenment and combat superstition by encouragement of progress in the education of the people. The Leader says that the unqualified and emphatic condemnation by a Muslim leader, who is respected throughout the country by Hindus and Muslims alike, of acts of savagery of some of his own co-religionists, deserves the warm acknowledgement of the Hindus. The Medina observes that the outburst of communal disturbances at Delhi does not afford any cause for wonder, as the place is the headquarters of Swami Shraddhanand, whose fame depends upon fomenting communal strifes, and the capital of a Government whose policy is to divide and rule. In another article the same paper refutes the allegation that the Musalmans were responsible for the disturbance at Delhi and finds fault with the Deputy Commissioner for issuing prohibitive orders regarding the old route. It further asks why the authorities provided the Hindu police with rifles while the Muslim police was given only dandas. The Aligarh Gazette pleads that the Musalmans were quite innocent and remarks that it is very foolish on the part of the Musalmans and the Government to rely on the Congress and the Khilafat. The Zulqarnain opines that in view of the communal disturbances the presence of a foreign Power, having equal regard for all the communities, is ever necessary in India for maintaining the balance between diverse communities and protecting them from tyrannies and excesses of one another. The Al Bureed remarks that the collision between the two communities in Delhi has proved that the unity between the Hindus and the Musalmans can be compared only to a mound of clay and not to a rock of stone. The Rahnuma says that the statement of the Congress leaders regarding the disturbances has exposed the misrepresentation and communal partiality of the Arya Samaj press regarding the origin of the disturbance. It advises the parties to arrive at an amicable settlement instead of going to court. It will save them the trouble and expenses of litigation and will speedily restore happy relations between them. Writing in a similar strain the Hamdam ascribes the disturbance to the presence of such refractory elements as the Jats and the Pathans and asks the authorities to deal properly with them. In another article the same paper regrets that the Arya press is utilising the occasion for their anti-Islamic propaganda. The Hind-i-Jadid throws the entire responsibility for the disturbance on the Hindu-Muslim press and remarks that it has not only dealt a severe blow to the common national cause but has also strengthened the hands of our enemies. The Al Khalil avers that the deep-rooted ill-will between the Hindus and the Musalmans is now hard to eradicate, and remarks that if communal strifes continue the British Government in India will become impotent. The Vartman holds that the communal outburst at Delhi was not the abberation of a stray vagabond but was the result of an organised attempt on the part of the Musalmans to plunder the Hindus. Even educated and leading Musalmans had a hand in it. It says: What mischief may not the followers of that religion cause to the Hindus, the accredited leader of which can openly assert that even a depraved Musalman is better than Mahatma Gandhi? It is the duty of the Muslim leaders to subject the goondas to social boycott and get them arrested. The Prem remarks that the bloodshed at Delhi will cause deep pain to every Indian who has any regard for his country and religion. The repetition of a Nadirshahi massacre in this era of freedom is extremely deplorable and brands India with a stigma. The prevention of the repetition of such occurrences is the crying need of the hour and the leaders will do well to suspend other activities and concentrate all their efforts on the restoration of fraternal relations between the Hindus and the Musalmans. Writing in a similar strain the Kartavya remarks that the fighting at Delhi has lowered our head and cast an indelible blot on both the Hindus and the Musalmans. Such incidents afford the bureaucracy an opportunity to declare that India is unfit for swaraj and that if it withdrew she would be thrown into the abyss of anarchy and bloodshed. The Aj thinks that it is not those who indulged in insensate fighting nor the Police which did nothing to stop the disturbance, but it is those who in the name of religion and organisation supported misconduct and spread communal bias who deserve to be wholly blamed for the unfortunate fracas at Delhi. It is they who are the virtual enemies of the society and theirs is the responsibility for the loss of human life.

Bengal revolutionaries.

Referring to the notice issued by the Bengal revolutionaries to the Bengal Police officers, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The suspicion with which the Police is looked upon in this country would soon spread the belief that behind the alleged notice is a master mind bent upon discrediting the Indian nationalist agitation. It is unfortunate, therefore, that two such representative newspapers like the Pioneer and the Englishman should have taken the identical view that this notice is an inevitable result of the Saha resolution. Nothing is more natural for the jaundiced eye than to see everything yellow. It is for the Government to go steady, to use the utmost discrimination before it lets loose the dogs of law upon the people, especially upon leaders whose hold upon the imagination of the public is undoubted.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Our present troubles cannot be solved by a speech of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru or a laboured article of Mahatma Gandhi in Young India or the patch-pact of Deshbandhu Das. Better understanding by the Hindu of the Musalman and vice versa is the only solution of our troubles. The present disturbances have their root in ignorance. Once the masses are enlightened, the fuel that feeds the flame of communal strife can be cut off. The only manner in which the masses can be so enlightened is by teaching them the unity side of Islam and Hinduism. The Hamdam deplores the action of the Saharanpur Hindus in filing civil suits against the convicted Musalmans whose families are starving and wonders why the authorities did not allow the Musalmans to bring similar suits. The Mashriq says that Englishmen have now fully realised the weakness of Indians and they know that unity and toleration can never exist between the Hindus and the Musalmans. If the Government wishes that harmonius relations may be established between the two communities, the easiest way is to grant equal rights to both. The Oudh Akhbar does not countenance the practice of the Musalmans of taking deputations to the Governors and begging for special concessions for their community and remarks that instead of troubling the Governors they should themselves settle their affairs with the Hindus as it will make them self-reliant. The Gayanshakti complains that the treatment of the Musalmans towards the Hindus is most detestable. The Hindus have so far been patient; but the Musalmans should realise that even patience, endurance and forbearance have a limit. No one can remain happy by quarrelling with his neighbour. If the Musalmans want to make their lives happy they shall have to abandon their present tactics.

Muslim organisation.

A correspondent writing to the Mashriq dwells upon the imperative necessity of reorganising the Muslim League and remarks that cooperation with the Congress

Committee can only be useful when the rights of the Musalmans are not trampled down. The Servants of India Society and the Liberal Federation are for the benefit of the Hindus only inasmuch as we have not even heard of any member of a Sewa Samiti helping any Musalman in distress. The Musalmans have now well realised that it is injurious to their interests to be guided by any other community and that their Hindu brethren have on every occasion taken full advantage of the so-called unity. The Hamdam expresses its gratification at the suggestion of Maulana Shaukat Ali that the Musalmans should eat only chatni and bread on Monday and the saving thus effected should be utilised for the Muslim organisation and hopes that the Musalmans will heartily respond to the appeal.

Congress politics.

The Hamdam is gratified that Maulana Muhammad Ali has disappointed his enemies who expected that after his release he would launch a vigorous opposition against the Council entry and would thus have no time to devote himself to the real task of the country and remarks that those who find it difficult to carry out in practice the Ahmedabad resolutions should resign from Congress Committee. In another article the same paper suggests that Mr. Gandhi should be pressed to accept the presidentship of the next Congress and remarks that in case of his refusal Mrs. Sarojini Naidu will be the next best person for the office, as she is a great advocate of Hindu-Muslim unity, and has rendered conspicuous service to the Indians in the Colonies. The Zulqarnain protests against the spending of the Congress fund, which is a joint fund of the Hindus and the Musalmans, for the upliftment of the 'untouchables' whom the Hindus claim as belonging to their community. The Congress should equally help both the communities and should not adopt a policy which is calculated to strengthen the one at the expense of the other. The Grambasi remarks that instead of infusing fresh life into the workers and giving an impetus to the non-cooperation movement, the meeting of the All-India Congress Committee has resulted in scattering the national forces, augmenting the estrangement between the two Congress parties and inflaming the fire of mutual jealousy. The Vartman expresses the conviction that the constructive programme in itself cannot create the required enthusiasm among the people and emphasises the need of carrying on an aggressive agitation side by side with the constructive programme. The Abhyudaya strongly protests against the revival of the campaign of boycott of schools and colleges by the no-changers and remarks that it is nothing but religious fanaticism on their part to lay stress upon the boycott of schools and colleges, especially when there is even no trace of national schools in the country. This action will cause pain to many a true and honest worker who will be compelled to vacate the Congress offices. It draws the attention of Mr. Gandhi towards this and hopes that he will energetically intervene and stop the revival of the boycott of educational institutions maintained or aided by the Government.

The Swaraj Party.

Referring to Lord Olivier's speech the Pioneer says: If the words of the Secretary of State mean anything they can only be interpreted as a warning that the Cabinet and the British public have no intention of being bluffed or intimidated into any surrender to a veiled threat of violence. And whatever Swarajists and their sympathisers may pretend, it is with the British Parliament that the ultimate decision rests, under the Government of India Act, when and to what extent a further instalment of self-government may be safely conceded. At present it must be clear to everyone who can take a detached view of the situation, the omens are not favourable, and to this the fatuous tactics of the Swarajists have very largely contributed. Commenting on the proceedings of the Bombay Legislative Council the same paper says: The unsuccessful attack by the Swarajists, taken in conjunction with recent happenings in Bengal, affords another example of the persistence with which they allow their hostility to the Government to overcome all other considerations. The true democratic spirit of which they profess themselves enamoured, would be exceedingly loath to invite the interference of the High Courts in the work of the legislature. A desire for the evolution of a fully responsible Indian Parliament is surely inconsistent with actions which, were they successful, would inevitably place such a Parliament in a position subordinate to the judiciary. In a leading article the Leader characterises the recent statement of Mr. Moti Lal Nehru as the declaration of war on behalf of the Swaraj Party against Mr. Gandhi. The no-changers are to be totally eliminated from the Congress. This is the aim and the object of the Swarajists. They are out to capture the Congress and to send Mr. Gandhi and his party into the wilderness. This is the fate reserved for 'the other brother.' Well may the 'enemy' look on with approval not unmixed with amusement at the 'fighting brother' raising his hand to strike down the 'other brother' who has been resisting his apostacy and has thus incurred his wrath. Commenting upon the recent speech of His Excellency the Governor of the Central Provinces at Malkapur the Oudh Akhbar remarks: From the time the Central Provinces Government has suffered crushing defeat at the hands of the Swarajists it has been vigorously trying to condemn their policy and prejudice the voters against them. But in the absence of any pledge on their part to grant swaraj the Central Provinces authorities can hardly succeed in their attempts to influence the voters against the Swarajists.

Constitutional advance.

Referring to the activities of the Indian delegates in England the Pioneer says: Had all Indian politicians united to work the reformed constitution loyally and to develop it on constitutional lines within the limits of the Government of India Act, they would have had a far better prospect of a sympathetic consideration of their claim for an immediate advance, and would, at any rate, have been able to convince public opinion at Home that a very substantial advance could not in justice be withheld after the expiry of the first decennial period. But the non-cooperators seem incapable even of healing the schism within their own ranks, let alone effecting a fusion with the Liberals and National Conventionists. If India has to wait for swaraj until her politicians are united, she will have to wait for it till the Greek Kalends. The Leader says: The best antidote to the spirit of racial domination is to abolish the system which breeds and feeds it. No solution of the Indian problem can prove effectual which does not make the Central Government responsible to the Legislative Assembly in the entire sphere of internal administration. Referring to comments in the English press the Weekly Observer says: The disinclination to take any forward step in the direction of self-government is transparent in such opinions, and whatever these good papers might say, there can be no doubt that they are alarming themselves needlessly and are merely acting as obstinate supporters of a now completely lost cause.

Tarkeshwar satyagraha.

The Hindustani protests against the action of the Government in supporting the Mahant and arresting the satyagrahis and remarks that when law forbids interference in religious affairs the Government should not throw obstacles in our way of reforming our temples. The Hindu Gazette warns the Hindus against the propaganda of the Mahant and exhorts them to support the satyagraha campaign with volunteers and money.

Situation in the Punjab.

Referring to the Sikh extremist papers' action in publishing mendacious statements regarding the action of the Punjab Government the Pioneer says: Surely it is not too much to urge that when such gross irresponsibility is displayed by journalists in this country, serious doubts are permissible as to the adequacy of the existing law to deal with what is a plain menace to the tranquillity of peaceful citizens. The Hindi Kesari remarks that it is in pursuance of the old "Divide and Rule" policy that Sir Malcolm Hailey has got the Shiromani Sikh Reform Committee established in opposition to the Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee. By this action he has shown to the world that he can create division even in such a rigid and solid organisation as that of the Sikhs. Signs indicate that repression will reign in excelsis in the Punjab. Sirdar Mangal Singh has indirectly stated that in the event of repression proving unbearable the Sikhs will resort to violence. If such a thing happens the responsibility for it will be on the shoulders of the Government.

The Calcutta Corporation.

The Leader condemns the policy of the Swarajist members who dominate the Calcutta Corporation in giving more posts to the Muhammadans and says: No nationalist Hindu is opposed to justice being done to Muhammadans or others in the matter of appointments to the public services, but "justice" to one community ought not to involve injustice to another and communal interests should not be promoted at the sacrifice of public interests and the interests of those already in service. But the Swarajist policy in Bengal is to eliminate the Hindus altogether from the public services, on the plea that their future welfare requires that they should be forcibly deprived of opportunities of entering them.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Indian Daily Telegraph fears that Gandhi is really charkha-mad when he expects that the khaddar lying unsold in various Congress centres should be purchased by a millionaire or by the thousands who gather to hear a nationalist speak. It is not possible to expect such sacrifice from people who have not the wherewithal for their daily food. The majority of the population in India are poor and poverty cannot fling away a few annas more on cloth simply because khaddar has to be worn.

Passports to Indians.

The Hindi Kesari refers to the refusal of passports to the Khilafat deputation and to Mr. Shiva Prasad Gupta of Benares and remarks: India is a big prison and the passport authorities are its warders. It is therefore gratifying that the Swaraj Party is presenting a Bill before the Assembly, the passage of which will undoubtedly bring about the necessary improvement in the matter of passports.

United Provinces Council.

The Leader offers its respectful congratulations to His Excellency the Governor for summoning a meeting of the Legislative Council in September next but it asks why the meeting should be held at Lucknow and not at Allahabad. The Pioneer says: Surely any thoughtful person must see that the time for effective protest has gone by. Allahabad has been presented with a fait accompli. Even if the Governor decided to humour Allahabad by holding the September session of the Council there, Allahabad would merely be in the position of gratefully accepting the crumbs that fall from Lucknow's table—until the new Chamber is completed. For ultimately where the Council Chamber is, there will the legislators be gathered together. It is better to accept the inevitable than to persist in an undignified kicking against the pricks.

Muslim Waqf Act.

The Al Bashir criticises the finding of the United Provinces Waqf Committee and remarks that the first blunder of the Government was to appoint Nawabzada Muhammad Yusuf as the member of the Committee, when he had opposed in the Council the enforcement of the Waqf Act; moreover, he is an interested person being himself the trustee of a big Waqf property. The European officials cannot be competent judges of the question of Shariat and the findings of a small committee can have no value in the face of the resolution passed by the Council. If the Act is not enforced in these Provinces then the day is not far when a party like the Akalis will rise amongst the Musalmans also which taking the law in its own hands will bring all the endowments under its control.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman remarks that the Reforms Inquiry Committee and the Taxation Committee have been appointed by the Government of India with a wicked object. The object of the former is to throw dust into the eyes of the public and to strengthen the roots of the existing baneful administration and that of the latter is to plunder the poor Indians in broad daylight in the name of the good of the country by enhancing taxation.

The Khilafat.

THE Pioneer says: Muhammadans have become more than a little weary of contributing their money without any clear idea of the purpose for which it is to be used, or any guarantee against wasteful or unbusinesslike methods of dealing with it. They have realised that money has been poured out like water in the cause of the Khilafat, yet there has been nothing to show for all this expenditure. Indeed, for all the good that it has done to the cause for which it was subscribed, the money spent might just as well have been thrown into the sea, and who can wonder if doubts assail even the most orthodox as to whether any further contributions would not go the way of previous instalments, and achieve no practical result? The Haqiqat views with disfavour the resolutions adopted by the Khilafat Working Committee for the internal organisation of the Musalmans and lays stress upon strengthening the existing committees instead of widening the scope of their activities which is likely to jeopardise their very existence. The Oudh Akhbar opines that the Khilafatists are rendering no useful service to their community at present and advises them to confine their activities to the question of the Jazirat-ul-Arab and Khilafat only. The Al Bureed says that people have had enough experience of the organisation of Khilafat volunteers and the establishment of committees. They have proved a total failure. It is simply waste of energy and capital to reorganise them.

The Iraq affairs.

The Medina remarks that the Iraq agreement is only a stepping stone to the permanent retention of Iraq by Great Britain who hopes to exploit the name of Amir Feisal in her intrigues, but the sentiments of liberty of the people of Iraq and Mosul have dashed to the ground all such schemes. The Hamdam says that the debate in the House of Commons regarding the Anglo-Iraq agreement reveals a dark blot on British statesmanship. There are few instances in history of throwing a heavy chain of slavery round the neck of a nation under cover of high-sounding assurances and pledges. It is the imperative duty of the self-respecting Arabs to rouse their countrymen to the sense of danger of European interference in their internal affairs.

The Indian debate in the House of Lords.

According to the Pioneer the resumed debate in the House of Lords on the Indian situation added little or nothing to the knowledge either of the situation as it appears to observers in England or of the manner in which the Labour Government propose to deal with it. Once more the House was called upon to listen to a colourless debate. Lord Chelmsford's lucid and straightforward statement of the attitude of His Majesty's Government towards the activities of the revolutionaries and wreckers should effectually remove any misapprehensions and will be welcomed by sober opinion in this country. The Leader in a spirited article headed "The men of yesterday and the day before" says: Ex-pro-Consuls and ex-satraps had a field day in their own favourite chamber when the debate on Lord Peel's motion was resumed. The debate should satiate the most reactionary of I. C. S. officers and English newspapers in India. The two notes struck throughout the speeches were that the British services in India must get increased emoluments and get them quick, and that no constitutional advance should be made. The future depends upon the policy Britain will elect to follow from now onwards. The signs of the times justify any one in predicting that there cannot for much longer be peaceful government unless its basis is widened and it is transformed into a popular government, both representative and responsible. The atmosphere is not on the side of reactionaries in England. If the India of 1924 has to be saved from her own extremists, she has also to be saved from the 'Tchinoviks' on the side of the Government. An honourable and a prosperous future will be hers only if both are defeated and if peaceful constitutional progress is neither opposed nor delayed. To us it is evident that a stronger agitation in and on behalf of India will have to precede the next big move forward on Britain's part. Not, let us say at once, agitation by the method of non-cooperation, and not even of obstruction. Our faith is strong in sustained, purposeful determined constitutional agitation. To go back upon the present is unthinkable; to stand still is perilous. We must move forward. England has to make up her mind to hasten less slowly. And it is the duty of educated Indians who think of and feel for the country to strain every nerve to persuade her to make up her mind to take the next big step without avoidable delay. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Except that the Diehards had opportunity to spit their pent up venom against this unfortunate country, and therefore, of clearing the air and clarifying the vision of such Indian nationalists as still vacillate into possessing faith in British promises of self-government to India by homeopathic doses, the Lords debate has no value at all. The vernacular Press is disappointed with the result of the debate. The Hamdam says that the debate gives no indication of any reform or change being effected in the political condition of India. The Labour Cabinet is sure to adopt the traditional policy of the British love of prestige and ambition to rule and no sympathy is now likely to be shown for the genuine aspirations of the Indians. The British Government wants to have full control and firm possession over the gold mines of India even to the extent of depriving the sons of the soil of their natural rights. The Medina remarks that Lord Olivier's speech has sprinkled salt over the wounds of the Indians. Such unstatesmanlike utterances are sure to create a political awakening in the country. It is due to the communal disturbances only that British statesmen are now indulging in threats against us. The Tohfa-i-Hind regrets that all the expectations of the Indians from the Labour Government have proved false and the assurances given by the latter are now becoming a thing of the past. The Labour Government is reverting to the policy of Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Olivier's statement has destroyed the confidence which the Liberals still reposed in Great Britain. Writing in a similar strain the Al Khalil opines that all the lip sympathies expressed by British statesmen can never materialise in practice. The Hindustani in a lengthy article accuses the Labour Government of adopting an Imperialistic policy and has no hope of India's emancipation during its régime. As long as we are not powerful enough to obtain self-government it is idle to expect any favour at the hands of the English. The Aj insinuates that there is a political move underlying Lord Olivier's flattering eulogy of Mr. C. R. Das and the Swaraj party in the House of Lords. The Labour Government is desirous of winning over the Swarajists and it is with a view to achieve this end that Mr. Das has been invited to England. It is, however, convinced that a true patriot and shrewd politician as Mr. Das is, it will not be possible for the Labour Government to convert him into a cooperator by delusive tactics. The Vartman remarks that Lord Olivier's speech has pleased no political party in England or in India. A Government which wants to please everybody can command the confidence of no one. Lord Olivier's statement that Mr. C. R. Das and his colleagues believe that the anarchists can bring the Government to its senses by throwing bombs at the Police is full of mischief and contains an indirect threat. But the Swaraj party or any other political party in India cannot be frightened by such threats.

The Lee Commission.

Referring to the vilification set on foot in the vernacular Press of Southern India against the Madras Government, the Pioneer says: With a certain type of mind and in a section of the Press which cares less for accuracy than for the fomenting of hostility towards the Government, the maligned British official can do no right. Possibly it is felt that if only his reputation for efficient administration can be undermined, it will be easier to resist the recommendations of the Lee Commission for the amelioration of the conditions of his service, as well as to press the demand for more rapid Indianisation. The Aj vehemently protests against the recommendations of the Lee Commission and remarks: Is it possible to conceive of a more derogatory and humiliating position that taxation should be imposed upon us without the consent of our representatives and the Secretary of State may squander it according to his own sweet will? The existing system of taxation is nothing but an organised loot. The doubling of the salt tax last year and the enhancement of the emoluments of the civil servants this year are glaring instances of the usurpation of the Indian money and its gross abuse respectively. The action of the Secretary of State for India in giving effect to the increase in the emoluments of the civil servants as recommended by the Lee Commission is unjust and inhuman. It implies that the British Parliament elected by the British public can sell us if it likes. Such a position is surely unbearable. To perpetuate our helplessness in every possible manner and then to expect cooperation from us is equivalent to squeezing out oil from stone.

The Delhi riots.

Referring to the unemployment caused by the Delhi riots, the Pioneer says: Thus not only do disturbances of this kind involve a distinct set-back to the cause of India's political progress, but they bring in their train widespread economic distress, as well as a bitterness of feeling which remains for long a potential cause of further trouble. The Hindustan Times takes to task Hakim Ajmal Khan for holding the Musalmans to be at fault without any reasonable ground and regrets that it is only the Gandhi-worshipping Musalmans who are persecuting the members of their own community. The Medina says that Hakim Ajmal Khan by paying undue regard to the feelings of the Hindus has made truth subservient to expediency. He proclaims from house tops the faults of the Musalmans but has nothing to say against the Hindus.

Bengal revolutionaries.

The Pioneer says: Mr. C. R. Das's performance at Serajganj has long been regarded as indicating his desire to reconcile mild disapproval of the anarchical campaign with retention for the Swarajists of the practical support of its organisers. The reason for this is not far to seek, but in the present state of things such a policy carries with it condemnation not on the ground of its stupidity, but because of its essentially implicit encouragement of a very dangerous subversive movement that must be regarded with grave anxiety by all who wish well to the progress of Bengal. Commenting upon the notice issued by the Bengal anarchists the Oudh Akhbar doubts its genuineness and remarks that if it is true it forebodes trouble to Calcutta and that it is idle to think that the public will fail to help Government officers. The Hamdam regards the notice as a huge joke, but for the sake of precaution warns the leaders to realise their duty and keep back the Bengal youths from following such a suicidal course. The paper attributes economic causes to such activities. The Medina remarks that the present system of government, in spite of many shortcomings and defects, is a very firm and strong one and as long as it is in possession of material force it is useless to overawe the Westerners. It is an historical trait of British mentality to show no mercy and justice to the weak and to make reason subservient to power. If the recent notice issued by the President of the Red Council in Bengal is not a huge joke it will teach the Anglo-Indian Press that the responsibility for this new revolution does not lie on Mr. Gandhi or C. R. Das but on the British officials themselves.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Medina deplores the fate of the Indian Musalmans and remarks that the Western Government in order to crush the spirit of the Musalmans has subjected them to utmost tyranny and in framing laws has kept only those principles in view which afford opportunities of progress and prosperity to the Hindus. The Hindustan Times views with apprehenison the spread of pan-Hinduism to China and Japan with a view to establishing a Hindu raj in India and remarks that such moves on the part of the Hindus are very injurious to the Musalmans and to the British rule in India. The Musalmans can obtain no help from outside, hence for the maintenance of the British rule in India and for safeguarding the rights of the Musalmans cooperation between the two is very necessary. The Prem congratulates the Muslim leaders on condemning in unequivocal terms the activities of Khawaja Hasan Nizami and expressing their unqualified disapproval of the Bhopal Apostacy Law. The Abhyudaya remarks: All praise to Maulana Muhammad Ali for his emphatic and unambiguous condemnation of the activities of the Muslim goondas. If other Muslim leaders also follow the example of the Maulana in reproaching the goondas unsparingly and bringing them to book we have little doubt that it will contribute very materially to the restoration of harmonious relations between the two communities.

Hindu organisation.

The Abhyudaya remarks that the need for the organisation of the Hindus has now been grimly realised by even those who originally opposed it or were indifferent towards it. It cannot be gainsaid that sangathan is a sine qua non for eradicating the evil effects of years of emasculated existence of the Hindus and infusing manliness into them. It is time that the session of the Hindu Mahasabha were held with a view to lay down an efficient programme for carrying on organisation work.

Congress politics.

The Medina describes the Poona speech of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru as a declaration of war against Mr. Gandhi and remarks that it has rekindled the smouldering fire of dissension. It is only civil disobedience and not Council entry which can compel Great Britain to accept the demands of the Indians. In another article the same paper supports the election of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu as the next president of the Congress and remarks that her services and sacrifices in the cause of her country fully entitle her to this position of honour and distinction. The Hamdam regrets that up to this time little attention has been paid to the constructive programme and that the mutual dissensions are dealing a severe blow to the prestige of the Congress and are strengthening the hands of the enemies. The Haqiqat protests against the speech of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and condemns the Swarajists for putting to disgrace the greatest personality to which they owe their present influence and popularity. The paper doubts the success of the policy of obstruction and remarks that the Swarajists are sure to suffer a humiliating defeat as nobody is likely to support them against Mr. Gandhi. In another article the same paper disapproves the election of Mr. Gandhi as the next president of the Congress on the ground that his programme cannot be acceptable to all the parties and supports the election of Dr. Ansari or Mrs. Sarojini Naidu. The Al Khalil finds no element of surprise in the recent speech of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru at Poona and remarks that the Swarajists being apprehensive of their expulsion from the Congress are anxious to maintain their existence and secure a majority to capture the Congress. None has any faith in charkha and khaddar and it is idle to think that they will ever become universally popular. The Aj opines that Mahatma Gandhi's position is far above that of the Congress president. To offer him the presidentship of the Congress is to lower him down. If Mahatma Gandhi is elected as the president this year, where shall we get an equally able president next year? It is, therefore, in the fitness of things that the choice for the president must fall on other persons besides the Mahatma. The Satya avers that Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Moti Lal Nehru's declaration of war against each other can be prevented from being effectuated if the former permits the Swarajists to enter the Councils and the Swarajists hold it binding upon them to spin regularly every day. A give-and-take attitude on the part of both the parties alone can avert the impending calamity. The Hindi Kesari opines that the non-believers in the charkha and the boycotts are committing a huge blunder in resigning from the Congress executives in view of their inability to abide by the resolutions of the All-India Congress Committee. It points out that these resolutions are of a recommendatory and not mandatory nature and that the Swarajists are therefore not at all bound to resign. It advises the Swarajists to try to capture as many seats in the Congress executives as possible otherwise the no-changers' move which failed at Ahmedabad will succeed at Belgaum and the Congress will be converted into a veritable khaddar-khana. The Abhyudaya notes with regret that the resignations of members from the Congress executives caused by the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee have resulted in the closing of the Congress Committees in many places where all Congress work has practically stopped. The Bhavishya, on the other hand, holds that it is incumbent upon members who cannot abide by the resolutions of the All-India Congress Committee to resign from the Congress executives. As these resignations are not due to any feeling of hostility on their part the paper has reason to hope that they will remain Congress workers in one form or the other.

The Swaraj party.

The Leader continues to attack the Swaraj party. In a leading article headed "The Swarajists at war," it refers to the attitude of the Swarajists towards the Rent Bill discussion in the Bombay Legislative Council, and says: The Swaraj party has two policies, one inside the Councils and another outside. In addressing public audiences the Swarajists wax eloquent on their determination to wrest swaraj, to demolish the bureaucracy and to achieve other wonders. But inside the Councils they display lack of backbone, worship expediency and defend their innumerable inconsistencies by asserting that consistency is the virtue of an ass. How long can they go on at this pace and yet retain public confidence in their promises, pledges and policy? At another place the paper says: The Swarajist policy is a policy of topsy-turvydom and is probably understood only by its leaders. There is neither logic nor sense in it. Every triumph of autocracy has been proclaimed by the Swarajists as their victory. In another article it refers to the defeat of the Swarajists in the Bombay Legislative Council and says: The original policy was not to court defeat but to inflict defeats on Government, but now they appear to be revelling in defeats. These successive reverses in the course of two or three days cannot but affect the morale of the party in the Council. The Indian Daily Telegraph is afraid that the Swarajists in Council would soon have to present themselves before the public as cooperators—responsive or hired—even as the Liberals were in the previous Councils. The paper suggests that the Swarajists must soon be absorbed by the Liberal party, unless they have a better programme than attacking Gandhi outside the Council and responsively cooperating with the Government within, which means indulging in academical discussions, debating society, voting—for the Government does its deed, leaving the Councillors to say their say.

Constitutional advance.

The Leader draws attention to an article by Lord Ronaldshay in the July number of Nineteenth Century, specially towards the portion dealing with diarchy, and says: The spirit in which the system has been worked is quite different from the intention of those who invented this transitional device, and the result is that Indians of all shades of opinion are fed up with it and want full responsible government in the provinces and also responsibility in the centre. Experience has shown that the possession of autocratic powers by the Governors is a real obstacle to constitutional government, and if it is seriously meant to advance India towards responsible government they should have no more powers than constitutional Governors possess. It concludes the article by saying: What India wants primarily is that Indians should be masters in their own household, however this may be effectuated. Referring to the Punjab Council resolution regarding the release of Maulvi Zafar Ali Khan, the Pioneer says: With an obliquity of vision that can but amaze the impartial observer Indian legislatures seem bent on playing into the hands of those who are opposed to Indian aspirations for responsible government by providing the British people with convincing evidence of their unfitness to exercise even the powers entrusted to them under the Government of India Act. The Rising India says: Bankruptcy of the legal mind of the ex-Lord Chief Justice of England characterises the latest of what is called the Extraordinary Gazette of the Government of India. The Swarajists at least ought to open their eyes to the iron-hand of autocracy shelved under the silken glove of Indian constitution. Lord Reading's Viceroyalty has been a gigantic failure—a régime of certifications, vetoes and prorogations. It questions the Swarajists and their leaders whether anything is still needed to unmask the autocratic character of the reformed constitution—their main object of Council entry as expressed in the Swarajists' manifestoes issued last year. The Oudh Akhbar describes the recent rules published in the Government of India Gazette regarding the presentation of supplementary demands in the Councils as retarding the progress of the Reforms and remarks that it is useless to expect any good at the hands of a Government which without pondering over the consequences of its actions can act contrary to the Government of India Act for the purpose of strengthening its hands. In another article the same paper criticises the Pioneer's comments on Mr. Sastri's statement and supports the demand for provincial autonomy which has been put forward by the Liberals. It takes to task the Anglo-Indian Press for siding with the Government and altogether ignoring the claims which India has upon them. A correspondent writing to the Agra Akhbar doubts the fitness of the Indians for swaraj and remarks that if swaraj is established the present communal tension will eventually develop into a civil strife of vast magnitude.

Bombay Legislative Council.

Referring to the motion regarding restriction imposed on Vinayak Damodar Savarkar, the Pioneer says that thoughtful men, who desire above all things India's peaceful and orderly progress, and who are not obsessed with the Swarajist admiration for the "patriotism" of political criminals, will welcome the rejection of this preposterous resolution. The present is not a time when any Provincial Government can afford to run unnecessary risks merely to gratify the perverted instincts for hero-worship of Mr. Das and his admirers.

Situation in the Punjab.

In a leading article headed "Sir Malcolm Hailey and the Akalis" the Leader says that the replies given by Sir Malcolm Hailey to a number of addresses presented to him at Amritsar give some indication of the policy he intends to pursue to fight the Akali movement. The principal weapons with which he presumably intends to defeat it is propaganda and counter-organisation. His replies were themselves in the nature of propaganda. His plan of attack seems to be to undermine the Akali movement by propaganda, to organise the loyalist Sikh and non-Sikh opinion against it and then to strike a smashing blow at it, if necessary. If there is real solidarity among the Sikhs this policy has not much chance of success. But if a reaction has set in among them and the futility of the present policy is being realised by the Akalis themselves, then the well directed and carefully organised offensive of Sir Malcolm Hailey may succeed. It would be difficult to meet it, for its ways will be subtle and its resources almost inexhaustible. One thing the Governor of the Punjab has made clear and it is that he means to fight and not to surrender. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that Sir Malcolm Hailey has rattled the sword to his heart's content. He has hugged the loyal Sikhs in the Punjab and made violent gestures to the Akalis that will certainly never cow down the martial spirit in them. The Hailey policy is plain. It might even transcend the O'Dwyer policy in the Punjab, for while Sir Malcolm can make more phrasy speeches than his predecessors, there is no mistaking the sternness behind the man. He has begun with a determination to fall. What can the Haileys do more than what has been done at Guru-ka-Bagh and Jaito? Martial races are not conciliated by this kind of threat. By all means fawn upon the loyal Sikhs, but there was no need to bark and yell at heroes who have vowed to suffer in silence and in a spirit of martyrdom. We shall have a troubled Punjab during the Hailey régime. That is settled. The Pioneer says: The prompt action taken by the Punjab Government to deal with the mischievous activities of certain members of the tenth Akali jatha should have a beneficial effect on the moderate elements among the Sikhs who are now trying to convince their community of the true character of the Akali movement, and on the rank and file of the Government's own officials. The Vartman remarks that the leasing out of the Guru-ka-Bagh to Mahant Sundar Das on the expiry of the term of Sir Gangaram's lease implies another struggle at the Guru-ka-Bagh. There will now be three Akali fronts—the Jaito, the Bhaipheru and the Guru-ka-Bagh. It appears that the bureaucracy wants to dismember the Sikh organisation and destroy the Gurdwara agitation by launching out attacks in many centres at one and the same time. The Sikhs will have to make vigorous preparations to face these attacks. All the Sikhs in the province and outside it must organise themselves into one compact body and carry on their struggle with a skill in order to frustrate the manœuvres of the bureaucracy and bring them victory.

Proscription of Hindi readers.

The Hindi Press protests against the proscription of Mr. Ramdas Gour's Hindi readers. The Aj describes the action of the Government as treacherous to the nation and contends that the readers are not at all seditious. It remarks that those who advised the Governor to proscribe them did not themselves read or understand them well otherwise such a blunder would not have been committed. None of the readers proscribed contains anything about the existing Government, nor does a single sentence in any of them savour of sedition. The proscription of the invaluable literature of any nation amounts to daylight robbery. In another article the same paper remarks that the proscription of these readers constitutes an attack on national education. But this action of the Government cannot frighten us. Those who have the slightest knowledge of history know that autocratic rulers in every country have been behaving in a similar manner. Nowhere could this autocracy continue for ever nor will it continue for ever in India. It is, however, worth considering how strong that foundation of the Empire is which can be shaken by teaching a particular book to children of five or six years old. The Pratap remarks that by proscribing the Hindi readers of Mr. Ramdas Gour the United Provinces Government has given evidence of its folly and irresponsibility. We have not been able to find anything objectionable in those readers even from the official standpoint. Almost all the matter in them has been borrowed from other Hindi books and journals. If it was objectionable why were not those books and journals proscribed which originally contained it? Here is a sample of the perversity of the Government. The Bharat Jiwan characterises the order of proscription as an act of despotism pure and unadulterated.

Improvement Trusts.

In a leading article the Leader says: The Government have been starving the Trusts for at least a year and a half and betrayed such a lamentable lack of decision and clear vision that they have not been able or have not had the courage to decide either that the Trusts shall live a healthy and vigorous life or shall perish without prolonged agony. We have never made a secret of the conviction that we have consistently held, firstly that the operations of the Trusts should not be abandoned or suspended, and secondly, that they should not be made over to municipal boards. If, however, they are to be neglected and starved as they have been, on the convenient plea of want of funds by a Government which is unwilling to abolish a single one of the many superfluous and very costly offices filled by Europeans of the so-called all-India or Imperial services, and which if we are not grievously misinformed is quite ready to increase its annual expenditure on salaries and allowances by many lakhs of rupees as recommended by the Lee Commission, then it becomes a question even with such convinced advocates of the Trusts as ourselves whether there is any sense in keeping up the name and the form and the show instead of taking steps to set special committees of the respective municipal boards as Sir John Hewett did and to transfer the work to them. To us it will be a retrograde and regrettable contingency. But even that will be more sensible than to keep up the Trusts only to hang them in mid-air as it were. This circumstance by itself should suffice to convince every unprejudiced person of the benevolent attitude of the present provincial Government towards the step-child. The Haqiqat remarks: The Improvement Trusts have proved a curse to the people. There has been enormous waste of public money with little gain to the people who on the other hand have suffered much at the hands of these Trusts. It is gratifying that the Government has now realised the necessity of turning its attention towards them. It would be better if they are abolished and their functions transferred to the municipal boards. If, however, the Trust Committee decides to maintain them, their chairmen should be honorary and the subordinate staff should be paid low salaries.

Political propaganda.

The Leader refers to an article in the London Times in which it is asserted that the most searching test of a system of government is the health of the people, and asks: Would not the most damaging condemnation of the system come from the health conditions of the Indian people? Malaria, plague, cholera and influenza have been levying a heavy toll on the population of the country. Indian publicists have been laying stress on the close connection of poverty and pestilential visitations. But the defenders of the system have been singing the song of the growing prosperity of the people under bureaucratic rule. Judging by the test laid down by the Times we have no hesitation in saying that India is ill-governed. The Pratap is convinced that the freedom of Tibet has fallen a prey to British control and apprehends that the Tehri State might be crushed along with Tibet just as the weevil is also ground along with wheat.

The Anglo-Russian agreement.

THE Pioneer is very doubtful whether the agreement will be ratified when it is formally laid before the House of Commons at the next session of Parliament and says that the Treaty appears to be so nebulous in its provisions and so pernicious in its tendencies that Opposition members, whether Liberal or Conservative, should have an easy task in holding it up to ridicule. It is not by such chimercial methods that the rehabilitation of Europe can be promoted, but rather by the solid and substantial proposals of the Dawes Report, which are now being considered by the Allies and Germany at the London Conference. The Leader welcomes the agreement as a definite step forward in the direction of the pacification of Europe on which the Labour Government has set its heart. In another article the same paper says that Labour has gained its first victory in the pacification of Europe. The Oudh Akhbar views with satisfaction the agreement between Russia and England and hopes that both the Powers will in future refrain from doing anything prejudicial to the cause of each other. The Bolshevik agents also will no longer carry on anti-British propaganda in Asia.

The Indian debate in the House of Lords.

The Indian debate in the House of Lords continues to engage the attention of the vernacular press. The Vartman remarks that the debate leads to the conclusion that it is impossible for the Indians to secure any further constitutional advance before the statutory period. The ungenerous attitude of the British diehards towards the Indian demand will aggravate the prevailing discontent in the country and it is likely that their illiberal policy may place them in an awkward position at the time of the next great war which is now inevitable. The Haqiqat describes the debate as a warning to Indians to remain content with the present Reforms and banish from their minds the idea that Great Britain will ever be willing to loosen the grasp of its iron claws. Such debates can produce little effect on the liberty movement in India. The Medina says that the members of the House of Lords have been ever conservatives to the backbone and have no sympathy for the subject races. If the hot plains, thick jungles, desolate valleys and the half naked and foul-smelling people of India are disagreeable to the Civil Servants, they will be well advised not to come to this poor country. The Oudh Akhbar advises the British Government to accept with open heart the Indian demand for complete self-government as such gifts alone can make India willing to bear the additional burden which is to be thrown over it as a result of the Lee Commission Report. A failure to do so is likely to aggravate the present unrest and to force the people to resort to extreme measures to achieve their goal.

The Reforms Enquiry Committee.

Commenting on Mr. Chitnavis' evidence before the Reforms Enquiry Committee the Pioneer says : It is a pretty picture but far from convincing, and the emergence of the Committee into the glare of publicity suggests that the familiar game of formulating decisions regardless of evidence and facts is going to be played by more than one of the members. Commenting on the evidence of the representatives of the United Provinces Liberal Association the same paper says: The proceedings of the Committee will rapidly degenerate into a farce if evidence of the kind given hitherto continues to be poured out. The Leader, on the other hand, in a leading article headed " Liberals and Constitutional Advance " considers that the Liberal representatives stood this test of searching cross-examination very well. What the Government ought seriously to consider is not whether an advance is possible under the present constitution but whether full responsible government in the provinces and responsibility in the central Government is possible under it. If it is not, as we contend it is not, it ought to amend the Act in accordance with the demand of moderate Indian opinion. It is no use beating about the bush and wasting valuable time and also public money on doubtful enquiries. Indians are essentially of a conservative bent of mind and when once responsible government is established the revolutionary and disruptive forces which threaten the peace of the country will collapse. The feeling of distrust which exists against the agents of the existing system and manifests itself in several unpleasant and sometimes undesirable ways will disappear. A system which breeds hatred and disaffection on account of its being out of tune with popular sentiment and which is regarded as based on force and not on consent stands self-condemned, and the sooner it is put an end to the better for all concerned. We have no doubt that Britain will be the gainer by the concession of self-government to India. The gain will be spiritual as well as material.

Indians in the Colonies.

In a leading article headed "Disappointing and Unsatisfactory" the Leader says: Almost every Indian who will peruse the statement of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, will, we think, agree with us in voting the result as disappointing and unsatisfactory. The only net gain that can be recorded is that the Immigration Ordinance is not to be proceeded with. But we are constrained to regard it as a temporary gain. The hope of India as an unfree member of the Empire receiving justice from any government in England, at least on the subject of Indians overseas, is scanty and remote. In another article the paper says that if anything can succeed in inducing the Governor of Natal to withhold his assent from the ordinance just passed by the Provincial Council of that Colony, of course 'notwithstanding the protest of the Indian community', it will only be a protest by the Government of India supported by the Secretary of State. May we hope that this protest will be forthcoming?

The Delhi riots.

The Hamdam regrets that as a sequel to the Delhi disturbances the Hindu and the Muslim papers with utter disregard of all political considerations are vigorously trying to contradict each other's statements, and that the most pernicious influence of the disturbance has been the slow but gradual infusion of the germs of ill-will and animosity into the body politic. The Al Bashir lays the responsibility for these disturbances at the door of the Government and asks why such things do not so frequently happen in Indian States. It concludes that the British Government's existence has not proved useful in maintaining peace and order in India and that on account of the present undesirable situation the Government does not deserve to be congratulated when it is an admitted fact that the establishment of any government is primarily for the sake of maintaining peace and order. The Aligarh Gazette takes Hakim Ajmal Khan to task for issuing a statement injurious to the Musalmans and prays that God may save the Musalmans from such enemies. The Tabligh throws the entire responsibility for these disturbances on the shoulders of the Hindus and remarks that the fracas was to a certain extent the result of sudden enforcement of the order of the Deputy Commissioner prohibiting the Musalmans from taking cows through the Hindu quarters.

Bengal revolutionaries.

Referring to Lord Lytton's Dacca speech the Leader asks whether His Excellency's statement foreshadows a change in policy and a régime of repression for Bengal, or only merely an intimation to the revolutionaries that the Government is determined to fight them to the finish and will not be frightened by methods of terrorism? The paper pities the young revolutionaries and says: There is a vast field of patriotic service which continues to be neglected for lack of a sufficient number of self-sacrificing men. It was largely the influence of Mr. Gandhi which for a time gave a quietus to the cult of the bomb, but the failure of his non-voilent movement has once more revived the party of violence. But revolutionary movements cannot be successfully fought by means of a negative policy of repression. In fact such a policy creates new recruits for it. The problem which now faces Bengal and which may later on face other parts of India can be solved not so much by strength as by wise statesmanship. The Oudh Akhbar expresses its gratification that the notice of the President of Red Bengal has failed to disturb Simla and hopes that the Anglo-Indian press, which is ever ready to make a mountain of a molehill, will take a lesson from the views expressed in Simla. Repression and impolitic high-handedness only result in increasing the number of Government's enemies, and if there is any smouldering fire of revolution in Bengal it can only be put down by adopting a conciliatory attitude. The Nejat believes that a policy of assassination and pillage will be equally condemned by all peace-loving Indians as well as the non-co-operators but expresses its doubt whether Simla or Downing Street will draw any moral from this.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on the Muharram celebration the Pioneer says: The very fact that it is thought that disturbances involving injuries to a number of persons can be dismissed as of relative insignificance because, apparently, they were attended by no fatalities, furnishes the plainest possible commentary on the acuteness of the tension between the two communities, which indeed is a matter of common knowledge, notwithstanding the most strenuous attempts in interested quarters to disguise it. Commenting on the Muharram riots at Amethi the Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The Hindus strongly feel that Muslims are taking advantage of their weakness and the British raj, based on law and order, looks on when the Granth Sahib is torn and the idol is pulled out and Hindu shops are looted. The Mashriq has no faith in the so-called Hindu-Muslim unity and does not hope that the stoppage of cow slaughter on the part of the Musalmans will succeed in cementing happy relations between the two communities as then the question of Hindi and other questions of similar nature will be brought forward. There can be no peace unless all the Musalmans become renegades. The Arya Mittra contends that the religion and the civilisation of the Hindus and the Musalmans are so antagonistic to each other that it is impossible to weld these two communities together into one homogeneous whole. The Hamdard exhorts Mahatma Gandhi and his colleagues to suspend all other activities and concentrate their energies entirely on the restoration of Hindu-Muslim unity, because unity is the root of all political work and no political progress can be made until Hindu-Muslim unity is established on a permanent basis.

Hindu organisation.

The Gayanshakti regrets that the shuddhi sabhas are without funds even when it has been universally recognised that their existence is indispensable for the organisation of the Hindus. That organisation work should suffer for paucity of funds betrays the ghastly indifference of the Hindus towards the organisation of their community, especially when it is considered that the Hindus are a rich class. It is time that Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya set in order the existing state of affairs and secured the cooperation of Mahatma Gandhi in organising the Hindus.

Congress politics.

The Prem supports the election of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu as the President of the Belgaum Congress remarking that her magnificent services to the cause of Indians in South Africa fully entitle her to the office of the Congress President. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu is an embodiment of Hindu-Muslim unity and under her leadership the prevailing communal dissensions which have eaten into the vitals of the nation will be materially removed. The Vartman defines swaraj as complete independence and remarks that it is the duty of the leaders to fix complete independence as the goal of the country in the Belgaum Congress and place such a programme before the national soldiers as will accelerate their advent into the battlefield. The Bharat Jiwan regrets that some of the most influential and able leaders have resigned from the Congress Executives in compliance with the spinning resolution of the All-India Congress Committee. It is convinced that these resignations will cause irretrievable injury to the country and suggests that the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee should be so modified as to enable those who have resigned to withdraw their resignations and rejoin the Congress Executives.

The Swaraj party.

The Pioneer says: If the examples of the Calcutta and Bombay Corporations are considered, it is difficult to support the view that the responsibilities of office have sobered the Swarajists' majority in power. The Haqiqat expresses its surprise at the inactivity of the no-changers, while the Swarajists are vigorously carrying on their propaganda and are by every possible means trying to triumph over them. It exhorts the no-changers to counteract the Swarajists' activities and doubts if Mr. Gandhi can defeat the Swarajists without the active support and cooperation of the no-changers who are sitting idle as if paralysed. The Pratap remarks that it is a delusion on the part of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and other Swarajist leaders to think that the country is with them and that they can easily capture the Congress. The soul and the strength of the country is not behind the Swaraj party, which in itself is not a solid organisation and is tottering like a house of cards. The interests of the Nationalists and the Swarajists are not allied to each other and even in the Swarajist group Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and Mr. Patel cannot pull on together for a long time. The Kartavya holds that there is some mystery in the grant of a passport to Mr. Das seeing that even Babu Shiva Prasad Gupta and Mr. Arjuna Lal Sethi were refused passports by the Government. Is it that the British Ministry wants to win over Mr. Das and enter into a compromise with him? The Bharat Jiwan views with apprehension the proposed visit of Mr. C. R. Das to England and remarks that just as the snare of the Reforms was spread last time in order to destroy the strength of the Congress by dividing the Extremists and the Moderates, similar attempts are at present being made in England with the object of creating a split in the ranks of the non-cooperators. It is, therefore, not unlikely that Mr. Das may bring back with him to India a new dose of Reforms or a few privileges for the Swaraj party. The Anand remarks that Mr. Das' proposal to visit England and interview the authorities there shows that either his non-cooperation does not now exist or its form is changed.

Situation in the Punjab.

The Pioneer asserts that a large section of the Akalis, as has been clear to all but the wilfully blind, have been looking to nothing less than the revival of Sikh rule at Lahore. They have been encouraged in this aspiration by men whose real aim has been to enlist them in the cause of the Congress, the excellence of their organisation, and the fanaticism of their rank and file being envied by the Congress leaders. Commenting upon the speech of Sir Malcolm Hailey at Jullundur the Oudh Akhbar observes that sweet words alone cannot be effective in wiping away the mischievous propaganda from the Punjab. If he really desires a calm atmosphere, bereft of all peace-disturbing elements, he should adopt a generous and statesman-like policy, without showing any inclination to follow the footsteps of O'Dwyer. A correspondent writing to the Agra Akhbar advises the Akalis to benefit by the conciliatory attitude of Sir Malcolm Hailey and approach the Government to enact a piece of legislation for the better management and reform of the Gurdwaras. The Anand infers from the recent utterances of Sir Malcolm Hailey in the Punjab that he intends to undermine the Akali movement by propaganda and counter-organisation and predicts that this move of Sir Malcolm Hailey is bound to meet the same fate as that of the Aman Sabhas. The Kartavya remarks: Now that the Mahant is to take possession of the Guru-ka-Bagh the Akalis will have to carry on a struggle there in addition to those at Jaiton and Bhaipheru. It appears that the object of the Punjab Government in thus increasing the centres of struggle is to weaken the Akalis by dividing them into batches. It is time that the Congress which professes to sympathise with the Akalis actively helped them. The Abhyudaya remarks that the irresponsible bureaucracy of the Punjab has not yet come to its senses. On the one hand it pretends willingness to enter into a compromise with the Akalis, and on the other it is still persuing its coercive policy with an iron hand. We fail to understand why the Punjab Government is lowering its own prestige by committing repeated blunders. Experience should have taught it that the Akali agitation cannot be crushed by repression.

Muslim Waqf Act.

The Al Bashir condemns the report of the Waqf Committee and remarks that the entire community views with disgust and hatred the committee appointed by the Government. It should be clearly stated in the Council why the Muslim members of the committee are opposed to the enforcement of the Act and what are the influences under which the Government has been forced to put it off. The Naiyar-i-Azam remarks that when the costs of establishment create a lawful charge on the Waqf property it is but essential that audit expenses should be met by it. We pity the understanding of the European members of the committee who opposed the enforcement of the Waqf Act at a time when similar causes have given rise to the Akali agitation in the Punjab.

State scholarships.

The Al Bashir is surprised that none of the four recipients of State scholarships in the United Provinces is a Musalman and asks why the Musalmans are usually ignored on such occasions. It takes to task the Muslim members of the Council for their criminal silence in this connection and remarks that they are not in the Council simply to realise allowances but they have also a duty to perform to the people whom they represent. The Hamdam in a similar strain deplores the indifference displayed by Government towards Muslim education and remarks that it is a sign of India's slavery that its youths have to cross the seas to make researches in the history of their own country.

Bolshevism.

One Mr. Satya Bhakta writing in the Pratap remarks that Socialism is the only means of the emancipation of humanity. The organisation of our society on socialistic lines will prove beneficial to the country. It is, therefore, gratifying that a socialistic organisation called the Indian Communist Party is soon going to be established with a view to achieve this end.

Political propaganda.

A correspondent named Trivedi writing to the Sudharak remarks that it is the policy of the Indian bureaucracy which has brought the British administration into disgrace and is digging its roots. The British Empire is at present without any prop and its backbone is broken. It is time that the bureaucracy opened its eyes and mended its methods otherwise it may be swept away by the on-flowing tide of Indian awakening. The Vartman remarks that it is the British capitalists who have destroyed the trade and industries of our country. It is a matter of great shame to the Indian traders that even knowing that it is the foreigners who have destroyed the trade of their country they unhesitatingly indent goods from foreign countries for a little economic gain to themselves, although it results in the starvation of crores of Indians. It is these Indian traders who in addition to the foreigners are digging the grave of indigenous trade and industries. Thanks to the efforts of Mahatma Gandhi, the swadeshi movement has now received an impetus and foreign exploitation cannot continue for long.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 23rd August, 1924.

London Conference.

THE press in general expresses its satisfaction at the successful termination of the London Conference. According to the Pioneer the agreement is unquestionably the most important event that has happened since the Armistice. The first Labour Premier of Great Britain is to be congratulated upon a notable achievement, and no statesman, to whatever party he may belong, will be disposed to grudge him the meed of praise that is his due. The settlement of Europe, with all that that settlement implies in the gradual restoration of normal economic conditions and the prospect of a revival of trade, is too important a matter to be made the sport of party politics. The Leader says that a new era has dawned on Europe and it may now be hoped that the work of pacification and reconstruction will proceed apace, and will be accompanied by drastic reductions in armaments. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald must be at the present moment one of the happiest men in Europe. He can justifiably be proud of his great achievement. He has brought closer to each other two great countries, France and Germany, and has also established once more the moral supremacy of Great Britain. In another article the same paper says: The European problem is by no means solved but the way to a pacific settlement of the outstanding issues which vitally affected Britain, France, Germany and Italy has been found. The capitalists who began the war could not win peace. But the Socialists have opened the road to it. We wish them every success in their high and humanitarian enterprise. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the London Conference has solved the German problem to the satisfaction of all parties. The paper pays a tribute to Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and says: England is still searching for the man who might be said to have won the war; but there is no doubt who has brought peace: it is the first Labour Premier of Great Britain. The Hamdam describes the agreement as a remarkable achievement of the Labour Government and congratulates Mr. MacDonald on successfully solving the difficult and complicated question of European politics.

The Sudan.

The Pioneer says: There is no love lost between the Sudanese Arab and the Egyptian. The inevitable conclusion is, therefore, that in the absence of the British troops the firing of the Sudanese guards would not have ended where it did. The paper supports the strong action taken by the British authorities in Sudan and says: Sooner or later the establishment of Egyptian rule in Sudan would mean a rising which the Government would be utterly unable to control. Then not only would Sudan lapse back to the old state of the Mahdi days, but the very urgent question would arise as to how Egypt was going to protect her own borders. The Indian Daily Telegraph has reason to believe that the telegraphic agency does not send out all the news from Sudan and says that the Sudanese situation is grave and is fraught with serious consequences if not handled with sympathy and a spirit of concession to the self-determination of a resolute nation. The Weekly Observer says: The recent incidents in Sudan show that the British, in Egypt as well as in other countries, are sitting on a gun powder magazine. According to the Leader the disorders indicate that the existing system is not a popular one. Probably the national spirit is as active there as it had been in Egypt. The Haqiqat remarks that the outbreak in Sudan has exposed the falsity of the British propaganda that the Sudanese do not desire to throw in their lot with the Egyptians. Sudan being an inseparable part of Egypt the British statesmen will be well-advised to deal with the question in a broad-minded spirit. The Hamdam says that the spread of agitation throughout the country is a clear proof of the fact that the profession of a benign and sympathetic rule in Sudan by the British statesmen is misleading. The possibility of the recurrence of mutiny and disorder can only be averted if the causes of unrest and discontent are removed and the legitimate demands of the country are conceded.

The Iraq affairs.

The District Gazette, Aligarh, dwells upon the necessity of the British guidance in Iraq as the democratic system of Government granted to her is a new thing for the Arabs and remarks that if during their present period of progress and advancement British help is withdrawn its inevitable result will be maladministration and anarchy. The Hamdam resents the bomb-throwing demonstration in Iraq by the British to overawe the people and deplores that a Government which claims to be the most civilised one adopts such methods to cow down the people. We are sure that the Iraq people if they have the least Islamic sentiments left in them will express their deepest abhorrence of the nation which instead of creating facilities for the progress and improvement of their country devises means to devastate and plunder it.

The Reforms Enquiry Committee.

The Leader says that the mass of weighty and expert opinion expressed before the Reforms Committee cannot be dismissed as worthless. There is only one wise and statesmanlike course to take and it is to make a courageous advance. If dyarchy has failed, as it has certainly failed, it was due to inherent defects, and no useful purpose can be served by running down the Ministers who honestly tried to work it to the best of their ability. If the British Government and Parliament are not to go back on their pledges and promises, there is no other honourable course open to them but to abolish dyarchy and establish full responsible government in the provinces, and responsibility in the centre. Commenting on the memorandum presented to the Reforms Enquiry Committee by the European Association, the paper remarks: If this reactionary document really represents the views of the Europeans in the country then it is idle to complain, as the Association have done, that the necessary spirit of cooperation has been lacking in the working of the reforms. Cooperation cannot be one-sided. The Europeans have shown that they are not only utterly lacking in statesmanship but also that they have absolutely no grasp of the Indian political situation. Referring to Mr. Chintamani's evidence before the Committee the Pioneer says that this evidence is entirely of an ex parte character, and, until the Government's side of the case is known, final conclusions can hardly be drawn from it. Mr. Chintamani's dyarchical spleen seems to have been so pronounced as to prevent him from seeing vices in any alternative system. The Haqiqat apprehends that the Anglo-Indian community will oppose the grant of further reforms and will even recommend the whittling down of the present concessions and remarks that the evidence of the ex-Ministers have fully exposed the defects and drawbacks of the dyarchical system of Government. The Hamdam describes the evidence of the ex-Ministers of the Central Provinces as a death knell to dyarchy and a proof of their desire to do away with the present system of government. The Abhyudaya remarks that the abolition of dyarchy, the establishment of full provincial autonomy and the democratisation of the Central Government is the burden of the evidence before the Reforms Enquiry Committee. This demand is most imperative and anything short of this cannot satisfy the people. The Swadesh opines that the Committee has been really appointed with the object of enabling the Government to remove the obstacles it has to meet with in maintaining the Councils and that it is therefore mere waste of time and energy to give evidence before it. The weakness and futility of the dyarchical system is patent alike to the people and Government and it is no good inviting expression of opinion thereon. If the Government of India does not transfer real responsibility to the people Indian politicians should devise means to assume control of administration as early as possible. The Vartman points out that the evidence of Moderate leaders before the Reforms Enquiry Committee shows that they have now fully realised the futility of dyarchy and are not only demanding full provincial autonomy but also substantial reforms in the Central Government. Let the Moderates bear in mind that their representations before the bureaucracy will never bear fruit. They can attain rights only when they are ready to sacrifice their all for them. Let them reform the Congress and work strenuously under its banner. Then they will find that nothing on earth can resist their demand for swaraj. The Bhavishya points out that the evidence before the Committee must prove illuminating to the Swarajists who should profit by the bitter experiences of the Liberals and give up their fancy for the Councils and endeavour to attain swaraj by following the path chalked out by Mahatma Gandhi.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Leader refers to the destruction of Hindu temples in Hyderabad and at Amethi and says that it is such cases of unprovoked outrages that have been driving home the need of Hindu organisation, so that the Hindus may be better able to safeguard the places of their worship and the honour of their women. The Haqiqat in a series of articles holds the Swarajists responsible for the communal disturbances at Amethi. It is opposed to the transfer of the Sub-Divisional Officer and opines that it is calculated to accentuate the bitterness of relations between the two communities. The Hindustani takes to task both the Hindus and the Musalmans for want of mutual tolerance on their part and remarks that the Amethi disturbance has betrayed the utter worthlessness of the Police which only played the part of a silent spectator near the temple and took no steps to prevent the riot. The Hamdam in a lengthy article dwells upon the advisability of meeting out just punishment to those who have desecrated the places of worship and remarks that if the Hindus and the Musalmans cannot amicably settle their own disputes and afford an opportunity of interference to the bureaucracy they should be prepared to bear the consequences. It is deplorable that when the disturbance takes place the Hindus and the Musalmans alike insist on the appointment of a British officer to decide their cases. If we have no confidence in swaraj it is useless to cry for it. Commenting upon the excesses committed by the Hindus against the Musalmans at Jaspur (district Naini Tal), the Medina complains that the authorities took no steps to protect the lives and property of the helpless Musalmans. The Al Bashir exhorts the Musalmans to support their Muslim leaders in the Congress against the attacks of the Arya Samajists who are trying to create hatred between the Congress Musalmans and the Hindus and remarks that the united opposition of the Arya Samajists will prove useful in reforming the ideas of the Muslim leaders and bringing them to the right path. The Anand says that the demolition of the Hindu temple and the looting of the Hindu shops at Amethi by Muhammadans on the occasion of the Muharram show that while Muhammadans would not miss any opportunity of suppressing the Hindus the latter have not even at this late hour realised the need of self-protection. It is the weakness and simplicity of the Hindus which is the cause of their misery. It is not yet too late for the Hindus to organise themselves into a solid and self-reliant community. The Pratap remarks that by breaking idols in the Hindu temples and treading upon the Hindu sentiments as was done at Amethi and Shambhal the Musalmans cannot create respect for themselves in the heart of anybody. It is true that it is the cowardice of the Hindus which encourages the Musalmans to perpetrate such atrocities but it is equally true that the repeated high-handedness of the Musalmans will remove their cowardice.

Congress politics.

The Haqiqat pays a tribute to the patriotic services of Maulana Hasrat Mohani and suggests that being a great advocate of Hindu-Muslim unity he should be elected the president of the next Congress as it will be a fitting appreciation of his patriotism. The Satya protests against the resolution passed by the Delhi Congress Committee that those who participate in communal organisations are ineligible for the membership of the Congress. It apprehends that it will result in an attack on the rights of the Hindus only as the Muhammadans are already carrying out their organisation under the guidance of the Khilafat Committees. The same paper opposes the election of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu as the president of the next Congress remarking that she has made no sacrifices for the country and that her services in South Africa were confined to mere speechification. If it is necessary, it remarks, that the president of the next Congress should be an Indian lady Shrimati Kasturi Bai will be the fittest person for the this office and after her Bi Amman. In another article the same paper remarks that Maulana Hasrat Mohani's party which has complete independence for its goal is now gaining strength in the country and that if England continues to treat the Indian demand with indifference there is little doubt that the Congress also will be compelled to fix complete independence as its goal.

The Swaraj party.

Referring to Mr. Das' address delivered at the Swaraj Conference at Calcutta, the Leader says: It may be described as a masterly jugglery of words which elucidated nothing except that the Swarajist leader has developed the art of camouflage to perfection. If after all this sophistry and special pleading people are not convinced that they continue faithful to their original policy and feel that they have committed a "volte face", it will not be for lack of the art of advocacy on the part of the Swarajist leaders. In a leading article headed "The Swaraj Party Fund" the Leader says that the Swaraj party will become a mere clique caring more for money than principles. The rot has already set in as demonstrated by the meeting recently organised in Bombay by a section of the Swarajists to condemn the attitude of the party in the Council in connection with the Rent Act. On the other hand the Indian Daily Telegraph says that Mr. C. R. Das' speech comes as a welcome fresher to clear the atmosphere after certain recent wild utterances of Swarajist leaders about their programme being in opposition to Gandhi in the country. The spirit of resistance to the Government, the complete destruction of the edifice so as to build afresh, and the explanation of any change of tactics to the need for facing the enemy must all appeal to the public. The Advocate says that Mr. C. R. Das has cleared the wrong notions which were prevailing in the minds of the people by the recent speeches of the Swarajist leaders. The Pioneer criticising the Swarajists' programme says that the open and avowed aim of the Swarajist party is to destroy the existing constitution both in the Government of India and in the Provinces. That is enough for them for the moment; sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. The only conclusion that the British people and the British Parliament will come to is that India is not fit for any form of self-government for at least a generation and that the policy laid down by Mr. Montagu must be temporarily held in abeyance until she comes to her senses.

Situation in the Punjab.

The Desh Bhakt accuses Sir Malcolm Hailey of being ever hostile to the Akali movement and takes to task those who cooperate with the Government in subjecting the Akalis to tyranny and oppression. It exhorts the Indians to help the Akalis with men and money. The Prem remarks that Sir Malcolm Hailey wants to undermine the Akali movement by propaganda and counter-organisation but the chances of his success are remote, because the Akalis are fully aware of the diplomacy of the Government. The Vartman refers to the declaration of Sir Malcolm Hailey that he would suppress the Akalis by all means possible and observes: When even Ahmad Shah Abdali and Nadir Shah failed to destroy the Sikhs we do not know what makes Sir Malcolm Hailey so positive in his assertion. Perhaps he does not know that the Sikhs are a terrible community. When they have taken up a cause they will die for it but never forsake it. The Akalis are impatient to make the sacrifice which Sir Malcolm's repressive policy may necessitate on their part for they know that sacrifices in a right cause never go in vain.

Lord Lytton and Indian women.

The Leader says: While it is not possible to defend the language used, which was of too sweeping a nature, we do not think that Lord Lytton intended to cast a reflection on India's daughters as is tried to be made out. Too much ought not to be made of an indiscretion of language. Englishmen, however, ought to know, especially those holding high and responsible positions, that Indians are extremely sensitive in matters where the honour of their womanhood is concerned, and should be very careful in the language they employ. At another place the paper does not think that His Lordship intended to insult Indian womanhood, still it is necessary for him to explain what he meant and to clear the misapprehension that is being sedulously spread. The Pioneer says that the very notion that Lord Lytton intended to insult Indian womanhood can only be regarded as preposterous, and Mr. Das' silence on this point is far more damaging in the eyes of all level-headed persons, in India or in Great Britain, who refuse to allow their judgment to be warped by the orgy of passion and unreason that is now dominating political Bengal, than the Governor's silence in the face of an absurd and baseless insinuation which he can hardly treat otherwise than with the contempt it deserves. Referring to the agitation in Bengal the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the situation is one of extreme difficulty. The paper opines that it would considerably enhance the reputation of Lord Lytton individually and the Government of which he is the head, if he makes a suitable apology. It is even safer to recall Lord Lytton over this incident than to incense the population by arresting Mr. Das or Mrs. Sarojini Naidu. The Maha Shakti says: A greater insult to both the manhood and the womanhood of India is hardly conceivable. In the recklessness of some of his recent utterances His Excellency had thrown Lord Curzon into shade. In his latest exploit he has surpassed himself. The Pratap remarks that by stating in his Dacca speech that Indians, in order to discredit the Police, can get their women make even allegations of criminal outrages against it, Lord Lytton has given evidence of his knowledge and wisdom. These are our rulers who do not know what they utter. Indian women attach the greatest value to chastity and it is inconceivable that they, of all others, should make false allegations of criminal outrages. To make such an absurd statement is the height of folly on the part of Lord Lytton and it is a misfortune of India that even such foolish persons can hold the highest offices in this country. The Swadesh describes Lord Lytton's statement as altogether baseless and insulting to Indians. If Indians had any spirit Lord Lytton would have found it impossible to occupy the office of the Governor for a single moment after expressing such absurd views. But Indians are a lifeless people and anybody can therefore abuse or kick them with impunity. Have Indians become so degraded morally that they will not compel Lord Lytton to withdraw his statement?

Release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani.

The Vernacular press welcomes Maulana Hasrat Mohani on his release from jail. The Abhyudaya remarks that there are few Muslim leaders who are as true patriots and votaries of freedom as the Maulana. To consider all questions from the Indian as opposed to communal view point is his chief characteristic. The Vartman says that his name is inseparably connected with the ideal of complete independence and young India has great hopes from him. His release will infuse fresh life into the country and impart new strength and vigour to the national movement. The Aj points out that a true patriot and ardent nationalist as Maulana Hasrat Mohani is his release will create new enthusiasm among the people and give an impetus to the national struggle. The Pratap describes him as the angel of freedom, and says that his courage and firmness will serve as beacon lights to the youths of the country and will encourage them to raise aloft the banner of liberty. The Hamdam expresses its gratification at the release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani and remarks that he is a great advocate of liberty and his distinguished personality should be a source of pride to the Indian Musalmans. The Hindustan Times says that in the matter of sincerity and self-sacrifice Maulana Hasrat Mohani holds a higher position than even Mahatma Gandhi and we wish that he should turn his attention towards the protection and propagation of Islam and try to frustrate the dangerous designs of annihilating Islam in India.

Liberty of press.

The Hamdam views with apprehension the frequent application of the penal code by the Government officials against the newspapers and remarks that it will deal a death-blow to the liberty of the press in India and shake the financial stability of the newspapers against which action is taken. The Swadesh says that the Press Act has been repealed only nominally and that the press continues, as helpless and as enfettered as ever before, since the penal and preventive sections of the ordinary law are being freely utilised to suppress the liberty of the press. Not content with this the authorities are unhesitatingly prosecuting journalists for libel and defamation and a number of important papers have already been victimised.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Mashriq says that it will be dangerous for the Government itself to enact any piece of legislation calculated to render the tenants free from the control of the zamindars. It will not only give a chance to the Swarajists to incite the tenants to agitate but the Government itself will lose the loyal services of the zamindars and will be instrumental in giving rise to Bolshevik activities in the country. A zamindar correspondent writing to the Hamdam advises the zamindars to hold a conference before the Council session and submit a memorial to the Government embodying their views regarding the contemplated amendments in the Tenancy Law. The Abhyudaya says that the report of the Committee appointed to consider the Agra Tenancy Bill seeks to make the zamindars the absolute masters of the kisans and denies the latter the right to stand on equal terms with the latter. The worst effect of the Committee's recommendations will be that there will be no new dakhil-kar tenants in future. If these recommendations are accepted the condition of the kisans of Agra who at present enjoy more independence will become similar to that of the kisans of Oudh and like the zamindars the kisans will also become mere puppets in the hands of the Government. The kisans of Agra should stand up to defend their rights.

Muslim education.

The Al Bashir complains that the United Provinces Government in utter disregard of all rules and regulations awarded a State scholarship to Hindu candidate, who was overage, in preference to a Musalman and remarks that it is simply foolish on the part of the Musalmans to indulge in still praising the Government which treats them in this way. In another article the same paper suggests that 30 per cent. of the Government grant-in-aid to the Anglo-Vernacular schools should be set apart for the education of the Musalmans and remarks that we do not want any concession from the Government but only demand our legitimate rights which the Government should have no hesitation to concede.

Political propaganda.

The Hindustani attributes the rise in the price of food-stuffs to the export of grain and accuses the Government of taking no preventive measures. It further remarks that the British Government is so avaricious that it drains wealth out of India and mercilessly subjects the people to utter poverty and starvation. It will be beneficial for the Government itself to stop the exportation of food-stuffs as starvation will certainly give rise to dacoity and disturbances and make the situation in the country still more critical.

Socialism in India.

The Aj publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Satya Bhakta, describes Socialism as the panacea for all the ills of the world and urges that socialistic organisations should be started in India too if the lot of the poor here is to be ameliorated. He states that an organisation by the name of "Indian Communistic Party" is going to be started and asks all persons interested in the matter to correspond with the Manager of the Socialist Bookshop, Cawnpore.

For the week ending the 30th August, 1924.

London Conference.

THE Oudh Akhbar congratulates Mr. MacDonald on his marvellous success in solving the most complicated question of European politics and remarks that British prestige which has suffered much during the last two years has been bolstered up by his ability and statesmanship. The Aj remarks that Mr. MacDonald deserves to be congratulated on having settled the Reparation problem satisfactorily. It is to be hoped that the unjust treaty of Varseilles will now soon sink into oblivion and the European nations will again deal with one another on terms of equality. The Surya says that by persuading the French Government to agree to the evacuation of the Ruhr Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has contributed to the establishment of peace in the whole of Europe. It will be no exaggeration to describe this settlement as the triumph of British principles. The Abhyudaya opines that the London Conference has paved the ground for the work of pacification and reconstruction. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has achieved what the biggest Capitalists and Liberal statesmen of Europe could not do. The Bharat Jiwan remarks that all praise is due to the British Premier for the success of the London Conference. It is to be hoped that no further complications will arise and the present settlement will contribute to the development of German trade, although complete peace is impossible until the final solution of the Reparation question.

The Sudan.

The Medina characterises the Sudan incident as the outcome of the British policy of imperialism and is sceptical about a peaceful solution of the question. The Najat does not believe that the Sudan disturbances were engineered by the Egyptian extremists and finds no truth in the assertion that the people of Sudan desire to remain under the British rule. It hopes that the Sudanese will succeed in their struggle for liberty. The Aj writes: The Socialistic Labour Government of Britain has swallowed up the Sudan. Another grave injustice has been perpetrated to undo an existing injustice. Whether the Sudanese like it or not they will be taught civilisation at the point of British bayonets and the mills of Manchester will utilise their cotton. The Socialistic Labour Cabinet has outdone even the Conservatives in its ill-treatment of coloured races.

Anglo-Russian agreement.

The Pioneer says: If the Labour Government chose to regard the ratification of the Treaty as a vital issue, their defeat and resignation may be looked upon as a practical certainty; and it is very doubtful whether even their success in settling the Reparation question will outweigh, in the minds of the electors, their insistence on a Treaty with the Soviet from which Great Britain can derive no advantage. The Medina says that the Anglo-Russian agreement will spell disaster to the Muslim States of Afghanistan, Persia, Egypt, Arabia, Iraq and Palestine which will fall a prey to British imperialism. The British alliance with Russia does not forebode any good to Turkey either. It is possible that in the event of Turkey's aggressive action on the Mosul question, Russian interference may not come as a surprise. Writing in a similar strain the Al Bureed says that the alliance between England and Russia is surprising considering that the former pursues the policy of capitalism and territorial aggrandisement while the latter aims at the destruction of both, and apprehends that the agreement augurs ill to the Muslim world.

The Mosul question.

The Oudh Akhbar questions the propriety of Britain's action in referring the question of Mosul to the League of Nations and remarks that the Turks did well in refusing to submit the question to the League which is a net spread by Great Britain for enmeshing weaker nations. The Medina remarks that peace cannot be completely established between Turkey and England unless the Mosul question is solved. The Labour Government has fallen a victim to jealousy and prejudice and has falsified all expectations.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Medina is doubtful whether the stoppage of Colonial imports into India to revenge the wrong done to the Indians can force the White Colonists to do away with the 'distinction of colour and race' and remarks that under such circumstances there is no wonder if the 'Red Bengal' and the Swarajists rise up in India to destroy imperialism. The Hind-i-Jadid criticises the statement of the Secretary of State for Colonies and regrets that his views are identical with those of the foregoing Ministers and are calculated to convince the Indians of the futility of their demands as long as they remain slaves in their own country.

O'Dwyer-Nair libel suit.

The Leader congratulates the Secretary of State for India and says: Lord Olivier has done wisely and well officially to dissociate himself and his Majesty's Government from the astounding views propounded by Mr. Justice McCardie in the O'Dwyer-Nair action on the emloyment of force to quell civil disturbances.

The Reforms Enquiry Committe.

The Pioneer in a leading article headed "A Premature Investigation" says that the public proceedings of the Reforms Enquiry Committee have strengthened the view that an attempt at this stage to examine the working of the Reforms with the serious intention of effecting changes, whether in forward or backward direction, would be premature. The contention that this enquiry is premature and unnecessary is potently confirmed by the evidence now presented to the Reforms Committee. The provisional conclusion is that it has yet to be seen whether democratic government as understood in the West is at all suited to the East; for even politicians professing democratic principles, when endowed with the power of ministerial office, unconsciously adopt the outlook and attitude of the autocrat. The Leader says: The proceedings of the Reforms Enquiry Committee must have made it clear to all patriotic Indians, except those who are blinded by narrow party spirit, that the Liberal leaders who agreed to work on the Committee have been rendering inestimable service in exposing the rottenness of the existing constitution, sweeping away the cobwebs of official objections, clarifying issues and making out a strong case for a radical revision of the constitution. The utility of the enquiry might have been enhanced if the Swarajists had not boycotted the enquiry, but it will be some time before they can be expected to do the right thing in the right manner. In the meantime the Liberals must continue to shoulder the burden of carrying on the national fight in all constitutional ways open to them. The Surya says that the memorandum submitted before the Reforms Enquiry Committee by the United Provinces Liberals was very strong and important. Pandits Hirday Nath Kunzru and Gokaran Nath Misra's evidence was remarkable for profundity and maturity of thought.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Medina deplores the communal riots in connection with the Muharram and endorses the decision of the Congress Committee that the entire Congress programme should be suspended and whole-hearted efforts should be made to unite the Hindus and the Musalmans. If misunderstandings are removed and the mischievous activities of the Arya Samajists are put a stop to then the problem of Indian emancipation is practically solved. The Zulqarnain regrets the present communal tension which jeopardises national progress and adversely affects the economic and commercial activities of both the communities.

Hindu organisation.

The Surya points out that three years' bitter experience of non-cooperation has convinced the leaders that there can be no substantial unity between the Hindus and Musalmans without the organisation of the former. The forthcoming session of the Hindu Maha Sabha should refuse discussion on controversial questions and devote itself entirely to organisation work.

Congress politics.

The Vartman says that there is no doubt that every true Indian nationalist is a votary of complete independence and he does not aspire after anything short of it but it is impossible for the Indians who have for years been under the yoke of subjection to jump from the state of bondage to that of complete independence at a bound. So long as dominion self-government is not established in India and so long as we do not attain complete independence through it, the Congress should frankly fix dominion self-government to be its goal.

The Swaraj party.

Commenting on the tactics of the Swarajists in the Bengal Legislative Council the Pioneer says: The Swarajists are encouraged in their wrecking tactics by the delusion under which they labour that they have only to shatter the existing constitution in pieces, and they will be in a position at no distant date to remould it nearer to their hearts' desire. It is probable that their action will compel the Governor of Bengal to take over temporarily the administration of the Transferred subjects; indeed, it is difficult to see what other course he can adopt in the circumstances. The King-Emperor's Government must be carried on, and irresponsible Swarajists who place obstacles in its way are merely demonstrating to the British Parliament —the ultimate Court of Appeal—their utter unfitness for any further instalment of responsible government. And no one doubts that it will be carried on whatever the Swarajists may do. Probably they will try to destroy Council Government in Bengal altogether by creating a succession of deadlocks, as they have done in the Central Provinces. The Oudh Akhbar regrets that all the expectations entertained from the Swarajist Conference at Calcutta have been falsified. The Swarajists are trying to capture the Congress but their efforts in this direction are likely to prove futile as Mahatma Gandhi still wields the same influence in the country. The Bhavishya considers that the proceedings of the Swarajist Conference have shown that the Swarajists agree with all the items of Mahatma Gandhi's programme except the one relating to charkha and on this point they are anxious to enter into a compromise with the Mahatma. It maintains that the Swarajists are not different from the non-cooperators' move as they have identical aims though their methods vary to a certain extent. The Abhyudaya remarks that the new programme of the Swaraj party as laid down at the Calcutta Conference is judicious and practical. It keeps in view the interests of the country in all respects and contains nothing which calls for opposition. The Bharat Jiwan also approves of the new programme as being practical and efficacious, but considers its attempt to capture the Congress and thereby oust Mahatma Gandhi as full of danger. The Swaraj party will lose its own influence and also cause harm to the Congress and the country if it attempts to weaken the Mahatma's hold over the public mind. The Aj says that the programme laid down by the Swaraj party at the Calcutta Conference will occupy a prominent place in the history of the party. Its policy which had so far been uncertain has now assumed a definite shape. We, however, regret that it has given predominence to work inside the Councils over that outside them.

Lord Lytton and the Indian women.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Lord Lytton has explained at last—and explained nothing. His attempt to teach English so that people may distinguish between "Indian men" and "men of India" is not likely to carry conviction. And he has spoiled the grace of an explanation by cheap sneers at his political opponents, unworthy of a Governor but quite characteristic of the small mind that alone could have committed the indiscretion that has brought on him the disgust of all India. The Leader hopes that no more will be heard of Lord Lytton having insulted the manhood and womanhood of India after His Excellency's letter to Sir Rabindra Nath Tagore. This assurance should lay low the dust of bitter controversy and give a set-back to the attempt to create 'an atmosphere of resistance' in pursuance of the avowed policy of the Swarajists. The Pioneer says: To every educated Englishman Lord Lytton's meaning was perfectly clear from the very beginning. That any insult to Indian womanhood was intended or even implied in His Excellency's words was too ludicrous for serious discussion. Lord Lytton's sole offence was that he failed to gauge the mentality of the Swarajist leaders and to realise that they would seize the opportunity with avidity to read a sinister meaning into his words and to make political capital out of it with those who were less able than themselves to appreciate the nuances of the English language. The vernacular press continues to condemn in strong terms Lord Lytton's remarks regarding Indian women. The Desh Bhagat in a strongly worded article condemns Lord Lytton's speech as a wanton attack on Indian women and remarks that it is due to the administrators of the type of Lord Lytton that the police has become bold enough to tyrannise over Indian women. During his régime he will reap the consequences of his insults to Indian womanhood as the Bengali women being brave and heroic will allow him no peace. The Medina remarks that probably he has been driven to abuse the Bengalis on account of being irritated by the Swarajists. We may have had many grievances against the Englishmen but we never came across any instance in which an Englishman indulged in abusing Indians. The Hamdam describes Lord Lytton's remarks as not only opposed to decency and chivalry but also to statesmanship and wisdom and remarks that no protest can have any effect upon him as he is the representative of a Government which pays little regard to public opinion, whose rule is based on military and naval force and which does not hesitate to throw bombs on unarmed people. The time will soon come when the united voice of India will be raised against the present system of Government in which the susceptibilites of subject races are so lightly treated. The Tohfa-i-Hind says that Lord Lytton is devoid of all the noble sentiments and good qualities and that by attacking the honour of the Indian women he has reflected only his own meanness. The Aj says that Lord Lytton has disgraced his office by his remarks traducing Indian women. The strong protest made by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu against those remarks will find echo in every Indian heart. Lord Lytton should either express regret for his words or vacate his office. It is due to the helplessness of the Indians that he can disparage Indian women with impunity. The Bharat Bandhu remarks that Lord Lytton's attack upon the Indian women cannot but create resentment and indignation among Indians. It appears that he has thought Indians to be beasts. If he has any gentlemanliness in him he should at once withdraw his remarks and apologise with a sincere heart. If he does not do so the matter should be brought before the Bengal Legislative Council and the Assembly. The Bharat Jiwan writes: Is it possible to conceive of a more insulting allegation than that made by Lord Lytton? That he should have the courage to do so shows that the honour of Indians has been of late at a discount. If Indians have any manhood in them they should retaliate against this insult and prove that they are still self-respecting.

Political crisis in Bengal.

The Pioneer in a leading article headed "The Wreckers' Triumph" says: The wreckers have triumphed, and have annulled the Reformed constitution in Bengal as they had already annulled it in the Central Provinces. For the immediate consequences of their action they care nothing at all. Mr. Das and his coadjutors are welcome to whatever satisfaction they may derive from the success of their tactics. They will find in due course that a great disillusionment is in store for them. The decision as to the time and extent of any further constitutional advance rests with the British Parliament and the British people, and those who have followed intelligently the trend of British opinion in regard to Indian affairs are well aware that the Swarajists' gestures and postures have not created a favourable impression. The Swarajists have played into the hands of the "Die-Hards." The Leader disapproves of the action of the Bengal Legislative Council in rejecting a second time the demand for Ministers' salaries. It was a blunder on the part of the Governor of Bengal not to have insisted on the resignation of the Ministers. They should have themselves resigned immediately after the previous adverse vote. The postponement of the evil day has done no good to anybody; it has merely served the unfortunate purpose of exposing Lord Lytton's proneness to unconstitutionalism, it might be under the influence of irritation. At another place the paper says: Mr. Das' party cannot absolve themselves of the serious responsibility of having done a grave public disservice by the frenzied pursuit of a thoughtless and mischievous policy. Always devoid of magnanimity towards political opponents at either end, they equally lack prudence and foresight and are among the unwisest of Indian public men. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: There is no justification for any surprise at the result specially after the revealing evidence before the Reforms Enquiry Committee. If the action is taken to defy public opinion it will not hesitate to pay back in the same coin. Not a single Bill can hereafter pass the Bengal Council—that is to say if the members of the Council have self-respect and the spirit that we associate even with the worm when trodden upon—Lord Lytton will deliberately tread upon the Council when he takes charge of the ministerial portfolio. Of one thing there is no doubt: no one in India cares for what British newspapers say or even for what the purblind Secretary of State may say in repeating parrotwise the notes put before him. There is only one solution. That is to yield to the pressure of public opinion. This would mean that the Government have real affection for the people. So long as the Government do not feel that they have to rule the people according to their wishes the present unnatural situation must continue.

Release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani.

The Medina congratulates the Musalmans on the release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani, one of the greatest and sincerest patriots and advises them to derive practical lessons from his strong character and perseverance. It apprehends that the British policy will not allow him to remain outside the jail for a long time. The Arya Varta expresses its gratification at the release of Maulana Hasrat Mohani, and remarks that in near future his views will become popularly accepted because they embody a programme compatible with the sentiments and capabilities of the people.

Liberty of press.

The Shakti describes the prosecution of a number of nationalist journals for libel and defamation as a serious attack on the liberty of the press and says that a vigorous and widespread agitation will have to be started afresh for its vindication. When the law courts fail to do justice, when the executive act arbitrarily and when the people are oppressed it is impossible that the press can forego its right of criticising them.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Al Khalil remarks that the amendments proposed by the Select Committee in the Rent Act aim at doing away with the proprietary rights of the zamindars. It is opposed to the granting of life interest in the land to the tenants and advises the zamindars to hold meetings and organise associations to bring pressure upon the Government so that their descendants may not be reduced to beggary.

Muslim Waqf Act.

The Rahnuma expresses its indignation at the report of the Waqf Committee and exhorts the Muslim members of the Council to have the Waqf Act enforced at once as the Musalmans cannot long tolerate to see the ruination of their Waqf property. The Zulqarnain insinuates that some Muslim members of the Council being themselves trustees of big Waqf properties oppose the enforcement of the Act so that they may not be deprived of the chances of misappropriating the Waqf funds. It exhorts the Musalmans to launch an agitation for the enforcement of the Act. The Al Khalil says that the recommendations of the Waqf Committee betray the existence of a great conspiracy to misappropriate the Waqf fund. It holds such zamindar members of the Council responsible for it as are in possession of big Waqf properties and urges that an agitation should be started throughout the province to get the Act enforced at once.

Improvement Trust.

The Azad says that the Improvement Trusts have squandered the public money without benefitting any body except a few high paid officials. They would have served many useful purposes and accomplished many works of public utility if they had been conducted on right lines. As regards the costs of establishment it remarks that they should not be disproportionate to the work done and suggests that one Chief Engineer is quite sufficient for all the three places.

Political propaganda.

The Medina remarks that the Labour Government has reverted to the old policy of imperialism which is alone responsible for disturbances, pillage and unrest in Iraq. The Mosul question will put an end for good to the British friendship and it is possible that the nationalist Turks may have a recourse to arbitrament of sword in getting back this piece of territory. The armed demonstrations and the rebellious activities of the Sudanese are the direct result of the Premier's parliamentary speech. If the Labour Government wants to keep intact the British honour and prestige, it should do away with its anti-Muslim policy and put an end to the present difficulties and troubles of Great Britain by adopting a conciliatory attitude in the Near East. The Aj publishes a contributed article by "Ugra" and "Suman" in honour of the Janamashtami festival in the course of which they invoke Lord Krishna to appear on earth once again in a terrible form and tell the proud atheistical demons that God exists and knows well how to pour vials of fire on oppressors.

NAINI TAL:
The 30th August, 1924.

ZAFAR OMAR,
Publicity Officer, United Provinces.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED AT THE GOVERNMENT BRANCH PRESS, NAINI TAL.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 6th September, 1924.

London Conference.

THE Haqiqat hails the agreement between the Allies and Germany as the harbinger of an era of peace and order in Europe and hopes that it will lay afresh the foundation of economic reconstruction. The Najat pays a tribute to Mr. MacDonald for solving the most complicated problem on which alone depended the peace of Europe. It is, however, doubtful of an honest observance of the terms of agreement on the part of the avaricious European nations and apprehends that the pent up Franco-German ill-feeling will burst up one day like a volcano.

The Sudan.

According to the Leader news from Sudan shows that there is an influential section of the Sudanese who favour union with Egypt and are opposed to the present régime. If the people of Sudan really want to ally their destiny with that of Egypt, the British Government will have to reconsider their policy sooner or later. The Hamdam characterises the British policy in Sudan as contrary to all principles of justice and morality and apprehends that if Zaghlol Pasha has recourse to drastic measures for the fulfilment of his demands peace and order in Egypt will be endangered. It regards the claim of Great Britain on Sudan as an example of that greed which European Powers often display against the weak Eastern nations on the strength of their military power and better organisation and remarks that if the European statesmen persist in their obstinacy the time is not far off when the entire Eastern world will rise against them. The Oudh Akhbar says: It is wrong to call it a mutiny when it was only a demonstration for the attainment of their legitimate rights. Sudan is a fertile part of Egypt and any attempt to separate it from the latter is doomed to failure. If Great Britain wants to have its position secure in Africa it should not lose the sympathy of Egypt.

The League of Nations.

The meeting in Genoa has directed attention towards the affairs of the League. The Leader welcomes the appointment of M. Motta of Switzerland as the President of the Assembly and says that the Assembly of the League is likely to exercise increasing moral influence over the affairs of Europe with the restoration of normal affairs. If its members discharge their duties with independence and impartially and courageously uphold the claims of justice in a spirit of international righteousness, its authority is bound to grow. Otherwise the noble ideal for the realisation of which it has been founded will remain a pious dream of theorists and political philosophers. The Medina, on the other hand, describes the League of Nations as an instrument in the hands of the Imperialistic nations of Europe to serve their own ends and views with satisfaction the action of the Turks in refusing to submit the question of Mosul to the League. They have not fallen a prey to the fraudulent justice of the League and have adopted an attitude befitting an enlightened and self-respecting nation.

Reforms Enquiry Committee.

The Aligarh District Gazette describes the failure of the Swarajists to participate in the Reforms Enquiry Committee as a grave betrayal of their principle. Their real object is not to see their country on the road to progress but only to manufacture agitation against the existing Government. The Haqiqat is sceptical about the success of the Government in continuing to work out the present Reforms after the defects of the dyarchy have been exposed and remarks that the only way in which the Parliament can appease the Indians is to grant provincial autonomy. The Hamdam says that the silence maintained by the Labour Government as to its future policy regarding the Reforms has made the question all the more intricate and aggravated the disappointment of the thinking people and remarks that if the country unanimously supports its leaders and is prepared to undergo all kinds of sacrifice the Government can be forced to grant swaraj to it. Commenting upon the evidence of the Musalmans before the Reforms Enquiry Committee the Medina concludes that they will not support the demand for swaraj as long as there is an apprehension of their rights being trampled upon. The mischievous activities of the Arya Samajists have created dissatisfaction and apprehension in the minds of the Musalmans, who now have no faith in their countrymen and under the circumstances it is impossible to secure further Reforms. The Oudh Akhbar opines that the unanimous condemnation of the dyarchical system of Government by the ex-Ministers goes a long way to prove that the views of Mr. Gandhi and the people of his way of thinking regarding the Reforms were quite correct and that the agitation launched against the Reforms was justified.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hamdam throws the entire responsibility for the communal disturbances on the Hindu organisation movements and avers that happy relations can be restored among the Hindus and Musalmans if Mahatma Gandhi exerts himself in checking the spirit of the Hindu Sabha and the entire Congress machinery is moved against the mischief-mongers. It further advises the Congressmen to exclude all the members of the Aman Sabhas from the Congress. The Haqiqat resents the rejoicings of the Anglo-Indian press over the deplorable disturbances at Gulbarga and remarks that it is publishing exaggerated account of the riot simply to prejudice the Berar question. The Mashriq interprets the establishment of democracy in India as a Hindu raj and advises Maulana Hasrat Mohani to concentrate his attention on the organisation of the Musalmans as Hindu-Muslim unity in the real sense of the term is impossible. The Abhyudaya refers to the loss suffered by the Hindus during the communal disturbances at Gulbarga and Bhagalpur and remarks that it is impossible for the country to make any real progress unless and until the Hindus are strong and organised. The organisation of the Hindus is indispensable, for the establishment of swaraj and the effacement of Hindu-Muslim disturbances. The Kartavya holds the Muhammadans responsible for almost all the last Muharram riots in various places and says that leaders themselves are to blame for these disturbances inasmuch as they have not the courage to condemn those who take the initiative in these matters. It urges that joint Hindu-Muslim committees should be established at all places to take preventive and precautionary measures against communal riots, otherwise they are sure to extend into every part of the country.

The Swaraj party.

Commenting on Mr. C. R. Das' recent statement the Pioneer says: It remains to be seen whether the Constitutionalists will play into the hands of the Swarajists by adopting as their programme a watered down edition of the Swarajists' policy, or whether they will take their stand boldly on the side of the Reforms and steady progress and warn the electorate of the inevitable result of following the Swarajist lead For if the Swarajists succeed in wrecking the reformed constitution everywhere, the only possible result will be to strengthen the belief which is gradually growing up even among Englishmen, who have welcomed the Reforms and who have been confidently looking to India to make the experiment a conspicuous success that Indians are not yet fit to exercise even the responsibilities entrusted to them under the Government of India Act, much less for any further constitutional advance. In another article the paper says that there are, indeed, plain indications that the success of the Swarajists' wrecking tactics in Bengal is already beginning to lose its robust faith in India's fitness for an immediate constitutional advance. The Leader replying to the above criticism says that the Constitutionalists will not stand aloof from the Government, it is true, but they have worked the Reforms and reached the conviction that they have to be reformed urgently and radically. They have been working to this end and will continue to do so undeterred by the taunts of opponents by no means disinterested that they are making of themselves a feeble edition of a more aggressive party. It complains that the policy of the British newspapers is still one of uncompromising resistance to educated Indians' demands. The Liberals' method is quite different from that of the Swarajists' if the latter can be said to have a considered method at all, for they are no believers in wrecking and all that sort of thing. Commenting upon the Swarajists' Conference in Bengal the Medina accuses them of sacrificing truth and honesty to liberty and politics and remarks that Mr. C. R. Das is a political time-server and has nothing in common with the non-cooperators. To him non-cooperation only means to make the government impossible for bureaucracy. But surely this cannot give us swaraj nor can the country expect any good from such politicians. They have put an end to the non-cooperation movement and brought the country to the same stage against which non-cooperation struggled for three years. The Vartman regrets that at the Calcutta Conference also the Swarajist leaders have failed to enter into a compromise with the majority party of the Congress. The Swaraj party has no definite programme before it even now. The statement that it will adjust its programme to the requirements of the situation is not sufficient to keep the flag of any agitation flying. The political struggle of 30 crores of persons cannot be maintained by activities in the Councils alone. The Surya doubts whether the Swarajists will ever be able to carry out the programme laid down at the Calcutta Conference. It contends that the Swarajists have no definite programme at all and change their policy to suit their ever-changing aims. They have really come round to the policy of the Liberals, but still never hesitate to abuse the latter to serve the ends of their party.

Indian independence.

One Bal Krishna writing to the Pratap remarks: Complete independence alone can be the goal of Indian politics. Freedom is the characteristic of the age. Distribution of power is a sign of the times. To go against it is to court self-destruction. If we do not endeavour to attain complete independence, we shall be courting self-annihilation.

Lord Lytton and the Indian women.

Lord Lytton's explanation has been generally considered to be unsatisfactory by the vernacular press. The Haqiqat says that the real aim of the Swarajists in raising so much hue and cry against the speech of Lord Lytton is to start a propaganda against him and the Ministers as Mr. C. R. Das and his comrades are bent upon utilising every weapon just or otherwise in attacking the Ministers. The Hamdam regards the explanation of Lord Lytton as mere hair-splitting and remarks that the wrong can be rectified only by an unconditional apology. Writing in a similar strain the Najat also lays stress upon an unconditional apology and remarks that it is idle to expect any such thing from him as the members of the bureaucracy are mostly devoid of moral courage. The Oudh Akbar describes Lord Lytton's explanation as a lame excuse and remarks that the distinction made by him in 'Indian men' and 'men of India' is an after-thought to pacify the feelings of the Bengalis. The Vartman remarks that in his explanation Lord Lytton has tried to whitewash his conduct. His attempt to conceal his offence instead of expressing his repentance is indicative of his cowardice and weakness. It will only intensify the agitation until Lord Lytton openly apologises for his indiscreet words. The Aj says: The fine grammatical distinction drawn by the noble Lord between 'Indian women' and 'women of India' to justify his remarks does not satisfy us. It is inconceivable that even the best scholars of English could not correctly interpret the words used by His Excellency. The truth is that in his inordinate love for the police he did not weigh his words but uttered them carelessly. But now that he has expressed regret for his conduct and assured that it was not his object to insult Indian womanhood it is our duty to accept it. The Gramvasi remarks that no condemnation of Lord Lytton's attack on Indian womanhood can be too strong. The temerity with which his Lordship has given utterance to utterly irresponsible words show what indifference, contempt and hatred civilians cherish in their hearts towards India. It will be an insult to India if such a man retains office any longer. His Lordship's explanation is a mere twisting of words and seeks to conceal the truth from the public. The Shakti says that Indians will surely feel indignant at the disparaging remarks of Lord Lytton against Indian women but there is nothing to be wondered at if members of the bureaucracy which gets many ill-deeds committed by the police in this country and which perpetrated all possible atrocities under martial law utter such mean statements in order to humour the police and conceal its faults. Indian women bore many brutal atrocities but did not come out even to appear as witnesses. And such attacks on them! If the misdeeds or faults of British women were exposed the bureaucracy would have recourse to the defamation or racial hatred sections of the Penal Code. Mr. Kelkar and others have been fined for libelling Collectors but the Governor of Bengal has not been punished for libelling a whole nation.

Political crisis in Bengal.

The Hamdam regrets that owing to the resignation of Mr. Fazal-ul-Haq the scheme framed for the progress of the Muslim education in Bengal will have to be postponed for some time and remarks that to give practical proof of the failure of Reforms was more necessary than the promotion of communal interests and as it is the present system of Government only which is causing greatest loss to the communal interests, it is necessary that India should insist on the grant of responsible government to eradicate the evil. The Oudh Akhbar says, that when generosity has failed there is absolutely no hope that any 'fool-proof constitution' as suggested by the Pioneer, will ever succeed in India and the efforts to force any such constitution upon the Indians which is opposed to their demand for liberty is doomed to failure. It is a sheer deception to expect that the pre-Reform era can revert again and autocracy can again be the order of the day. The Haqiqat takes to task the Muslim members of the Bengal Council for supporting the Swarajists against the Ministers and remarks that the resignation of the latter can never bring swaraj to India. The Musalmans should know that their community will suffer if the Ministers are forced to resign. The Aj is gratified at the decision of the Governor of Bengal regarding the transferred subjects and the Council. It remarks: If this show comes to an end for good we shall be all the more pleased. The good of the country lies in the dissolution of the Councils. The Central Provinces and Bengal have shown the way to other provinces. In another article the same paper says that the Swarajist victory over the question of the salaries of Ministers in Bengal is as much due to the labour of the Swarajists as to the recital of their bitter experiences by ex-Ministers before the Reforms Enquiry Committee. The Bengal Government is reaping the fruits of its doings. It is indeed gratifying that dyarchy has been killed and the Councils have been prorogued in Bengal and the Central Provinces. Swaraj will come much nearer to us that day when martial law will be openly declared in place of the present underhand military administration.

Mr. Gandhi.

Commenting on Mrs. Besant's conversation with Mr. Gandhi the Leader says: If Mr. Gandhi agrees to join her Convention and to help her in the carrying out of her plan then Mrs. Besant will deserve to be congratulated on her success. If Mr. Gandhi has reconciled himself to the idea of going up to the British Parliament with a scheme of self-government and to ask it to sanction it, then he must be presumed to have abandoned the principle of non-cooperation. For the sake of unity he would not mind keeping his own convictions in abeyance. There would be nothing surprising if Mr. Gandhi were to join hands with Mrs. Besant and help her in the realisation of her scheme. Stranger things have happened. However, we must wait for the further development of Mr. Gandhi's politics. The Indian Daily Telegraph in a leading article headed "Gandhi's Sacrifice" says: Having made the great sacrifice for political union, he has been pursuing the idea in interviews with Mrs. Besant and Mr. Sastri. If a common platform could be found for all the various political parties to meet for one year and present a united front to Britain, the dream of swaraj may soon become a reality. We have, however, our own doubts whether the Liberals would be prepared to follow Mr. Das: their enthusiasm began and ended in first accepting dyarchy and then in condemning it. The Advocate hopes that the united strength of Mahatma Gandhi and Mrs. Besant will bring a solution to the intricate problem of communal unity.

Liberty of press.

Resenting the action recently taken against the editors of certain newspapers the Haqiqat says that the repeal of the Press Act has simply proved a fraud as from the armoury of laws the bureaucracy has furnished itself with weapons which can quickly put an end to the life of a newspaper. At first the editors were prosecuted under section 124, but when this measure failed to produce the desired effect libel suits began to be filed against them to destroy the financial stability of the newspapers. It is now necessary that a Press Association to safeguard the rights of the press should be established in India and a vigorous agitation should be started against this new tyranny of the Government which should be forced to amend these sections of the Indian Penal Code having a direct bearing on the liberty of the press. The Kartavya maintains that though the Press Act has been repealed the press continues to be hampered as much or even more under the ordinary law. If journalists are to be prosecuted even for honest criticism there can be no free press at all in the country. If the autocratic bureaucracy is not to slacken the least its policy of repression it had better suppress all papers once for all.

Freedom of Nepal.

A correspondent writing in the Pratap remarks that although it is said that the treaty recently concluded between England and Nepal recognises the independence of the latter, yet it is not so, otherwise it must have kept its ambassador in foreign countries. It is to be hoped that Chandra Shamsher Bahadur, the Prime Minister of Nepal, will keep himself safe from British designs and make the Maharaja Dhiraj of Nepal really free and independent.

Jubbulpore rape case.

Deploring the rape committed by a British soldier upon an Indian woman at Jubbulpore the Desh Bhagat in a strongly-worded article asks the Indians to be disillusioned of the belief that the Englishmen do not outrage Indian women. If the Indians have any self-respect in them they should kick at the life of slavery and support the nationalists in their struggle for India's emancipation. With the presence of the bureaucracy the perpetration of such tyrannies will continue and swaraj is the only means of preventing them. The Aj deplores the cowardice displayed by a number of Indians in not rescuing an Indian woman from the hands of a European who committed rape upon her before their eyes in broad daylight. This shows that though nominally alive Indians are a lifeless people for all practical purposes. We request the leaders to take early steps for the removal of the cowardice of the Indians which is the root cause of the country's ills.

Agra Tenancy Act.

Mr. Sangam Lal Agarwal writing to the Abhyudaya says: The publication of the Agra Tenancy Bill in the Government Gazette is in effect a declaration of war by the United Provinces Government and its representatives against the cultivators. This Bill will make the cultivators the slaves of zamindars for ever. They will do well never to acquiesce in this enslavement. Let the cultivators start a well-organised, wide-spread and vigorous agitation for their protection and the Government-cum-zamindars company will be compelled to expiate for their evil intentions.

Proscription of Hindi readers.

The Aj disapproves of the action of the Government in disallowing Mr. Sangam Lal's resolution regarding the proscription of Mr. Ram Das Gour's Hindu readers and remarks that a perusal of the arguments advanced by the President of the Council for disallowing the resolution makes us laugh and we pity the advocates of Government on finding them stooping so low in supporting an injustice. The action of the President means that the rulers may act arbitrarily but the Provincial Parliament cannot even protest against it.

The United Provinces capital.

The Leader is exercised over the question of the transfer of a part of the Secretariat from Allahabad to Lucknow. In a leading article headed "Allahabad" the paper says: The present position is anomalous to the point of being ridiculous. There is therein not only a callous disregard of the interests and the sentiment of Allahabad but, in truth, also a flouting of the authority of the Government of India. If the Government of India's decision be adverse to Allahabad, there will then be an agitation for the separation of the combined provinces so that the whole of the major province of Agra with its thirty-six districts may not be permanently consigned to the inferior and humiliating position of a mere out-house of the city of Lucknow. In another leading article the paper says: This time Allahabad, and with it the province of Agra as a whole, must make up its mind to see the thing through. Either relief will be afforded it, or it should determine to organise a really big agitation for the restoration of Agra to the position of the old North-West Province. The Pioneer says: The change of capital is scarcely a matter of paramount concern except, perhaps, to the parochially-minded. The time for an effective protest was when Sir Harcourt Butler transferred the seat of the Council to Lucknow and the United Provinces Legislative Council voted the money for the construction of a new Council Chamber in that city.

The Amethi riots.

The Mashriq refers to the Amethi disturbances and justifies the action of the Sub-Divisional Officer in issuing orders against the Hindus, accuses the Deputy Commissioner of being overawed by the threats of the Swarajists and remarks that he is too weak to discharge the duties of a Magistrate. It regards the suspension of the Sub-Inspector as quite unjustifiable, and advises the Government to take measures against those who create communal hatred through their speeches and writings.

Political propaganda.

The Swadesh publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Ramnath Lal Suman, says that though the Indians themselves are responsible for the present degraded and miserable condition they blame God for it and doubt even His very existence. They are, however, mistaken, for when did God tell them to barter away their liberty and become the slaves of an irresponsible and alien community of shopkeepers. If they want to behold the terrible form of God they should turn their attention to the Russian fields and at its revolution or to the Great War and the anarchical activities of the Bengali youths in the Bengal Partition days. But they cannot behold these sights because their blood has been cooled by centuries of slavery. The Vartman remarks that the contention of freedom-loving persons of dependent countries that they can carry on their struggle of freedom by every violent means should be held to be much more constitutional than those wars which are often fought among free countries on account of their policy of imperialism and territorial aggrandisement and in which combatant nations shed sinful blood at the altar of selfish interests. The Prem publishes a contributed article in which the writer Bhuvan Bhaskar puts in a plea for the commemoration of the patriots, who though described by the bureaucracy as anarchists and murderers were nevertheless moved to sacrifice their lives by a sincere desire to uproot injustice and inequality and emancipate their motherland and establish true peace and universal love in the world.

Egypt and Sudan.

THE Bharat Dharma says that the declaration of the British Government that the Sudanese prefer to remain under its protection despite their revolt illustrates the saying that might is right, otherwise the Sudanese have made it abundantly clear that they hate the British and want union with Egypt. The Aj is not at all surprised at Zaghlul Pasha's decision not to interview the British Premier in connection with the Sudan question. It has now become clear that the Sudanese want union with Egypt. But their desire is being crushed by military force. In these circumstances it is impossible for the Prime Ministers of Egypt and Britain to be able to hold friendly negotiations regarding the Sudan question. The Haqiqat remarks: Though for political reasons the British statesmen may not accept the legitimate demands of the Egyptians in the matter of Sudan, it is an open secret that the Sudanese want to throw in their lot with the Egyptians. The obstinacy displayed hitherto by the British statesmen is likely to increase the unrest in Sudan and strengthen the tension between Great Britain and Egypt.

Struggle for liberty in Morocco.

The Oudh Akhbar describes the reverses encountered by the Spanish armies against the Riff people as the defeat of imperialism and remarks that the humiliaton of Spain should serve as a warning to the civilised world. The Hamdam is gratified at the continued success of Abdul Karim and remarks that he is fighting for the right cause while the Spaniards want to enslave the Morrocans and usurp their country.

Rebellion in Khost.

The Medina describes the Khost rebellion as the result of some foreign intrigue and wire-pulling and remarks: We cannot express any opinion regarding the Russian attitude but we are well aware of the diplomatic moves of Great Britain, whose vast Empire is not the result of any conquest but only of such activities and intrigues. It will not, therefore, be improper to say that the Westerners have resorted to their old methods in the case of Afghanistan also. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani, on the other hand, regards the Khost rebellion as the result of Bolshevik activities and remarks that the latter with a view to injure the relations between England and Afghanistan have given publicity to the news that the Government of India is helping the tribesmen against the Amir. Had the Indian Government any desire to encourage anarchy in Afghanistan it would not have detained the sons of Yakub Khan in India.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to rioting in Kohat the Pioneer says: This occurrence serves once more to emphasise the acute tension which prevails between Hindus and Muhammadans at the present time, and how small a spark suffices to bring about a conflagration. From the Frontier to Southern India, and from Calcutta to Bombay, the slightest untoward incident may cause an outbreak, and the occurrence of any religious festival means anxious precautions on the part of the responsible officials until the festival is over. But the plain truth is—and everybody knows it—that Hindus will not trust a Muhammadan officer, and Muhammadans will not trust a Hindu, while both communities repose confidence in the British official whose impartiality is above suspicion. In the face of facts like these, which are notorious, the contention that India can do without the British official at a pinch, and that there would be no difficulty in replacing all of them by competent Indians, is not merely untenable, but positively ridiculous. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Hindus are certainly large in numbers and they have undoubtedly the correct spirit to suffer for their gods and their religion. Religious feelings are not confined to the followers of the Prophet. The revelation has burst upon all that Hindu-Muslim unity can never come by one section making all the sacrifices and the other section enjoying all the fruits. At another place the paper says: People who cried themselves hoarse only the other day, "Mahatma Gandhi-ki-Jai", "Hindu-Muslim-ki-Jai" are ready to fall at each other's throat. Hindus want that Muslim officials should go: Muslims want that Hindu officials should go, with the result that the Europeans would remain. And yet we are all agreed that the Lee loot must be prevented! What a contradiction? Indian politicians have failed. British bureaucracy will remain for long. The Brahmachari opines that the Hindus committed a serious blunder in trusting the Musalmans too much, with the result that they have suffered the most under the guise of the so-called Hindu-Muslim unity. Hindus must realise that they have first to organise and strengthen themselves before they seek union with the Muhammadans, otherwise they will be courting self-annihilation. The Gyan Shakti holds that the Gulbarga riot definitely explodes the myth once for all that it is the English who set the Hindu and Muhammadan communities by the ear in this country and shows that the Muhammadans of their own accord want to crush and swallow the Hindus. It asks with what force can the Nizam now demand the restoration of Berar. The Surya charges the Hindus with being guilty of fatal cowardice in putting up with the ever-increasing atrocities of Muhammadans, including outrages upon their women and children, and says that the Hindu-Muslim unity is a mere dream in view of such acts and tendencies on the part of Muhammadans. Hindus vainly prattle of non-violence when they have not the strength and power to punish perpetrators of atrocities on them. The Satya is dissatisfied with the statement of Mr. Gandhi that while the Musalmans may demolish a thousand Hindu temples he will not raise his finger against a single mosque and remarks: The sermon of ahinsa (non-violence) has emasculated the Hindu nation. Mr. Gandhi is bent on preaching the same sermon which is most unfortunate for the Hindus. We do not want such religion as prohibits us from raising our hand against tyrants, oppressors and badmashes. The true religion is the religion of the Vedas which enjoins us to raise our hands to bring to book the goondas of Delhi and Gulbarga. Hindus at present do not stand in need of Mahatma Gandhi's advice. They have to follow the teachings of Lord Krishna and Lokmanya Tilak. The Hamdam regrets that the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements are at last bearing fruit according to the wishes of their founders and the Hindus on the strength of their number and wealth are trying to secure new rights at the expense of the Musalmans. It is to be deplored that they are now playing in the hands of the enemies of their freedom and are organising themselves against the Musalmans. The local authorities to serve their own interests show partiality to the stronger party though it is the prime duty of the Government to safeguard the rights of the weak and to bring to justice the oppressors. The Nejat lays the entire responsibility for the communal disturbances at the door of the educated class who by patronising the mischief-mongers encourage them to commit excesses. No Musalman can ever deny the right of the Hindus to organise themselves or to convert others to their faith but it is only the spirit underlying the movement which is apprehended to be a direct challenge to the interest of Muslim India. The Al Khalil regards the communal riots as an organised attack of the Hindus upon the Musalmans and regrets that most of the Hindus professing to be Congressmen are openly taking part in Shuddhi and Sangathan movements. It advises the Musalman leaders to expose the anti-Muslim activities of the Hindus. The Al Bashir describes the Gulbarga riots as the result of Arya Samajists' propaganda which is intended to create hatred among the peaceful subjects of the Native States and hopes that His Exalted Highness will take necessary steps to protect his people from this baneful influence.

The Swaraj party.

The Pioneer says that Mr. Gandhi's recent communication to Pandit Moti Lal Nehru can only be interpreted in one way. It means the absolute surrender of Mr. Gandhi and his followers to Mr. Das and the party who favour entry into the Councils, in order to wreck them. With regard to the efforts to bring about unity among different sections of the politicians, the paper says: It is difficult to believe that Mr. Das and his followers, flushed with their victory in the Bengal Council, will forego their wrecking tactics and their coquetting with revolutionaries at the behest of the Liberals. The Leader is afraid that disappointment will await Mrs. Besant if she attaches any serious importance to the views of such an unbalanced and fickle politician as Mr. Das. The Aj remarks that the country is suffering a great loss because of lack of a definite definition of swaraj. It is the main cause of communal and political differences in the country. If swaraj is explicitly defined there will be little room left for differences of opinion regarding the means for the attainment of swaraj and our opponents will hardly get an opportunity of serving their selfish ends by misinterpreting swaraj and setting one community against another, one professional class against another, the capitalists against the labourers and the labourers against the capitalists. The same paper says that although we are not the advocates of Council entry or supporters of the Swarajists yet we must say that the charge levelled against them that they did not abide by their promise is unjust and baseless. Wherever they were in a majority they honestly fulfilled their promises and left no room for complaint. It will be universally admitted that they have created such an ugly situation for dyarchy that its end must be regarded as a settled fact. The Vartman observes that it was improper on the part of an influential leader like Mr. C. R. Das to have stated in his recent interview with a press representative that the Indian problem could be solved by constitutional means and the need for satyagraha would never arise. We are convinced that in the end we are bound to come into conflict with the existing laws and it is in view of this contingency that Mahatma Gandhi has placed the ideal of satyagraha before us.

Boycott of British goods.

Referring to the decision of the Bengal Congress Committee to boycott British cloth the Abhyudaya remarks that the weapon of boycott of British goods is an infallible one. It can do only good and no harm to the country. If the boycott of British goods is started in an organised manner in other provinces too, much of poor India's wealth can be saved from being drained to England and at the same time our indigenous industries will receive a much desired impetus.

The Lee Report.

In a leading article, headed "The Lee Report and the Legislature," the Pioneer says: A study of the Report by a dispassionate critic should enable the Indian members of the Legislature to find very valid arguments for withstanding the clamorous condemnation of its proposals. We have no doubt that, taking the cue from that fervent admirer of the British official, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, a large section of the Legislative Assembly will attempt to justify opposition to the Government's acceptance of those proposals on the ground that the question of the position of the Services can be settled only when the demand for a "further advance" has been met. At another place the paper says: It is safe to assume that if Pandit Moti Lal Nehru's amendment were carried, and if the Labour Government in a moment of weakness decided to give effect to it—fortunately a very unlikely contingency—there would be such an exodus of British officials on proportionate pensions that there would be some difficulty in carrying on the administration, and anything approaching efficiency would be quite out of the question. The Indian Daily Telegraph retorts by saying that nothing of the kind will happen. British officials will not go in large numbers for the simple reason that they can never get such salary anywhere else, and if they did, there are Indians who will fill their places with credit and with considerable relief to the tax-payer. At another place the paper says that the United Provinces Council raises its level of political thought and conceptions by its vote against the Lee recommendations. It is impossible for any Indian, landholder or Liberal or Swarajist, to acquiesce in the 'loot' as it has been called. We are glad that an authoritative vote has been given against the Lee recommendations in the name of the United Provinces. The legislators have thus the satisfaction of sending forth their curse on an impending calamity that almost threatens to be inevitable. The same paper adds that if British youths do not care, India would go in for American youths or German youths who know to speak and write the English language. There will be any number of youths rushing for passage the moment the sound of the rupee rings in their ears, especially when they find retired civilians living like Nabobs in England. We wish Indian youths of talent had such opportunities to amass wealth. After reading the speech of Sir Sivaswamy Iyer, all that the services can say is: "Et-tu-Brutes: then die the Lee report." The Hamdam takes exception to Sir Michael O'Dwyer's remarks that the civilians are the backbone of India and that those who are opposing the recommendtions of the Lee Commission are causing great injury to India's demand for Dominion status and remarks: The greatest achievement of the Indian Civil Service is that during the hundred years of its rule India has been reduced to penury and destitution and its industries have been ruined. The people of the country which were once prosperous owing to its agriculture and commerce do not now get sufficient food to eat nor sufficient cloth to clothe themselves. They cannot manage to bring up their children for whose primary education there is not even sufficient money in the Government treasury. While they are in this state of penury the members of the Indian Civil Service are intent only on their own comfort and luxury and being dissatisfied with their high emoluments are determined to place another burden on the Indian Exchequer. They are also directly responsible for creating the present atmosphere of unprecedented communal tension. Every Indian believes that if these English men leave India for good all dissensions and disturbances will be wiped away from the country.

Lord Lytton and Indian women.

The Pioneer says: It is impossible to feel anything but contempt for the unscrupulous manner in which Lord Lytton's alleged insult to Indian womanhood in his Dacca speech has been, and is still being, exploited for political purposes in Bengal. To every Englishman, and, we feel sure, to a great many Indians who have a sense of decency and propriety, the agitation has been positively nauseating from first to last. It is a discreditable business of which Mr. Das and his associates ought to be thoroughly ashamed. The Mahashakti says: Born in India and brought up for a considerable period of his life in this country too, Lord Lytton seems to have had a more abundant share of Indian's loaves and fishes than of Indian's culture, and that he has expressed his gratitude to India by only insulting her sons and daughters, instead of doing something worse, is a fact for which it seems to be rather our turn to be grateful and glad. In another article the paper says: Knowingly or unknowingly, His Excellency has been the unfortunate means of causing pain to millions of people over whom he has been placed in authority; and it behoves him, situated as he is, not less the prestige of his position, to plainly admit this fact and apologise like a gentleman, as he is. The Satya insinuates that Dr. Tagore's letter to Lord Lytton was an inspired one which provided the latter with an opportunity to clear his position and remarks that even after all this Lord Lytton could not realise his real object. His explanation has served no useful purpose. The Shakti says that Lord Lytton's explanation shows that his words were liable to misinterpretation and that he committed a blunder and asks whether the bureaucracy have ever thought that the words of Indian speakers are similarly capable of misinterpretation and that they too were liable to commit blunders.

Political crisis in Bengal.

The Haqiqat condemns the Muslim members of the Bengal Council for proving unfaithful to their community and taking side with the party of Mr. Das and remarks that the Swarajists' intention of forming a new Ministry in Bengal is the clear indication of the fact that they do not want to wreck the dyarchy but only to remove the Muslim Ministers. The Governor of Bengal has betrayed a great weakness in not sanctioning the salaries of the Ministers by exercising his special powers. If he had done so he would not have been put to so much trouble and shame. The Aligarh Gazette regrets that the Muslim members of the Bengal Council have totally ignored their communal interests in this connection and have given proof of their extreme short-sightedness by joining the Swarajists.

Gulbarga riot.

The Abhyudaya reproaches the Hindus of Gulbarga for not defending their temples against the attacks of Musalmans. If the Hindus are not prepared to sacrifice their lives for the protection of their temples and idols they had better raze to the ground their temples and throw their idols into the Ganges. The Hindus of Gulbarga have lowered the head of the entire Hindu population in the country. By their love of life they have laid an axe at the root of Hinduism.

Mr. Gandhi.

The Hamdam expresses its gratification that Mr. Gandhi now regards the cooperation between different political parties of India as essential for the attainment of swaraj and remarks that there can be nothing more pleasing to the country than the removal of mutual dissensions. The Vartman says that Mrs. Besant's interview with Mahatma Gandhi is not devoid of diplomacy. Mrs. Besant is at present in the background and it is with a view to regain her leadership that she has once more changed colour and succeeded in securing a certificate from Mahatma Gandhi for admission into the Congress. The Pratap points out that the virtual dissociation of the Swaraj party from the national programme, the admission into the ranks of non-cooperators of unscrupulous vagabonds and above all the inclination of Mahatma Gandhi to retire from the political field have all contributed towards the decay of the non-cooperation movement.

Hindus in Nepal.

The Bharat Dharma regrets that although the Nepalese are Hindus, the Hindus of India have practically cut off all relations with them and urges that in order to complete their organisation they should not leave the Nepalese outside their pale. It urges that the Hindu Maha Sabha and the Congress should not fail to pay attention in this direction.

Newspapers and Hyderabad State.

The Partap says that one can understand the ban imposed by the Nizam on nationalist papers like the Maharatta and the Swaraj, but the banning of a liberal organ like the Servant of India is certainly inexplicable and indefensible. Autocracy if it is easy of explanation is not autocracy at all. The Nizam demands the restoration of Berar and promises to confer swaraj on her. But such are the actions which characterise his intention to confer swaraj. Referring to the prohibition of the entry of the Amrita Bazar Patrika into the Hyderabad State the Abhyudaya wonders how the Nizam can confer swaraj on others when he cannot tolerate any criticism of his administration. Is it for this respect of public opinion that the Nizam claims the restoration of Berar?

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Bharat Bandhu says that if the recommendations of the Committee on the Agra Tenancy Bill are accepted the position of the tenants will be worsened and urges that if the Government be not prepared to amend the Agra Tenancy Act so as to promote the interests of the kisans the latter and their well-wishers should start a vigorous agitation. The Oudh Akhbar describes the findings of the Committee as unsatisfactory to the zamindars and remarks that the first mistake committed by the Committee is that instead of making necessary amendments in the original Act, it has drafted a new Act, which will take years to be enforced.

Tension in Lucknow.

Referring to the Hindu-Muslim feeling in Lucknow the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The effect of such rumours, as of stones being thrown on temples, must necessarily be to rouse the angry Hindu populace. We sincerely hope that the authorities are on the alert and that they will take care to contradict any wild rumour set afloat with the greatest promptitude. Rumours are the sparks that set ablaze communal feelings. The Advocate says: The feelings of the two communities have not yet subsided in Lucknow and it is advisable that the leaders of both the communities should come forward and make a peaceful compromise which is the desire of every peace-loving citizen and save Lucknow from its evil days. At another place the paper says: The relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans have become very strained at Lucknow and it is feared every day that a riot may take place in the city and people may witness the scenes of Gulbarga at Lucknow. More than a century have passed away the relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans have all along been very cordial and friendly at Lucknow. The strangers were often surprised to see such good relations existing between them and used to say that Lucknow is blessed in every way. We have grave doubts that our past glorious tradition may not be blotted one day. It is the duty of the leaders of both the communities to come to a settlement and have all these things settled for ever.

Muslim Waqf Act.

The Hind-i-Jadid fails to understand why the enforcement of the Act has been postponed when its importance and the need of its enforcement have been urged in public meetings and remarks that it was impolitic to include such members in the Committee who were themselves trustees of big Waqf properties and who for their personal interests influenced the other members of the Council to put off the enforcement of the Act.

The United Provinces capital.

The Leader has been devoting considerable space to this subject. In a leading article the paper refers to a reply given in the Legislative Council with regard to the removal of Public Works Department Secretariat and asks why should not the Government in the interest of efficiency and economy—the two fearsome words put into the poor Ministerial mouth—take one wholesale decision and remove to Lucknow everything including the High Court, in one big jump. There will in such a big operation be courage, straightness and imagination. And the pro-Allahabad sympathies of the present Governor will receive their final vindication. Referring to Nawab Muhammad Yusuf's motion in the Council, the paper derives some consolation from the fact that the resolution was defeated by one vote only and says that the advocates of Allahabad have done very well on the present occasion. If the Council had been left a free agent, without undue official pressure, there would never have been a majority for the Government. In all fairness should not the Government now cry halt? At another place the paper says: The question of capital is a touchy matter, and the maintainers of 'law and order' would be well advised if they themselves did not start upsetting all law and order in such a barefaced manner. The Indian Daily Telegraph which champions the cause of Lucknow says: We make a present of the debate in the Legislative Council to the disgruntled politicians in search of opportunities to discredit the Government of Sir William Marris. It showed that the landlords are asserting their native common sense and that where efficiency and economy are concerned, wobbling sentiment would not be allowed to play. The Indian World of Cawnpore humourously remarks: As the capital is moving westward, who knows a fortunate fancy of a future Governor may have a favourite turn to Cawnpore as well. Let us Cawnporites pray for such a favourable occasion.

Muslim deputation to H. E. the Governor.

The Haqiqat resents the Leader's comments on the Muslim deputation and remarks that by describing Muslim demands as unacceptable it has trampled down the rights of the Musalmans. We cannot accept self-government which may lay the foundation of majority rule by annihilating the minorities and for the sake of unity we cannot be expected to give up our communal interests. The Hamdam remarks that His Excellency has disentangled himself from the difficulty by expressing only lip sympathy with the Musalmans and that by indulging in logical arguments he has ignored the practical side of the question. The Musalmans do not ask for any concession and they are insisting upon their demands because their countrymen taking undue advantage of their majority are usurping their legitimate rights.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Satya Bhakta, socialistic announces that a communistic party or organisation has now been openly established in India. Its main object is to remove the grievances of the poor kisans, labourers and the educated classes. The programme of this party is to organise the kisans, labourers and clerks in the cities. Propaganda work will be carried out through pamphlets and leaflets in order to preach the principles of socialism. When organisation has been completed attempts will be made to capture the Councils and all land, factories, mines, forests, railways and all other necessaries of life will be transferred to popular control. An appeal is made to kisans and others to get themselves enrolled as members of this party. The Bharat Dharma publishes an article showing that Bolshevism is not so bad, immoral and oppressive as it has been represented to be by the British press, which did so because of Russia deserting the Allies in the Great War. Now that the Bolshevik Government has shown that it is inferior to no civilised and powerful State in evolving order out of chaos and reducing its principles into practice even the British Government has thought fit to conclude a treaty with it. It is a mistake to disallow the entry of Bolshevik literature into India. At any rate the Soviet Government is not a bugbear or a dangerous thing. The early stage of social progress is always attended by the incidents which are recorded as the dark record of Bolshevism.

Political propaganda.

In the course of an article illustrating the difference in the view-point of the orientals and occidentals the Bharat Dharma remarks: Modesty, humility and politeness, etc., have been considered as the virtues of women in India, whereas in England it is held to be a mark of culture to dance in a state of nudity or placing hand round the neck of a person other than her husband. In India it is a sin to touch a person other than one's husband, whereas in England it is indicative of lack of culture if the husband enters a private place where his wife is in the company of another person. It is a sight worth seeing how the Europeans overstep the bounds of decency so far as kissing is concerned. They kiss even their sisters and mothers. Indian girls tie themselves only to one husband for purposes of this world and the other, while European women can enter into ten or twelve marriages and break them all in a single day. This being their view-point there is nothing to be wondered at if the Europeans under the influence of their home impressions should cast aspersions on Indian women. The rulers will do well to understand the sentiments of the ruled to obviate difficulties in administration.

For the week ending the 20th September, 1924.

Hedjaz affairs.

THE capture of Taif by the Wahabis has directed attention towards the affairs of the Hedjaz. The Leader says that the plight of King Hussain seems to be desperate and he appears to be seeking British aid against Ibn Saud who is practically at the gate of Mecca. It cannot be denied that British interests in the Near East will be seriously affected if King Hussain goes, for with his disappearance the position of his two sons in Iraq and Trans-Jordania will also be shaken, and the British scheme of a friendly Arab hegemony will also collapse. As in Turkey so in Jazirat-ul-Arab the British may be compelled by force of circumstances to give up that which they were unwilling to yield to justice and reason. The recent raids in Iraq from the Turkish side, followed by the declaration of martial law, and the tottering position of King Hussain, indicate that the Near East situation is once more in the melting pot. The Medina characterises the British policy in Arabia as calculated to spread dissensions among the Arabs in the guise of the so-called 'Arab Federation', and insinuates that the Sharif's refusal to sign the Hedjaz agreement was the result of Bolshevik intrigues. If there is any truth in the rumour that an agreement has been effected between the King of Hedjaz and the Soviet Government, Great Britain should rest assured that the days of her avaricious policy in the Near East are numbered.

Egypt and Sudan.

The Vartman remarks that the people of Egypt, the Egyptian Cabinet and the Khedive are all unanimous on the question of the Sudan and are determined to rescue it from the grip of the Imperialistic Britishers. Zaghlul Pasha's departure from England without interviewing the British Premier means that the fire of rebellion is to be kindled again in Egypt. There can be no lasting peace or compromise until the Egyptians have secured complete independence.

Civil War in China.

The Aj insinuates that the European nations have a secret hand in the civil war in China and says that it is the duty of the Indians that they should neither allow any army to be sent from India to participate in this war nor any money to be spent over it from the Indian exchequer. India does not now want to spend a single shell or shed a single drop of blood for the Empire.

Struggle for liberty in Morocco.

The Pioneer says: It would be as well for everyone concerned if the whole situation could be straightened out, particularly with regard to the protection of foreign citizens within the borders of the Spanish zone in Africa. It seems that the realisation is being steadily driven home to Spain that her Moroccan Protectorate is a wholly unprofitable venture. That it would pay her to abandon Morocco can hardly be disputed. The Nejat is gratified at the victories of the Riffs and apprehends that the Christian Powers will now soon intervene under the pretext of restoring peace and thereby throwing obstacles in the way of the people who are struggling for liberty.

Execution of Niamatullah.

The Hamdam attributes Niamatullah's assassination to his participation in the Khost rebellion and refutes the allegation that he was stoned to death on the ground of religious differences. It takes to task the Ahmadia community for giving a religious colour to his execution. The Medina resents the appeal of the Ahmadia sect to the Christian Powers without ascertaining the real cause of Niamatullah's execution and remarks that if his death turns out to be the result of some political intrigues the Qadyanis should congratulate the Amir on his enlightenment that he saved a Muslim country from a great danger. Qadyanis are known all over the world as British spies and it admits of no doubt that they are pro-English and have a long-standing grudge against Afghanistan. A correspondent writing to the same paper advises the Amir to inflict deterrent punishment on Qadyanis and expel all those persons who by propagating their false faith are injuring the interests of Afghanistan.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Discussing the cause of the riots in Lucknow the Indian Daily Telegraph complains that the Muslim hooligan has killed the movement for swaraj in India by his excesses. Hindus have lost faith in the vaunted efficiency of the British Government that can only look on when Musalman rowdies at odd street corners threaten and assault them. The Lucknow riot has shown that there is only one solution to Hindu-Muslim problem: the Hindus must bundle in a corner their glorious religion of Ahimsa and organise their society from today until they are able to present before the Muslim hooligan his Hindu prototype who will give him blow for blow with equal mercilessness. The Muslim hooligan can be held in check only by fear not by reasoned persuasion that will not penetrate his thick skin. After all religion is not for the Muslims alone. India is the home of the Hindus. And it shall remain the home of the Hindus. The stronger party in India must now and for ever be the Hindus. Hindu sangathan alone will obtain recognition of this and once the Musalman rowdy knows that he has to live here under the sufference of Hindus, he will learn to behave. If Hindus will obtain swaraj, then let them join the sangathan movement. The enemy to swaraj is not the British, it is the ill-educated or half-educated Musalman. Gladstone prescribed for them a bag-and-baggage line in Europe. Hindus cannot prescribe for them a bag-and-baggage line in India but they must be educated all round. Referring to this article the Pioneer says that the deplorable riots at Lucknow appear to have driven all semblance of coherence and consistency out of the editorial columns of the local Swarajist journal. After quoting from the article the paper says: Every thoughtful Hindu and Muhammadan knows perfectly well, even if for political reason some of them refuse to admit it publicly, that it is only the British official and the British soldier who can hold the balance even between the two communities—though probably the Muhammadan would have less to fear from the withdrawal of the British from India than the Hindu. The Hamdam exhorts the Musalmans to sink all their differences and organise themselves to counteract the anti-Muslim activities of the Hindus and remarks that if the Musalmans are organised the Hindus will be forced to cooperate with them. The Al Bashir resents Mr. Gandhi's comments on the Gulbarga disturbances. The weakness of Mr. Gandhi will prove prejudicial to his mission but it will at least have one good advantage that every Musalman will now come to know that it is folly to acknowledge any one of a different nationality as his leader. The Hind-i-Jadid reproduces from the Bande Matram a letter of "Raja" Mahendra Pratap from Kabul exhorting both the communities to be reconciled to each other. The Hindus have now a good opportunity of helping Afghanistan and therby earning the gratitude of their Muslim brethren. All dissensions will be removed if both the communities live peacefully and wage a crusade against tyranny. The Gyan Shakti asks the Government to legislate special enactments and take special measures for the protection of Hindus and their temples. It also wonders why the Ali brothers who are such advocates of Hindu-Muslim unity have not so far condemned Muhammadan atrocities. The Bharat Dharma remarks that if the Muhammadans will continue to perpetrate atrocities on the Hindus there can be no Hindu-Muslim unity. Hindu leaders instead of being eager to patch up a hollow unity will do well to organise their community strongly and this will of itself ensure lasting unity between Hindus and Muhammadans. The Bharat Jiwan commenting on the Gulbarga riot exhorts the Hindus to no longer put up with Muhammadan insults to their temples, women and children but to sacrifice even their lives in their defence. The Swadhin ascribes the ever recurring communal riots to the ignorance and religious fanaticism of the Muhammadans and the weakness and moral degradation of the Hindus and urges the leaders of both the communities to remove those defects and thereby prevent Hindus and Muhammadans from falling victims to the diplomacy of a third party and enable them to weld themselves into one free nation.

The Reforms.

The Bharat Dharma doubts whether a further instalment of Reforms will be granted to India before 1929. The appointment of the Reforms Inquiry Committee was only a clever device to gain time and quieten agitation. When such has been the policy of the pro-Indian Labour Government who knows what will be the fate of the Reforms in case any other party comes into power in the next Parliamentary election. The only remedy against the bureaucracy lies in civil disobedience. But this is impossible so long as the Swarajists and the No-changers are divided and the bureaucracy takes advantage of their disunion.

Considerable interest is being taken in the scheme for the re-union of all parties on the Congress platform. The Pioneer says: It remains to be seen whether this latter stipulation will be palatable to the Swarajists or the Liberals; though as Mr. Gandhi lays stress upon his "unconditional surrender" he may, perhaps, be disposed to modify it if there is sufficient opposition. In a leading article headed, "A Confession and a Moral," the Leader comments upon Mr. Gandhi's climb down and says: What new combination of political forces will arise out of the vast wreckage of public life left behind by the non-cooperation movement it is not very easy to say, but there is no doubt that each political party which wants to advance towards the common goal feels, more or less acutely, the handicap of discordant forces, divided counsels and conflicting methods. It complains that in spite of the terrible price that has already been paid the policy of shortsighted and suicidal extremism is being continued by the Swarajists, and Bengal and the Central Provinces have been deprived of even the measure of popular control and influence over public administration that had been conceded to them under the Reforms Act. In another article the paper says: The 'creed' and constitution of the Congress will have to be amended. A Conference can be brought about representative of all the parties in equal numbers and presided over by a non-party man of the position of His Highness the Aga Khan or Sir Syed Ali Imam. It may pave the way for a better understanding among parties leading it maybe to united action. The Bharat Jiwan says that the British Government will do well to accept the scheme of Mr. C. R. Das for the grant of swaraj to India. If it fails to do so and does not agree to make India free who knows what means India may adopt for her liberation. The existing calm in India is but the stillness preceding a volcanic eruption. The British should catch time by the forelock otherwise they will wring their hands as they did in the case of America, Canada and Africa. The Medina insinuates that the congregation of the Hindus of all shades of opinion on the Congress platform is a clear indication of their intention to oust the Musalmans from it. The Hamdam describes the appeal made by Mr. Gandhi to all the political parties for joining the Congress as a death-knell to the non-cooperation programme and appreciates the sacrifice which he has made in giving up all his principles with a view to secure political unity among people of different shades of opinion. It remarks that the problem of Indian emancipation can only be solved if happy relations are restored between the two communities and the dissensions prevailing inside the Congress are removed. The Hindustani is sceptical about the success of Mrs. Besant in making the next session of the Congress a united congregation of all the political parties for the purpose of drafting a united demand for self-government and remarks that any attempt to achieve swaraj is doomed to failure unless the Hindus and Musalmans are reconciled. The Aj expresses disapproval of Mrs. Annie Besant's National Convention and its method and remarks that as India is not a British Dominion, the methods of British Dominions cannot avail her. We should give up reliance on the British Parliament and the idea of framing a constitution to be presented there. On the other hand, we should cultivate and depend on self-help. We hold the present time to be inopportune for such a convention and hope that the Congress will not join it. The same paper points out that there is a great need at present to reconsider the situation in the country and to frame a new programme. The country wants a new programme for it neither likes the somersaults of the Swarajists nor the inactivity of the No-changers. It would be better if this programme were framed before the Belgaum Congress. The Vartman remarks that it has now become necessary to suspend the boycotts and organise the various political parties into a united body. The British bureaucracy is bound to yield to a united organisation and a common programme. The Bharat Jiwan welcomes the efforts to bring all Indian political parties on one platform in the next Congress session at Belgaum, although it recognises that in doing so the country will have to bid farewell to non-cooperation and satyagraha which though difficult are the only effective means of the attainment of swaraj. The Aj strongly disapproves of the decision confining the membership of the Congress to those who can spin two thousand yards of yarn every month and describes it as closing the door of unity. It says that the way to unity is that the Congress may be left open to all as heretofore, and hopes that unity will be restored in the ranks of the Congress till the Belgaum Congress.

Congress politics.

The Anand says that though it is most likely that the new movement in Bengal regarding the boycott of British goods may gain in strength for some considerable time, it cannot succeed ultimately without arrangements being made for cheap production in the country itself. The Aj heartily supports the resolution passed by the Executive Committee of the Bengal Hindu Sabha that on all religious occasions Hindus should use swadeshi cloth as the use of foreign cloth is against the injunctions of the Hindu religion and urges that Hindu Sabhas in other provinces should emulate the example of the Bengal Hindu Sabha.

Lee Report.

The Leader congratulates the Assembly on its rejection of the Lee recommendations. The chief point is that the recommendations of the Lee Commission are unacceptable to the country and this view the Assembly has faithfully represented. The paper is convinced that efficiency of administration does not require a continuation of British recruitment. The verdict of the Assembly is reasonable and is in consonance with the opinion of the country generally. If the authorities should act as they are credited with the intention of doing, they will only be giving one more proof of the unsatisfactoriness of the present constitution and of the imperative necessity of such a reform of it as will render such exercise of authority by the executive contrary to the will of the legislature an impossibility in future. The Pioneer says: The communal riots at Kohat and Lucknow are a significant commentary on the contemptuous rejection by the Indian Legislative Assembly of the Lee Commission proposals for remedying the grievances of the British official. Has it never occurred to our critics that the mere fact that such disturbances are possible furnishes a convincing argument against the capacity of Indians to do without the British official? The Hamdam applauds the speech of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru in the Assembly and remarks that as the Lee Commission was forced upon the country in defiance of public opinion its recommendations deserved to be rejected. Let us see how the Government, after its rejection, can manage to justify an expenditure of 15 millions annually for the enjoyment and gratification of the bureaucracy in a country where important schemes for educational progress have been put off for want of money and where the poor are oppressed by heavy taxes. The Indian politicians instead of wasting their energy on details should concentrate on changing the present system of government. The Oudh Akhbar says that the success which Pandit Moti Lal Nehru has achieved in rejecting the recommendations of the Lee Commission will lose its effect after the Lucknow disturbances and his supporters will now ponder over the question whether they should keep the I. C. S for some time more in the country. The shock felt by the I. C. S at the result of the debate in the Assembly will be counteracted and disappointment will now give place to hope. The Haqiqat views with satisfaction the result of voting in the Assembly on the Lee Commission debate and asks whether the Viceroy will not exercise his special powers on this occasion. The Vartman opines that the Lee Commission Report is nothing but a despicable conspiracy against the interests of the country and that it is impossible that the Legislative Assembly should support a resolution based on such deceit and conspiracy.

Gulbarga disturbances.

The Al Bashir pays a tribute to His Exalted Highness the Nizam for giving proof of his toleration by ordering that all the temples and mosques should be repaired at the expense of the State and remarks that no parallel to this can be found in British India where the accused persons are prosecuted and both the communities are taxed to pay the expenses of the punitive police. It is also a matter for gratification that the Commission appointed by the Nizam to enquire into the disturbances will also take into account the conduct of the police and the local authcrities. In British India, on the contrary, the shortcomings of the police and authorities are suppressed so that their prestige may not be lowered. This fact alone throws light on the system of administration and justice of both the Governments. The Kartavya says that the anti-Hindu feeling of the Nizam must have greatly influenced the fanatical Muhammadans in perpetrating atrocities on the Hindus at Gulbarga. In view of the preponderance of the Muhammadan members in the Commission appointed by the Nizam to enquire into the riots it doubts whether its decision will be satisfactory and whether the culprits will be condignly punished. It remarks that if Mahatma Gandhi were to devote himself to Hindu sangathan he would do much to solve the question of Hindu-Muslim unity.

The Kohat tragedy.

The Pioneer says: If British officials were replaced in any considerable numbers by Indians, there would be an appalling increase in the number and extent of these communal riots throughout the country. There can be no two opinions as to the cumulative effect of evidence of this kind upon British public opinion, no matter how much in this country political leaders may affect to ignore it or to brush it aside. In a leading article, headed "The Kohat Tragedy," the Leader says: Neither the civil nor the military authorities were able to afford protection and the fact that the Hindus insisted on leaving the town and that practically all of them have left for the Punjab shows that they have no confidence in the local authorities. Whatever the real cause or causes of the trouble, the failure of the local administration to prevent the wholesale looting of Hindu houses and shops and the burning of their houses certainly requires a sifting inquiry. Whether the provocation was offered by the Hindus or the Muhammadans, the authorities cannot be exonerated from their share of responsibilty. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: No Hindu in India can read the harrowing tale from Kohat without horror and a sense of personal degradation that his great religion has reduced him into effiminacy and nervelessness. In number the Hindus count two hundred and thirty millions in India: and yet in daily life they live at the mercy of the seventy millions of Muslims. This must cease. If Hindus fail to protect their property and their womenfolk, then they must perish as a nation and Hinduism must disappear as a religion.

Lucknow disturbances.

The Indian Daily Telegraph blames the Musalmans for the disturbances in Lucknow. In directing attention to the "sorry Hindu plight," the paper says: After all that is said and done, with the triumphant shout from the rulers about the meaning and significance of communal riots, the peaceful patrolling of the military in the streets of Lucknow condescending to remove the wounded, the death-dealing rowdies stealing through the by-lanes after their ruffian attack, the Hindus have learnt a severe lesson, namely, that they have only themselves to depend upon. The clash between the great religion of love of the Hindus and the martial teaching of the Muslim, the Hindus are helplessly living at the tender mercy of the butcher with his knife and the vagabond with his lathi. Peace will dawn tomorrow, thanks to the British soldier. The message of the Amethi and Lucknow riots to every Hindu is ringing above the lathi blow: it is to turn to sangathan as the only and the last hope. The Leader is deeply grieved and says: It is a thousand pities that not all the efforts at conciliation succeeded in easing the feeling and that the culmination should have been so unfortunate. Of course the opponents of Indian political advance will make out of the occurrence all the capital they can. The Haqiqat lays the entire responsibility for the Lucknow disturbances at the door of the Hindus and deplores the excesses committed by the latter. It advises the authorities to bring the mischiefmongers speedily to justice to avert the danger of any further disturbance. Writing in a similar strain the Hamdam asserts that it were the Hindus who compelled the Musalmans to retaliate. The taking out of the Ram Dol procession was simply an innovation to provoke the Musalmans and in spite of the prohibitive orders of the Magistrate the Hindus held a meeting at the Chhedi Lal dharamshala and roused the feelings of their community by delivering provocative speeches against the Musalmans.

Proscription of Hindi readers.

The Aj refers to the reply of the President of the Provincial Council to Mr. Sangam Lal's letter in which he had argued that his resolution regarding the proscription of Mr. Ram Das Gour's readers was admissible and remarks: The President's reply is not only full of unsound arguments but also impertinent words. In our opinion the President is wholly ignorant of his duty and of the rights of the members of the Council. He was appointed to train the members in Parliamentary methods, but his behaviour shows how much he himself knows those methods. Indeed, the good of the province lies in the suspension of this Council like those of Bengal and the Central Provinces.

Muslim Waqf Act.

The Al Bureed says that the mere enforcement of the Muslim Waqf Act cannot be effective in eradicating the evil and advises the Musalmans to supplement the working of the Act with some more efficacious methods for the protection of the endowments. It apprehends that the Muslim organisation which the Ali brothers are endeavouring to establish will bring most of the Waqfs under its control and the Waqf money will not be spent according to the wishes of the endowers.

The United Provinces capital.

The Leader continues to agitate over the capital controversy. In a leading article, headed "Breach of Faith", it quotes the comments of the Aj of Benares and says: The Government who are trying to get around plighted words in a subterranean way must be made to feel the weight of outraged public opinion and prevented, as far as possible, from committing one more breach of faith. If the people of these provinces want that their Government should be progressive, they ought strongly to oppose the move of the Government to entrench itself in the midst of indigenous conservatism with a view to exploit it for its own reactionary purposes. The Government should be prevented from developing more unhealthy tendencies by living in a less independent atmosphere. The utmost effort should be put forward to check the provoking, wanton and unrighteous process of wrecking Allahabad. It is time that the whole province woke up to the far-reaching implications of the issues involved. Let the bureaucracy which wants to achieve its purpose by counting on the existence of inter-provincial jealousies feel the weight of a united public opinion. The Echo says: The fetish of "expediency" has been worn threadbare and can no longer delude the people. As for "economy" while the present office buildings at Allahabad will remain vacant new buildings will have to be constructed for housing the offices at Lucknow at a huge waste of public money. So the less one speak of economy the better. Of course, it must be admitted that Lucknow has its amenities of life, and officers need recreation after their day's work, but then instead of the mountain going to Mahomet, Mahomet can and should come to the mountain. Besides there is the sentiment of the people of the major provinces. The Indian World remarks: While fully sympathising with weeping Allahabad at her enforced widowhood, it may be said that it is now too late to cry over spilt milk as the process of capitalising Lucknow has already advanced too far, and it is in the fitness of things, just for the sake of further retrenchment, that the rest of the Secretariat offices should now be allowed to be removed to Lucknow. The Hamdam says that it is futile to oppose the removal of capital from Allahabad to Lucknow when such change is likely to result in increased efficiency in administration and economy. The question of capital is now a settled one and the Allahabad people will do well to accept it quietly. The Azad, on the other hand, regards the change of capital as unjustifiable and remarks that the question should be settled once for all to avoid any further controversy. It suggests that in case the seat of Government cannot remain at Allahabad the province of Agra should be separated from Oudh with its capital at Allahabad. Commenting on the Government notification regarding the transfer of the Public Works Department, Buildings and Roads Branch, from Allahabad to Lucknow the Aj writes: The notification has caused a great stir among the citizens of Allahabad, who are perfectly justified in raising a voice of vehement protest against the decision of the Government. The transfer of the Public Works Department Secretariat is only a part of the decision regarding the removal of the whole capital from Allahabad to Lucknow. The economic situation of the United Provinces is deplorable and it is certainly not in a position to bear the expenditure entailed by transfer of capital. No Governor or Government should have the right to change the capital at his own sweet will and in utter disregard of the economic situation of the country. Such a despotism is fatal to the people It is the duty of not only the citizens of Allahabad but of the whole province to protest against this decision of the Government and carry on a vigorous and effective agitation against it.

Muslim deputation to H. E. the Governor.

Commenting upon the Muslim deputation to His Excellency the Medina accuses the Government of criminal negligence in the matter of Muslim education and remarks that it was the duty of a just Government to pay due regard to the maintenance of the past grandeur and educational traditions of the Musalmans. If such is the preliminary stage of democracy and the Government persists in maintaining impartiality, the time is not far when the Musalmans will be ousted from all the departments and offices: and if such is the even-handed justice of the Government, India will become a hot bed of civil strifes. The Al Bashir advises the Musalmans of all the provinces to submit similar memorials to their Governments and remarks that the Government is itself responsible for the educational backwardness of the Musalmans as it has failed to fulfil the promises made to them from time to time. The Musalmans should fully understand that if they want to live in the world and give proof of their existence they will have to adopt the same means which are in vogue in the world for making one's existence acknowledged, as nothing can now be achieved by flattery.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 27th September, 1924.

Hedjaz affairs.

THE Muslim press continues to be perturbed over the Wahabi's attack on Taif. The Hamdam discredits the reports of Ibn Saud's atrocities and hopes that in case Great Britain supports Sharif Husain, the Arab tribes who regard Sharif Husain as an usurper will go against him when they find that he has sought the help of a Christian Power. Ibn Saud's success is likely to change the whole aspect of the Khilafat question. In another article the same paper remarks that it will not be easy for the British Government to deal with Ibn Saud as the Wahabis will not become puppets in the hands of the British diplomats. The Nejat avers that the occupation of Taif by the Wahabis means the end of the Sharif's government and that considering his past misdeeds it is quite possible that he will soon be leaving Arabian soil on a British ship like the deposed Sultan Wahid-ud-din. The Al Khalil condemns Sharif Husain for his manifold deeds of treachery to Islam and insinuates that with the object of making Sharif Husain sign the agreement the English have encouraged the Sultan of Najd to attack him.

Execution of Niamat-ullah.

The Leader says that the inhuman and extremely revolting method of putting to death Niamat-ullah Khan must shock civilised opinion thoughout the world. A country in which there is no freedom of conscience and in which non-conformity in religious matters is visited with such condign punishment cannot claim to be civilised. The Tabligh resents the hue and cry raised by the Ahmadiya sect over the execution of Niamat-ullah without ascertaining the true facts and remarks that it was due to his religious bigotry alone that the Afghan Government was forced to condemn him.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Recent disturbances and Mr. Gandhi's fast have focussed attention on the communal relations. Referring to Mr. Gandhi's latest article in which he suggests that the original instigation of communal differences comes from Government sources, the Pioneer says that perhaps we should not be surprised at this preposterous insinuation from one who invented the phrase " the Satanic Government, " but the frame of mind indicated is not productive of faith in the ability of the forthcoming conference, in which Mr. Gandhi is taking prominent part, to settle communal differences. Mr. Gandhi knows full well that the constant recurrence of Hindu-Muslim quarrels is one of the difficulties in the way of smooth administration, and that the Government should attempt to make trouble for themselves by instigating such disturbances is a patent absurdity. In a leading article, headed " The lessons of the riots " the same paper says that the lessons of the riots are so obvious, so unmistakable, that no intelligent person who is prepared to face the issue squarely without any attempt at dishonest subterfuge can fail to recognise them. So long as leading politicians refuse to be candid and to admit that these religious riots are a serious obstacle to swaraj so long as they deliberately shut their eyes to India's vital need of the British official and British soldier who alone can inspire confidence when Hindus and Muhammadans are at one another's throat we have a duty to perform, and we shall not shrink from performing it. The Leader remarks: Mr. Gandhi's terrible vow may even affect for a time the mass mind, but will it provide a lasting remedy or bring about a change of heart and broadening of outlook? Is it not time for the fanatics on either side seriously to consider whether the unholy and suicidal game of stirring up strife has not been carried too far and whether they should not listen to the silent prayer of a great and agonised soul which from its very depths cries out for peace and concord and love and charity? At another place the paper says that communal violence not only strikes at the root of religion, but it also menaces political liberty, which both Hindus and Musalmans desire. The Weekly Observer says that the recent riots at Lucknow once more confront us with an exhibition of the time-old antipathy of the two communities. It is clear that no political progress in this country can have a permanent value until this question of Hindu-Muslim differences is properly settled. The Mahashakti says: The present problem is a product of the "peculiar conditions" of modern India, and is incapable of solution as long as the two communities concerned are not equally keen upon it. The Bharat Jiwan remarks that while the Kohat and Lucknow riots betray the cowardice and lack of organisation among the Hindus, they also indicate weakness on the part of Government. Will the Anglo-Indian papers, which never tire of impressing the need of the presence of the Englishmen in India, explain why these riots take place under their very nose? Does this mean good government? The Aj remarks that it is through national or Indian organisation and not separate communal organisations that disturbances like those at Kohat and Lucknow can be prevented. We must organise civil guards that may include men of all religions and communities pledged to punish the wrong-doer to whatever community he may belong. It is absolutely necessary to remove the atmosphere that makes such horrible riots possible. The Medina accuses the Hindus of launching an organised attack against the Musalmans who everywhere displayed a tolerant spirit till goaded to the extreme. It regrets that the Musalmans are still sleeping while the sangathan heroes are laying their hands upon them. Our disgrace has now reached its climax and an honourable death is certainly much more preferable to this sort of existence. The Paigam dwells upon the necessity of Muslim organisation and remarks that the only question which confronts us now is how to face the present situation and protect the Musalmans from the organised attacks of the Hindus. The Aftab deplores the present tension between the two communities and suggests that in every city and town boards consisting of sober-minded people should be established for preventing communal disturbances and that the Government should recognise such boards and render them moral support. The Prem strongly resents the ever-increasing atrocities of Muhammadan hooligans against Hindu women and temples and says that Hindus cannot keep quiet for long under such provocation. It urges that Hindus should learn to protect their women and temples, even at the sacrifice of their lives. It wonders why the Muslim leaders do not realise their responsibility in the matter of putting down these hooligans. The Sudharak rebukes the Hindus for cowardice in putting up with insults to their women at the hands of hooligans and says that they will soon become extinct, if they show no better signs of life. If they want to live as an honourable people they should teach a salutary lesson to those who dare to insult their womenfolk. The Swadhin advises the Hindus in reference to recent Hindu-Muslim riots not to have recourse to reprisals but to respect the religion of Musalmans and their mosques as their own places of worship. They should, however, cultivate strength and courage to meet hooliganism in self-defence as that is the only means of putting an end to communal disturbances.

Akali agitation.

A correspondent writing to the Zulqarnain deplores the mischievous activities of the Akalis under cover of religion and remarks that they adopted a wrong course in connection with the Nabha affair and the Birdwood Committee and that by deciding to launch another struggle at Guru-ka-Bagh and Nankana Sahib they are creating fresh difficulties. The Kartavya points out that since Sir Malcolm Hailey's advent in the Punjab the Akalis have begun to be repressed all the more and that all efforts towards a rapproachment have been abandoned. Though the Punjab Government has several times sustained discomfiture at the hands of the Akalis yet it is not content to leave them alone. We are sure that the Akalis will again emerge successful in the new round of repression by means of non-violent satyagraha.

Congress politics.

Commenting on the political unity in the Congress the Pioneer says: Mrs. Besant is not likely to have it all her own way in her attempt to stampede the Liberals into a return, on almost any terms, to the Congress fold. The Congress at the present time is dominated by Mr. Das and the Swarajists; and some Liberals, at least, are clear-sighted enough to realise that the Swarajists are the only party likely to gain anything from the presence on the Congress platform of others who will have to walk delicately and keep their own opinions and principles in the background. The Abhyudaya says that there is little difference left now among the programmes of the Swaraj party and the Liberal party and the Nationalist party and if all of them were to abandon party factions and join the forthcoming session of the Congress the problem of the country would be solved to a great extent. It is to be hoped that Mahatma Gandhi's call for a united Congress will not fall on deaf ears. The Aj remarks that Mrs. Besant is welcome to the Congress if she wants to work with others as a coadjutor and not as a leader. She must come on the terms of the Congress, which cannot accept her terms. India cannot make a non-Indian her leader in her struggle for political freedom and we hope that Indians will be on their guard against their political destinies being placed in the hands of Mrs. Besant. The Bharat Jiwan opines that Mahatma Gandhi's proposal to limit the membership of the Congress to spinners of a certain length of yarn will reduce the number of its members and will affect its representative character and suggests that the proposal should be so amended as to require a certain length of yarn to be sent to the members irrespective of whether it has been spun by them or by others. The Kartavya remarks that such a proposal if given effect to will make the Congress lose its national character and influence in the country. The doors of the Congress should remain open for every patriotic Indian. Mahatma Gandhi has displayed only lack of practical politics and access of indiscreet sentimentalism in making such a proposal. The Prem welcomes the efforts at bringing all India political parties under one flag and says that this consummation can easily be reached when the aim of each and every party is the liberation of the country. When all the political parties combine to attack the bureaucracy the latter is bound to kneel down and accede to their demands. The Hind-i-Jadid expresses gratification at the probable union of the different political parties and remarks that it will be a misfortune if the Moderates and the Swarajists stand in the way of such union. They will be well advised to join the Congress and push forward its constructive programme under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi. Commenting upon the proposed union of the different political parties the Rohilkhand Gazette opines that Mahatma Gandhi has now been probably convinced of the futility of his five-fold boycotts and hopes that the Indians will now no longer transgress the limit of constitutional struggle. The District Gazette, Aligarh, describes Mr. Gandhi's efforts as unconditional surrender to the Swarajists. The Al Bureed regards his appeal for union as a confession of a defeat on the part of Mr. Gandhi and remarks that the Musalmans on account of the fatwa will now find themselves confronted with a grave situation the entire responsibility for which lies on the Jammait-ul-Ulema for issuing a fatwa merely to support the Congress.

Mr. Gandhi's fast.

The Leader says that the hopes of the whole country will be centred on the Hindu-Muslim conference at Delhi. It is the anxiety of all and every that that invaluable life should be spared to the country and the Hindus and Muhammadans and the whole of India should be saved the frequent recurrence of strife. The conference will do well to urge upon all a truce that should be honourably observed by both parties. At the conference every question relevant to the Hindu-Muslim problem, but none else, should be calmly considered with a view to impartial conclusions and if the conference succeeds in achieving this much it will have done real good and Mr. Gandhi will then be justified in breaking his suicidal though holy fast. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the news of Mr. Gandhi's penance is thrilling and will be read with considerable sorrow by all in whom the sparks of humanity have not been extinguished by callous upbringing. The Advocate says: Mr. Gandhi's life is too valuable to the country, and God forbid if anything happens otherwise both the communities will have to share the blame. It hopes that the appeal which Mahatma Gandhi has made to the leaders of both the communities to end this internecine quarrel will touch the hearts and they will leave no stone unturned in creating cordial relations between the two communities and putting an end to the communal quarrel. Expressing its regret at the fast of Mr. Gandhi the Hamdam appeals to the Hindus and the Musalmans to sink their differences at once.

Swaraj party.

Referring to Lord Olivier's allegations of bribery and corruption against the Swarajist party, the Pioneer says: We do not know what was the source of the Secretary of State's information, though it is unlikely that he would make a statement of this kind without adequate ground. The paper justifies the statement by quoting from the first issue of Mr. C. R. Das' journal in which he declared "No method is too mean, if it advances the nation's plans to reach its goal, no method is too sacred, if it retards the rush or checks the sweep of its onward march," and says: A man who is capable of such a sweeping and unqualified acceptance of the doctrine that the end justifies the means need feel no surprise if bribery and corruption are included among those methods which are not too mean for the "patriot" politician to employ in order to attain his goal. The Aj remarks that the allegations of bribery and corruption made by Lord Olivier against the Swaraj party are reprehensible and baseless. We regard it as not only meanness, but also wickedness. The Mashriq in a communicated article condemns the Swarajists for trying to wreck the Councils and remarks that they are directly responsible for the suspension of the Reforms in the Central Provinces and Bengal. It takes to task the Liberals and the Musalman members of the Council for proving themselves traitors to the country by siding with the Swarajists who by their activities have antagonised British public opinion. Writing in a similar strain the Aftab says that it is futile to attempt to bring the administrative machinery of the Government to standstill by wrecking the Councils. It criticises the lawyer-politicians as seekers after cheap popularity and fame while doing no real service to the Government and remarks that the swaraj granted to the Indians before they are fit to receive it will be Vakil raj only.

The Haldhar remarks that India does not want parliamentary government on Dominion status or responsible government under the British Empire. It cannot be satisfied with anything short of complete independence. Without complete independence the sucking of Indian blood cannot be prevented. The Belgaum Congress will be well advised to fix the goal of the Congress as the attainment of complete independence by every proper means.

Lee Report.

The Weekly Observer says: If the Secretary of State adopts the Lee proposals, as he will no doubt do, for no Government can afford to antagonise the corps d'elite which makes government possible, there will no doubt be another outcry that the Reforms are a sham and a fraud. Indeed, owing to the iconoclastic activities of the Swarajists, the Reforms are just coming to fulfil that description, and we much fear that good government will soon have to take the place of responsible government. The Bharat Jiwan says that if the recommendations of the Lee Commission are given effect to despite their rejection by the Legislative Assembly, it will only mean that the Reforms are altogether hollow and are a mere make-believe to deceive the world. This will surely cause disillusionment in some quarters and help in restoring unity in the Congress. The Swadhin expresses gratification at the rejection of the Lee Commission report in the Legislative Assembly and congratulates that body on the performance of its duty. It has no doubt that the Government will now ignore the Assembly's decision as was already evident from its attitude but it will do so only by offending public opinion. The Hamdam is gratified at the rejection of the Lee Commission report and remarks that the principle on which the Commission was appointed was intended to tighten the hold of slavery on India and naturally, under such circumstances, no self-respecting Indian could accept it. The Azad says that the Indian members by rejecting the report have truly voiced the sentiments of the country. The British press is offering quite a wrong advice to the Government which will be well advised not to spurn aside the united demand of the Indian politicians.

Kohat tragedy.

Referring to the disturbances at Kohat the Leader blames the local authorities and says: It is evident that if the local authorities had taken prompt and adequate action the huge tragedy would not have been enacted. The circumstances lead to a strong presumption that the local authorities miserably failed to discharge their duty of protecting life and property. It urges an immediate, thorough and searching inquiry and says: Will the Government of India order the inquiry that is demanded? Or will they shirk the duty that is clearly theirs? In another article the paper says: Terrible incidents like those of Kohat are a disgrace to any administration and yet they are cited as if furnishing irrefutable arguments in support of the case of the champions of alien-vested interests. The Pioneer says: The desirability of arriving at an early conclusion on the causes which led to such a serious breach of the peace will assist the restoration of confidence and enable the authorities to take measures for the prevention of similar outbreaks in future. The Abhyudaya points out that the entire responsibility for the Kohat tragedy lies on the Musalmans, their leaders and the Government. During its rule for one hundred and fifty years Government has not been able to spread even so much education among the people as would keep them from fighting among themselves. We want to know what steps the Muslim leaders are taking to stop the highhandedness and fanaticism of the Muslim masses? In another article the paper places the responsibility of various communal disturbances on the Government and wonders whether it is not surprising that these occurrences should occur under the very nose of a Government which defeated Germany and invokes law and order at every step. Is it to be taken that there is a decline in the power of the Government to maintain law and order and that its army has lost its former efficiency? The Aj says: The Kohat incident reminds us of the Bakr Id disturbance at Calcutta in 1911 when plundering continued for nine days in Bara Bazar. Sir Edward Baker, the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, was held responsible for it and was compelled to resign by Lord Hardinge. The Kohat incident is similar to that incident. It has to be seen what steps Lord Reading takes in this connection. The public wants to know how it was possible for the badmashes to burn and loot the bazar in the presence of the police and an armed brigade. The Medina lays the entire responsibility of the Kohat disturbances at the door of the Hindus who excited the Musalmans by distributing inflammatory pamphlets at a place where the Musalmans have an overwhelming majority. It apprehends that the Hindus on account of their wealth will escape punishment and the innocent Musalmans will be prosecuted. Writing in a similar strain the Hamdam says that the Hindus excited and irritated the Musalmans without any cause. The local authorities were grossly negligent in the matter of taking measures to protect the Musalmans and knowing the aggressive attitude of the Hindus they did not take necessary precautions to save the unarmed Musalmans from the firearms of the Hindus. It is the duty of the Government to force the Hindus to admit that India is not for the Hindus only. The Musalmans and other communities also regard it as their home and have a right to live in it.

Lucknow disturbances.

The Indian Daily Telegraph urges an inquiry into the riots and says: If tomorrow a public inquiry should be made, evidence against the police in the affected area would freely come from Hindus. The demand for a public inquiry is daily growing insistent: if the Government does not care to get the truth, at least the public men might arrange a non-official inquiry. In another article it says: Effacement of untouchability, which Gandhi had placed almost as high as Hindu-Muslim union, has already come into being. This is certainly worth the price which Hindus have paid at least in Lucknow, in broken skulls and bleeding noses. If the Hindus are wise, they will not only welcome the depressed classes but treat them as equals and not as inferiors. At another place the paper says: We all know that it is not by the punctilious performance of the namaz or the scrupulous blowing of the conch and ringing of bells that we can make our best appeal to God: it is only by loving our fellowmen. And Gandhi's fast has helped to rivet attention to God and the nobler nature of man which ugly passions had disturbed. We do not forget that the Hindus of the city still do not feel that they are quite safe; they have a grievance against the magisterial order on the arti; they have not certainly had the protection from the police to which, as citizens, they are entitled. The paper asks whether the British, the self-styled experts in enforcing law and authority, could not specialise in the art of prevention of riots instead of curing them after the epidemic is actually upon society. Referring to the comments of the Indian Daily Telegraph on the Lucknow riots the Pioneer says: The admission of the Lucknow Swarajist journal, which not long ago was proclaiming from the housetops that there were plenty of Indians capable of manning the Services, and that India could do without the British altogether, are significant. In a communal riot, it seems, the much-maligned Englishman has his uses; and panic terror extorts an admission of the truth which is ignored and even flatly denied in normal times. The Advocate says: The cold blooded murder has terrorised the Hindu population. The Weekly Mazdoor characterises the Lucknow riots as a sad commentary on the conception of Indian nationalism, and says: We cannot dispense with the idea that the authorities are to a large extent responsible for what has happened, but we are here not to blame them. A Swarajya government under the circumstances would have fared otherwise. In Swaraja, built out of the mutuality of the communities inhabiting the country, such estrangements would be impossible or only meagre and of subsidiary occurrence. The Hamdam says that the authorities are to a large extent responsible for the disturbances at Lucknow. The District Magistrate should not have cancelled the Sub-Divisional Officer's orders which were issued as a precautionary measure to maintain peace in Amethi nor should he have allowed the Hindus to take out the Ramdol procession which was simply an innovation. These successes of the Hindus emboldened them and they all of a sudden attacked unarmed Musalmans in Aminabad. The position of the Musalmans is clear from the beginning to the end and blunders of the authorities and the excesses of the Hindus are chiefly responsible for these disturbances. In another article the same paper regrets that educated Hindus also sided with the hooligans. We admit that the Hindus have a majority but a community cannot become strong by virtue of its numbers only. A handful of Englishmen are ruling over India and they will remain to be the strongest of the three as long as the Hindus persist in adopting an aggressive attitude towards the Musalmans and the latter are forced to retaliate in self-defence. The Oudh Akhbar blames the local authorities and remarks that if the provisions of section 144 had been applied from the very commencement of the disturbance, the matter would not have taken such a serious turn and so many lives might not have been lost. Deploring the Lucknow disturbances the Medina says that the Hindus want to harass the Musalmans and to gain an ascendancy over them.

The United Provinces capital.

Referring to the Government notification regarding the transfer of the Public Works Department Secretariat to Lucknow the Leader says that it shows that the Government are not willing to reconsider, or even to postpone the execution of, their decision notwithstanding the adverse vote of a majority of the non-official members of the Legislative Council and the serious and determined and persistent protest that Allahabad has been making against the unworthy and provoking decision. The persistence of the local Government with their decision is but a proof of the obstinacy generally found in conjunction with weakness and of their sovereign disregard of the claims of fairness. Allahabad keenly feels and strongly resents the treatment that it has been systematically receiving. It is idle to pretend that it has much hope left of its grievance being redressed by the authors of the repeated acts of breach of promise and of deliberate injustice—the local Government. The Bharat Bandhu remarks that either the Government should allow Allahabad to remain the capital of the province or it should make a clear pronouncement in case it is minded otherwise. The Abhyudaya observes that the United Provinces Government is doing a great injustice to Allahabad, the capital of the United Provinces, in removing the Public Works Department Secretariat to Lucknow in the name of economy to serve its own convenience. The people of the United Provinces and particularly of the province of Agra should fully understand this crooked policy of the authorities and should not allow peace to Government until it is willing to do full justice to Allahabad.

Hedjaz affairs.

THE Muslim press in general welcomes the defeat of Sharif Husain at the hands of the Wahabis. The Rahnuma condemns Sharif Husain as an enemy of Islam and hopes that, in spite of Ibn Saud being a Wahabi, the sympathy of the Muslim world will go with him. Writing in a similar strain the Mansur is gratified at the success of the Wahabis and opines that efforts will now be made to take advantage of the religious differences and prejudices prevalent in India to excite the Musalmans against the Wahabis and to win their goodwill for the Sharif. The Haqiqat avers that Sharif Husain, who is despised by his own people, has little chance of success against Ibn Saud, and that he will now reap the dire consequences of his misdeeds. The Medina says that if Great Britain or any other Christian Power intervenes in this struggle the Musalmans should clearly point out that such interference will be tantamount to an ultimatum to the Muslim world, and in that case it will become incumbent upon the Musalmans to adopt defensive measures. Referring to the Premier's reply to questions relating to the fighting in the Hedjaz, the Pioneer says: Whether the Sharif or Ibn Saud and his Wahabis are in possession of the holiest of the Holy Places of Islam can be a matter of no particular concern to the British Government and the British people. It is a purely Islamic question in which non-Muslims can have no interest. At the present moment there seems a disposition on the part of political Muslims in India to support the cause of Ibn Saud. This may be partly due to the desire to be on what is obviously the winning side; but it is also due, to a great extent at least, to the unpopularity of King Husain with Indian Muslims on account of his revolt from Turkey during the war. But the Wahabis are Muhammadans whose religious outlook is tinged by a rigid puritanism, and who have a traditional reputation for iconoclasm. The continued support of Indian Muhammadans will probably depend on whether they have outgrown their traditional proclivities in this direction.

The Mosul question.

The Leader says: The League is confronted with one of the most thorny problems, but its solution on the principle of self-determination, as suggested by the Turks, appears to be the most feasible. But the British cannot give up Mosul without deciding to evacuate Iraq and there lies the hitch. At another place the paper says: Surely when the question of Mosul has been referred to the League of Nations for decision it is showing scant respect to that august body or confidence in its impartiality to engage in hostilities on the frontiers of Mosul. Is there going to be an appeal to arms to settle the Mosul dispute in spite of the fact that the intervention of the League of Nations has been sought? The Turks have claimed a plebiscite, which is the best way of consulting the wishes of a people, but the British are opposed to it on the ground that the population of the frontier is mainly uneducated and that the tribesmen are hardly competent to deal with such a complicated issue as the question of boundary settlement. This objection is far from convincing and is probably due to the knowledge that if a plebiscite is taken the decision will go against the British. The chances of an amicable settlement do not appear to be rosy and we will not be surprised if hostile activities increase on both sides. The Hamdam takes exception to the statement of Lord Parmoor that the question for decision before the League of Nations is only the determination of the boundary line and remarks that Great Britain's demand is only based on her greed for the oil fields of Mosul. If the Turks fail to obtain their right by peaceful methods they will be obliged to resort to war the result of which will then decide the fate of Mosul for ever. The Medina says that the League of Nations, which is a civilised association of robbers, cannot give a verdict which may adversely affect the prestige of Great Britain and hence it is idle to expect that it will act with justice. Great Britain has entrusted the question to the League simply to maintain its possession over Mosul without incurring any responsibility for it. The Aj remarks that the Anglo-Iraq treaty has totally deprived Iraq of her economic freedom and has conferred such facilities on the Europeans settled there that in a few days they are bound to claim special rights there. So long as this treaty remains unaltered Iraq, although nominally independent, will virtually become a dependent country. If the Labour Government really wants to treat justly it should amend this treaty.

War in Morocco.

The Pioneer says: There is very little doubt that the future course of events in the internal politics of Spain depends upon what happens in Morocco. Success may settle the reins of government firmly in the hands of the Directory, but failure will almost inevitably entail the fall of the Marquis de Estella and his associates, and possibly of the throne as well. The Leader says: One of the principles for which the Allies professed to have fought in the Great War was the protection of the rights of small nations against the aggression of the great, but neither they nor the League of Nations have moved their little finger to put a stop to the sanguinary conflict and to induce Spain to respect the independence of the handful of tribesmen who are led not by a barbarian but by one who was educated at Madrid and who has travelled extensively in Europe.

Hindu Muslim relations.

The question of Hindu-Muslim relations continues to be discussed with avidity. The Pioneer says: If there were any substantial belief in the possibility of establishing Hindu-Muslim unity in a year or two by intensive propaganda on the part of the leaders of both communities, directed against that ignorant fanaticism which thinks to do God service by flouting the religious feelings of those who worship Him by other rites, it would surely be realised that the shortest road to swaraj would be to devote all energies to the removal of this main obstacle at the outset, to the exclusion of everything else. Referring to communal riots the Leader says: If energetic steps are not taken to cope with the disturbances they will eventually make administration impossible and then they will probably cause a serious searching of hearts among those who at present are making political capital out of them. These unfortunate riots however convey no other lesson to an Anglo-Indian contemporary than that there can be no law and order in this country without the maintenance of a strong British element in the civil and military services. Whatever lessons the Anglo-Indian papers may try to impress upon the Hindus and the Muhammadans, they have drawn one lesson from these outbreaks and it is that they must increasingly depend upon themselves for the protection of their lifes and property. This is the genesis of communal organisation. The more of these riots there are the greater will be the effort to perfect communal organisations, and a day may come when, each community, recognising the organised strength of the other, will come to a settlement and offer a common front to those who are finding at present their opportunity in communal friction. The Indian World says: So long as each and every one of us will not learn without foreign pursuasion what we individually ought to do under circumstances which require less intelligence to grasp individually than communally, democracy should not at all be used as a handle for political progress in this country. So long as homogeneity does not exist in the population, steady and uniform growth of the national instinct is an utter impossibility. The Grambasi says that it is idle to expect that the Government whose motto is "divide and rule" will ever do anything towards composing communal differences, for such a step will be surely a suicidal proceeding on its part. It is for the Hindus and Musalmans themselves to realise the disastrous consequences of their mutual strifes and to refrain from internecine quarrels. It is to be hoped that Mahatma Gandhi will succeed in establishing Hindu-Muslim unity, through his self-sacrificing fast. The Surya opines that the root-cause of the Hindu-Muslim strifes and dissensions is only to be found in the hearts of the Muhammadans who cherish feelings of hatred against the Hindus. Unless this hatred is got rid of there is little chance of better relations between the two communities. If the Muhammadans want to cultivate friendship with the Hindus they should no longer regard the latter as kafirs, fit only for annihilation, should curb their fanaticism, cultivate religious toleration and learn the lesson of culture and humanity. The Hindus also should realise that their cowardice only serves as an incentive to the Muhammadans to perpetrate atrocities on them and that they will be safe only when they are as organised and self-reliant as the Muhammadans. The Shakti says that when the British with all their physical force cannot prevent communal disturbances in India all that can be said is that we are either reciting an elegy on the grave of swaraj or the death knell of the bureaucratic administration is being sounded. One is tempted to put the question: what is the use of a Government, its army and police when they cannot protect the life and property of the people. The Hamdard urges that the local Government should now turn its attention to the prevention of communal disturbances in these provinces as was once done in the Punjab. The Nejat avers that in most cases it is the Hindus who start the disturbances and goad the Musalmans to retaliate. Under cover of religion and with the pretext of reforming the Hindu community they are trying to suck the blood of the innocent Musalmans and annihilate Islam itself. The Rahnuma suggests the formation of reconciliation boards composed of influential and patriotic persons to keep the mischief-mongers under control and remarks that both the communities should be free to celebrate their festivals and take out their processions without any restriction of routes. The Al Bureed says that the advocates of the shuddhi and sangathan movements are the enemies of Islam and they have made the question of the emancipation of India subservient to these movements simply to annihilate the Musalmans. The Arya Samajists by their inflammatory literature and propaganda have spread sparks of fire throughout the country. The Al Khalil asserts that the communal disturbances are in reality undermining the foundation of the British Government in India. The country is fast losing faith in the British administration. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the adverse comments of the Anglo-Indian press upon the communal disturbances are based upon ignorance and narrow-mindedness. The unity preached by Mr. Gandhi was in fact political and that unity still exists.

Unity Conference.

The Pioneer says: The proceedings at Delhi are not regarded seriously by a large body of opinion outside that city, although it would be unfair to credit the members of the Conference with anything but an earnest desire to find a solution to the problem of communal differences. The real difficulty will lie in impressing the views of the Conference on the different sections which the members have undertaken to represent. Whether the result of the Conference can be translated into action may be doubted, for to a very large extent the differences which have arisen are mainly the fruit of the teachings of a large number of those who attend the Conference. The paper is sceptical of any good results arising out of deliberations of the Conference and says: It would be futile to expect that the delegates, no matter how great their goodwill and how single-minded their purpose, will be able, as if by the wave of a magic wand, to transform in an instant the deep-seated subconscious instincts and prejudices which are the ultimate cause of Hindu-Muhammadan dissensions. These instincts and prejudices are the outcome of centuries of growth; and they cannot be eradicated in a day or a year. The Delhi Conference may do good service by affirming the principle of the utmost freedom of conscience and religion. But a great deal of spade-work will be necessary before any very definite results are perceptible. In a leading article headed "The Delhi Conference" the Leader appeals to the Hindus and says that they ought to exercise severe self-restraint and say or do nothing to cause offence to their Muslim brethren. The chances of settling the differences in an amicable manner and in a reasonable spirit can be greatly improved if the minds of the members of both communities can be lifted out of their narrow grooves and raised to higher atmosphere of fellow-feeling and goodwill. Our foolish strife is causing jubilation in the ranks of our enemies, and while we fight among ourselves for trifles the interest of the whole country suffers. The problem must be solved by Hindus and Muhammadans themselves and the forces of disruption that are at work must be overcome. The enlightened self-interest of each community demands unity, not of the make-believe but of the genuine variety which can stand any test. In another article the Leader hopes that the efforts of the delegates and those of the many others who have taken a noble part in the deliberations of the memorable Conference may be crowned with the success they eminently deserve and the interests of the country so urgently require. It urges that such joint Conference should be held periodically at different centres in the country. The Indian Daily Telegraph hopes that the Conference will lead us into something definite from the chaos into which we have walked and which threatens to engulf, in one swift embrace, the work of these many weary years of suffering and sacrifice. At another place the paper says: Should the leaders' meeting, at the call of Gandhi, disperse without an understanding that would appeal to both the communities, then the entire fabric of Indian political agitation would have collapsed. The cry for swaraj would be a mockery and Government would laugh at the high-sounding resolutions passed by the Congress, unitedly voicing the sentiments of every shade of political thought in India. The Advocate says: There is none who will differ from

Mr. Gandhi's views and if his maxim is practised we are sure that peace will once more prevail in the country. We hope that the deliberations of the Conference will lead to a clear atmosphere which is the desire of everybody. The Vartman remarks that Mahatma Gandhi's fast has focussed the mind of India on the urgent need of Hindu-Muslim unity and it is a matter for gratification that the Unity Conference which is being held at Delhi is being attended by leaders of all shades of opinion. Indeed, such a representative gathering must succeed in restoring Hindu-Muslim unity and establishing it on a firm basis. The Hamdam exhorts the Musalmans to join the Conference at all costs and frankly and courageously put forward their case before Mr. Gandhi and prove that the root-cause of all these disturbances is the shuddhi and sangathan movements. The Nejat is hopeful that the leaders will fully realise their responsibilities and duties at this critical juncture and will try their best to make the Conference a success.

Mr. Gandhi's fast.

The Leader hopes that before the Conference breaks up it will be able to induce Mr. Gandhi to give up his fast. The country needs all his strength and energy in the task of building up a united nation and in harnessing the energy that has been liberated by his activities in the past to constructive and useful channels. His life is very precious to India and he should not endanger it. The gathering of so many persons belonging to various schools of political thought at Delhi is the most eloquent tribute to his great and inspiring personality. He should therefore listen to their earnest request and give up his fast. In the opinion of the Echo there is nothing particularly novel about Mr. Gandhi's announcement of his intention to fast for 21 days as a penance for Hindu-Muslim dissensions. He seeks to impose his ideals, not to win adherents by pursuasion, as witness his instance on spinning. It cannot remove the causes of the Hindu-Muslim conflicts. These are deep-founded on religious differences, differences so profound as to make prolonged peace well-nigh impossible, at least till such time as the masses shall have learnt religious tolerance and Muhammadanism shall have lost its militant character. The Bhavishya remarks that in view of the terrible fast which Mahatma Gandhi has imposed on himself it is the duty of the leaders and religious leaders of both the communities to present themselves as early as possible before the Mahatma and to take a solemn vow never to indulge in mutual strifes. They should assure him that in future Hindus and Musalmans will treat each other as brethren and also help each other to the best of their power. The Anand says that Mahatma Gandhi's fast appears to have made no impression upon the Muhammadans in general and that it will produce no substantial results beyond being a source of pain to the Hindus. Mahatma Gandhi will be well-advised to give up his fast and devote himself to the organisation of the Hindus. So long as Muhammadans do not want "hearty unity" no number of Conferences can solve the problem of Hindu-Muslim unity. The Arya Mitra doubts whether Mahatma Gandhi will ever succeed in making an impression upon the heartless Muhammadans by his fast specially when they are determined to demand all sacrifices on the part of Hindus only as has been made clear in the Muslim Outlook. It advises Mahatma Gandhi to break his fast and devote himself to the organisation of the Hindus to preserve them as a community. The Medina regrets that as a result of the shuddhi and sangathan movements Mr. Gandhi has been compelled to observe a long and dangerous fast and apprehends that if these movements continue in their present spirit Mr. Gandhi's fast will be productive of no useful result. Regretting Mr. Gandhi's fast the Haqiqat implores both the communities to have mercy on him and sink their mutual differences at once. The Oudh Akhbar describes Mr. Gandhi's fast as the most effective weapon to counteract the present situation and hopes that the leaders will speedily arrive at a unanimous decision and relieve Mr. Gandhi of the trouble and misery he is undergoing for the sake of the country. The Nejat expresses its satisfaction that the news of Mr. Gandhi's fast has electrified the country and the people at this critical juncture have determined to remove communal differences.

Kohat tragedy.

The Mahashakti says: The whole affair calls for a sifting enquiry. Such horrors were inconceivable in British India. The possibilities suggested by the Kohat tragedy are hardly in keeping with the prestige of the British raj, a fact which, we hope, will be taken duly into account in any action the Government may be prompted to take with regard to the situation. The Kartavya blames the authorities for the Kohat tragedy which betrays the inefficiency of the local administration. The paper asks why the authorities who sent thousands of Sikhs into jail in the name of law and order and enacted the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy on the same ground could not preserve peace and order in Kohat and whether the Government will compensate the Hindus for their losses.

Lucknow disturbances.

The Leader is gratified at the settlement arrived at between the Hindus and Muhammadans at Lucknow and asks: May it be hoped that the settlement arrived at will wipe off the effects of the recent bitter strife and restore mutual confidence which has been so rudely shaken by the recent outbreak of lawlessness? The Anand says that at the time of the construction of the Aminabad Park the owner of the temple was given an assurance that the religious service in the temple would never be interfered with. It asks how the Muhammadans have acquired the right of saying namaz in the park and whether it is right that they, instead of saying their prayer in the adjoining mosques, should insist on assembling in the park for the purpose. The same paper points out that the general Hindu public is dissatisfied with the terms of the Lucknow settlement regarding the withdrawal of prosecutions against the rioters and despairs of the future of the city. It also asks why the namaz is not stopped in the park along with arti till the dispute is settled by Mahatma Gandhi. One Muneshwar Prasad Avasthi writing in the Bhavishya says that the entire responsibility for the Lucknow disturbance falls on the bureaucracy because its underlings knew long before the disturbance actually broke out that the day was not far off when an open rebellion would take place at Lucknow and yet it took no measures to meet the contingency. Even at the time of the disturbance Government was fully aware of sporadic assaults being made on individuals but it made no arrangements at all to stop or prevent them. The Haqiqat is gratified at the settlement arrived at between the representatives of both the communities in Lucknow and remarks that when the responsibilities of both the communities in connection with the riot are equal and when there is a strong apprehension of the two communities suffering loss no sane Hindu or Musalman will tolerate to prolong the present situation in the city for the sake of a few mischief-mongers. The Al Khalil says that the Deputy Commissioner was afraid of the rioters and that if a foreigner were to witness the Lucknow riots taking place under the very nose of the police and the military he would undoubtedly conclude that no more unfit and inefficient Government could be found in the world.

Tarkeshwar satyagraha.

The Vartman is satisfied with the Tarkeshwar settlement and says that the terms of the settlement are bound to put an end to the causes which had given rise to satyagraha. On the other hand the Aj is opposed to the settlement on the ground that by recognising the private property of the Mahant the Satyagraha Committee has strewn thorns in the path of future reforms.

Refusal of passports to Shiva Prasad Gupta.

Commenting on the Government's reply in the Legislative Assembly to the question regarding the refusal of passports to Mr. Shiva Prasad Gupta the Aj remarks: It should open the eyes of the Indians. Those who still think that they are free citizens of the British Empire and cooperate with the bureaucracy on the basis of this delusion will now know that they are not only slaves in the Empire but are prisoners in their own homes who cannot go abroad without the permission of their masters. We shed tears of blood on the ignorance of those who still dream of getting swaraj through cooperation and constitutional agitation.

Political propaganda.

The Aj writes: At the present time no one can be a friend of both India and England together because the interests of these two countries are at present mutually antagonistic. The interests of India are clearly to rid itself of the "steel frame" of England in order that it may save itself from economic drain and the evil effects of foreign rule. On the other hand the interests of England lie in perpetrating the subjection of this country in order that it may be able to secure an income of crores of rupees annually through services, pensions and trade.

Socialism.

In the course of a letter to the Vartman Satya Bhakta says: It is certain that after the non-cooperation movement our national agitation will now run on socialistic lines and it will be through Socialism that the kisans and labourers of India whom the non-cooperation has awakened will be able to fight for swaraj. The more the Indians realise the truth that Socialism is the only means of removing the sufferings of the poor the more will the Indian socialist party grow in strength.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 11th October, 1924.

Hedjaz affairs.

EVENTS in Hedjaz are being closely followed. The Muslim press is gratified at the discomfiture of Sharif Hussain and the British Premier's statement has been well received. The Hamdam remarks that the entire Muslim world is obliged to Mr. Ramsay MacDonald for declaring England's neutrality in the war between Hedjaz and Najd; but in the absence of any definite and authentic information it reserves its remarks regarding the alleged atrocities on the part of the Wahabis. The Aj points out that if the report that Ibn Saud has delivered Mecca from the hands of Shah Hussain is true the whole of the Muslim world will undoubtedly rejoice at it. We hope the Labour Government will not commit the same mistake by helping Shah Hussain which Mr. Lloyd George did by declaring war against the Turks. The Pioneer finds it difficult to understand the anxieties of certain papers in India lest Great Britain should intervene in the struggle between Ibn Saud and Hussain. Like other papers the Pioneer also holds that the troubles which have overtaken Hussain are largely of his own creation, and his failure to give adequate protection to pilgrims visiting Mecca has lost for him the sympathy of a large section of Muslim opinion. The Leader says that the statement of the Premier would cause great satisfaction among the Indian Muslims. The events happening in Arabia are of great importance. King Hussain by joining the British against the Turks and latterly by his callous disregard for the comfort and safety of large numbers of devoted Muslim pilgrims alienated the sympathies of Muslims in this country. He is reaping the fruits of his karma. The Wahabis are not regarded as orthodox Muslims and it is difficult to understand the view-point of those Muslims who have been expressing their admiration for Ibn Saud, the leader of the Wahabis. At another place the paper says: The dreams of King Hussain are over and all his secular and religious ambitions have been shattered.

Mosul question.

The Medina remarks: It is our earnest prayer that England may not court disaster by plunging herself headlong into a war with Turkey before whose sword the Greeks and the Englishmen are alike vulnerable. If a war breaks out with Turkey it will cause an upheaval in the world and will sound the death-knell of British prestige. The Musalmans of India should at once chalk out a programme for themselves if the British policy of greed and territorial aggrandisement assumes a serious turn. The Haqiqat says that the suspicions of the Turks regarding the impartiality of the League of Nations which is merely a camouflage set up by European diplomacy, are becoming materialised. The weak and subject nations should boycott the League, the decision of which can hardly be expected to be just and favourable to the Turks. The Hamdam says that the feeling of national self-respect has been created to such an extent among the Turks that they cannot now be overawed by empty threats. If Englishmen do not want to hand over the territory to them on account of the oil fields and are even desirous to avoid the plebiscite, the only other way of solving the question is to settle it by an arbitrament of the sword. The Aj remarks that in view of the present constitution of the Council of the League of Nations and of the League itself it is a mistake to think that justice will be done by the League in connection with the Mosul question. It is impossible for Turkey to secure justice against Great Britain when even smaller European nations fail to get justice against the Great Powers of Europe from the League of Nations.

Resignation of the High Commissioner.

The Haqiqat remarks that the resignation of Sir D. Dalal shows that Indian officers do not receive sufficient assistance from their European subordinates; but on the contrary obstacles are thrown in their way. If they will not change their attitude towards their Indian superiors the tension between the rulers and the ruled will become all the more acute and Indians of all shades of opinion will be forced to unite and launch a vigorous struggle for swaraj which will be impossible for the Government to resist.

Great Britain and Afghanistan.

The Bharat Dharma says that the sale of aeroplanes by the Government of India to the Amir of Kabul is but the thin end of the policy of the British Government to re-impose its suzerainty upon Afghanistan.

League of Nations.

The Aj remarks that the decision of Germany to join the League of Nations is one of helplessness. It is indeed pitiable and deplorable that Germany should agree to become a member of an organisation which owes its origin to false charges against herself.

Egypt and England.

The Pioneer regrets that the conversations between the Premier and Zaghlul Pasha have broken down before the preliminary stages were passed. The conversations appear to have proved altogether futile, and the stumbling-block has lain in the question of the maintenance of British troops in Egypt. If Egypt were capable of protecting herself against any possible aggression, an alliance between her and Great Britain would meet the needs of the case. Unfortunately she is not, and Great Britain is, therefore, forced to take measures for ensuring the safety of that waterway which is absolutely vital to the existence of the Empire.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Pioneer says: It is easy to proclaim from the housetops a peace that is no peace and a unity that exists only in the imagination of a few intellectuals; but it is easier still, unfortunately, for the badmash or the fanatic to demonstrate in a moment that the proclamation of peace is a lie and the unity a sham. That Hindu-Muslim unity will eventually be achieved is our fervent hope, but its cause will never be promoted by burking the difficulties that lie in its way, or by ignoring the fact, which is patent to every student of mass psychology, that inveterate instincts and passions which have been inherited for centuries and have become part and parcel of the subconscious strata of personality can be eradicated without a prolonged struggle in which time is the most important factor. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: As an instance of Nero fiddling when Rome is burning the comments of the British Press on the Hindu-Muslim riots are interesting. The Mahashakti opines that Hindu-Muslim unity is surely not an unrealisable reality. The Hindu-Muslim problem, as we know it today, is absolutely a foreign element, foreign to the genius and traditions of the country. It cannot take root. The Hindu-Muslim problem is, indeed, a passing phase. The Tabligh opines that Mr. Gandhi's condemnation of the Gulbarga riot was the result of his prejudice against the restoration of Berar to the Nizam as the latter is a Musalman ruler. Mr. Gandhi has all along been deceiving the Musalmans and he wants to use them as a tool for the achievement of swaraj and to tyrannise over them after gaining his object. The Musalmans who are still devoted to him should now cease crying "Gandhi ki Jai' and organise their community as the Hindu-Muslim unity is now an idle dream. The Haqiqat remarks that no educated Hindu and Musalman can deny that a protraction of the communal tension is fraught with dire consequences for the nation and the country. The Hindus are themselves to blame for the excesses committed in Kohat as it was their own inflammatory literature which goaded the Musalmans to retaliate. The Hindustani refutes the criticisms of the Anglo-Indian press that the Hindu-Muslim riots are a strong arguments for the continuance of the British officers in India and against the fitness of the Indians for swaraj and remarks that the frequent occurrence of communal disturbances even after a period of a century and a half of British rule, goes a long way to prove that that rule instead of being efficient is quite the reverse of it and that the Indians are justified in demanding swaraj. The Oudh Akhbar criticises the Pioneer for suggesting that to suppress the communal riots the strength of the British troops should be raised to the pre-war level and remarks that the European District Officers for the most part call in British soldiers not so much for the suppression of the riot as for their own protection. They have no reason to distrust the Indian soldiers who are as efficient as the Britishers. The Medina lays the entire responsibility for the disturbances at the door of the Government and accuses it of trying to rule by creating a split between the two communities and displaying criminal negligence in the discharge of its duty. The short-sightedness, negligence and carelessness betrayed by Government in connection with the recent communal disturbances cannot be overlooked. The Arti points out that there can be no permanent understanding between Hindus and Muhammadans unless the latter consider India to be their motherland and themselves to be a part of the Indian nation, get rid of the cant of their political importance, respect the religion of the Hindus and observe their religious observances without wounding the feelings of others. Similarly the Hindus should not look upon Muhammadans as aliens and mlechhas and should not unjustly interfere with their religious observances. If the Hindus organise themselves and make themselves as strong as Muhammadans, there are greater chances of a permanent understanding between the two communities.

Unity Conference.

The Pioneer remarks: In spite of much prodigality in headlines in some of the prominent Indian-edited papers the so-called "Unity" Conference at Delhi has been an elaborate farce. The truth is that the recent outbreaks in Delhi, Lucknow, Kohat and Shahjahanpur have thoroughly nonplussed politicians. Indeed, the fact that a conference attended by a number of men who have for some time been engaged in preaching the doctrine of direct action and in inculcating disregard for the courts of law should now be compelled to express the opinion that "it is unlawful and irreligious for any person to take the law into his own hands" is eloquent of the intricacy of the problem which the delegates set out to solve. The root-cause of the present troubles is to be found in the persistent attempts made by Indian politicians to weaken the strength of the cement of authority if not to eliminate it altogether. In a leading article the Leader expresses its pleasure that the historic Conference in Delhi has terminated successfully. It points to the disappointment of newspapers hostile to the national aspirations of Hindus and Muslims and warns the Indians as to the direction in which the duty of both and either clearly lies. Let us both succeed in showing that no longer will either of us consent to be the sport of ill-conditioned critics representing the interests of a third party outside both of us. It congratulates the conveners of the Conference and remarks: Never was a wiser, a more courageous, a more patriotic step taken than by Hakim Ajmal Khan, Swami Shraddhanand and Maulana Muhammad Ali when they sent out the invitations to the Conference. In another article headed "Unity" the paper says that the efforts at unity are being decried, misrepresented and scoffed at in familiar quarters. The success of the Delhi Conference is, for obvious reasons, being minimised by Anglo-Indian writers, and we must be prepared for gibes and ridicule from that quarter instead of encouragement and blessing. The Conference held at Delhi and its gratifying success shows that the Mahatma has not ceased to wield the magic wand, that he can still accomplish miracles. The baser elements in society which are mainly responsible for ungodly acts of violence, must sooner or later come under the sway of higher and gentler forces. Thus the outlook is in every way hope-inspiring. We pray that God may grant to the people sufficient light so that they may overcome the communal maya and see the Truth, and seeing it enhance the glory and fame of India, our common Motherland. The Indian Daily Telegraph hopes that all over the country the prominent leaders of both the communities would come forward to once more seriously set before the forgotten mind of the populace the ideal of Hindu-Muslim unity. If the Delhi Conference should have any tangible result on the body politic, it ought to come from the processions and public meetings on the eighth of October. The Mahashakti welcomes the result of the Unity Conference and says that there are already signs that it will lead to lasting friendship between the two communities. The Haqiqat attributes the success of the Unity Conference to Mr. Gandhi's fast and hopes that the Musalmans and the Hindus will not forget the pain and trouble which Mr. Gandhi had had to undergo for their sake and in future will not allow any ill-will to develop into a disturbance. The Hamdam pays a tribute to the conveners of the Conference for succeeding in solving the problem of unity and finding out a way to restore happy relations between the two communities in spite of being hampered by the presence of adverse elements and is confident that the resolutions passed in the Conference will go a long way to fulfil the wishes of the conveners. In another article the same paper says that the resolution regarding cow-slaughter will be productive of very wholesome effect if it does not remain confined to the Conference only, and if the Hindus in their daily practice do not attempt to stop cow-slaughter by force, as it is only a request based on sincerity and toleration which can keep back the Musalmans from slaughtering cows. The Hindustani expresses deep concern for the life of Mr. Gandhi and suggests that after the deliberations of the Unity Conference meetings should be convened in every city and town to urge the Hindus and Musalmans to remain peaceful and reconciliation boards should be established to prevent communal riots. The Aligarh Gazette criticises Mr. Gandhi's fast from the Muslim point of view and remarks that any reconciliation effected in such a hasty manner will be quite unstable. The Hind-i-Jadid hopes that the decision of the Conference will be acceptable to both the communities and remarks that the task of restoring happy relations is not difficult of accomplishment, but purification of heart, real piety and ardent patriotism are needed.

Congress politics.

The Aj remarks: If today the various political parties in the country were to oppose the Government unitedly on one hand and to carry on a combined agitation among the people on the other, we are convinced that we shall not only be able to put an end to the communal disturbances but also achieve our political ends. The Vartman says that Indian money is being spent on the conspiracy to perpetuate the ignorance of India. Individual rights and privileges are being murdered every day in the streets. Now that the non-cooperation programme is going to be suspended in the Belgaum Congress it is essential that we should decide upon an equally fearless and vigorous programme. The proposal to introduce the Constitution of India Bill in the Parliament will not do. The Haldhar doubts whether the Round Table Conference of the various political parties which is going to be held next month will succeed in deciding the form of Indian swaraj, seeing that fundamental differences of opinion exist even among the important leaders on this question. Dwelling upon the dire consequences of Mr. Gandhi's movement the Aligarh District Gazette is gratified that he has not been successful in breaking down the administrative machinery of the Government. After raising a hue and cry, destroying the peace of the country and ruining thousands of people by throwing them out of employment he has now shaken off his illusion. Even now he commands enough popularity and has been elected President of the next Congress. It is hoped that after so many bitter experiences he will in future refrain from throwing India into an abyss of ruin.

Swaraj party.

Commenting on the Bengal Government's statement with regard to Ministers the Pioneer says: So long as Mr. Das and his associates are ready to continue their policy of what they are pleased to term destroying dyarchy and what thinking men will describe as postponing India's advance towards self-government, it would obviously be futile to present once more a demand for Ministers' salaries. The Rahnuma condemns the Swarajists and remarks that their policy has antagonised the British and the Parliament against the Indian aspirations for swaraj. Their policy is based on hatred and it is gratifying that they have little influence over the public and that the educated Indians still appreciate the blessings which India enjoys by virtue of its being a part of the British Empire.

Agra Tenancy Bill.

The Vartman remarks that if the Agra Tenancy Bill is passed into law the condition of the kisans will become still worse. The zamindars are not satisfied even with this Bill. In order to suppress the kisans and extend their own rights they are holding meetings in different places to protest against the Bill. But the kisans are silent. If they do not wake up from their sleep their condition will indeed become deplorable.

Lucknow disturbances.

The Haqiqat regrets that the chief miscreants who took a prominent part in the disturbances at Lucknow are safe from the clutches of the law and to the great resentment of the Musalmans the authorities have yet failed to take any notice of them. After the restoration of peace and order it will be difficult to distinguish between the guilty and the innocent. The Hindustani is gratified that contrary to expectation, the Hindus defended themselves very well against the Musalmans and hopes that if in future Hindu honour and religion is at stake they will boldly face the assailants. The Hindus are not cowardly and timid, and if the Musalmans raise their head the least, they will be crushed. The Hamdam directs the attention of the Government to the objectionable literature circulated by the Aryas at Lucknow and remarks that deterrent punishment should be inflicted upon the originators of such propaganda. The Mashriq takes to task the Hindu press of Lucknow for fanning the fire of communal hatred and remarks that the disturbance in Lucknow was due to the mistakes of the District Magistrate. The Arti is not altogether satisfied with the Lucknow settlement inasmuch as it has provided no solution of the Amethi problem. It is doubtful whether the general public or the sufferers will approve of the withdrawal of prosecutions against rioters. Those who have suffered must be compensated. The settlement is also incomplete because it leaves untouched the question of religious liberty. The same paper in another article quotes from Sanskrit ritualistic works to show that the proper time for the performance of arti is the dusk and that this being the case there is nothing to be wondered at if the Hindus regard it as an attack upon their religion to postpone the arti till a later hour as has been done in the case of the temple in the Aminabad Park.

Political propaganda.

The Desh Bhagat asserts that the Government has ever been deceiving the guileless Indians by holding out to them false promises and allurements. The Indians have now grown sick of such a policy which has been pursued for enslaving them. The Government uses Indian money to ruin the poor Indians. But the wise and disillusioned Indians have now spurned their personal interests and jumped into the arena to expose this duplicity and it is due to their efforts that today thousands of Indians are prepared to sacrifice their all to get themselves free from the claws of an alien Government. The Bharat Dharma writes: The hand of the English is visible in all the troubles in Asia including even Morocco. They have very cleverly succeeded in establishing their suzerainty in Arabia and are trying to re-impose it upon Afghanistan. They are in a way already masters of Pekin in China. In this manner they exercise their influence over the whole of Asia as a result of their diplomatic achievements. If the Asiatics are to live they should take counter-measures to remedy this state of affairs. Asia is the teacher of the world and to maintain its position it will have to learn lessons of diplomacy.

British elections.

THE election campaign in Britain is being closely followed. The Weekly Observer notes with satisfaction that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald is making an extremely gallant stand against the combined opposition of the two parties, and says: That the Labour Party's prospects of returning to office are not hopeless, as the pendulum of popular opinion shows distinct indications of swinging back to the Labour side. If Labour is defeated in the present elections, the Conservative-Liberal programme in the future will be forced more and more to approximate to what we understand as Socialist ideals. According to the Pioneer the Russian Treaty and in particular the proposed guaranteed loan will play an important part in the election campaign. The Russain loan seems likely to prove the weakest joint in the Labour Party's armour. Referring to the combination of the Liberals and Conservatives against the Labour, the Leader says that the Labourites must thank themselves for thus driving the Liberals into the arms of the Conservatives. They were helped into power by the Liberals but they treated the latter as enemies and thus alienated their sympathies. Commenting on Mr. Baldwin's recent speech in reference to India the paper agrees with him that the Labour Party failed to deliver the goods, but it is certain that his own party will not only not deliver the goods but will try to go back. Its advent into power will be hailed with delight by the bureaucracy but its policy of reaction will only increase instead of abating unrest. The Indian Daily Telegraph pays a tribute to Mr. Ramsay MacDonald by saying that he stands out well in comparison with any leader that any party can show. No one has displayed greater force of character, more generous impulse and that fine courage which hazards a great deal for a good cause. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's name will go down in English history not only as the first Labour Premier of England but as one of her greatest Prime Ministers—one who won peace for Europe. It would be sad, indeed, if such a personality should flit out of the canvas at a time when Europe needed most his inspiration and lead to escape from the brink of hostilities to peace and good-will. With the dark clouds lowering in Mosul, it would be fatal to European tranquillity and violently upset the Asiatic countries if the advent of Liberalism should again release Mr. Lloyd George to coquet with his Greek millionaires in another adventure with Angora. At another place the paper says: The present election has shown that by the Liberals remaining stagnant and Unionists advancing in their thought, there is every likelihood of the two parties coalescing into one homogenous whole to fight Labour, which is fast slipping into live socialism. The Haqiqat remarks that the Indians will not regret the defeat of the present Labour Government as it has falsified all hopes entertained in India when it came into power. Being in a minority, the Labour Party has hitherto been impotent to do anything for India and the pending elections can only prove beneficial to India if the Labour Party obtains a substantial majority. The Arya Varta prays for the success of the Labour Party in the general elections so that it may be able to grant self-government to India at an early date. The Oudh Akhbar says that Indians have little interest in the present British elections as no hope can be entertained from any other party in England when even the Labour Government failed to satisfy their aspirations. The Hamdam apprehends that the fall of the Labour Government will undo all the Reforms hitherto carried out in India, Egypt and Mosul. The Vartman opines that the sentence of death passed by the House of Commons on the Labour Ministry on such a trifling matter as the Workers' Weekly case has not discouraged or frightened the Labour Party in the least. It has, however, shown that although the Conservatives and the Liberals are antagonistic to each other yet they are both enemies of the Socialistic Labour Party and are united in combatting the Socialist propaganda in England. The paper contends that it will be universally admitted that despite all its weaknesses and shortcomings the Labour Government's régime will be better and more beneficial to the interests of England and the British Empire than that of any other party. The Abhyudaya maintains that the coalition of the Liberal Party with the Conservative in defeating the Labour Government shows that whatever mutual differences might exist between them, they hold an identical opinion regarding imperialism and capitalism of which the Labour Party is an uncompromising opponent. It says that although India will have to undergo greater sufferings and hardships under the Conservative régime, yet it is not a matter of anxiety for her. If Indians have any love of freedom and any feeling of self-respect the régime of the Conservative Party will prove hurtful to their feelings and the consequent alienation will ultimately benefit them. The Aj remarks that it is immaterial to India as to which of the political parties come into power in the next British elections, as she finds no difference among them. In the interests of India Peel is better than Olivier because the former does what he says whereas in the case of the latter there is a vast difference between his words and deeds. We did not get truth from the Labour Government and hence we have no reason to be sorry at its downfall. We must however admit that the Liberals resorted to mean tactics in defeating the Labour Government. Commenting on the candidature of Sir Sankaran Nair as a Labourite, the same paper writes: Who would have thought that Sir Sankaran's views would undergo such a radical change! Perhaps it is the result of Justice MacCardie's strictures. How fine would it be if either Sir Michael O'Dwyer or General Dyer were made to stand against him? It would indeed be an interesting contest. The Swadhin says that the Labour Government did not act wisely in the matter of withdrawing the prosecution of the Workers' Weekly which has resulted in the dissolution of the Parliament. It opines that if the Conservatives are restored to power India will fare very badly as is already evident from the jubilation at Simla on the end of the Labour Government. The Arti says that the fall of the Labour Government is due to the jealousy of the political parties of its magnificent achievements in domestic and international politics. It hopes that the discriminating British public will again return the Labour Party to power. The Anand apprehends that the Conservatives will come into power at the next British elections and that it is idle to expect anything for India at their hands. The Indian bureaucracy will heartily welcome their advent into power whereas Mr. Baldwin's recent speech fairly shows how India's political aspirations will be crushed under them.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Leader remarks: Whether Ibn Saud's followers will prove iconoclasts or not will be known later, but anxiety will be naturally felt among Indian Muslims for the sacred places in Mecca. The question is whether the Wahabis will rest content with the capture of Mecca or will extend their conquest in Hedjaz. The Muslim press, which is jubiliant at the fall of Sharif Hussain, advises Ibn Saud to convene a Conference of the Muslim world to solve the Khilafat question and settle the Hedjaz affairs. The Sada-i-Muslim of Cawnpore ascribes Sharif Hussain's fall to Divine wrath as a punishment for his misdeeds and hopes that the advancing wave of liberty will soon strike against the walls of Iraq and Syria and prove a harbinger of awakening in Arabia. The Hamdam advises the Amir of Nejd to convene a Conference of the Muslim world to solve the complicated question of the Khilafat which has been for a long time creating great unrest among the Musalmans and remarks that if a pan-Islamic organisation comes into being as a result of this Conference it will prove a powerful weapon in the hands of the Musalmans to counteract the intrigues of European Powers and England will not then dare to incite the barbarous Greeks to perpetrate atrocities on the civil population of Smyrna nor will the European capitalists find it easy to play with the Turkish demands out of greed for the oil fields of Mosul. In another article the paper hopes that the Amir of Nejd will fulfil the promises made to the Muslim world and apply himself to constructive work and after establishing peace and order will direct his attention towards Amir Feisul and Amir Abdullah as the emancipation of Jazirat-ul-Arab will not be complete without their defeat. The Al Bureed expresses its gratification at the success of the Amir of Nejd and remarks that the attack on Hedjaz is ordained by Providence. The Al Khalil is not prepared to give any definite opinion as it suspects Great Britain of complicity. The Haqiqat is concerned lest atrocities may be committed in the Holy Places by the Wahabis and advises Ibn Saud to issue a statement without delay in order to assuage Muslim feelings. The Hindustani describes the abdication of Shah Hussain as the most welcome news for the Muslim world and remarks that he has received a just punishment for his treachery. The Al Bashir ascribes Shah Hussain's fall to the atrocities perpetrated by him on the hajis and to his treachery to Islam out of greed for the kingdom of Hedjaz.

It advises Great Britain to leave the settlement of the Hedjaz affairs to the Musalmans themselves and abstain from interfering on the pretext of protecting the life and property of its Muslim subjects.

The Mosul question.

Referring to Anglo-Turkish tension over the Mosul question the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the latest development in the Turkish crisis has all the appearance of mystery. It would be unfortunate if the contending parties could not find a solution other than a war which may easily draw into its vortex more than one European Power. At another place the paper says: Britain will never have any sympathy from Indians in her Asiatic adventures when those adventures are directed against Asiatic aspirations. In a leading article, headed "The Situation in Iraq" the Pioneer says: The Turkish notion of bargaining may perhaps underlie the alarms and excursions which have attracted attention in London. The idea that by making a show of an ability to dispense with the help of the League in settling the Mosul issue the Turks may gain greater credit for acquiescence in the eventual settlement appears fantastic, but often the fantastic is foremost in Turkish diplomatic methods. On the whole, the symptoms do not seem to be as dangerous as might be thought. The very complexity of the situation inclines the different parties towards peace rather than war and the cementing influence is that of Great Britain who, while Ibn Saud, Feisul and the Turks have one against the other causes for enmity, can cover all three with her cloak of friendship, sincere and powerful. At another place the same paper says: The policy of furtive intimidation which has hitherto been pursued is an eminently unwise one, and can hardly fail to prejudice whatever claims Turkey may have for consideration at the hands of the League of Nations. Criticising the British policy regarding Mosul, the Hamdam remarks that whatever party gains ascendancy in England as a result of pending elections the Indian Musalmans should expect no sympathy at its hands. They should rely upon their own strength to shape their future destiny as Mustafa Kemal, Ibn Saud and Amir Abdul Karim are doing. The Turkish demand for Mosul is based upon justice and there can be no peace and order in that territory until it is handed over to the Turks. In another article the same paper remarks that British statesmen are undermining the foundations of the Empire by trying to pursue the anti-Islamic policy of Mr. Lloyd George. The Nejat accuses Great Britain of being dishonest, avaricious of the oil fields and blind to the just rights of the Turks and remarks that the sword and not the League of Nations will decide the question of Mosul.

The Khilafat deputation.

The Pratap remarks that the refusal of passports to the Khilafat deputation by the Angora Government must open the eyes of the Indian Musalmans who should realise that India and India alone is their motherland and that simply because they are Muhammadans, the Turkish, the Persian and the Afghan nations are not going to regard them as their own kith and kin. The Kartavya says that this rebuff should teach the Indian Musalmans to lay aside all their solicitude for foreign countries and devote themselves to the solution of Indian problems and make India free by cooperating with the Hindus in a truly brotherly spirit. The Al Bashir describes it as a great blunder on the part of the Indian Musalmans to try to send a deputation to Angora in spite of its repeated refusal to accept the office of Khilafat and remarks that the Khilafat has ever been a source of loss to the Muslim world and that it is a pity that the Indian Musalmans are still a prey to delusion.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

In a leading article "Communal ambitions in India" the Pioneer says: The political events of the last two or three years have been remarkable for the growing ascendancy of the Hindu intelligentsia and for the restiveness of minority communities on that score. However much he may believe in his own capacity for governing, the Hindu cannot fail to see that by antagonising his Muhammadan brother he is endangering the development of that national solidarity which is essential to any scheme for swaraj in the best sense of the term. Communal disunion cannot go to make a nation, and until unity is within measurable distance of being achieved there must be maintained the power to hold the balance even. The unfortunate disturbances of the last few months are the measure of the feeling that the scales are in danger of being tilted over. The Leader says: The so-called communal riots which are taking place may for a time to some extent cause depression among those who are working for self-government, but they cannot make them lose faith in the high demoractic ideal on which they have set their heart or strengthen the basis of the existing essentially autocratic system. There are many thoughtful Indians who honestly feel that the solution of the communal problem lies with themselves and not with the British officials. The growing consciousness of each community that they must depend to a large extent upon themselves for their self-defence in the hour of danger ought to cause a searching of heart among those who wax eloquent on the benefits of Pax-Britannica. This is not a matter on which the Government and its mouthpiece in the press can congratulate themselves. On the other hand the Pioneer says that the innuendoes of the Indian-edited press, which throw a flood of light on the mentality of those conducting it, will not be ignored, and in particular that the accusations brought by that press against the British official of adopting an attitude of apathy and even complacency towards the riots will be duly noted. There is not, and never has been, a tittle of evidence in support of these accusations beyond the unworthy suspicions of those who make them; but they serve a useful purpose none the less. For Indian politicians and publicists who make unsupported accusations of this kind merely prove that they are judging others by themselves, and that they are attributing to the British official motives by which they know they would be actuated themselves in similar circumstances. The Al Bashir protests against the use of firearms in communal disturbances and advises the Government to cancel the licences of persons inhabiting the affected areas. There is no reason why a few persons be allowed to possess firearms on the pretext of protecting their lives and property when the lives of thousands of His Majesty's subjects are in danger. A condition should be entered in the licence prohibiting the holder thereof from using the firearms in case of riots or religious disturbances. The Azad opines that the increasing communal riots amongst other reasons are due to weakness on the part of the Government. The Al Khalil accuses the Aryas of kindling the fire of communal bitterness and remarks that the sangathan spirit has so much permeated the Hindu masses that even the English officers are now afraid of it. There is little hope that the efforts to restore happy relations between the two communities will be successful. The Arya Varta asserts that while the Hindus have ever been eager for unity and ready to sacrifice their communal interests for the sake of their country's advancement, the Musalmans were always picking up quarrels with them on mere trifles. The Muslim demands are quite unjust and unreasonable and cannot be accepted by the Hindus. They have probably decided to remain slaves of the aliens for ever. Had their religious zeal and self-respect been genuine they would have shaken off the yoke of allegiance to Britain and cheerfully borne all the consequences and troubles for the sake of their religion. The Pratap sees a radiant ray of hope at the bottom of communal riots which are in its opinion a prelude to the birth of freedom in the country. Permanent Hindu-Muslim unity is the inevitable result of these disturbances. The present disorder is but a crude representation of the desire to make the smallest and weakest communities in the country strong and able to walk shoulder to shoulder with other advanced communities in the march towards freedom. The Swadhin, on the other hand, is pessimistic regarding the effect of communal disturbances and says that the promoters of the Unity Conference must hang down their heads in shame over the communal disturbances at Allahabad and Jubbulpore. It urges that special joint Hindu-Muslim committees should be formed in all places for the propagation of the resolutions of the Conference among the masses to prevent recurrence of communal riots.

Allahabad riots.

While the Pioneer asserts that the significance of the statement issued by the Commissioner of the Allahabad division will appeal to all thoughtful Indians, the Leader says that the Commissioner's report may be expected to furnish additional material to the perpetual and God-appointed guardians of India's interests to dilate upon the criminal folly of developing democratic institutions in this country and the necessity of reverting to a purely autocratic system of government in the interests of law and order. The paper does not agree with the Commissioner that there was such an atmosphere of fear or communal ill-will as can explain the disturbance. The prediction of the Muslim Outlook of Lahore about the riot at Allahabad a week before its occurrence has led the Advocate to believe that there was some organisation which manipulated the riot. It urges that a thorough inquiry should be made into the matter and that the editor of the Muslim Outlook should be called upon to disclose the whole secret as he seems to know all about it. The Abhyudaya holds that the Commissioner's statement on the Allahabad disturbance is full of mistakes and blunders and devoid of truth. Its wording goes to prove that the Hindus were the offenders. His view regarding the resolution of the local Hindu Sabha is totally misleading. No greater falsehood can be conceived than the assertion that a few Hindu lathials attempted to loot the vegetable market.

What better sample of the Government's efficient arrangements can be produced than this riot which was taking place at a distance of only ten steps from the Kotwali, and yet the authorities could not stop it?

Lucknow disturbances.

The Indian Daily Telegraph complains that it is a great pity that in Lucknow no solution has been found to the problem and curfew order seems to be the normal feature of life in the town. Feeling is high, the latest manifestation being the attempt to set in motion the local municipality to reclaim the Aminabad Park from being turned into a mosque. In a leading article the paper urges upon the municipal members to find a solution of the arti question as it must admit of solution. If Gandhi can solve it, it would be a blessing. The strain is daily growing unbearable. If Gandhi cannot, then the suggestion, however repugnant, of attempting to set the municipal bye-law into motion may be accepted as a practical solution. If that too fails to afford the solution, then the Hindus may find a leader to offer satyagraha. At another place the paper says that there are growing signs that the attitude of the non-cooperative commissioners of the Lucknow municipality against the enforcement of the municipal bye-law is exercising the indignation of the public. The Arti expresses wonder why the authorities at Lucknow take no legal proceeding against the hooligans who committed atrocities during the recent disturbance and points out that it is owing to this apathy that stray assaults continue to be committed here and there even now. It also asks why no action has so far been taken on the inquiry made in the Amethi riot.

Non-cooperation.

Referring to Mr. Gandhi's article in the Navayug suggesting the suspension of non-cooperation, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: Such a step as is foreshadowed by Gandhi would end the three-party conflict in Indian politics, and once again unite the forward politicians as against the more guarded and less progressive wing. The cessation of the non-cooperation movement as such, with whatever restrictions and provisos, will be a confession of failure. It would require all the love of truth and courage to face a defeat such as Gandhi alone possesses to acclaim loudly what has long been evident to many, namely, that non-cooperation, as an ideal which appealed to the masses and prosented to the world a united and determined India, has become extinct.

The Reforms.

Referring to the evidence of Sir Chimanlal Sitalvad before the Reforms Inquiry Committee the Leader does not agree with Sir Chimanlal that the provincial autonomy should be established in the major provinces only. It should be granted to all the provinces, for dyarchy has been found by experience to be unsound and unsatisfactory. The objections raised against it are applicable in major as well as minor provinces, and we are opposed to any differentiation being made in the matter. No one has any faith left in dyarchy and the sooner it is ended and substituted by full responsible government in the provinces the better for the cause of good government and smooth administration. The Pioneer, on the other hand, says: Much of the opposition to dyarchy before the Reforms Inquiry Committee is due to a belief, which we believe to be entirely mistaken, that if dyarchy is thrown upon the scrapheap, the British Parliament will be forced to concede a substantial further constitutional advance at once. Recent events, however, have convinced the British people that any further advance is out of the question for some time to come.

Burma Taxation campaign.

In a leading article headed "The Burma Capitation Tax" the Leader remarks: A tax which can be manipulated at the arbitrary will of the executive and which is opposed to all modern principles of taxation ought to be done away with. Sir Harcourt Butler's Government appears to us to be approaching the question from a wrong perspective. The solution of the trouble lies in abolishing the tax and substituting another in its place, such as a land rate, and not in blind repression.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Oudh Akhbar opines that the conditions prevailing in the province of Oudh being different from those in Agra the same principles should not be applied to the latter. It criticises the occupancy rights to be given to the non-occupancy tenants and remarks that the grant of these rights besides causing difficulties to the landlords will not even benefit the tenants. The concessions proposed to be granted to the latter are not real and adequate return for the rights from which it is intended to deprive them.

Proscription of the leaflet "Indian Communist Party."

The Vartman says that the Government of Sir William Marris is outdoing all other provincial Governments in points of irresponsibility and imprudence and that the proscription of the Socialist Party's leaflet is the latest example of that irresponsibility. The Tsardom of the provincial Government in political matters is gradually crossing the limit of the endurance of the people. Until the provincial Government makes its position clear as to whether communistic organisations are unlawful the Socialists should freely carry on their activities. Writing in the same paper Satya Bhakta, the writer of the proscribed leaflet remarks: "The manner in which the Government has within the last few days proscribed unoffending and unobjectionable books and pamphlets leads us to infer that its legal adviser these days appears to be a raw recruit or one who is inexperienced in the ways of the world. I emphatically declare that this action of the Government is cowardly. The straight course for it was to declare the Communist Party an unlawful organisation. If it is prepared to declare the party unlawful, I for one assert that I am a Communist and that I accept and preach all the principles enunciated in the proscribed pamphlet. I am confident that even in this demoralised state hundreds of persons will be forthcoming who in the name of socialism and freedom will kick this order like me. Besides this, the Communist Party of the British Empire and of all other countries of the world which is stronger than fifty such Governments is there to meet it." The Pratap says that by proscribing the copies of the rules of the Indian Communist Party published by Mr. Satya Bhakta the United Provinces Government has given another proof of its folly. The first proof was furnished by it in the proscription of Mr. Gour's readers. At present there is no field for Communism in India. To talk of it is but a farce. But when it is permissible in England, why should it not be so in this country? The action taken by the Government is indicative of the perversity of its legal intellect. It is not proper for the people to yield to such despotism and we are convinced that they will not do so.

Political propaganda.

The Bharat Jiwan publishes three articles in honour of the Vijaya Dashmi festival in the course of one of which it invokes goddess Durga to incarnate herself in India which is being ruined by rakshasas (demons) in order to protect her children, the Indians and the Hindu religion. In another article the writer, Ram Nath Lal Surma, invokes goddess Kali to dance her mad dance on the bloody altar so that our cowardice may vanish and our regeneration may be secured. Another writer, under the pseudonym of "A Kinchan," invokes Lord Ram to re-incarnate himself to protect the woebegone and oppressed land of India. He is an enemy of the heartless bureaucracy and will surely destroy it. He shall have to fight hard against the adverse circumstances here and he shall have to destroy the heartless people who love oppression. He shall have to become drenched in the blood of red revolution, but that does not matter as he has always been a fighter.

British elections.

THE Pioneer, which describes the result of the general election as a veritable landslide, says that a strong Conservative Government seems to be assured for some time to come. The overwhelming victory of the Conservatives points to two conclusions. One is that the British people have no sympathies with revolutionaries; the other is that they clearly recognise that the real fight at this election was between Conservatism and Labour. Whatever Government was returned to power as a result of the elections, there were no grounds for supposing that there would be any change in British policy towards India. The outcry in the Indian-edited Press that a Conservative victory at the polls will mean more repression in India is hollow, and will carry no conviction to any intelligent observer of recent events. The Leader remarks that the prospect of another Baldwin Government is dreary for India, for whether there is again to be at the India Office a Peel-Winterton combination or there are to be new men, it is much more probable than not that the policy will be a die-hard policy. The divisions in public life in India being as they are, the Government here, who are frankly reactionary both in the centre and in the provinces, will be able confidently to reckon not merely upon support but upon active encouragement and even incitement from Whitehall. The Hamdam remarks that whatever party may be in power in England when Indian affairs are discussed in Parliament all sentiments of liberty will give place to ideas of Imperialism and more attention will be paid to strengthen the "steel frame" than to the demands and grievances of the Indians. If the Conservative Party gains an ascendancy, it will try its best to strengthen British rule in India. This will naturally re-act in stimulating the national movements in India and giving a fresh impetus to Indians to work harder for liberty. The Haqiqat says that in the event of a Conservative success the Hindus and Musalmans are likely to sink their differences and exert unitedly to achieve their long-cherished aim. The Oudh Akhbar has no faith in any of the political parties of England and remarks that the Communist Party has included Indian emancipation in its programme merely to further its own interests. The Nejat avers that the régime of the Labour Government was in no way beneficial to India so far as repression and autocracy are concerned. The Labour Party is helpless to do anything for India unless it commands a substantial majority in Parliament. The Hindustani describes the electioneering speech of Mr. Baldwin as a threat to the Swarajists and remarks that at a time when India is sorely distressed at its internal communal disturbances, it is tantamount to sprinkling salt on a wound. The rise and fall of any political party in England cannot affect India's fortune. In another article the same paper apprehends that the rise of the Conservative Party into power will usher an era of repression in India. If the Labour Party is thrown out of power England will be confronted with dire calamities and it will become impossible for her to manage her Empire.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Al Bashir is gratified that the treacherous Sharif Husain and his son Amir Ali have left the holy land of Mecca and that Amir Ibn Saud has delivered the people of Hedjaz from their tyranny. It hopes that the British Government will not commit a fresh blunder of meddling in the Hedjaz affairs and thereby antagonise the Muslim world. The Al Bureed is jubilant at the abdication of Sharif Husain and remarks that the statement issued by the nationalists of Hedjaz was inspired by Shah Husain in order to deceive the Musalmans. The Medina takes to task those maulvis of India who are supporting the cause of Sharif Husain. It accuses them of creating a division amongst the Musalmans and thereby strengthening the hands of British Imperialism. The Haqiqat advises the Government of India to grant the request of Maulana Shaukat Ali to take a Khilafat deputation to London in order to ascertain the intentions of Amir Ibn Saud regarding the administration of the holy land. The Zulqarnain is the only Muslim paper which sounds a dissenting note and does not favour the occupation of the Hedjaz by the Sultan of Najd. The Musalmans of India are mostly Sunnis and they cannot tolerate Wahabi rule in the Hedjaz. The Aj congratulates the British Government on its policy of neutrality in the Hedjaz affairs and remarks that this must convince ex-King Husain that no one in the world respects those who are traitors to their religion and community. The Vartman says that Shah Husain has been adequately punished for the trouble he brought upon Islam and the people of Arabia. The Arabs should bear in mind that so long as his son Amir Ali remains on the throne there can be no permanent peace in Arabia. They should consult the leaders of the entire Muslim world and establish a democratic government in the Hedjaz, thereby putting an end to the prevailing unrest in the country.

The Mosul question.

Referring to the memorandum placed before the League of Nations by the Kurdish tribes the Pioneer says that it definitely destroys the main argument on which the Turks have sought to base their claim to the vilayet. Turkish rule is the last thing that the Kurds desire. The Nejat strongly criticises the British policy regarding Iraq and remarks that Great Britain out of greed for the oil fields is foolishly ignoring the advice of Sir Henry Wilson and courting a great danger by picking up a quarrel with the Turks. The Medina hopes that Great Britain and Turkey will soon come to an amicable settlement and remarks that the retention of Mosul can in no way prove useful to Great Britain.

Khilafat deputation.

The Zulqarnain is astounded at the refusal of the Angora Government to grant passports to the Khilafat deputation from India and infers that in Angora itself there is a difference of opinion regarding the abolition of the Khilafat and Mustafa Kemal apprehends that the arrival of the deputation will give rise to fresh complications.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Pioneer says: It is by no means easy to apportion correctly the blame for the deplorable communal disturbances which have recently broken out in almost every part of India, and referring to the comments of the Indian Daily Telegraph with regard to the Amethi affair, the paper says: Provocative and inflammatory language of this kind is calculated to accentuate the mutual distrust which exists between the two communities, and to postpone indefinitely that unity which Indian politicians of all parties profess to desire. The Al Bashir regrets that Mr. Gandhi has lost all influence with the Hindus and that all the trouble which he underwent for their sake has proved to be useless. The Musalmans should see that the advocates of sangathan and mahabirdal are not allowed to succeed. The Medina opines that if the Government resorts to prosecution the feelings of anger and revenge harboured by the two communities will be all the more stimulated and it will become impossible to maintain peace and order in the country. What is needed at this time is to forget the past and to come to a mutual understanding in a spirit of forbearance and toleration. The Mashriq remarks that there can be no Hindu-Muslim unity unless the Hindus stop publishing provocative pamphlets, allow the Musalmans perfect freedom in their religious affairs, respect the sanctity of mosques, abstain from blowing conch at the time of prayer and agree to have a fair proportion of the Musalmans in the services. The Aligarh District Gazette holds that the Unity Conference failed to achieve its object and remarks that the national movements which were once started against the Government have now resulted in creating a rupture between the two communities. The leaders should now take pity on the country and refrain from exciting the passions of the masses. The Hamdard opines that there can be no friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans unless measures are taken to remove their mutual hatred. The Kartavya points out that it is nothing but fanaticism which stands in the way of Hindu-Muslim unity. Inculcation of religious toleration among the masses is the only way of putting an end to communal strifes. The Shiksha Prabhakar holds that the root cause of the communal disturbances is the divide and rule policy of the bureaucracy. It urges that the Muhammadan leaders should take measures to stop the atrocities of their ignorant co-religionists against the Hindus in the matter of the demolition of their temples and the abduction of their women and children, and that if they fail to do so for fear of fanatical mullahs, the scriptures which countenance such practices will have to be bid farewell to in this twentieth century. If the Hindus have to live in the world they will have to abolish the caste system and untouchability and make their Hindu religion a proselytising one as once it was. There should be religious toleration throughout the country and all communities should unite to free the country from the bondage of foreigners. The Anand says that the fact that section 144 has again been applied to the performance of arti in the Aminabad Park temple, Lucknow, while the Muhammadans are freely holding their prayer there, has greatly exercised the mind of the Hindus who are putting their own interpretations on the policy of the local authorities. The Bharat Dharma points out that the bureaucracy in order to serve its own ends has recourse to the crooked policy of divide and rule and set Hindus and Muhammadans by the ear and contends that swaraj is the best remedy for communal strifes.

Hindu organisation.

The Kailas, a new weekly from Moradabad, remarks that it is most unfortunate that the Hindu community whose religion is so great and whose past history is so glorious has demoralised to such an extent that any one can plunder and suppress it. It is therefore its paramount duty to organise its scattered elements not with a view to fight with others but to unite and to be able to protect ourselves in the hour of emergency.

Constitutional advance.

Dwelling upon the failure of dyarchy the Haqiqat exhorts the Indians to sink their differences and continue their political struggle on non-violent and constitutional lines. The present Reforms are likely to be jeopardised if the Conservatives gain an ascendancy, because the destructive policy of the Swarajists has made the Central and Provincial Governments incline towards repression. The Oudh Akhbar says that the Reforms Inquiry Committee has re-started the work of recording evidence simply in the hope of collecting some material in support of dyarchy. The Hamdam says that what India needs at this time is neither political concessions nor any change in the personnel of the Government but a candid declaration to the effect that India is for the Indians only and that the redress of her grievances and the satisfaction of her demands is not dependent on the sweet will and the generosity of the aliens. The Medina suspects that the recent Hindu-Muslim disturbances are in fact a prologue to the efforts of the Hindus to strengthen the hand of British Imperialism and increase their own power and prestige in the country. If the revision of Reforms assumes a practical shape we have no hesitation in saying that it will drive the last nail into the coffin of the political existence of the Musalmans. Commenting on Sir Fazl-ul-Haq's evidence before the Reforms Inquiry Committee the Aj remarks: A perusal of Mr. Haq's evidence leads one to the conclusion that either he has gone mad or that he is burning with the thirst for retaliation. He supports dyarchy and even favours reversion to the pre-Minto-Morley Reforms days. We can now assert that the Bengal Legislative Council acted rightly in rejecting the demand for the grant of salaries to such Ministers. The Vartman writes: Sir Fazl-ul-Haq propounded original, strange, and unique views when he said that dyarchy must remain. Sir Fazl-ul-Haq is one of those Ministers who were removed from office with disgrace by the Bengal Council and it is therefore easy to understand why he has assumed the rôle of a traitor and a reactionary.

Bengal Ordinance.

With the exception of the Pioneer, which says that the decision of the Viceroy to promulgate an Ordinance will not come as a surprise to those who have watched the development of anarchical and revolutionary conspiracy in that province, the papers are united in condemning the enforcement of the new law. The Leader in an article headed "The ominous beginning" says that the power given to executive and police officers to make arrests without warrant and some other provisions of the Ordinance as well as some of the measures notified by the Government of Bengal, cannot be supported by any one who is aware of the liability, if not the proneness of the executive and the police unchecked by public opinion or judicial tribunals, to abuse the unusual and extraordinary powers vested in them. The paper considers it to be its duty to warn the Government against the beginnings of a new policy the limits of which cannot be definitely known at present even to them. In another article the paper fears that the Government of Bengal are not likely to act with unwonted self-restraint. A situation of the utmost gravity has been created, and no one can tell to what extent it may be aggravated, to what greater lengths the estrangement between Government and public opinion may go. It is almost a cry in the wilderness to ask the Government to review the position, to retrace their steps courageously and to act with that moderation which is a quality specially needed in Governments endowed with vast authority. We can but express the hope that they may yet persuade themselves of the wisdom of such a course. The Indian Daily Telegraph considers it very unfortunate that Lord Reading deemed it necessary to adopt a most unwise course in launching a campaign of repression. To accord to the members of the Swaraj Party the same treatment as is accorded to revolutionary conspirators is not statesmanship but puerility. Mr. Ranga Iyer writing in the paper says: I shall neither be sorry nor surprised if I see the bureaucratic engineers hoist by their own petard. Repression only makes the meat it feeds on. As every student of history knows, repression is the cause and therefore cannot be the cure of discontent. By trying to suppress the Swarajists as seditionists, the Government only drive discontent underground. Referring to Pandit Moti Lal Nehru's statement on the subject the paper remarks that the Pandit's statement is a complete exposure of the Government's determination to crush the Swaraj Party by treating its prominent members as full-blooded anarchists. India must be prepared for a reign of bureaucratic terrorism. Nothing would be more welcome to the true terrorists in Bengal who have only been waiting for the bureaucracy to throw off its mask. According to the Advocate Lord Reading has committed the greatest blunder at the instigation of his advisors to follow a repressive policy in Bengal. The paper hopes that with the exception of a few the Council will wholeheartedly oppose him and will never bind itself to be a party to these unwise and injudicious measures. It is certain that the bureaucracy cannot crush any revolutionary movement with the aid of a barbarous and inhuman regulation like the present one; but, on the other hand, it will spread discontent in the country and the result will be that crimes will increase. Lord Reading has awakened us from the deep sleep into which we had fallen and his new move has smoothed our path for the early attainment of swaraj. We doubly bless Lord Reading for this generous act and can assure him that his name will become a household word just like that of Lord Curzon in India. The Aj remarks: The arrest of the Chief Executive Officer of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation, the Secretary of the Bengal Swaraj Party, and the Secretary of the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee among others suggests that the Bengal Government wants to suppress the Swaraj Party also along with the revolutionary party. Government has a full right to suppress the revolutionaries but it should also remove the causes which have given birth to the revolutionary party. Unless this is done no action against the revolutionists will be of any avail. The Viceroy's statement in this connection is destructive of the freedom of every Bengali. We apprehend and our apprehension is supported by past experience that the entire political movement in Bengal will be suppressed under the pretext of putting down the revolutionary movement.

The Akali agitation.

The Arti says that the organisation known as the Sikh Sudhar Sangat is the outcome of Sir Malcolm Hailey's crooked diplomacy and is a velvet glove underneath which the leonine claws of Government injustice are concealed. It is to be hoped that the Akalis will see through the clever moves of the Government and will frustrate them by remaining firm in their policy of non-violence. The Pratap remarks that Sir Malcolm Hailey's policy of propaganda and counter-organisation has succeeded in creating a division among the Sikhs. Through the Sikh Sudhar Sangat Sir Malcolm Hailey and the Nabha authorities will now be able to proclaim to the world that they throw no obstacles in the performance of the religious duties of the Sikhs.

Bengal Executive Council.

The Aj remarks that the appointment of Mr. A. K. Ghaznavi, who is an enemy of Indian progress, as a member of the Bengal Executive Council illustrates how the bureaucracy supports its devotees. It is easy to concieve what service Mr. Ghaznavi will render to the country from this exalted office when he could be found to directly oppose Indian progress and support the existing Civilian autocracy. It is why we do not support Indianisation without swaraj. May we ask the Government what difference is there between this reward and bribery?

The United Provinces Council session.

The Zulqarnain expresses its concern at the rumoured postponement of the Council session and remarks that the Council session should be held on account of the floods and the communal disturbances. It is the duty of the Government to keep the Council popular with the public and avoid creating any suspicion against itself. Writing in a similar strain the Oudh Akhbar advises the Government to revise its decision.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Leader says that the correspondence appearing in the papers shows conclusively that neither the zamindars nor the tenants nor the impartial judges who desire nothing better than peace between the two and the protection of their interests as well as those of the tax-payer, are satisfied with its provisions. We fear the draft Bill will have to be materially amended before being enacted into law if the controversy is to be set at rest for any considerable time. The Oudh Akhbar is opposed to the granting of life interest to the non-occupancy tenants and remarks that the present

Bill is on the whole prejudicial to the interests of the zamindars without conferring any material benefit on the tenants. It will be better if all the tenants are given life interest and occupancy and non-occupancy rights are abolished; in this way the loss and gain of both the zamindars and the tenants will be equalised. The Haqiqat says that the interference in the proprietary rights of the proprietors besides being unjust always gives rise to harmful consequences. Most of the sections of the present Bill are likely to create great difficulties for the zamindars and especially that section under which it has been proposed to give life interest to non-occupancy tenants.

Bolshevism.

The Prem publishes a contributed article in which the writer Bhuvan Bhaskar Misra says: The cry of Bolshevism is like nectar to the poor labourers and cultivators and like poison to the rich and to autocratic Governments which fatten on the blood of the poor. The Bolsheviks have determined to put an end to these tyrants. The Indians too should open their eyes and realise that all have an equal right to the things of the world. They too should come forward and put an end to capitalists and false Governments in the world. If there is to be lasting peace in the world autocratic power will have to be abolished as it only supports the capitalists at the expense of the poor.

Political propaganda.

A correspondent writing to the special Vijaya Dashmi number of the Vartman under the pseudonym "An International Revolutionist" remarks: Conferences and Congress meetings can do nothing. Nor can swaraj be attained through bombs and conspiracies. What must be done is to discover a small island in a remote corner of the world. This island may be called "Freeland." Indians should go from India and establish a colony there. Big factories should be opened there and arms should also be manufactured for purpose of self-protection. The Colony should have lakhs of soldiers, thousands of aeroplanes, cannon and guns. We should raise funds in India for this purpose. When we shall have a freeland of our own we shall be feared and respected by the outside world. The alien Government which is at present ruling over our country in a despotic manner will then fear us and amend its irresponsible system of government. When the soldiers of the "Freeland" will be seen parading, the sons of dependent India will derive inspiration and march forward towards freedom. The self-assertion of a far off "Freeland" will destroy the germs of slavery and the alien Government will leave India with its inhuman and uncivilised administration.

British elections.

THE success of the Conservatives in the general election is viewed with undisguised pessimism. The Leader regrets the premature demise of the Labour Party's Government and says that they have made what must be regarded as the capital mistake of almost going out of their way to fight and alienate the Liberal party. They have very nearly succeeded in this high emprise. But in the process they have done themselves no good. Neither have they done any good to their own country nor to the Empire as a whole. With a juster attitude towards the Liberal party they need not have handed over the seals of office to the Tories, and handed them over, in all probability, for at least four years. In their hatred of the Liberals they seem to bear a family resemblance to our own Swaraj party. With no greater wisdom or magnanimity they too have betrayed a fondness for the unedifying and profitless operation of cutting their noses in order to spite their faces. It is all so sad. In a leading article headed "India and the general election" the same paper says that the result of the general election is much more disastrous than the most pessimistic would have been prepared for. We cannot recall any time during the last quarter of a century when the prospect was darker for our hapless country than it is today. Deploring the fall of the Labour Government, the Hamdam still sees a ray of hope in the dark future of India and remarks that the awakening of a country does not come into being under a generous and benign Government but under "strong Government" which is the ideal of Mr. Baldwin. What wonder then if the "strong Government" may force the diverse political parties of India to reunite against the common enemy and all the communal and personal interests may be made subservient to one single task of securing the deliverance of India. In another article the same paper criticises the "Protectionist policy" of Mr. Baldwin as injurious to India and remarks that the "strong Government" insisted upon by him is now being enforced by Lord Reading in Bengal in the shape of the new Ordinance. The ascendancy of the Conservative party does not augur well for the world. The Haqiqat is grieved at the defeat of the Labour party specially at a time when the political atmosphere in India was gloomy on account of the communal disturbances. The advent of the Conservative Government will strengthen the "steel frame" of the Civil Service and dash to the ground all hopes of further Reforms. The Vartman remarks that the undoubted victory of the Conservative party in the elections shows that the British public is still sunk in Conservatism and is quite ignorant of the real principles of democracy and that it is a mere plaything for the capitalists to delude the public by the meanest conspiracies. The Conservative party has already announced its demoniacal policy with regard to India. Perfect unanimity will now prevail between Simla and Whitehall. Repression will now reign supreme in India. It has to be seen how far the nationalism and manhood of India comes out unscathed through this ordeal. The Aj says that the overwhelming majority by which the Conservatives have been returned to the Parliament demonstrates that for the next five years the Conservative Party will be able to rule over Britain, India and other dependent countries within the British Empire in a despotic manner despite the consistent opposition of the other parties. Autocracy will reach its limit in India. The Arti opines that under the Conservatives India will again come in for a course of repression as has already been made evident by Mr. Baldwin in a speech before the elections. The Government of India may now expect full support from the Home Government in its present repressive and reactionary policy. The Anand remarks that the return of the Conservatives to power will highly gratify those people who want to crush Indian aspirations by means of repression, because Mr. Baldwin has already declared the need for firm and strong government in India. Repression has already been started in Bengal to welcome the return of Conservatives to power and it appears that the policy of repression will become the order of the day for some time.

Khilafat deputation.

The Oudh Akhbar resents the Government's refusal to grant passports to the Muslim deputation to Hedjaz and Nejd and remarks that besides numerous other blessings conferred by the Reforms it is also one of the latter's special features to deprive the people of their religious freedom.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that the cleavage between the two communities seems to be far more deep and far-reaching than appears from the surface manifestation of the riots. The Nizam-i-Alam blames the Hindus for provoking the Musalmans and goading them into fight. The Hindus utilise the Congress and other national organisations for exciting the Hindus against the Musalmans and exhort them to boycott the latter. Sheikh Mushir Husain Qidwai in a signed article in the Oudh Akhbar remarks: I care more for swaraj than for Hindu-Muslim relations. If after obtaining swaraj one community annihilates the other, there is no harm in it, as there is greater pleasure in dying after becoming free. The Musalmans regard the shuddhi movement as a challenge to Islam and as a true believer in my religion I am prepared to accept the challenge. There is nothing to be surprised at if the Musalmans make everything subservient to the task of saving the Musalmans from becoming renegades, particularly when the movement is pregnant with dangers. The Hind-i-Jadid says that the history books taught in the schools depict the so-called tyrannies of the Muslim rulers over the Hindus and thus help in creating communal ill-will and hatred. Such books should be removed from the curriculum so that the leaders may be able to dissuade the people from suspecting the Government of fomenting communal bitterness. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani suspects Native States of fanning the fire of communal disturbances for counteracting the swaraj movement in British India lest the movement should spread in their own territories. The Nejat accuses the Government officials of taking no precautionary measures to prevent the disturbances and remarks that on the contrary they make capital out of them to prove the unfitness of Indians for swaraj. The Hamdam regrets that the Viceroy by disallowing Mr. Gandhi to proceed to Kohat has given cause to the Indian public to suspect that the Government does not sincerely wish to restore peace and order in the country and hopes that the Viceroy will revise his decision. The Haqiqat resents the action of the Viceroy in preventing Mr. Gandhi from going to Kohat and hopes that the unjust order of the Viceroy will make the Hindus and the Musalmans ponder over the situation and thus help in cementing happy relations between the two communities. The Anand complains that since the communal disturbances in Lucknow obstacles are being put in the observance of their religious obligations by Hindus. Muhammadans are adopting an aggressive attitude everywhere against the established practice of blowing conches. It urges the authorities to take proper measures in the matter to prevent further wounding of the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus. One Harish Chandra Tripathi writing in the Gayan Shakti rebukes the Hindus for their cowardice and inaction in putting up with the atrocities of Muhammadans, even against their temples and women, and exhorts them to sacrifice their lives or drown themselves through shame before they suffer such insults. Indeed, their position is most deplorable when they are not free even to play music in their temples. If they have any self-respect they should stand for their rights even at the cost of their lives. Hindu-Muslim unity is impossible unless the Muhammadans are fully impressed that the Hindus are as strong as themselves and can retaliate easily against their attacks.

The Bengal Ordinance.

The Pioneer resents the chorus of disapproval in the Indian press of the Government action in Bengal and says that no windy rhetoric can alter the fact that the British people and the British Parliament are actuated by good-will towards this country. The greatest enemies of India's progress are to be found in India itself. At another place the paper says that the attitude of the Indian leaders towards vital issues will certainly not impress the British public favourably towards the claim so insistently put forward for a further constitutional advance. Referring to Mrs. Besant's defence of the new policy in Bengal, the Leader regrets that it has brought no conviction to its mind. "The more we reflect upon the subject, the stronger do we feel that while anarchism must be put down, the connection between lawless conspiracies and at least some of the arrests made under Regulation III and the Ordinance, has neither been proved nor is it apparent. The success that repression achieves can at best be temporary and shadowy. With all respect to Mrs. Besant and notwithstanding all the customary twaddle which the Tory press in England and the English-edited press in India have been indulging in, we must say once again that we are extremely uneasy about the new policy and still more so as now we see so little chance of the Government taking the right direction." In a leading article headed "Bankruptcy of Statesmanship" the Advocate says that the police and the magistrates have been given absolute powers to harass, prosecute and imprison any and everybody whom they like on mere suspicion. The liberty of peaceful citizens is in jeopardy and everyone is at the mercy of a policeman. In another article the same paper says that the Government committed the greatest blunder by inaugurating an era of repression. Lord Reading has signed and confirmed the death-warrant of the bureaucracy. The Weekly Observer says that the special powers conferred upon the Bengal Government are undoubtedly wide, but that they are justifiable, no fair-minded man who has read the statements of the Viceroy and the Governor of Bengal can possibly question. It does not agree with Indian press that the Ordinance is a blow aimed at the Swaraj party. It is certainly a weapon designed against the so-called "Red Bengal" party. The Pratap writes: Lords Reading and Lytton have dropped a poisonous bomb known as the "Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance no. 1 of 1924" on the heart of India. This action of these arbiters of our destiny has created a sensation in the whole of India. On account of the poisonous smoke of this bomb the freedom of Bengal is being suffocated, its public life is nearing death and the spirit of opposition has taken hold of the people. Is it administration or indiscrimination? Government says that such a step was necessary for the preservation of peace. But if peace is preserved by unlawful means we shall never bow to them. What is that peace which is sought to be preserved through this contemptible, despicable, unjust and reprehensible Ordinance? Where does this anxiety to preserve peace vanish when ignorant people of the country trample upon law and order as they did during communal disturbances. If today the authorities are seeing the spectre of "Red Bengal" it is the outcome of the suppression of the non-cooperation movement and who can say if "Red India" will not be the outcome of the suppression of "Red Bengal" which is being carried out so foolishly. The repression in Bengal has made it quite clear that the present system of administration must be done away with. Let us achieve this end by means of firm but peaceful satyagraha. The Aj remarks that by the promulgation of an illegal Ordinance in Bengal Lord Reading has deprived the Bengal of even the inalienable rights of humanity. It is a misuse of words to call that country free and happy the ruler of which possesses such terrible powers. The suppression of anarchy in Bengal is only an excuse to crush the Swaraj party. It behoves us, therefore, to stand for our God-given rights, refuse to cooperate with the bureaucracy and fully adhering to the doctrine of non-violence compel the bureaucracy to rule by the sword. In another article the same paper says: The bureaucracy has thrown a challenge and living, awakened, self-respecting and non-violent India accepts it. The trouble which has befallen Bengal today may tomorrow overtake any other province. The Anand thinks that the Ordinance will evoke vigorous opposition and it will not be surprising if unrest is all the more accentuated. The Arti says that the bureaucracy by promulgating the new Ordinance has added one more sin to its misdeeds. The statement of the Viceroy in this connection does not command public confidence. Repression will only deepen and strengthen the unrest. Government only displays bankruptcy of the sense of justice in not charging the so-called revolutionaries before open courts under the ordinary law. Its resort to special measures shows that its case is weak. The new Ordinance is a slur on the administration of the bureaucracy itself, seeing that even after more than a century a regulation like that of 1818 is requisitioned into service in this twentieth century. Such measures will indirectly help forward the national movement and will rebound at the heads of their own authors. The Vartman remarks: All this is symbolical of the mental state of the British public which, although it has almost reached the republican horizon is yet retracing its steps for fear of its sins. If that insensate and inebriated nation has driven us by force to revolt it means the downfall of its own officials and authorities, who by resorting to military powers on such occasions only add to their disgrace. Lord Reading has tried to disturb by smoke the hornets' nest, but he has left no other path open for this powerless and helpless nation except that of revolt. At the report of the first cannon of this new warfare we wish to point out that this marks the beginning of Lord Reading's end and with him the West is completely exposed. The Medina strongly protests against the Government's action in Bengal and remarks that the Ordinance is a prologue to that movement which resulted in wiping out despotism from Russia and it hopes the Swarajists and the revolutionists will willingly accept the challenge. The Viceroy by his short-sighted policy has strengthened the foundation of the revolutionary party in India. The Hamdam refuses to admit that the arrested persons had anything to do with the anarchical conspiracies and doubts that the action taken by the Government will serve its purpose. The step taken will only aggravate the unrest prevailing in the country and prove injurious to the Government itself. The Oudh Akhbar says that the policy of repression betrays the utter hollowness of the Reforms and Englishmen have now no right to say that they are moulding India on democratic lines. The Mukhbir-i-Alam says that the Swarajists' activities are responsible for the enforcement of the new Ordinance in Bengal. It is to be regretted that all hopes of a round table conference have been dashed to the ground. Let all the political parties sink their differences and rise up against the new calamity. The Nejat condemns the policy of the Viceroy as tyrannical and remarks that had he himself been a Bengali his self-respect would never have tolerated the enforcement of such a law against his countrymen. The new Ordinance is a severe blot on a civilised nation and the Government which enforces it earns the perpetual hatred of the people. The Hindustani does not believe that the anarchical movement exists in India to the extent alleged by the Government and apprehends that the enforcement of the new Ordinance will result in the perpetration of excesses by the police and in alienating public sympathy from the Government. The Haqiqat is the only vernacular paper which justifies the enforcement of the new Ordinance and remarks that the situation in Bengal was not menacing to the Government officials only but also to those national workers who do not approve of revolutionary methods. Only repression cannot be successful in eradicating the evil unless British officials give proof of their large-heartedness and try to settle the dispute by compromise.

Congress politics.

The Indian Daily Telegraph hopes that the agreement between the two wings of Nationalists under the stress of repression will mark the beginning of disciplined agitation against the new order that threatens to envelop this unfortunate country. The agreement means the end of the No-change party. Once more Gandhi has displayed that unerring vision for truth and indomitable courage to act without any consideration for personal feelings and opinion. The country demanded, at this crisis, such an answer as the joint statement of the leaders has placed before the Government. We are face to face with new trial of strength between the forces of despotism and democracy. Today the Government have still the qualified support of some extreme Liberals. Even this will be lost by a repetition of the measures taken against Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose upon a few more prominent men.

Communal feeling in Lucknow.

Referring to the arti-namaz question in Aminabad Park, Lucknow, the Indian Daily Telegraph says that Hindus feel most strongly that all existing safeguards ought to be used to secure religious freedom for them before having recourse to the extreme measures such as satyagraha against the orders of the District Magistrate. It attacks the members of the municipal board of lack of courage in dealing with the question, and says that on a question which exercised the imagination of a large majority of those who sent them to transact municipal business Hindu municipal commissioners had assumed an attitude unworthy of intelligent beings. By their action, the municipality has driven the Hindu citizens to rise in arms against their elected representatives. The situation created is most unnatural. There is not a single Hindu in Lucknow who does not feel personally humiliated over this stoppage of arti. The Hamdam describes the resolution of Dr. Laxmi Sahai in the municipal board as an attack on the right of the Musalmans to offer their prayers in a public place and remarks that the Musalmans are not prepared to forgo their right and will cheerfully undergo any sacrifice to safeguard it. The time for the maghrib prayer is very short and the injunctions which are binding on the Musalmans in this respect are not so binding on the Hindus in respect of arti. The Arti and the Anand are emphatic in their condemnation of the Hindu members of the Lucknow municipal board for their failure to support the motion regarding the enforcement of the municipal bye-law no. 11 against the holding of prayer in the Aminabad Park. They have turned traitors to their own community. Their action shows that they are not fit to bear the burden of responsibility on their shoulders. They have forfeited the confidence of their electors and if they have any self-respect they should immediately resign their seats.

Mr. Gandhi's visit to Kohat.

The Vartman says that the refusal of permission by Government to Mr. Gandhi to visit Kohat is indicative of the indifference of Lord Reading towards Hindu-Muslim unity. The situation at Kohat demanded that Mahatma Gandhi should visit the place immediately. If the Government officials were fit to solve all the problems of the country or even if they had any desire to do so the situation in the country would not have been so hopeless. On the other hand the subordinate officials of Lord Reading have been found to be the cause of the prevailing unrest. In these circumstances the refusal of permission to Mahatma Gandhi by the Viceroy on the ground that it was not a propitious time for the visit has no value beyond being a clever political stratagem.

The Reforms.

The Leader sarcastically remarks that the members of the Reforms Inquiry Committee are to be congratulated that their dilatory tactics have borne fruit. The Labour Government will be out in the next few days and the Tories, the favourites and patron-saints of Simla, will be installed not only in office but in power. Whatever the Indian members of the committee may have to say will, therefore, be of the nature of a cry in the wilderness. India's friends in England having been decisively defeated in the elections there, the age-old opponents of Reform being about to be installed in power, the bureaucracy in India will have the time of their life and reaction will, and repression may, be the order of the day in this luckless land.

The U. P. Political Conference.

The Leader disapproves the swaraj resolution passed at the Gorakhpur Conference and says: Between a party which believes in constitutional efforts as the only practical political method in the totality of the circumstances of India and one which seeks for the country a destiny outside the Empire and a republican form of government there can be no joint or common action and we grieve to say that after this resolution, it is idle indeed to talk any more of unity between them. We are compelled to conclude that the Gorakhpur Conference has by its resolution done a grave disservice to the best interests of the country. The Indian Daily Telegraph is surprised that the Conference passed what may be described as the independence resolution. That was one of the ways and a very easy way to let off steam. A moment's serious pause will have convinced even the most extreme political thinker that the country is less united and determined today than at the Ahmedabad Congress. Sincere politicians may actually feel discouraged by the passing of such resolutions that remain a dead letter. On the other hand they serve to give a handle to our enemies that Indian politics means idle gibberish.

Floods in the United Provinces.

The press is full of sympathetic references to the flood-stricken areas and suggests prompt action to alleviate the suffering now prevailing. The Pioneer says that the measures adopted by the provincial Government will help the people materially, but much remains to be done by the public at large in order to give the unhappy villagers a new start in life. The Desh Bhagat bewails the plight of the sufferers in the recent floods and exhorts the public to help them with men and money. It requests the Government to remit the revenue and taxes payable by the sufferers and advance loans to them for purchasing cattle. The Chattri praises the district authorities for their promptness and painstaking efforts in rendering timely help to the sufferers and appeals to the local Government to remit the revenue and issue orders to the District Magistrates of the affected areas to start relief funds. The Tohfa-i-Hind exhorts the Congress and the Khilafat Committees to raise relief funds for the sufferers in the flood in cooperation with those whom they hitherto regarded as traitors and slaves. It advises the Government to advance loans to the sufferers free of interest and complains that the Government employees are not subscribing towards the relief fund.

Improvement Trust.

Referring to the Town Improvement Trusts the Aj writes: We are strongly opposed to these Trusts and stand for their abolition. Their high cost and the comparatively small outturn of their work establish their utter uselessness. The Government should give the money which it wants to spend on any city to the municipality concerned, which can do this work more easily and economically.

Political propaganda.

Mr. Satya Bhakta publishes in the Vartman a letter from Lala Hardayal from Sweeden in which he says: If an Indian Socialist Party has been established a copy of its rules may be sent to him. If any Socialist paper has been started he shall only be too glad to contribute articles to it. The Arti says that Indian Musalmans have-always taken part in Indian politics from a communal standpoint which shows that they are still far removed from the spirit of nationalism and patriotism. The communal feeling being so strong among them it is doubtful whether they will take their due share in the struggle for swaraj in case a satisfactory settlement is reached between the Turks and the English and regarding the Jazirat ul-Arab. On the contrary, it is most likely that they may oppose the swaraj movement and support the bureaucracy in order to gain their communal ends. In these circumstances the Hindus will have to decide whether they are to carry on the national struggle single-handed.

The new Ministry.

THE Leader considers the new Cabinet to be an able body of men, abler than the personnel of the last Baldwin Government, although the head of the Government is very far from being its ablest member. Referring to the Ministerial appointments the paper says: We are primarily concerned with the India Office and India will feel angry at the Premier's sending back to the office of Parliamentary Under-Secretary, of the arrogant politician who has shown himself equally lacking in manners, judgment and sympathy. The appointment of Lord Birkenhead, as the new Secretary of State for India, is a recognition by Mr. Baldwin of the importance of the Indian problem. The paper describes him as unstable and changing, more energetic than discreet, with a very good opinion of himself, but he is very able and puts his whole heart into any task that he essays. . . . His high reputation for ability will not desert him in his new office. But whether he will acquire a name and a fame as worthy to be ranked among great and friendly Secretaries of State such as Viscount Halifax and Sir Stafford Northcote, and Viscount Morley and Mr. Edwin Montagu, is a more doubtful proposition which only the events can answer. The Pioneer remarks that whatever criticism may be directed in this country against the appointment of the new Secretary of State for India, it cannot be denied that the affairs of the India Office will now be in the hands of one of the most brilliant of the British public men of the present generation. Lord Birkenhead knows more of Indian affairs now, and the policy he will carry out will be the policy laid down by Mr. Baldwin and his party before they entered office. Referring to the Conservative declaration of policy in regard to India the same paper emphasises that it does not differ materially from that of the other two parties. The progressive grant of constitutional liberties to the Indian peoples in accordance with the principles laid down in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report is recognised as the party's deliberate policy. But there has been abundant evidence of late that none of the three great parties in Great Britain is disposed to concede a further instalment of reform in advance of the loyalty and capacity of those whom it is intended to benefit. And the Conservative party will certainly not be intimidated into premature concessions by the mischievous tactics of wreckers and of revolutionaries, which have merely had the effect of alienating practically every section of British public opinion. At another place the paper refers to Mr. Baldwin's speech at the Guildhall in London and says that it constitutes a warning and an invitation; a grave warning to the organisers of criminal conspiracies and their sympathisers, and a frank invitation to the best elements of the population of this great country. It does not expect that the Premier's manly and straightforward address will make any appeal to Indian extremists. The paper hopes that the apprehension and disgust felt by hosts of Indians with the disturbers of the country will find practical manifestation, and the Prime Minister will have done good service to India if his sincere and straightforward invitation is promptly welcomed by those to whom it was primarily addressed. The Weekly Observer says: The Indian extremists are greatly perturbed by the Conservative victory at the polls. But that need cause no alarm to those who believe in evolutionary progress, for the Conservative victory certainly ensures that no leaps in the dark will now be taken with regard to the governance of this vast peninsula. . . . With Lord Birkenhead at the India Office, this country will receive the services of a statesman of more than ordinarily high repute and statesmanship. Whatever the Indian papers might say to the contrary, the new Government has certainly made an excellent choice in its nomination of the Earl of Birkenhead as Secretary of State for India. The Hamdam says that the one redeeming feature of the Conservative party is its sincerity and honesty. It deceives nobody and always does what it says. It never gives out false hopes to the subject nations, nor does it make promises which it cannot fulfil. That it will try to establish in India a "strong Government" of which the Bengal Ordinance is the forerunner is certain. The Indian nationalists should correctly understand their own position and fully realise that they have to face a strong Government. The Medina interprets the success of the Conservative party as the beginning of the era of British Imperialism. The Arya Varta apprehends that the Conservative Government will usher an era of repression in India and remarks that the policy of repression will make the Indians renew their efforts for emancipation as India to gain the freedom does not require an Akbar but an Aurangzeb. The Shiksha Prabhakar points out that whatever party may come into power in England as the result of the last Parliamentary elections, India has no confidence in any of them and has taken the task of moulding its destiny into its own hands. It is now immaterial to her what policies the various British parties enunciate regarding her. The Anand interprets Sir Joynson Hick's recent speech regarding India as a clear indication to Indians to expect nothing from the Parliament under the Conservative régime and on the contrary to be prepared for the suppression of their political agitation. It remarks that if the Hindus and Muhammadans were united today the repression of the Conservatives could possibly be met successfully, but it is to be regretted that the two communities are at present busy in breaking each other's head and the general public has in a way become indifferent to politics. In these circumstances Government will feel little difficulty in suppressing the political agitation.

Hedjaz affairs.

Referring to the fall of the Sharif of Mecca the Satyagraha says that it will cause regret to no sincere well-wisher of Islam. The almost universal support, which the conqueror has gained from all quarters, is a clear indication that things have changed for the better. The Hamdam remarks that the Sultan of Nejd by inviting the Muslim Princes of India and the Ulema of Persia to discuss and settle the future of the administration of the Holy Places has taken a step towards the realisation of that most important ideal of the Muslim world which was endangered on account of the pro-English policy of Sharif Hussain. The Muslim world should now take full advantage of the opportunity and try to arrive at a satisfactory decision regarding the future of the Holy Places.

Khilafat deputation.

The Al Bashir remarks that the Government has refused to grant passports to the Khilafat deputation to Nejd, because the Musalmans are worse than slaves. The Musalmans are fast sinking into degradation and if they remain in this state for some time longer the time is not far when they will be counted as belonging to one of the most degenerate communities.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Swadesh publishes a contributed article in which the writer Banarsi Das Chaturvedi remarks that the question no longer remains whether India's place is within or without the British Empire. The main question now is whether free India will be an ally or enemy of Britain. The inebriated statesmen of Britain are not only digging the grave of their Empire by their differential treatment of Indian Colonists, but are also alienating free India.

The Bengal Ordinance.

The Leader says: Indian public men have had sufficient experience of the manner in which exceptional powers vested in the executive have been used and they are bound to feel the gravest apprehension that the Ordinance inaugurates a new era of repression, coming as it does after a furious agitation for drastic measure in the Die-hard organs of the British press. The Advocate says: Bravo Bengal! who has accepted the challenge of Lord Reading and Lord Lytton and has presented a united front to face the situation boldly and to show the bureaucracy that they are prepared to face any consequence whatsoever in order to win the liberty and freedom of their country. The bureaucracy was under the false impression that they will cow down the spirit of the Bengalis who have come on the forefront of the political life of the country under the leadership of Mr. C. R. Das by means of repressive laws. It is our bounden duty that we should unite together, leave aside our petty differences for the moment and prepare ourselves for passive resistance and thereby we are sure to be successful in our efforts. In another article the same paper says that the liberty and freedom of an individual in Bengal entirely depends upon the whims and caprice of the police officials. The Satyagraha in an article, headed "Honour vs. Honesty," refers to arrests in Bengal and says: We shall have to win swaraj by our own efforts. The repression will open the eyes of the Moderates who pinned their faith to the Labour ministry. The Oudh Akhbar says that the Government will indulge more and more every day in its policy of repression and will try its best to force the Indians to make the Reforms a success. The Liberals will acquiesce in every injustice and repression which the Government may commit and will advise others to display similar weakness. It is only the Swarajists who boldly face repression. The efforts to suppress this party is sure to aggravate the prevailing unrest. The Hamdam says that the new Ordinance in Bengal has resulted in bringing the people of different shades of opinion on one platform. Lord Reading and Lord Lytton will now know that India has passed that stage in which the bureaucracy could over-awe the people by enforcing Rowlatt Act and Bengal Ordinances and send to jails the influential leaders by bringing baseless charges of anarchical conspiracies against them. The Al Bashir remarks that the Government has taken advantage of the communal tension and has enforced the new Ordinance in the hope that the Musalmans of Bengal being displeased with the Swarajists on account of the resignation of their Ministers will side with the Government as they did during the Bengal partition agitation. But being Indians we should forget the excesses which the Hindus have committed against the Musalmans and should seriously think that a Government which can resort to repression against the Hindus can some day do so against the Musalmans as well. It is, therefore, necessary that the Musalmans should with one accord condemn the action of the Government, forgetting all communal and political differences. The Haqiqat advises the Government to satisfy the public by issuing a detailed statement regarding the documents recovered by the police in the various searches made in Bengal and remarks that the action of Lord Reading will prove a boon for the country if it results in uniting all the parties against the Government. The latter ought to have tried to remove the real causes that gave rise to an anarchical movement which it now wants to suppress by enforcing new Ordinances. The Arya Varta welcomes the repression in Bengal and trusts that it will prove a blessing in disguise for India. It advises the Hindus and the Musalmans to divert their attention from communal strifes and give an effective reply to the Government. The Al Khalil remarks that Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is in reality responsible for the prevailing communal tension which has emboldened the Government to launch repression in Bengal. The Hind-i-Jadid exhorts both the communities to show a united front to the Government and advises the latter to suspend the enforcement of the new Ordinance until it is passed by the Legislative Assembly and the Bengal Council. The Aftab refutes the allegation that the new Ordinance has been enforced to suppress the Swarajists. It believes in the existence of anarchical conspiracies in Bengal and advises the Government to eradicate them for the benefit of the public, ignoring all unjust clamours and criticisms. The Mashriq advises the Musalmans not to join the Hindus in protesting against the new Ordinance in Bengal as it is foolish to side with a community which does not show the least toleration for their religion. The Shakti says that the anarchists are not so strong that arbitrary powers should be given to the police throughout Bengal, that the whole province should be subjected to a reign of terror and that even the Congress and Swarajist leaders who are pledged to non-violence should be arrested. Indeed, the Government's policy appears to be intended to weaken the swaraj movement. But the Indians too are becoming strong through repeated repression. The Bengalis and for the matter of that Indians will not be frightened by this Ordinance and will only redouble their efforts for the attainment of swaraj. Now that the Conservatives have come into power the Indians should be prepared for further repression. They can achieve their end only through non-violent non-cooperation and satyagraha. The Arti criticising an article in the Pioneer regarding the Bengal Ordinance points out that it is true that the greatest enemies of India's progress are to be found in India itself. They are not Indians, but the Anglo-Indian journalists. The Pioneer need not have uttered the warning that the British public will pay no heed to the protests of Indians against repression, as they have now become well aware that their country's regeneration will come through their own efforts and not through mendicancy. It is surprising that despite its alienation of every Indian political party the Government has appealed for public support of its policy of repression. The Government should be prepared for a very formidable opposition on all sides. The Aj writes: No other action, speech or writing can cause so much contempt and hatred throughout the whole country against the Government "established by law" as the illegal Ordinance promulgated in Bengal by Lord Reading has done, and if all were equal in the eyes of law in practice Lord Reading, Lord Lytton and other officials in Bengal would have surely been punished under section 124 (A) of the Indian Penal Code. The same paper in another article remarks that the Conservative Government will use more enthusiastically the terrible weapon placed in the hands of the Government of India by the Socialistic Government of Britain on the eve of its exit and the Indians should just now prepare themselves for further trials. If the Congress does not give the right lead to the nation at the present crisis it will cease to be called a national organisation. The Vartman says that the promulgation of the new Ordinance in Bengal has brought us face to face with the question of protecting our manhood and nationalism. At such a critical juncture we cannot confront the demoniacal army of Ravan-shahi without the unification of all the leaders and workers. It is time that the Liberals summoned courage and joined the Belgaum session of the Congress with a view to present a united front to the bureaucracy. The Abhyudaya opines that the black Ordinance of Bengal will in fact prove a bombshell to the country. But there is another side of the picture also. If there is any political wisdom left in the country, then in the name of this black Ordinance we can convert the agitation which it has evoked into a living volcano. In the name of the black Ordinance we can eliminate the differences which have taken hold of the country and remove the prevailing communal tension. It is our paramount duty to unite all the political parties, carry on a vigorous agitation and allow no rest to the authorities until and unless the Ordinance is withdrawn. The Bhartiya Lokmat considers the Ordinance as more terrible than the Rowlatt Act and as indicative of the mentality of the officials. It says that it can never succeed in suppressing anarchy, which can only be eliminated by the removal of the causes of dissatisfaction. Repression being a symbol of barbarity a Government based on it cannot claim to be called civilised, at least in this twentieth century.

Referring to the Nationalist manifesto the Leader asks: Could such experienced men as Messrs. Gandhi, Das and Nehru have seriously thought that their invitation to the members of these organisations to get back into the Congress and to cooperate with them, could or would be taken seriously or would bear fruit if they first settled their policy and programme and virtually asked them to toe the line as it were? Doubtless their organs in the press will cast stones at these other parties for not responding to the call made upon them, but this is by now a familiar experience and is not likely to make a deep impression upon the objects of the criticism and misrepresentation. No one who reflects on the whole import of the exemptions expressed and implied, can fail to be struck by the readiness shown by Mr. Gandhi to stoop to conquer and by the substantial victory won by the party of Messrs. Das and Nehru. That they would win has been known for several months. And being outside both of the 'sections' and unconvinced as we are of the soundness of either's policy, we can look upon the result with perfect composure. We have strong hope that friendly and unprejudiced consultation between representative spokesmen of the two sides will very probably result in an agreement which will render possible a re-united and therefore strengthened national movement. We have more than once stated our conviction that such unity is at this moment so very desirable and important as to be almost essential. All progressive parties in India have to fight the forces of reaction which during a whole generation were never stronger than they are today. All have to put out every ounce of their energy to win their way to self-government. These being the prime factors of the situation, wisdom and patriotism equally demand that superfluous cargo should be thrown overboard; that matters of contention, which really are of very subordinate importance, should be given up—let it be without prejudice, if any one will have it so. The Pioneer says: It will be interesting to see whether the dropping of the specific programme of non-cooperation will induce the lost sheep who have strayed to return to the Congress fold. In any case the hostility of so many Indian politicians to a measure which experience has shown is absolutely essential, if the Bengal Government are to be placed in a position to deal effectively with a dangerous and widespread conspiracy, cannot fail to create a profound impression upon British public opinion, which has shown unmistakably that it is entirely out of sympathy with "revolutionary patriots" of every description. The Oudh Akhbar is gratified that Mr. Gandhi and the Swarajists have now agreed to exclude non-cooperation from the Congress programme and remarks that in the light of repression in Bengal it was urgently necessary that all political parties should now be united to combat against this policy of the Government. The compromise effected has now minimised the differences and rendered the task of facing the repressive policy of the Government easier. The Haqiqat welcomes the reconciliation arrived at between the no-changers and the Swarajists and remarks that it is only the repressive policy of the Government which forced Mr. Gandhi to strike out non-cooperation from the programme of the Congress. Commenting on the compromise arrived at between Mr. Gandhi and the Swaraj party, the Aj remarks: All India will support with one voice the compromise in view of the grave situation caused by the enforcement of repression in Bengal. There can be no difference of opinion with regard to the compromise as it has been made to remove those very differences. The greatest achievement of this compromise is that it has opened the door of the Congress to all the political parties in the country and there is now no reason why all the parties will not be represented at the Belgaum session of the Congress. The Abhyudaya says that the compromise only means the elimination of khaddar and the charkha. Although the conditions of the compromise may be credited with practicality, yet they will result in establishing the supremacy of the Swaraj party over the Congress and rendering all other political parties within the Congress insignificant. While we cannot approve of the condition of the compromise we cannot help congratulating Mr. C. R. Das and Pandit Moti Lal Nehru on their success. Commenting on the joint manifesto issued by Mr. Gandhi and the Swarajist leaders the Vartman remarks that the manifesto embodies the compromise arrived at between the Swarajists and the no-changers, which marks the restoration of unity in the Congress ranks. The bureaucracy is bound to realise the importance of this joint manifesto. The unity in the ranks of the Congress is a fitting answer to the challenge thrown out by Lord Reading. Babu Sampurnanand, writing in the Swadesh, deprecates the re-entry of Mrs. Annie Besant into the Congress as calculated to drag back that body from the policy of self-reliance to that of mendicancy and constitutional methods and the ideal of self-government within the British Empire once again. Her re-entry will tend to accentuate differences of opinion in case her Bill of the Constitution of India is rejected by the Parliament. The Liberals will then again insist on the pursuit of constitutional methods which have no meaning in a subject country. The Liberals close their eyes to the history of the development of the British Parliament, which followed even unconstitutional methods in widening its liberties. Are they prepared to follow such methods? The British Government only respects that particular kind of 'constitutional' agitation which Canada, South Africa, Egypt and Ireland followed in the attainment of their liberties. Are the Liberals prepared to follow their example? If these questions are not considered beforehand the Congress will again become divided into cooperators and non-cooperators with added bitterness. In case the Indians are compelled by circumstances at some future date to sever their connection with the British Empire, Mrs. Annie Besant will surely range herself on the side of the supporters of the British Government. Mrs. Annie Besant may well re-enter the Congress, but it is difficult to say how long she will remain within it or will allow the non-cooperators to remain within it.

The British Empire Exhibition.

The Aj hopes that Indian money will not be further squandered on the British Empire Exhibition which has been extended for another year. The Exhibition will in no way benefit India. On the other hand the foreigners will get another opportunity of exploiting the raw materials of the country.

The U. P. Political Conference.

The Hamdam is gratified that the Provincial Conference has displayed great moral courage in unanimously passing the resolution of complete independence and remarks that the ideal for which Maulana Hasrat Mohani underwent so many hardships in jail is now becoming popular throughout the country. In another article the same paper congratulates the Conference for passing the useful resolution of advising the Hindus to cast away untouchability. It is a matter for gratification that the President has held shuddhi and sangathan movements to be the real causes of the prevailing Hindu-Muslim bitterness and has laid stress on the stoppage of these movements. The Anand says that no influential Muhammadan representative joined the U. P. Political Conference despite the fact that all its delegates were nationalist Hindus and decried Hindu sangathan. This shows that there are only a handful of Muhammadans who are prepared to support Indian nationalism. It is to be hoped that the eyes of the Hindu nationalists must have been opened by such an attitude of the Muhammadans and that they too will realise the need for strengthening Hindu organisation.

Communal feeling in Lucknow.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: We do not think much will come out of the municipal vote to enforce the bye-law though it would be a potent Hindu gesture of their discontent at the existing conditions. Even if the Hindu commissioners should get a majority, the Government would not permit the municipal resolution to take effect in the face of an angry Muslim populace that would have its own reply to it. In an article headed "Mob rule in Lucknow" the paper refers to the Muslim Swarajists' manifesto on the arti-namaz question and says that even if the Hindus should have accepted the declaration as a working arrangement, the Muslims have denounced it in a manner to rouse the authorities to a sense of danger. The situation has gone entirely into the hands of the mob leaders, the unknown men who have suddenly leapt into popularity and position and who are hearkened to with respect. The tragedy of the Muslim declaration is the downfall of Maulana Abdul Bari from his position. Under these circumstances of voluntary abdication of effective popular leadership of the masses, the only quarter whence some light may dawn for the peaceful citizen is from the Government. The light-heartedness with which the Government was blamed for all communal troubles has disappeared under the cruel exposure of political leadership under the powerful searchlight of the Aminabad controversy. In the opinion of the Advocate the situation in Lucknow is the same as it was two months back and that the feelings between the Hindus and the Muhammadans are becoming worse day by day. The Swarajists wanted to ease the situation but they too have failed in their efforts and everything appears dark and cloudy to them. The weakness of the municipal commissioners have increased to such an extent that they have lost all their moral courage to enforce even the bye-laws of the Municipal Act and we have grave doubts that the time is not far off when the Government will suspend the municipal board and will take its management in its own hand and thereby enforce the municipal laws and bye-laws which have already been neglected. The Muhammadans are becoming aggressive day by day and they are choosing new leaders on every occasion and casting aside those who do not agree with their views. Dr. Mitthan Singh of the Aminabad Park in a signed article to the Haqiqat praises the municipal members for rejecting the resolution of Dr. Lakshmi Sahai and takes to task the Hindus for trying to have the namaz stopped. The arti begins half an hour after namaz and it is simply an innovation to fix the time earlier to wound the feelings of the Musalmans. Real unity can only be attained if the Hindus do not compel the Musalmans to accept absurd conditions.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Leader says that the cumulative effect of the various provisions of the Bill to which it has drawn attention will be that the position of the landlord in relation to the tenant will be strengthened. If he concedes life-tenures to a small percentage of tenants he is to be compensated in a number of ways and, on the whole, his position will be improved by the Bill. The Oudh Akhbar emphasises the necessity of holding a joint conference of the zamindars and the tenants to discuss the merits and demerits of the Agra Tenancy Bill in order to arrive at an amicable settlement and hopes that the Government will willingly accept any proposal made jointly by them. In another article the same paper criticises the article of Professor Dori Lal Dube, published in the Leader and remarks that having in view the apprehension and unrest created by the new Bill among the zamindars it can be said that the latter's efforts to take out their lands from the possession of non-occupancy tenants are quite natural. A zamindar correspondent writing in the Mashriq criticises the new Bill as ruinous to petty zamindars and complains that the zamindar members of the Council being themselves big landholders do not realise the difficulties of the petty zamindars. The tenants already enjoy enough rights under the existing Tenancy Act and need no more and that is only the non-occupancy lands that are the greatest asset of the zamindars. The Gharib, which is a new Hindi weekly from Bijnor, points out that the new Agra Tenancy Bill will not be able to remove the grievances of the cultivators and urges that if Government wants to put an end to litigation and quarrels between zamindars and cultivators it should provide for the permanent grant of hereditary rights to cultivators.

Re-settlement in Garhwal.

The Garhwali appeals to the Government to postpone the re-settlement of Garhwal for the present at least in view of the heavy loss caused by the recent floods.

The Katarpur riot prisoners.

Thakur Shiva Dayal Singh writing in the Jewan urges that when even the Moplah prisoners are being released, it is time that clemency might be shown to Katarpur riot prisoners also, most of whom are innocent and have been convicted owing to the investigating officials being mostly Muhammadans. They are specially entitled to mercy as they were tried by a Special Court under the Defence of India Act and were thus denied the opportunities available in the ordinary law courts.

Release of Zafar Ali Khan.

The Oudh Akhbar rejoices at the release of Zafar Ali Khan and hopes that it will prove a blessing to India. It requests him to devote himself to the task of restoring Hindu-Muslim unity. The Haqiqat also welcomes the release of Zafar Ali Khan and remarks that in spite of hardships and suffering he has remained firm in his ideal.

Bolshevism.

Pandit Bishambhar Nath Jijja writing in the Swadesh observes: It is nothing but capitalism which has spread poverty, slavery and subjection among men. The wails of the poor may well move God, but the demon of capitalism only laughs at them. Peace and civilisation are only for capitalists. War and peace only proclaim the interests of capitalistic powers. What value can the poor labourers and cultivators attach to these terms beyond this that they are to enlist in the army to fight the battles of capitalists, get themselves killed and leave their wives widowed and their children orphaned. All the discoveries of science and progress are for the capitalists who have deprived the poor of all happiness for their own aggrandisement. These selfish monopolists of peace and civilisation are in reality advocates of unrest and barbarism. The existing civilisation is sucking the blood of the poor people and will continue to do so unless it is altogether destroyed. Will it be necessary to cause a revolt throughout the world on the lines of the Bolshevik revolution in Russia. It is after long experience that the Communists have discovered that it is only through communism that humanity can be delivered from the wrong of capitalism. Communism has beautifully solved all the problems of capitalism. Communism can remove the evil of poverty. It is the strength of the weak and cheers up the poor, the helpless and the oppressed people. Sin flourishes under the poison of capitalism, whereas the nectar of socialism is its only antidote. Communism teaches humanity to mankind and spreads equal peace, contentment, civilisation, cooperation and universal brotherhood among all men.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman writes: If Imperialist Governments urge constitutional agitation, peace and order on the part of the people they should sheathe the naked sword of repression, otherwise the mercenary soldiers who are at present serving the capitalists for the sake of their livelihood will be moved by the sighs of the populace and thrust their naked sword into the hearts of those imperialists, who for their power and glory are holding the world under their satanic domination and wish to keep humanity under the iron yoke of slavery by most terrible means in this era of science and civilisation. We may confidently assert that if Red Revolution is coming it is coming for the deliverance of the world. One Gaya Dat Sharma writing in the Shiksha Prabhakar remarks: Hindus have no justification to celebrate the Diwali festival when the goddess of wealth (Lakshmi) has forsaken them in favour of the Western White Lords, who use commodes and are the very personification of impurity and deceit. They should like Ram and Sugriva severely punish the abductors of the goddess. They should cross the ocean, destroy Rawan and bring back the goddess of wealth. Then and then alone they can deserve to offer any worship to that goddess. The special Vijaya Dashmi number of the Swadesh publishes a number of national poems by different writers. In one of these poems Ram Charita Upadhyaya calls upon Ram to assume a wonderful re-incarnation suited to the occasion and destroy the demons swarming in this country. "What terrible atrocity has remained unperpetrated in India? O Lord! forthwith sound the twing of your bow along with your angry shout. Those who are generous towards demons are traitors to the country. Ram! we rely on you, emancipate the country." In another poem Ramnath Lal Suman exclaims: "Mother! oppressive, butcher-like foreigners may no longer trample on thy breast. Only once, O Mother, only once you may dance. It will serve the purpose. In only one round of the mad dance the cup of blood will be filled." In yet another poem the writer Anoop Sharma, B.A., says: "You have to run against the double-barrelled gun of repression. You are not to acknowledge defeat. You have to enjoy swaraj and destroy the alien rule. O brave men wrest from the hands of opponents your birthrights soon somehow or other. The great glory of the born-hero Gandhi is bringing calamities on the White Government. From the mountain of the future, from Bhagirath the Ganges of blood is coming swelling on India." In the same paper a writer under the pseudonym, "Tridandi," invokes goddess Durga who destroyed demons in olden times to once more appear on earth and witness how her devotees, the Indians, are passing their days in misery and poverty. The gods of yore presented her with different weapons to fight against the demons, but now we have nothing left with us to offer her for the destruction of our powerful enemy. Under her protection we may unite and devote our joint efforts to the destruction of the enemy.

LUCKNOW:
The 15th November, 1924.

ZAFAR OMAR,
Publicity Officer, United Provinces.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED AT THE GOVERNMENT BRANCH PRESS, LUCKNOW.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 22nd November, 1924.

The new ministry.

In the opinion of the Mahashakti the new British Cabinet is an eminent specimen of the type. Its personnel would seem to constitute, so far at least as India is concerned, a fit subject for brown study. India may rest assured of perhaps more than the customary log-rolling between India Office and Simla under the happy auspices of Mr. Baldwin's Government. The Hamdam remarks that the rise of the Conservatives into power marks the dawn of an era of repression in India of which the Bengal Ordinance is the forerunner. The Oudh Akhbar says that there will be practically no response from the Indians to the Conservative Government's call for cooperation if the Lee Commission's recommendations are imposed upon them before a satisfactory settlement of the question of further Reforms. The Haqiqat views with concern the appointment of Mr. Churchill as the Minister for the Colonies and hopes that Lord Birkenhead on his appointment as Secretary of State for India will not forget his splendid utterances in connection with the Dyer debate in the House of Lords. In view of the Conservative party's success the Medina sees no hope for India's emancipation unless the vicissitudes of time bring about a change in her destiny or some external causes deliver her from Western despotism and British Imperialism. The Rahnuma apprehends that India will suffer most on account of the ascendancy of the Conservative party to power. The Nejat says that every lover of liberty will feel disappointed at the result of the British elections. The Conservative party may indulge in empty threats regarding the question of Hedjaz, but it cannot dare to change the present policy to any appreciable extent. The District Gazette, Aligarh, strongly refutes the allegation that the Conservative Government will usher an era of repression in India and asserts that the British policy towards India will remain unchanged.

The late Mr. Montagu.

The Leader is shocked by the news of the death of Mr. Montagu and says: It was hoped that as he was still quite young, he might return to his labour of love at the India Office and put up the broken thread of the great good work for India, England and the Empire which was abruptly interrupted by Mr. Lloyd George's anxiety to placate the Die-hard Tories of the miscellaneous conglomeration known as the Coalition Cabinet who never forgave him for not having followed the time-dishonoured policy of what Mr. Hyndman would have described as the 'Perish India' school. It was India's misfortune that he was defeated in the general election of that year and that he did not seek re-entry into Parliament in the following year. If he had been elected last year it is quite possible that he might have followed the example of Lord Haldane and joined Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's Government. If he had done so, he would of course have been given the India Office. Today the whole land is plunged in grief that he is no more. 'The good die young.' There was no Viceroy and no other Secretary of State whose death was mourned by Indians as of one of themselves, as they mourn today for Mr. Montagu. Nor are there likely to be many such in future. Our only prayer today can be that the Giver of All Good may send back Mr. Montagu to this world to complete his service of this ancient land so much in need of friends such as he. At another place the paper says that it is not in the least surprising that our countrymen headed by Lord Sinha should feel the death of Mr. Montagu keenly as they do. Of Mr. Montagu it may almost be said that he lived for India. Years after present-day controversies have been hushed, when many a noble Lord and many a Knight of the Star of India have been forgotten, the name of Edwin Samuel Montagu will be recalled with admiration, respect and gratitude as one of the truest friends and greatest benefactors of India and his memory will be cherished with honour and reverence. The loss to India caused by his tragically premature death is irreparable. In the opinion of the Pioneer the death of Mr. Edwin Samuel Montagu removes an English politician who from the time of his first ministerial appointment to the Under-Secretaryship for India in 1910 was destined to play a conspicuous part in Indian politics. Referring to the dissatisfaction expressed on the Reform Scheme by the political Extremists who clamoured for its summary rejection, or at least for it to be transformed out of all recognition in an attempt to assimilate it to the projects outlined by the Congress and the Muslim League, the paper says: Mr. Montagu, who entered upon the inauguration of the Reform Scheme with enthusiasm, must have been saddened in his later days by the way in which the scheme has been treated by those who had to work it, and by the ingratitude of those whom he sought to benefit. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Every Indian who knows will judge him not by what he has done for India, but from what he could not do owing to the antipathy of Englishmen who, however, radical at home, are conservatives in all matters affecting India. A true friend of India has fallen and a nation is in mourning. The Weekly Observer says that the news of the death of Mr. Montagu has been received in this country with genuine sorrow by both Europeans and Indians. Referring to the Reforms Scheme the paper says that the Reforms which he initiated with such magnificent enthusiasm appear today to be in the melting pot, and his ideal of a self-governing India within the British Empire has been rejected by a large and growing political party.

Mosul question.

Commenting on the Mosul question, the Pioneer says that the action of the Angora Government in removing any possible source of friction by withdrawing from the disputed territory is to be commended as an earnest of their intention to accept the decision of the Commission.

The Cairo outrage.

Commenting on the dastardly outrage on the life of Sir Lee Stack, the Pioneer says that the attempt to assassinate Sir Lee Stack shows that the spirit of murderous rancour which led to the previous outrages still animates a section of the population of Cairo. The Leader thinks that the murderous and determined attack in the main thoroughfare of Cairo had been well-planned. It hopes that Sir Lee Stack will soon recover from the effects of his wounds and that his assailants would be captured.

Fighting in Morocco.

The Leader says that the Riffs' fight for freedom has been crowned with success. Spain has paid heavily for its imperial venture and its military prestige has suffered enormously owing to its inability to subjugate a handful of tribesmen in Morocco. The repercussions of General de Rivera's failure are being felt in domestic politics and revolutionary forces have once more begun to raise their heads.

Hedjaz affairs.

In his manifesto published in the Hamdam Maulana Abdul Bari declares that the occupation of Mecca by the Wahabis has complicated the question and apprehends friction between the Muqallid and non-Muqallid sects. Ibn Saud himself is not free from the defects ascribed to Shah Husain inasmuch as he rebelled against the Turks and was in the pay of Britain. Being a weak ruler he will bow down before the decision of the Arab National Organisation which the European diplomats have established under the leadership of Amir Ali. The Rahnuma, on the other hand, praises the honesty and sincerity of Ibn Saud and the true Islamic spirit that he has displayed in leaving the question of the administration of the Holy Places of Islam to the decision of the Muslim Conference and remarks that the alleged tyrannies on his part are a piece of Sharif Husain's propaganda.

The Lee Commission.

Commenting on the acceptance of the recommendations of the Lee Commission by the Secretary of State for India, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: This autocratic execution of the Lee recommendations simply to pamper the Services will still more drain the impoverished pockets of the masses, thereby adding fuel to the fire of discontent burning in the people's heart.

British Empire Exhibition.

The Pioneer says: The decision of the Government of India not to participate in the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley if it should be resumed next year is much to be regretted. The excellent work done by the Indian Pavilion this year in extending a knowledge of India's products and even in creating a vogue for Indian handicrafts is beyond dispute. The Leader is, on the other hand, glad to know that the Government of India have decided not to participate in the British Empire Exhibition if it should be resumed next year.

The Khost rebellion.

The Medina remarks that for the maintenance of friendly relations it is the duty of the Government of India to help the Afghan Government in arresting the rebel Abdul Karim if he enters British territory. Will the secret police of India which is accustomed to recover from the houses of anarchists bombs and arms which in reality are not in their houses fail to arrest the rebel Abdul Karim who is actually alive and free ?

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Describing the treatment meted out by the Hindus to a Musalman of village Bharouti, district Badaun, the Aligarh Gazette remarks that today every Hindu is thirsting for the blood of the Musalmans and hardly a day passes when some kind of tyranny is not perpetrated upon the innocent Musalmans. The champions of sangathan make raids upon the unwary Musalmans and do not even hesitate to put Muslim children to the sword.

The Bengal Ordinance.

The Pioneer says that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, in commenting on the political situation in India today, has not joined in the fatuous condemnation of the Bengal Ordinance. The former Law Member's official experience has enabled him to realise that the facts which led the Viceroy and Lord Lytton to take special steps to supplement the ordinary law must have been overwhelming. It is to be regretted, however, that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru has not seen his way to give more than negative support to the Viceroy's action. The Prem characterises the promulgation of the Bengal Ordinance as strangulation of justice by a late Lord Chief Justice of England and remarks that the bureaucracy wants to kill the political life of the country by repression under the pretence of dealing with revolutionaries. The Jiwan, while admitting the need for the suppression of anarchical activities under the ordinary law, opines that the new policy of repression as evidenced by the promulgation of the Bengal Ordinance will only worsen the political situation in the country by accentuating unrest and dissatisfaction among the people. The Kartavya thinks that the Bengal Ordinance appears to be mainly directed against the Swaraj party and adds that the Government cannot succeed in its object when the whole country is ready to side with the Swarajists in opposing repression. Government is mistaken if it thinks that India can be kept in slavery for long by such methods. Repression will only encourage anarchism in the country. The best course which the Government can follow is to grant swaraj to Indians. The Gramvasi remarks that if the Government wants to suppress revolutionaries it can easily do so under the ordinary law without having recourse to extraordinary measures. But if it is desirous of crushing the growing power of the Swaraj party it is madness on its part to do so. It will only betray that it is not anxious for the peace of the country, but is only solicitous for the protection of the bureaucracy. If repression is indiscriminately practised it will only lead to the unification of the various Indian political parties to confront the bureaucracy. The Pratap observes that the repression in Bengal has already resulted in two advantages for the country. In the first place it has saved the Swaraj party from demoralisation, which has now realised the necessity of remaining with the whole country; secondly, it has restored to Mahatma Gandhi the political leadership of the Indian nation. The Medina takes to task the Mashriq for advising the Musalmans to remain aloof from the agitation started against the Bengal Ordinance and remarks that it is a sin for the Musalmans to remain content any longer with slavery. The Bengal Ordinance is not only a challenge to the Hindus, but also an ultimatum to the self-respect of the Musalmans, and if the Musalmans do not stir while the Hindus are being crushed the time is not far when the same fate will befall them. The Hamdam advises the Viceroy to ponder over the protest of the Right Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, published in the Servant of India and see how far his appeal for cooperation and support has been responded to by the supporters of the Government. The Arya Varta remarks that it is now getting clearer that these measures have been taken by the Government simply with the object of dealing a blow to the increasing popularity and power of the Swarajists and not of suppressing the few anarchists, who could be effectively dealt with under the ordinary law. The Rahnuma, while condemning the revival of revolutionary conspiracies in Bengal, is gratified at the firm stand made by the people against the new Ordinance and remarks that no sane Indian can support the wholesale arrests made by the Government. The Nejat alleges that the Bengal Ordinance has been chiefly directed against the Swarajists to deprive them of the liberty of action. Lord Lytton has resorted to repression to cover his discomfiture brought about by the constitutional agitation of the Swarajists. In fact nothing has happened in Bengal to justify the enforcement of the new Ordinance. The Al Bureed opines that the communal tension has emboldened the Viceroy to take such a wrong step. If the new Ordinance aimed at eradicating the revolutionary conspiracies, the culprits ought to have been prosecuted in open courts. Repression is more likely to aggravate the evil than to eradicate it. The Aligarh Gazette justifies the enforcement of the new Ordinance on the ground of securing peace and order in the country and remarks that the Government should have taken this step earlier. The Aftab hopes that the Government will not mind the agitation started by the Swarajists against the new Ordinance. It advises the people to have faith in the sincerity and honesty of purpose of the Government and realise that India will be benefited by the eradication of revolutionary and anarchical activities. The District Gazette, Aligarh, condemns the protest raised by the Extremists who are in a way countenancing the shameful activities of the anarchists. It is they who are really responsible for the measures adopted by the Government.

Congress politics.

Commenting on the Calcutta agreement, the Leader is relieved and satisfied that non-cooperation is definitely 'suspended' by its illustrious parent and says: In fact, if what little of it is retained in the form of charkha and khaddar worship is also dropped, we shall be the better pleased at that evidence of returning wisdom, just as we shall be if the Swaraj party too declare formally that they are no longer thinking even spasmodically of 'uniform, continuous and consistent obstruction' and have abandoned even a passive idea of 'civil disobedience' en masse as a possible political programme. If Indians' public work in the political sphere is to bring any advantage to the country in the existing situation, instead of turning out to be only so much tragic because futile sacrifice, strengthening the bureaucracy in addition, there must be a uniform and unwavering and unswerving adherence to the pursuit of constitutional ends by constitutional means. In another article headed "Unity and Spinning" the paper says: We are as keen as Mr. Gandhi is that the country should be self-sufficing as regards the supply of cloth, but we do not regard it as an essential preliminary to swaraj, nor do we think that the spinning franchise will bring about the exclusion of foreign cloth. Referring to Sir Chimanlal Sitalvad's views on the forthcoming All-Party Conference at Bombay, the paper says: While not agreeing with him in connection with the advisability of the Liberals joining the conference in Bombay, we are in entire accord with him that the differences that divide the Liberals and the two wings of the Congress are fundamental and cannot be summarily patched up. In the paper's opinion a frank and clear definition of the objective of the Congress and of the methods of political action it will pursue is as much necessary in its own interest as in that of the country. The Liberals should be stultifying themselves and making themselves open to ridicule if without making sure of their ground they join the Congress and again come out tomorrow. Clarification of issues is a necessary precedent to unity and to removal of misunderstandings, and if the Bombay Conference brings about such a clarification it may pave the way for subsequent unity. The Indian Daily Telegraph in an article headed "Will the Liberals join" says: Gandhi having suspended non-cooperation, it is expected that the next step will be for the Swarajists to forget their boasted obstruction and readily agree to accept jobs under Government just to enable the Liberals to join the Congress: for the remedy against repression is now definitely found to be the union of all political parties. The Liberals will not be able to enter the Congress on the reformed spinning franchise so long as Hasrat Mohanis scour the border with the idea of freedom and federation of United States of India. And then with this embargo on jobs how can the Liberals ever join the Swarajists? The Aj says that every Indian will be elated at the Congress compromise and will be thankful to the Bengal Ordinance for the unity which has at length been restored in the Congress ranks. We are convinced that with the restoration of communal and political unity which is proceeding apace, we will soon achieve our goal. The Bhavishya remarks that the Congress compromise is bound to succeed in uniting the scattered forces of the country which is indispensable for the political emancipation of India. The Haqiqat hopes that the repression in Bengal and rise of the Conservatives to power in England will be two deciding factors in uniting men of different political shades of opinion against the Government and under such circumstances it will no wonder if the Leaders' Conference in Bombay proves a success. If the Government does not wish the revival of Mr. Gandhi's movement it should at the earliest possible date convene a conference of all political parties to draw up a constitution for India. The Hamdam writing in a similar strain hopes that efforts will now be made for the emancipation of the country with even greater enthusiasm than that of 1921.

Communal feeling in Lucknow.

The Arti in view of the renewal of section 144 with regard to the performance of arti in the temple in the Aminabad Park and the failure of Hindus to obtain a settlement of the arti-namaz controversy at the hands of the municipality or the Hindu Sabha, exhorts the Hindus to prepare themselves for non-violent satyagraha as the only course for the fulfilment of their religious obligations. The Haqiqat condemns the notice issued by the 41 members of the Anjuman-Ittihad-i-Islam, Lucknow, and considers it as a confession of defeat on their part. It has rendered the position of the District Magistrate all the more difficult and expects the latter to himself appoint a reconciliation committee under his chairmanship to settle the namaz-arti question. The committee should consist of such Hindus and Musalmans as command the confidence of their respective communities.

Agra Tenancy Act.

The Al Khalil in a lengthy article severely criticises the new Bill and remarks that the Legislative Council has betrayed an utter disregard of the principles of law in drafting it. It has mercilessly deprived the zamindars of their permanent rights and sowed the seed of disunion between them and the tenants. It will result in absolutely ruining the petty landholders. The Nayar-i-Azam remarks that the transfer of the tenancy suits from the revenue to the civil courts will enhance the expenses of litigation. The Bill has no retrospective effect and the zamindars whose suits are pending in the courts will suffer heavily thereby. The Bill, besides reducing the income of the Government derived from court fee, will create a tension between the tenants and the zamindars and alienate the sympathies of the latter from the Government.

The United Provinces District Boards Conference.

In the opinion of the Leader the speech of the Hon'ble Minister of Education at the opening ceremony of the conference was a thoughtful address. The paper agrees with the Hon'ble Minister that for those boards which cannot balance their budgets there is no alternative but to have recourse to additional taxation, however distasteful it may be, if they are to discharge their responsibilities properly. The Indian Daily Telegraph considers the address to be a learned and illuminating one, and says: The Hon'ble Minister's address can safely be taken as a sure guide to the boards in these provinces to take stock of the experience gained so far in working the new scheme and to devise means of enlarging the usefulness of the service not only by exchanging ideas on the difficulties that have arisen but also by attempting to solve the problems that still await solution.

The late Mr. Montagu.

THE vernacular press deplores the death of Mr. Montagu and eulogises his services in the cause of India. The Hamdam remarks that he held a high position among British statesmen and on account of his large-heartedness and genuine sympathy he had succeeded in securing a place of respect and honour in the heart of the Eastern nations. The Oudh Akhbar says: Had he been given the chance to see the working of the Reforms for some time he would have certainly removed all the defects and India would never have been confronted with the present situation. The Haqiqat deplores his death as an irreparable loss to India and remarks that he was a true friend of India and sincerely desired its emancipation from slavery. The Anand says: A true friend of India who shed tears on the woes and sufferings of the helpless Indians and a true representative of humanity, the late Secretary of State for India has passed away. The Aj remarks: Every Indian politician will mourn the death of Mr. Montagu. There is no doubt that Mr. Montagu was one of those very few Englishmen who after the interests of their nation and of the British Empire consider the interests of India also. He was the only Secretary of State who came to India with the object of acquainting himself with the situation in the country. His name will ever remain memorable in the history of India.

The crisis in Egypt.

Referring to the murder of Sir Lee Stack the Pioneer remarks: The outrage on British officers and soldiers in Egypt become all the more vile when the inestimable benefits conferred upon the Egyptian people by the Great Britain are recalled. In another article, headed "What the British have done for Egypt," the same paper says: The insensate hostility to the British now manifested by so many Egyptians would seem even more astounding than it is were it not that there still remain in Egypt men who flourished under the old régime, and they and their class have entered with zest into the work of stirring up feeling against Great Britain and the British and of deluding the more ignorant of the people with false and grotesque tales of British perfidy. Referring to the Note addressed by the British Cabinet to the Egyptian Government the paper says: The firm tone of the British Note should give general satisfaction. The British demand can hardly be regarded as excessive in the circumstances. The sooner the Egyptian Parliament recognise that they have themselves to blame for the situation that has arisen, and that it is in vain to kick against the pricks the better it will be for their country. At another place the paper says that the expulsion of Egyptian military units from the Sudan and the steps taken for the protection of foreigners in Egypt are necessary, not only to put a stop to the insidious influences which have been promoting disaffection in the Sudan and endangering the lives of foreigners in Egypt, but to bring home to the anti-British element that the weapon of assassination, far from helping them to realise their aspirations, will automatically result in a distinct set-back to the cause they profess to have at heart. It is obviously impossible for Great Britain with her definite responsibilities and rights in that country to allow rebellion to be preached among the warlike tribes, and the removal of Egyptian troops is accordingly a prudent and necessary measure. The Leader says: The Sirdar's death creates a serious situation between Egypt and Britain. But it may be hoped that any action that the British Government may take will not be of such a nature as to weaken the position of the well-disposed and responsible section of the population and to strengthen that of the revolutionaries and anarchists. In another article the same paper makes the anarchists responsible for the murder of Sir Lee Stack and says that they have rendered the greatest disservice to Egypt and have brought on national humiliation and loss by their senseless crime. In its opinion the British Government has imposed conditions which in one stroke take away certain important concessions made to Egyptian national sentiment and tighten the hold of British imperialism over Egypt and the Sudan. Excessive punishment generally defeats its own end, and if an impression is created in Egypt and elsewhere that the tragic incident was utilised for promoting a narrow imperialist policy, it would not be unnatural. The terms imposed upon Egypt will weaken the hands of the friendly elements and make the position of King Fuad in the administration of the country more difficult. In another article the paper remarks: The Eastern peoples, including those of India, see in the action only the working of the policy of domination which is so dear to Tory Die-hards. It can engender nothing but distrust and bitterness which cannot promote the best interests of the Empire. The Indian Daily Telegraph is afraid that the Imperialists in the Conservative Government are trespassing all known limits in their demonstration of anger. To seek to crush the new spirit of Egypt under the shadow of a most unfortunate political crime is to exacerbate political feelings. Today there is genuine disgust for the crime; horror is expressed from all sides. But angry Britain cannot forget that only a short while ago the life of Zaghlul Pasha himself was sought. It considers the reply given by Egypt as one that self-respect and patriotism can dictate: it has offered to make ample reparations but refused to humiliate herself. If Britain thinks that the spirit of a nation can be killed, she will have effectively unlearnt her American lesson. Nationalist Egypt is a real force and British statesmanship has blundered in asking for the impossible and creating a political crisis for the benefit of the very gang of anarchists to whose interest it is that the country should not settle down to peaceful progress. If this is the new gesture of British Imperialism to the East, we fear it augurs ill for the Empire. The Weekly Observer sincerely hopes that the critical situation in Egypt will be eased by the Egyptian Government in not delaying to accept in full the demands of the British Government. In another article the paper feels confident that the present British Government will not be lacking in the firmness requisite to convince the Egyptians that the path to the fulfilment of their territorial aspirations does not lie through murder and outrage. The vernacular press unanimously condemns the murder of Sir Lee Stack and apprehends that it will prejudice the British public against the Egyptian aspirations. The Hamdam remarks that the murder of the British Commander-in-Chief will all the more strain the relations between the two countries and prove detrimental to the Egyptian interests. The British Government should at once take steps to remove the causes which stimulate such crimes and the only way of doing it is to make Egypt independent in the true sense of the word. The Haqiqat opines that the revival of the anarchical movement in Egypt is due to the popular resentment caused by the British policy in Sudan and the eradication of the movement is difficult unless the Egyptian demands are favourably considered. It is indeed beneath the dignity of the British Government to take notice of the action of a few maddened Egyptian youths who do not realise the consequences of their evil deeds.

Fighting in Morocco.

The Haqiqat says that in case of Spanish defeat France which has hitherto been helping Amir Abdul Karim will try to conquer Morocco and exhorts the Muslim world to save the fertile land of Riff from falling into the hands of the usurpers. The Sada-i-Muslim is jubilant that the Riffs have baffled the civilised world by their guerrilla warfare and have already occupied a large portion of Spanish Morocco and remarks that the time is not far when this Muslim territory will be cleared of the ominous presence of the kafirs.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Al Bureed and the Mansur view with distrust and anxiety the arrival of Mr. Filby in Jeddah to effect a compromise between Amir Ali and Ibn Saud and remark that his arrival is likely to create suspicion in the minds of the Musalmans against the British Government and if the latter tries to interfere in any way in the Hedjaz affairs it will antagonise the Muslim world against her. The Medina is surprised at the news of Amir Ali's advance towards Mecca and remarks that the old supporters of Sherif Husain are probably engaged in some deep conspiracy and are secretly helping Amir Ali with men and money. We hope the Muslim leaders of India will take immediate steps to have the secret disclosed and see if there is any satanic power working behind the curtain. The Oudh Akhbar is gratified that the Government of India have granted permission to the Khilafat deputation to proceed to Nejd, and remarks that having regard to the struggle going on between Hedjaz and Nejd and the apprehensions of the Musalmans regarding the future of their holy places the permission granted to the deputation can justly be described as an act of statesmanship.

Britain and Palestine.

The Medina resents the British policy of encouraging the settlement in Palestine of the Jews who were cursed by God to eternal subjection. The Musalmans being in majority have every right over Palestine. There was a time when no mercy was shown to the Jews in England, but now the latter seems to be very generous in granting to them the land of others. May God give power to Ibn Saud to bring the sacred land under the Muslim rule!

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Shaikh Ahmed Ali Shauq in a signed article in the Mashriq remarks that the present communal differences demonstrate the unfitness of the Indians for swaraj or even for the second instalment of Reforms. If the British Government slackens its hold both communities will begin to break each other's heads and the Musalmans being in minority will greatly suffer. Swaraj is a deadly poison for the Musalmans and their deliverance lies in giving it a wide berth. The Dilchasp says that the Hindus sought the cooperation of the Musalmans as long as they wanted to make the non-cooperation movement a success. After achieving their end they began to desecrate their places of worship, shed their blood and dishonour their women. Now when the Reforms Enquiry Committee is sitting they are again stretching a friendly hand towards the Musalmans. The latter have had enough experience by this time and they will be well advised to jealously safeguard their rights.

The Bengal Ordinance.

According to the Pioneer the factitious agitation against the Bengal Ordinance has evidently received a slight additional stimulus from the Bombay Conference, although the outcry seems to be regarded with profound indifference by the majority of the people. The effect of revolutionary crime will be to retard political progress until it has been suppressed. That is the lesson of the political situation in Bengal, and the sooner it is learnt the better for all concerned. The Leader says: The Bombay Conference, the like of which has never met in recent times, has expressed its "strongest disapproval" and condemned the action of the Governor General in promulgating the Criminal Law Ordinance. Every thinking and patriotic Indian feels convinced that the present political situation is due to the denial of just rights long overdue of the people and that the speedy establishment of swaraj is the only effective remedy therefor, and the conference also gave expression to this conviction. But the Government instead of seeking solution in a policy of liberalism for the political distempers of the country have been relying on a negative policy of repression which is calculated to aggravate the very evil which they seek to overcome. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Government of India will read the resolutions of the Bombay Conference in vain for any veiled support to their illegal action. No one who is not used to dismiss the entire edifice of public opinion in this country as a matter of no concern can disregard the significance of the conference and the resolutions passed in its name. In another article the paper says: The Ordinance of Lord Reading seems almost a divine balm when compared with the spirit shown against Egypt over a deed which is most sincerely regretted and severely condemned. Instead of reading of condemnatory meetings against anarchy, what a pity that we should read of anti-British demonstrations—a result to the sad discredit of British statesmanship. The struggle for freedom under the Conservatives threatens to be severe. Referring to Lord Lytton's Malda speech the paper says that as a reply to the resolution of the political parties' conference in Bombay, he has not enhanced his political reputation nor added to the low prestige of the Government. If this is the considered reply of bureaucracy to the united voice of self-concious India against its repressive policy, we have no hesitation to characterise it as adding insult to injury. Absolutely no effort has been made to understand the popular standpoint. Public opinion has been flouted. Popular leaders have been ignored. The Hamdam refutes the Pioneer that the Musalmans have no sympathy for the persons arrested in Bengal and remarks that the entire Muslim press and the Khilafat Committees have already condemned and protested against the policy of repression pursued in Bengal. The Medina remarks that Mr. Baldwin taking advantage of the Hindu-Muslim tension is today applauding the tyrannical action of the Viceroy in enforcing the new Ordinance in Bengal, but a day will come when India itself will bless him for this repression as it will be through such actions only that separated friends will become united and India will be freed. The Aligarh Gazette justifies the enforcement of the new Ordinance and remarks that the anarchists being the agents of the Bolsheviks it is the duty of the Government to establish peace and order by protecting the life and property of its subjects.

Congress politics.

Referring to the confession of Mr. Gandhi that he is losing his hold on the masses and that he is conscious of it, the Indian Daily Telegraph says that it is pathetic reading to those who admire him and worship him. If Gandhi is losing his hold on the mass mind, it means that the grip of discipline and order is disappearing from the ranks of Indian nationalism—for his message of the charkha is nothing but the message of discipline and patience and modesty to the mind, determined to win its goal. In another article the paper refers to the acceptance of the presidentship of the Belgaum Congress by Mr. Gandhi and says that this ensures confidence for all political parties that they will have fair play and uninterrupted hearing. The Medina remarks that Mr. Gandhi has committed a great blunder in surrendering the suspension himself to the Swarajists and deplores the non-cooperation movement which was the only efficacious means of the achievement of India's complete independence. The Surya accords approval to the Congress compact and advises all political parties whose differences have so far adversely affected the interests of the country to offer a united front to the Government under the banner of the Congress. The Hindi Kesari also welcomes the Congress settlement, emphasising that it is only political unity which will bring about victory. The more we form separate organisations among ourselves the more the bureaucracy will indulge in high-handedness and as soon as we unite it will down its arms. The Mashriq advises the Musalmans to turn at once their attention to Muslim League as the Congress has proved itself to be an organisation exclusively Hindu.

The All-Party Conference at Bombay.

Referring to the proceedings of the Bombay Conference the Pioneer says: There seems to be little prospect of even the semblance of unity being achieved—except at the cost of a split in the Liberal party. The Swarajists, indeed, do not appear to have shown the slightest disposition to meet the views of the Liberals on any matter of vital importance. Unless, therefore, the Liberals are prepared to make a surrender, at least as complete as that of Mr. Gandhi, to the Swarajists, it is difficult to see how the conference can achieve any practical result. At another place the paper remarks: The fundamental differences between the Swarajists and the Liberals, Nationalists and the Muslim party are too great for them to be glossed over by a specious profession of superficial unity which will deceive nobody. It is all part of the great game of make-believe which has become a dominant feature of Indian politics. In an article, headed "Sinister Ideals of Unity," the paper says: The critical observer will be inclined to look upon the results actually achieved in a spirit of soepticism. It is, indeed, obvious that the vaunted unity of which we hear so much is more apparent than real. The cleavage between the political parties still remains, and though they may decide to assemble at Belgaum in Congress week—even this is by no means certain—if they do, it will be to hold separate conferences and not to unite on the Congress platform with the Swarajists and the No-changers. In the opinion of the Leader the Bombay Conference was characterised by a spirit of good-will and tolerance which augurs well for the future. It was another landmark on the road to national unity. Its success is at once a justification of the decision of the Council of the Liberal Federation that the Liberals should accept the invitation to the conference as also a vindication of the progressive spirit and sturdy partriotism of the much-misunderstood Liberals. In another article the paper advises the Congress to make up its mind what policy and method it is to pursue in the best interests of the country and says: A policy which is a blend of constitutional and direct action cannot work and must not only cause confusion in the ranks of the party which follows it but also lead to absurdities. The Swarajists have tried to work such a policy and they have come to realise its impracticability. If there is no urgent or imperative need for change in the Congress creed because the majority of the Congressmen mean exactly the same thing by the words "peaceful and legitimate" that the Liberals mean by the word "constitutional," the paper says that if it is so, there should be the less hesitation in accepting the Liberal suggestion which would free the Congress creed from ambiguity and make it clearly express the real principles and policy of the 'majority' of Congressmen. The paper formally congratulates Mr. Muhammad Ali who convened the conference and its other eminent promoters and the conference itself on the success achieved. It hopes that the good and godly work begun at Delhi, which has been carried a stage further at Bombay, will increasingly bear fruit, and that Mr. Gandhi, who may be described as the apostle of unity, will continue to inspire this great constructive work of vital national importance. The Sada-i-Muslim exhorts the leaders to exclude charkha from the Congress programme and to take up the work of national organisation instead of Hindu sangathan. Akharas should be established for the military training of Indian youths of all communities and wherever in the world a war breaks out these youths should be sent in large numbers to offer their services to the party fighting for liberty. All persons desirous of India's freedom should be allowed to join the Congress and the Hindu-Muslim pact should be renewed.

Taxation Inquiry Committee.

The Leader in a long article, headed "An ill-fated inquiry," remarks that by processes which do no credit to Government, the Taxation Committee has become a large and inexpert committee. What India needs is inquiry into the economic condition of its people. A nation, which wants to be politically free and great, cannot grow without a corresponding line of economic advance and a reserve of wealth. The paper urges the Government to constitute immediately the economic commission which is called forth by the Assembly and to postpone the Todhunter Committee sine die.

The Chamber of Princes.

Referring to the proceedings of the Princes Conference at Delhi the Pioneer says that the Chamber of Princes has strengthened its position as an advisory and consultative body on matters concerning the important part of the Indian Empire represented by the States. The Advocate remarks: In order to avoid public criticisms the Princes held their deliberations in camera. Resolution after resolution is being passed every year in their sittings but they have no binding effect on anybody. It is nothing but a mere farce. It is sad to note that their prince-brother Maharaja Ripudaman Singh of Nabha is still in exile from his country and the Chamber has not yet solved the said problem. The Chamber is an ill-advised experiment and it is the duty of the Princes to pass a resolution recommending its immediate dissolution which will be of great advantage to themselves and their subjects and huge sum of money will be saved which is unnecessarily spent in these shows.

Communal tension in Lucknow.

The Indian Daily Telegraph describes the situation in Lucknow as curious and says that no one feels that he has a responsibility. Commenting on the Hindu manifesto it says: The manifesto confesses the hopeless demoralisation of the community—it is a long drawn out hiss of a wounded snake and nothing else. It is an excuse for inaction—the dictate of moral cowardice for not offering satyagraha. In a contributed article to the paper headed "The great Hindu betrayal" by an independent nationalist, the Hindu manifesto is described as hasty assurance of amateur navigators in tempestuous waters, who had coquetted with the Hindu mob in its ravings against the Swarajists. In the opinion of the writer only one point is clarified: the worthy Fourteen (the signatories of the manifesto) do not want satyagraha. The Arti dwells on the desirability of resorting to satyagraha in connection with the arti-namaz controversy at Lucknow and adds: Doubtless there can be no room for bloodshed in satyagraha and we believe we will get such men of strong determination as will be true followers of non-violence and will not, despite the strongest provocation, violate their vow of non-violence. As regards the public we will request them to maintain peace and order, but if they cannot show themselves capable of doing so the responsibility will not be on the satyagrahis and breach of peace will in no way interfere with their work. Non-violence is not our dharma (bounden duty), but we adopt it as a policy and will stick to it. We hope the Hindu public will respond to our invitation for satyagraha. The Anand points out that all attempts at reconciliation having failed the Hindus who can no longer bear the mental agonies caused by the non-performance of the arti are seriously contemplating satyagraha campaign and impresses upon the Government the necessity of coming to the rescue of the Hindus by protecting their religion.

Agra Tenancy Act.

A correspondent writing in the Rozana Akhbar, Bareilly, describes the Agra Tenancy Bill as injurious to the interests of the zamindars and remarks that the Government probably does not want to keep them as intermediaries. The circular issued by district authorities in connection with ejectment cases has also strengthened this suspicion. It regrets that the Government has ignored the services of the zamindars and is depriving them of their rights.

The United Provinces District Boards Conference.

The Aj says that the District Boards Conference would have proved more useful if it had been held after non-official instead of official or semi-official manner. The Hon'ble Minister's speech contained a lucid exposition of the difficulties and problems confronting the District Boards, the desire to solve them and the promise for help, but it is to be regretted that the Hon'ble Minister did not go to the root of the problems, nor is it possible for any provincial Minister to do so in the present circumstances. The fact is that these local bodies are not free from official control and interference is the root-cause of all the evils.

Excise policy in the United Provinces.

Referring to the resolution announcing the convening of an "Excse Conference" the Leader says: We do not wish to prejudge the results of the labours of the conference, but we are afraid that what the Government is after is more revenue from excise. This policy must be condemned before its revision can be justified in the public eye. We must say that we are not free from misgiving at the attempt that is being made to modify that policy.

Industries in the United Provinces.

The Indian Daily Telegraph congratulates Mr. Wajid Husain on his masterly report on the working of his department and says: It is rare that one comes across literary styie in Government publications. The Department of Industries of these provinces is in the hands of not a mere official, pitch-forked into his position by the accident of service, but an enthusiast on the subject and a businessman of long vision and courageous outlook. Mr. Wajid Husain's report reads like the presidential address of a patriotic citizen, with this difference, that often patriotism consists in declamations, but here it is all solid facts. In another article the same paper remarks: The Annual Administration Report of the Department of Industries in the United Provinces for 1923-24 is marked by the clear presentment of facts and marshalling of figures which has characterised the report of Mr. Wajid Husain. Official reports are not often presented in readable style, but what gives the tone to the report is the almost patriotic fervour with which the Director of Industries speaks of opportunities lost and facilities disregarded.

British Empire Exhibition.

The Leader says: The decision of the Government not to participate in the British Empire Exhibition is a wise one and in consonance with Indian public opinion. But there is the danger of its hands being forced in the matter by the Secretary of State who may press it to re-consider the matter. We only hope that it will have the strength to resist any pressure from above and to stick to its decision. The Oudh Akhbar expresses its surprise that the idea of the participation of India in the Imperial Exhibition for next year has been dropped.

Bolshevism.

Commenting upon the dismissal of the appeal in the Bolshevik case by the Allahabad High Court, the Medina remarks: Let somebody question these foolish enemies of commonsense whether the Bolshevik bogey possesses any material body which can be stopped by armies, men-of-war, guns, arrests and imprisonment. Bolshevism is in fact a manifestation of popular feeling which is being created in every labourer and exploited party against the undue repression and tyranny of the capitalists. Nature itself likes to bring about changes and revolutions and hence Bolshevism will certainly manifest itself in some form or other.

Political propaganda.

The Arya Varta refutes the Statesman that English rule has been established in India once for all and that it will last for ever. This may be a pleasing thought but history does not support it. United India is sure to rise and the English will live here not as rulers but as our friends as India is for the Indians only and will remain so for ever. The Bharat Dharma lays stress on the necessity of a common nationality in India for her emancipation and suggests the adoption of the famous Bande Mataram song as her national anthem, which plays so important a part in the development of a common nationality. The spirit of a common nationality is like the Lord's dirk (an unfailing weapon) against the demon of self-interest. The day it has found an abiding place in the heart of every man and woman in India, the lion-hearted Indians will not bleat like goats but will begin to roar like lions. Imbued with this spirit Indians will not hesitate to defy even death for the defence of their motherland.

The crisis in Egypt.

REFERRING to the situation in Egypt the Pioneer says that there appears to be widespread misunderstanding regarding Great Britain's position in that country. There is no desire on the part of Great Britain to undermine the independence which has been granted to Egypt. But British officials and other foreigners must be protected against the machinations of revolutionary "patriots" who do not shrink from employing the weapon of assassination. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the League of Nations by simply filing the appeal of Egypt has only confessed to its being a humble instrument of monotonous talk. In another article, headed "Egyptian Surrender," the paper ironically remarks that the prestige of the British Government has been enhanced in Europe by the wonderful valour and prowess displayed in tearing up the semblance of independence which had been granted to Egypt under the stress of circumstances. The Egyptian Government have conceded to every British demand made over the dead body of Sir Lee Stack. This means that Egypt loses what has been called its independence. Egypt got it by agitation, not by any generous British gifts. And Egypt will not acquiesce in the present decision. That is a question which affects Egyptian nationalism. But what about the prestige of England? Nothing can conceal the motive of British from the eye of Europe. The spirit behind this gesture of violence cannot be misread. To hold the Government of Egypt responsible for the murder of Sir Lee Stack is an innovation which, hereafter, every aggressive Power would take advantage of as against his less equipped neighbour. Every time that a crime is reported against a Britisher in Egypt, we suppose privilege after privilege will be extorted until the term "Egyptian independence" will be a mockery. If this is all the effect of the League of Nations' conversations and the much-vaunted elevation of human conception about brotherhood of man, then Europe has not gained by the experiences associated with the outburst of Prussianism in the Great War. In the opinion of the Weekly Observer Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's criticism of the Baldwin Government in regard to its action against Egypt is likely to fall flat, and his hope that the whole circumstances be submitted to the League of Nations for its mandate will remain unfulfilled. The vernacular press is unanimous in condemning the severity of the British demands. The Medina in a strongly worded article protests against the indemnity demanded from Egypt and asks why should Egypt alone be held to be "detestable" on account of the deeds of a few anarchists when such crimes are every day committed in other civilised countries. Today the treasury of Egypt is exploited, its honour is attacked, its freedom is snatched away, its demonstrations are stopped and such restrictions are imposed upon it as no religion can tolerate. This is because Egypt is too weak to defend itself, and has fallen a prey to British avarice on account of its being an essentially agricultural country. All this is not due to the shedding of Sir Lee Stack's innocent blood, but those who are in the know can well understand the Britsh intentions and designs under cover of this punishment. The Hamdam in a series of articles dwells upon the "unreasonableness" of the British demands and complains that Great Britain wants to punish the whole nation for the murder of a single individual. It regrets that the Conservative Government is taking unlawful advantage of this malicious act to suppress the liberty movement in Egypt. The Haqiqat remarks that no self-respecting nation can put up with such unjustifiable punishment and apprehends that it will prove fatal to British interests. Writing in a similar strain the Sada-i-Muslim describes the British demands as devoid of friendly spirit and remarks that the Egyptian Government is not responsible for the murder which has been committed by a few irresponsible persons. It advises Great Britain to deeply ponder over the situation in view of its experiences in Ireland. The Aj opines that England is acting most foolishly and imprudently in the matter of the tragic murder of Sir Lee Stack. The preparations it is making to retaliate against Egypt are unjustifiable. It does not behove a nation which claims to be civilised to lose its senses and exhibit a spirit of retaliation over such an incident however tragic it may be. The same paper further remarks: The murder of Sir Lee Stack has provided Britain with a pretext to perpetuate the subjection of the Sudan and maintain an army in Egypt. Britain, which was the first to condemn Italy for depriving Greece of the possession of Corfu on the pretext of the murder of a few Italians, is today committing the same offence. But Greece is a white and Egypt a non-white country. No civilised country will care to undo the wrong perpetrated by England and Egypt will have to accept dependence again. In another article the same journal says that the consignment of the Charter of Egyptian freedom to the waste-paper basket by Britain has a lesson for Indians that "scraps of paper" cannot protect a nation which cannot protect its own rights. Proceeding further it remarks: The action of the Egyptian Parliament in drawing attention of the League of Nations towards the atrocities of Britain is altogether futile. No European country or the League of Nations will dare to raise its finger against mighty Britain. Indeed, the League only exists to maintain the domination of the European over the non-European countries. Egypt should therefore depend on herself alone. We assure her that all the non-white nations are sorry for her and pray for her deliverance. The Vartman writes: It is a gross injustice that for a crime committed by a few anarchists an indemnity of seventy-five lakhs of rupees should be imposed upon the entire population of Egypt. Further, what does the despatch of British forces to Cairo indicate? Is it to terrify the patriotic Egyptians and Sudanese by a demonstration of brute force? Such an action also indicates that Britain does not like the complete independence of Egypt, is averse to relaxing its hold upon the Sudan and is anxious to maintain its army permanently in Egypt. The British want to practise such ruthless and indiscriminate repression in Egypt over this incident as is already being witnessed in Bengal. The Abhyudaya characterises the British ultimatum to Egypt as similar to that given by Austria to Servia on the murder of her heir-apparent, and says that the British demands show that England is acting unjustly and wants to serve somehow or other those ends which would be impossible to achieve in ordinary circumstances. The British demands are destructive of Egyptian freedom and illustrate the proverb that might is right.

Fighting in Morocco.

Referring to the negotiations going on between France and Spain the Medina apprehends that Britain will participate in the war and remarks that the covetous Europeans are intending to stop the successes of Amir Abdul Karim and maintain Spanish rule in Morocco. Imperialistic Europe can never tolerate to see any African or Asiatic nation free, and if the three above-mentioned Powers come to an understanding Ghazi Abdul Karim will have to encounter great difficulties. The Nejat opines that the Christian Powers of Europe are uniting to launch a crusade in Morocco and carry on their murderous and pillaging activities against the unarmed Musalmans. Being perturbed at the continued victories of the Riffs they are busy in manufacturing false pretexts and Great Britain also wants to strengthen the hold of Spain on Morocco.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Medina expresses its satisfaction at the permission granted to the Muslim deputation to Hedjaz and remarks that it was an act of extreme cowardice and weakness on the part of the Government of India to impose restrictions on its enemies, which no generous foe would like to impose on his adversary. The Haqiqat hopes that the deputation will prove to be of great use in bringing about peace between Amir Ali and Ibn Saud on proper terms and saving the holy places from becoming the scene of bloodshed and murder, as the voice of the Indian Musalmans now carries great weight with the Muslim world. The Hamdam views with suspicion the tribute of praise which is being given to the Sultan of Nejd by the British press and remarks that the successes achieved by him are the result of the arms and ammunition supplied to him by Great Britain during the Great War. On the strength of experience our suspicions have naturally been aroused and it will have to be admitted that he was emboldened to punish Shah Husain for his misdeeds because he was sure that Great Britain had now no regard for its old ally. If he desires to keep the holy places under his sway he will certainly try to win the favour of the British Government and this desire to please will ultimately drag him to the position formerly occupied by Sharif Husain.

The Reforms Inquiry Committee.

The Pioneer says: While Sir Alexander Muddiman and four of his colleagues are engaged on putting the final touches to their report, the other four members are believed to be drafting a minority report based on the assumption that because dyarchy has in their view failed in the provinces it is a fit and proper remedy for application to the Central Government. It is amusing to note that the minority are being assured in advance that their recommendations will have the "solid backing of the Indian nation," even though the Legislative Assembly refused to give its august approval to the Committee. Further, it says that the most valuable part of the Committee's report will probably be the exposition of the problems arising out of a possible development of the federal system in India, and it is likely to contain an examination of the principles of federal government as shown by experience in the Dominions and elsewhere. It may, therefore, fill a notable gap in constitutional literature. Referring to the above comments the Leader asks: Where is official secrecy here of which British officials in India are supposed to be jealous guardians and exclusive repositories?

Tour of His Excellency the Viceroy.

Referring to the visit of His Excellency Lord Reading to Bombay, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: Mr. Patel by his absence to welcome the Viceroy or to have anything to do with any function associated with the Viceregal visit has considerably enhanced not only his own reputation and political character and that of his party but of every Indian. The author of the Bengal Ordinance, the certificating Viceroy who could restore the salt tax, cannot expect from the real leaders of the people any other treatment. Lord Reading is unpopular, and that unpopularity is clearly being proved by the frank statement of Mr. Patel. Further, the paper says that at Calcutta also Lord Reading will miss at the station the presence of the Mayor of that great town, Mr. C. R. Das. Lord Lytton, of course, will more than make up for the absence of the people. For one thing His Lordship has resolved to beat the professional agitator in making voluminous speeches which lead to nothing.

The Bengal Ordinance.

Referring to Lord Lytton's speeches justifying the Bengal Ordinance the Pioneer says: Experience has shown that the ordinary processes of law are powerless to deal with persons of anarchical type. They merely play into his hands by affording him an opportunity to terrorise witnesses and jurors until it becomes impossible to obtain a conviction against him. To give the anarchist, therefore, the protection of the law which he refuses to recognise is incompatible with the primary duty of a State to protect its citizens. In another article the paper says: Already there are signs that even in Bengal a considerable section of public opnion is prepared to tolerate the Bengal Ordinance as at any rate preferable to the reign of terror which was being rapidly established by the revolutionaries, and there is no doubt that a firm policy in dealing with attempts to misrepresent the Ordinance and to foment trouble in the districts would meet with widespread support from the more thoughtful among the law-abiding population of the Presidency. The Leader says: Lord Lytton has been in too much of a hurry to justify himself and to condemn unheard those who have been arrested under the Ordinance to care much for the effects of his words on those commissioners who may examine the one-sided evidence against the arrested persons. In another article, headed "An irate Governor," the paper hopes that the Council will show that His Excellency is mistakenly sanguine and that the people of Bengal can trust it to do its public duty fairly and fearlessly. The plea that the causes that produced the malady should be attacked and cured instead of the Government contenting themselves with symptomatic treatment characteristic of quacks, is transmuted in Lord Lytton's mind and imagination into an attempt at political blackmail. Such ideas can only be entertained, such language can only be uttered, by a ruler who has lost his temper, who feels he has been badly served or let down, who nurses a grievance against the people. It is not the language of wisdom or statesmanship. It cannot be taken seriously. It does not lend itself to argument. It never convinces. The Hamdam regards the recent speech of Lord Lytton as an insult to the Indian public opinion and fails to understand how in spite of his declaration that "he will not recede an inch," he can expect any self-respecting Indian to cooperate with the Government. He has accused the arrested persons of the crimes which have not yet been proved and has thereby prejudiced the judges against them and defeated the ends of justice. If he has full confidence in the truth of his proclamations he should accept the challenge of the Swarajists and have the accused tried in open courts. The Zulqarnain apprehends that the enforcement of the new Ordinance will bring about the revival of the destructive movements like non-cooperation, etc., and remarks that the ordinary laws were quite good enough to maintain the prestige of the Government. The District Gazette, Budaun, resents the agitation started against the Bengal Ordinance and alleges that the anarchists are the paid agents of the Bolsheviks from whom they receive money and weapons. The Aj remarks: It is imperative to protest vehemently against the new Ordinance upon which repression in Bengal is based. We can neither put up with the despotic attack on individual freedom on the part of the authorities nor can we give up our birthright of political agitation. In his Dinajpur speech Lord Lytton has indirectly admitted that the repression in Bengal is directed against the Swaraj party. It is therefore the clear duty of the entire country to rally round the Swaraj party and give it every possible help. Commenting on Lord Lytton's Maldah speech, justifying the arrests in Bengal, the same paper says that until proof is forthcoming to the contrary no one can believe that Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and other self-sacrificing patriots are connected with anarchical movements. Lord Lytton's statement that Government will not move an inch from its present policy is quite in keeping with bureaucratic traditions. Government has power and it will practise repression ruthlessly. It possesses brute force against which the helpless Indians can make no stand. But there does exist in this world an invisible and unknown power which will not allow all this to continue for long.

Congress politics.

In an article, headed "The Congress and Religious Leaders," the Success says: Let us await that happy day when we hear the announcement that the Indian National Congress incorporates with it the entire community or the Ahmadya leader at least. The Congress requires strength. It imperatively demands workers who would sacrifice all they happen to have not for name or honour but for India, for the cause of India and for the people of India. The Leader says: If only those who now dominate the Congress recognise in a wise spirit of practical patriotism that a combination of all progressive elements in the country is the most essential requisite of reform they will remove the difficulties in the way of Congress unity by agreeing to state unambiguously that their aim is to attain Dominion self-government by the vigorous employment of constitutional means and to rescind the yarn and khaddar clause. If the difficulties cannot be overcome for one reason or another, the next best thing upon which to concentrate is for the several organisations to bring about joint action on common platform as often as may be in the furtherance of common objects. There are many upon which there is complete agreement. In this connection we agree that it will be useful if the various organisations can meet at the same place. The Oudh Akhbar praises the foresight and prudence displayed by the Swarajists and Mr. Gandhi in realising the necessity of unity and remarks that there is every possibility of the Liberals now joining the Congress if civil disobedience and boycott are excluded from the programme and all parties agree to the achievement of swaraj within the British Empire. The Medina is, on the other hand, grieved at the compromise effected between the No-changers and the Swarajists and bitterly deplores the retreat of Mr. Gandhi. The arguments advanced by Mr. Gandhi may be irrefutable from the point of view of a spiritual and moral reformer, but they are not good enough for the political and civic life of a nation. The highest position achieved by the Congress within the last four years was simply due to Muslim participation, but the present efforts to merge the different political parties of India into one are likely to render the position of the Musalmans very weak.

All-Party Conference at Bombay.

The Mahashakti says that the most outstanding aspect of the conference was that all parties were unanimous in condemning the Bengal Ordinance, but it remains to be seen how far the parties will agree as regards the method to resist repression. The Hamdam is gratified that the repressive policy of the Government has once again united the different political parties of India. The Aj holds that the All-Party Conference was an undoubted success and produced satisfactory results. It has strengthened the foundations of political unity which will bear fruit in the near future. It says that the fact that the resolution regarding repression in Bengal was moved by Mr. C. Y. Chintamani shows that whatever differences may exist among the Indians, not one of them will be found to support the alien bureaucracy if it attacks the freedom of India or the birthright of the Indians. Even the "Cooperators" and "Title-holders" will not side with it in that event. The Vartman also considers the conference to be a success and remarks that the resolution regarding repression in Bengal although mild, defective and unsatisfactory, will be supported by the public when it is considered that it had to be so worded as to satisfy all the political parties represented at the conference. The Abhyudaya says that the success of the conference does not lie so much in the unanimous passage of the resolution regarding repression in Bengal as in that of the resolution regarding the appointment of the committee to find out means by which the different political parties may be enabled to join the Congress and the resolution of Mr. Muhammad Ali asking the leaders of the various parties to hold their respective annual conferences at Belgaum along with the Congress session.

In an article, headed "Lessons for India," the Pioneer compares Egypt with India and says: The ardent haste displayed by Egyptian politicians to speed the departure of the British officer has already inflicted serious injury on their country. No impartial man can deny that the insistent demand for "Indianisation" without regard to the consequences is inspired by unreasoning racial antipathy and a desire for place and office rather than a genuine anxiety for the interests of India herself. The paper further refers to its previous comments on the recent history of the Philippine Islands, and says that it provides another lesson for India, and it is obvious from the above instances that "festina lente" is a sound watchword for India in the circumstances of today. Commenting on the recent Darbar speech made by Sir Frank Sly at Hoshangabad, the Leader says: If British administrators in India go on flattering themselves with the self-comforting and self-righteous belief that under their benignant sway everything in India is for the best in the best of all possible worlds—that the people are happy and prosperous and grievances are non-existent except in the mind of the pestilential agitator, the political situation will continue to deteriorate and the problem of India will assume vaster dimensions for British statesmanship successfully to grapple with.

Communal tension in Lucknow.

The Indian Daily Telegraph is afraid that the Hindu-Muslim situation in Lucknow is not showing signs of improvement. Referring to the proceedings of a Hindu meeting the paper says that it is a sorry confession that the Hindu camp is as divided as the Muslim camp: that the authority of Hindu leaders is repudiated. The Hindus should either unlearn their Vedas and acquiesce in this new reading by Pandit Ruttledge who has dictated his latest commentary; or helplessly beat their wild breasts and speak of satyagraha, in the face of the definite advice of their leaders. In our opinion the Government is directly responsible for the present unnatural situation in Lucknow. They are avowedly neutral in religious matters. But by an executive order they have legislated against Hindu religion as defined in the Vedas. The Success says: The easiest and best solution is the spirit of toleration which by a happy chance has been advocated the other day by the Arya Samajists at Lahore. If we could only practically learn what is religious toleration the so-called chronic question of arti-namaz will be solved in a flash. The Hamdam remarks: We have been greatly disappointed in the manifesto issued by the Hindu leaders who have very boldly laid the responsibility of the present undesirable situation at the door of the Musalmans. The claim of the Hindu Reconciliation Board that the Musalmans under the provisions of the municipal bye-law have no right to say their prayers in the park is absolutely wrong as the said bye-law is applicable only where some danger to municipal property is apprehended. The Haqiqat resents the action of the City Magistrate, Lucknow, for calling the publishers of the namaz-arti fatwa to the court and remarks that they have done nothing objectionable in publishing views of the Muslim theologians regarding religious injunctions. It complains that the Hindus are holding kathas in every mohalla and are giving vent to strong views regarding arti.

The Report of the Improvement Trust Committee.

The Abhyudaya does not fully agree with the recommendations of the Improvement Trust Committee, but admits that the Committee gave due consideration to the general complaints against the Trusts. It adds that by giving its decision in favour of honorary Chairman the Committee has supported public opinion, but it is to be regretted that the Committee did not think it fit to place the Trusts under the management of the municipalities. It hopes that the Trust authorities will give due consideration to the Committee's recommendations regarding economy and will do their work at the minimum cost.

Military training for University students.

Referring to the discussion of the question of compulsory military training of University students by the governing bodies of the Universities of Bombay and Allahabad, the Leader says: Those who are advocating compulsory military training have in view not only the necessity of Indians qualifying themselves for the defence of the country but also the educational value of such training. So far as the United Provinces are concerned the local Government's attitude in the matter is very unsatisfactory and we are not at all sure if they would give effect to the resolution passed by the Allahabad University Court. The Government ought to allot adequate funds for giving military training to all University students who are physically fit to receive it. The Mahashakti remarks that if it pleases the Government to accept the recommendation made by the Allahabad University Court, the martial enthusiasm of our students and teachers will find ample scope for practical demonstration, on the parade ground at any rate. The paper congratulates the Court on its decision.

Excise policy in the United Provinces.

Referring to the change in the excise policy which the provincial Government contemplates, the Leader says: We gravely suspect it is the Finance department which is at work behind the scenes. A grave responsibility rests upon the non-official members of the committee to see that to the extent possible a forward step shall be taken and in all circumstances to prevent a retrograde move being made.

The crisis in Egypt.

THE vernacular press is unanimous in condemning the British action in Egypt. The Hamdam takes exception to the views expressed by Mr. Austin Chamberlain and asks if the British demands are the result of friendly relations. Today no Egyptian is anxious for the "friendship" of England or desires the "minimum" interference on the part of Great Britain. The Egyptians want freedom and the recent incidents have convinced them that the greatest and the most dangerous enemy of their liberty is Great Britain. Criticising Colonel Amery's speech the Medina concludes that the treatment meted out to Egypt was a pre-conceived affair. The huntsman was on the lookout for an opportunity, the net was spread, the ground was prepared and the bait was laid. The opportunity was offered by the sudden murder of Sir Lee Stack and Egypt was swallowed up. The Oudh Akhbar regards the British demand of prohibiting political demonstrations as an interference in the internal affairs of Egypt and remarks that if these demands are accepted the present freedom of Egypt will be worse than its former "Protectorate." Will the League of Nations silently watch these excesses and not save a weak country from such tyranny? The Azad opines that the British Government by taking advantage of the new Government of Egypt wants to instil awe in the hearts of other Asiatic countries. The Al Bureed condemns the action of the Egyptian anarchists and remarks that at a time when Egypt was struggling to achieve complete freedom and the Sudan question was yet unsettled, the anarchists displayed a total lack of foresight in murdering Sir Lee Stack. It is astounding that for the fault of a few anarchists the entire nation has been penalised. The Al Khalil describes the British demands as an attempt to indiscriminately ruin the Egyptian Government. The Arya Varta says that if the Egyptian Government has betrayed its unfitness to rule by the murder of Sir Lee Stack why should not the same charge be brought against Lord Lytton and his Government for the murder of Mr. Day in Calcutta. The Sada-i-Muslim takes to task the League of Nations for ignoring the Egyptian appeal and suggests the appointment of an Anglo-Egyptian Conference. The Al Natiq says that England cannot countenance the freedom of Asiatic countries and that by attaching undue importance to the murder of Sir Lee Stack it wants to suppress the so-called freedom of Egypt. The Abhyudaya remarks that the acceptance of the British demands, despite their utterly unjust nature, by the Egyptian Government shows that it has been overawed and has yielded to the British sword. But this does not mean that the trouble has come to an end. The Egyptian public is utterly dissatisfied with this action of their Government and young Egypt condemns it. In these circumstances the existing Egyptian Government is bound to break up soon and the bomb of dissatisfaction cannot but explode. The Bharat Jiwan holds that harsh treatment is being meted out to Egypt by the Conservative Government, simply because the Egyptians are weak. It hopes that the Egyptians will not put up with the insults offered to them and will surely retaliate against them. The Swadhin says that the unjust British demands presented to the Egyptian Government are quite characteristic of the British Government, which blinded by imperialism and autocracy is sweeping down upon a helpless nation. The Aj points out that there is not even a shadow of doubt left now that the object of the present Imperialistic Conservative Government is to tighten the hold of Britain upon Egypt under the pretext of the murder of Sir Lee Stack. It adds that the severe punishment inflicted upon Egypt is intended to threaten other Eastern countries also and make them quietly accept British authority.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Al Bureed remarks that the restrictions imposed by the Indian Government on the Hedjaz deputation were generally interpreted as an attempt to trample down the pan-Islamic sentiments of Muslim India and that the obstinacy displayed by the Government in this connection was based on short-sightedness. The Aligarh

12 JAN 19...
INDIA OFFICE

Gazette finds fault with the Government for consenting to grant passports to the deputation to avoid further agitation at a time when the people are resenting the Bengal Ordinance and remarks that the Musalmans as a community are not at all opposed to the Bengal Ordinance. Shaikh Mushir Husain Qidwai in a signed article to the Hamdam expresses his dissatisfaction at the Amir of Nejd's sway over Hedjaz and suggests that Sharif Ali Hyder Pasha, who commands the confidence of the Turks also, should be appointed as the Sharif of Mecca and Governor of Hedjaz and should be temporarily acknowledged as the Khalifa of the Musalmans. The Nejat apprehends a conflict between the Amir of Nejd and Great Britain in view of the latter's greed for territorial aggrandisement and power.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Arya Mitra asks the Hindu leaders of the Congress first to strengthen and organise the Hindu community before seeking to secure political concessions with the help of the Muhammadans who have lately shown their hostility towards the Hindus and have never regarded India as their motherland, despite their residence therein for centuries. So long as the Hindus remain weak there can be no unity between the two communities. The Aligarh Gazette takes objection to the message of sympathy from Mr. Gandhi to the last session of All-India Hindu Conference held at Dehra Dun, and remarks that the propagation of Hindi is a measure directed against Urdu and hence against the Musalmans. Mr. Gandhi and others like him never fail to utilise any opportunity of injuring the Musalmans. The Medina says that the Hindus never gave any proof of their toleration and friendship unless they were under some fear or pressure. Today a most cleanly dressed Musalman cannot be permitted by the dirtiest Kahar to touch his utensils and the presence of a Syed is sufficient to defile the house of a Shudra.

Reforms Enquiry Committee.

Referring to the rumoured split between the official and non-official members of the committee, the Hamdam remarks that those who were entertaining great expectations from it will be highly disappointed. An Englishman, howsoever much he may like freedom and democracy in his own country, will never fail to resort to extreme repression whenever he spies any sign of awakening in any Eastern country. Public opinion which is held in great esteem in England is regarded as sedition in British possessions not colonised by Englishmen.

The Lee Commission Report.

Commenting on the decision of His Majesty's Government in regard to the recommendations of the Lee Commission the Pioneer says that it will be welcomed by the British members of the Imperial Services, who, owing to the exigencies of Home politics, have been compelled to possess their souls in patience for some months. The decision of the Government is in accordance with general expectations. If, as seems practically certain, some deterioration of efficiency has to be faced, that is the inevitable price which India will have to pay for the progressive realisation of the ideal of responsible government. The Leader says: In reaching the conclusions which have been published on the report of the Lee Commission, His Majesty's Government and the Government of India have once more made a valuable present to those Indians with whom it has all but become an article of faith that Britain's professions are not worthy of trust or respect and that appeals to the sense of justice of constituted authorities are nothing but a waste of time, money and effort. If the British Government in India and in England have convinced themselves that they are doing the best service in their power to the future of Britain in India by frequently betraying the contempt in which they hold Indian opinion, it is their lookout, we have nothing to say because whatever we may say will possibly make no impression upon their unreceptive minds. Nowadays, it is apparently held to be the quintessence of British statesmanship to ignore, to disregard, to condemn, at times even to repress, that opinion. Be it so. India happens to be powerless and she must put up with the affront. But this does not mean that India is drawn any nearer to England. She is bound to feel a sense of injury and insult. Britain continues to retain her material sovereignty over India but is steadily losing the much more precious and only really enduring empire over the mind and the heart of India. The Indian Daily Telegraph congratulates the civilians on the sudden accumulation to their bank account as a result of the recommendations of the Lee Commission being accepted, and says: The British public is heaving a sigh of relief that hereafter the best of England, as before, would seek the Indian service, and thus fit themselves for bearing the whiteman's burden under enhanced wages! The Memsahib whose accounts disclosed the most heroic and silent suffering by the Britishers in their philanthropic service for ungrateful India, will have now some margin on the credit side. A divided people, as Indians are, are fated to no better treatment. Of course Indians will have swaraj, but the British element has to be maintained and the steel frame greased. In another article the paper says: After the Lee Report the very idea of swaraj is dead, for the Civil Service is above the Government of the land, and provincial autonomy is an empty dream. The Advocate says: The official announcement has caused a great deal of sensation and surprise all over the country. The recent action has increased the strain in the relations between the Government and Legislature and the Government of India committed the greatest blunder in recommending the same after knowing that it has been disapproved everywhere. The Oudh Akhbar regrets that the British Cabinet has disregarded the united voice of the country and enforced the recommendations of the committee without making the slightest amendment and has thus forced India to swallow the bitter pill. Does the statesmanship of the British Cabinet serve only to aggravate the difficulties of India?

Kohat riots.

Referring to the Government of India resolution on the enquiry report riots the Pioneer says: The main feature of the report is its revelation that the culminating point of a long period of Hindu-Muslim tension in Kohat was the issue of a particularly inflammatory pamphlet by a Hindu, insulting the religion of Islam. The fact that a very small minority of Hindus had the audacity to issue so inflammatory a pamphlet suggests that the minority was very confident of its immunity from attack under the British raj. Yet outside hungrily lurked the Frontier tribesmen, and in preventing their incursions the civil and military authorities at Kohat could rightly claim that they averted a conflagration which might well have developed into a minor Frontier war. Referring to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's suggestion to the Viceroy that a committee of enquiry should be appointed to investigate the causes of the Kohat riots, the same paper says: The process of raking up the past by setting on foot an enquiry by a committee, however "mixed," however "non-official," and however "impartial," would certainly not tend to facilitate the restoration of harmony. The paper says that His Excellency the Viceroy's answer should be regarded as authoritatively disposing of the notion that the appointment of a committee of enquiry would effect the beneficent purpose which it is charitable to assume the Pandit's coadjutors have in mind in common with the Viceroy and his officers. The Leader says that the Government of India resolution is an astonishing piece of special pleading on behalf of the local authorities who utterly failed to realise the gravity of the situation and to take adequate precautionary measures when the trouble had actually broken out, and whose handling of the situation from beginning to end was as bad an example of ineptitude as can be imagined. The paper asks: Was it "courage and coolness" which the local authorities exhibited, or utter inability to cope with the situation and lack of ordinary foresight? The Government of India's solicitude in explaining away every act of remissness of the local officials and extenuating it as far as possible is truly remarkable and not in keeping with the high standard they profess to follow in the maintenance of law and order. The local authorities instead of being severely censured have been patted on the back and the blame has been cast on those who lost their all in the riots. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The discredit on British rule that Kohat has brought is indelible. The Government resolution on the Kohat tragedy, based entirely on the finding of the officials on the spot, seeks to dismiss with chilling touches what will constitute an important event in the rise of new Hinduism. To the official the Kohat rising is important because of the coolness and courage displayed by the servants of the Crown and of the astute handling which prevented a frontier conflagration and all complications that such a conflagration would have meant. It is doubtful whether the Hindus would be so satisfied; we sincerely hope that the Government would, at least, have the satisfaction of having the concurrence of the Muslim population in their conclusions. Faith in the British flag on such extreme crisis to the Hindus in India have definitely lost. The only method by which British prestige could now be upheld is by blaming the very people whom officialdom hastened out of the scene of riot. Let the Hindus look to themselves. The lesson of Kohat is the same as the lesson from Lucknow: "to him that hath shall be given." The Muslim is strong and therefore he is very often in the right. The panicky Hindu is to be pitied and only fit to be hurled out of any scene by either special trains or by section 144. The Hindus, if they want to avoid more Kohats, must adopt scientific sangathan, organise themselves as one homogeneous whole, make it impossible for half-fledged intellects or full-fledged fanaticism to answer political missiles with flaming torch and fatal bullet. The British Government, as it is, have said their last word on the subject. But Kohat to the Hindu must now and for ever be a call for sangathan, so that panic there will never be, exodus there will never be, but resolution to face the foe. Referring to the cause of the Kohat tragedy the Success observes: Let us not cry over spilt milk but forge our way ahead. Let it be a lesson for us, that that which we regard only as a "spark" is not "spark" in its results. The Pratap says that the sufferings of the Kohat Hindus constitute an indelible blot upon British rule. The Kohat Hindus were plundered, beaten and harassed on account of the folly and partiality of the authorities. That the authorities should now press them to return to Kohat while refusing to undertake responsibility for the protection of their lives and property is equivalent to sprinkling salt into the wound. If the British authorities cannot protect the person and properties of the Hindus of Kohat, why should they keep Kohat or the Frontier Province under their administration and not transfer it to the Afghan Government. The Amir will prove a better ruler to the people than the British. When indemnity was granted to the sufferers in the Punjab disturbances and the Bombay riots, why should not a similar favour be shown to the Hindu sufferers at Kohat?

Bengal Ordinance.

The Pioneer says: The intimidation practised in India upon peaceful people who are suspected of hostility to the aims of the Swarajist party is notorious, and it is to this cause that the absence of vocal support for the Government must largely be assigned. Referring to His Excellency Lord Reading's speech at the dinner given to him by the European Association, the Leader asks: Does His Lordship really believe that a mere tinkering with the rules framed under the Act, or with the Act itself, will cure the inherent defects of dyarchy and evoke that spirit of cooperation on the part of the popular representatives on which depends in a large measure the successful working of any constitution. No statesman who has any insight into human psychology and who has studied to any purpose the history of national movements would insist that wholehearted cooperation must precede concession. The paper has absolutely no sympathy with the terrorists and it believes that their methods are not only futile but also fraught with danger to the best interests of the country. It does not agree with Lord Reading that the progress of this malignant malady will not be checked by any political remedy. The satisfaction of national aspirations cannot but be followed by an immense improvement in the general atmosphere. It will divert the energies of many who are being drawn towards destructive paths. A purely negative policy of repression cannot root out the evil which every thoughtful Indian deplores. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: His Excellency the Viceroy, we very much fear, is losing his temper. We look in vain throughout the Viceroy's speech for a single reply to the persistent statements of the popular case against the Ordinance. The Timely Topics says: The Swaraj party is perhaps doing a little unnecessary amount of shrieking! It is a rising party, and would naturally seize the opportunity to swell its ranks. We refuse to believe that the Viceroy's "bombshell" is really directed against the Swaraj party. The Arya Varta criticises the recent speech of Lord Lytton and asks how the English will now be able to raise their heads before the world if the people are deprived of the right of benefitting themselves even by those laws which have been enacted by the English and in the framing of which the Indians have had no hand. The Haqiqat opines: There would have been no need of enforcing the Bengal Ordinance had Lord Reading recommended the appointment of a Royal Commission for granting a further instalment of Reforms to the Indians. The Vartman says that the oratorical efforts of Lord Lytton to convince the Bengalis of the justifiability of the new Ordinance are bound to prove futile, because no Bengali, however ignorant and uneducated he may be, can ever believe that the anarchists who are after all sons and youths of Bengal are more capable of doing ill to Bengal and the Bengali community than Lord Lytton, Mr. Stephenson or Mr. Tegart. In another article the same paper points out that if the apprehension of Mr. C. R. Das that the Government will soon intensify the prevailing repression and declare the Congress an unlawful association proves to be true, a revolution in India is assured as in the words of the ex-President of America, Dr. Wilson: "Repression is the way to revolution." The Muttra Gazette declares that loyal persons and those who agitate on peaceful and constitutional lines have nothing to fear from the Bengal Ordinance and urges that every Indian citizen should help the Government in putting down revolutionaries who are a source of danger alike to Government and the people. Commenting on the decision of the Bengal Government disallowing Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose to carry on the duties of the Chief Executive Officer of the Calcutta Corporation from within the jail any longer, the Aj remarks: This decision is the height of justice! What a farce that one should be imprisoned without trial and that he should at first be given permission to transact public business from within the jail and afterwards deprived of that opportunity. If this affair were not so tragic the action of the Government would certainly have excited laughter.

H. E. the Viceroy's Executive Council.

The Leader says: The announcement of the appointment of Sir Bhupendranath Mittra in place of Mr. A. C. Chatterjee and of Khan Bahadur Sir Muhammad Habibullah in that of Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi will not come as a surprise. There is hardly any room for independent Indians inside the Government of India and safe men are wanted who have not a mind and a will of their own. From the bureaucratic point of view the choice is excellent, but from the popular point of view it is, it need hardly be said, far from satisfactory. As for Sir Muhammad Habibullah his appointment seems to be due to his signing the Lee Commission report which was universally condemned by Indian public opinion. The country need not expect anything from him.

Congress politics.

The Leader says: Mr. Gandhi has abandoned the faithful few to their fate and surrendered to the unfaithful many who have openly avowed their lack of confidence in his principles and policy and who, in fact, were never his convinced followers. As things are shaping they may one day repudiate even his titular leadership and then the Mahatma will find himself in a state of splendid isolation. In another article the paper says: We do urge Mr. Gandhi to give practical recognition to the self-confessed fact of the impossibility of carrying on the non-cooperation movement and definitely to abandon it instead of playing with the situation by declaring only for its suspension and against its abandonment. Passive resistance, satyagraha, non-cooperation, boycotts, civil disobedience, charkha, khaddar—all those are shibboleths which have governed the political activities of large numbers of estimable men and led to nowhere but disunion, dissension, repression and suffering. It is more than time that they were replaced by a sane programme. If this is not done, Mr. Gandhi's attitude can only be correctly described as one of confession and avoidance, an attitude that may be worthy of smaller men but not of Mr. Gandhi. The Hamdam is gratified that Mr. Gandhi has accepted the Presidentship of the Belgaum Congress and hopes that he will fully realise his immense responsibility and guide the affairs of the country in a manner the situation demands. The District Gazette, Aligarh, advises the Congress to have nothing to do with politics, but to turn its attention to the economic and moral progress of the country. The Medina says that the Congress is not now an instrument for the achievement of swaraj, but an arena for all the political parties to try their strength. In another article the same paper advises the Congress to draw up a detailed scheme for swaraj and remarks that swaraj presupposes a free and independent India in which the question of communal rights and representations may be unitedly agreed upon and there may be explicit provisions for safeguarding the interests of the minorities. In a series of articles the same paper dwells upon the possible effect of the Congress compromise upon Muslim politics and remarks that only two courses are now left for the Musalmans, either to adopt the policy of Sir Syed Ahmad Khan and win the favour of the Government or to apply themselves with determination to their internal organisation and to the spread of pan-Islamism. The one solid wave of Muslim brotherhood extending from the extreme west of Africa to the extreme east of the Mongolian desert if united with a pan-Islamic tie can well defend itself against the onslaughts and excesses of its enemies.

The All-Parties Conference.

The Bharat Jiwan opines that the success of the All-Parties Conference is a happy augury for the future of the country, but urges that the resolution passed at the Conference protesting against the Bengal Ordinance will be of no avail unless a vigorous agitation is carried on throughout the country to impress upon the Government the inequity of the Ordinance and the urgent necessity of withdrawing it. The Swadesh remarks that the frame of mind displayed at the All-Parties Conference by the leaders of the various political parties shows that they will once again be united in the struggle for the attainment of swaraj. The Bharat Bandhu thinks that the

All-Parties Conference has opened the door for unity among the various political parties of the country and has assured the forthcoming Congress of the sympathy of all shades of political leaders, whether they may or may not attend it.

The Muslim League.

The Abhyudaya disapproves of the decision to hold the next session of the Muslim League at Bombay instead of Belgaum and remarks that by such a decision the Muslim Leaguers may well have given proof of their obstinacy but no advocate of unity can commend this action of theirs.

Communal tension in Lucknow.

The Leader praises Mr. Gwynne for his efforts to solve the arti-namaz question and hopes that the labours of the committee appointed by the Deputy Commissioner will be fruitful of results and put an end to an unseemly quarrel which can neither promote the interests of the town nor those of either community. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: We congratulate Mr. Gwynne on what we very earnestly hope is a happy termination of the intense question of arti-namaz question in the Aminabad Park. The deadlock has been lifted, both the Hindus and the Muslims adjusting their irreducible demands to admit of conciliation. Diehards on both sides must still, we fear, find irreligion and impiety in the compromise, but on the whole, we have reasons to believe that the two communities, tired of the strain, would grip at the olive branch which it was left to Mr. Gwynne to offer. The local Swarajists have almost written their epitaph at Aminabad. They are spurned by their own community, until they have had to shrink back from even expressing their views on current political subjects. Mr. Gwynne is entitled at this crisis to all the support from every Hindu and Muslim leader, for at their word he has hazarded a great deal. Any untoward incident in Lucknow would ruin his official career. The example of Kohat stares us all in the face through the recent Government resolution. The Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow cannot plead that he was taken by surprise.

Improvement Trust Committee.

Referring to the report of the Improvement Trust Committee, the Leader says: We have not the slightest doubt that the report is what Mr. Fremantle has made it. The committee has considerable criticism to offer on the conduct of the operations of the Trusts. The criticism is in certain respects severe, but it is also incomplete in certain other respects where it is undoubtedly one-sided. They have nothing to say of the Government's part in the affair. The Fremantle Committee has avoided any criticism of the Government's attitude and a perusal of their report would lead one who did not know the fact to suppose that all the guilt lay on the shoulders of the Chairmen of the Trusts. We say with emphasis that this is not a fact and that the Government must share a large part of the blame for the defects that have been pointed out in the report of the committee. We are unalterably convinced that the Trusts should not be officialised and that more of the reserved officers should not be brought into the transferred sphere.

Britain and Egypt.

THE Nejat characterises the measures adopted by Britain in connection with Sir Lee Stack's murder as unjust and tyrannical and remarks that the attitude of the Conservative Government towards all the Eastern countries is one and the same. India cannot expect different treatment. The Rahnuma suspects the murder of Sir Lee Stack to be the outcome of Bolshevik activities and remarks that in his murder Great Britain has found a pretext for destroying the liberty of Egypt. Writing in a similar strain the Mashriq deplores that Great Britain has hurled the entire responsibility for the outrage on the Egyptian Government without making full enquiries. The Al Bashir remarks that if this tragedy had taken place in England, except unearthing the conspiracy and inflicting deterrent punishment on the culprits, no other step would have been taken. The Aj expresses its unqualified disapproval of the announcement of the Turkish Premier that the Turkish Government would not interfere in the Egyptian dispute and remarks that Turkey should reflect as to what should have been her condition if other Eastern countries had also displayed a similar attitude when she was fighting for her very existence. The Swadesh asserts that India, despite her dependent position, sympathises with the Egyptians in the troubles brought on their heads by the British Imperialists in their desire to make the murder of Sir Lee Stack by a few misguided Egyptians a pretext to deprive Egypt of her existing liberty. The brutal treatment of the British Government towards Egypt for the offence of a few miscreants is nothing short of an outrage on humanity.

Hedjaz affairs.

Akhtar Ali Makhdoomi of Amethi in a signed article to the Hamdam suggests that the Khalifa should be elected by the entire Muslim world and he should have a standing army of 25,000 soldiers and a small fleet, the expenses of which should be borne jointly by the Muslim world. India should contribute 5,000 soldiers and 500 sailors and three hundred thousand rupees per month towards the expenses. The Beduins who make their living by plundering the hajis should be enrolled as soldiers. The Haqiqat criticises the Khilafat deputation on the ground that the Wahabis are unrepresented and suggests that the Sultan of Nejd should be made the ruler of Hedjaz on the condition that he will only have power of supervision over the holy places whereas the direct administration of the country will be entrusted to an international council, consisting of the representatives of all the Muslim countries.

Situation in Morocco.

Referring to the evacuation of Morocco by the Spanish troops, the Leader says: A new situation has been created which may raise issues of a far-reaching nature not only between France and Spain but also among some other Powers interested in the security of Tangier. At another place the paper opines that the best course would be to recognise the independence of the Riffs and to come to an international agreement with them. The Pioneer remarks that the unrest in Morocco may lead indirectly to grave menace to Great Britain as well as to France. If Spain's present policy of neglecting the interior of Morocco leads to trouble in French territory, France will doubtless consider herself justified in taking special measures to protect her own borders. That France has no intention of attempting to extend her Morocco zone we have already been assured by Marshal Lyautey, but the inability of the Directory to control Spain's former possessions in the interior of the country opens up unpleasant possibilities.

Reforms Enquiry Committee.

The Leader suggests that the whole of the available material regarding the Report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee should be placed before the public and the legislatures in India to enable them to assess the value of the reports of the committee and provincial Governors should not disallow resolutions thereon, of which notice may be given by non-official members.

Lee Commission Report.

The Indian Press continues to express dissatisfaction with the recommendations of the Lee Commission. Referring to the reply given to Colonel Wedgwood by Lord Winterton the Leader remarks: A very delightful prospect there is here for the wretched Indian tax-payer. May we not add that here too we have a convincing demonstration of the manner in which self-appointed trustees owning no responsibility to anyone but their God and their own conscience are prone to interpret the obligations of trustees to their wards? Wealth and Welfare says: Self-government is better than good government. The unemployment problem of Britain should not be solved by the encouragement of unemployment in India. India must and should agitate for the expansion of the Indian services and the reduction of British services, to the utmost limit. The Oudh Akhbar describes the enforcement of the Lee Commission's recommendations in spite of the vigorous protest of the Indians as a great insult to Indian public opinion and remarks that the message of democracy as conveyed to India through the Reforms was but a sham. By accepting the recommendations the British Parliament has played with the principles of democracy and has created disgust even amongst the Liberals who were hitherto well-wishers of the Government and who will now cease to repose any confidence in its actions.

Kohat riots.

The Pioneer in an article headed "The Lessons of Kohat" says: No one can read the official reports on the recent Kohat disturbances without being impressed by the thoroughness with which the investigation was carried out. The chief consideration arising from the report is not the discussion of the extent to which blame lies on the shoulders of the different parties involved. If such riots recurred, success in preventing the tribesmen from taking a hand might not be repeated. There should be a cessation of recrimination, and responsible men of both communities should sternly discourage partisan attempts to add to the stream of misrepresentation that has been poured out, in the main from one side only. Reconciliation and the restoration of harmonious relations can only proceed from a firm desire to forget the past and to take practical steps to prevent the recurrence of these deplorable events. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Government of India resolution is not even a whitewashing document: it is a jumble of facts and theories embellished with picturesque official handshakes across the ruined Hindu population of Kohat. The Government believes that so far as they are concerned, the resolution exonerates them from all responsibility. If the higher type of Muslims like Muhammad Ali would succeed in inducing the Kohat Muslims to invite the Hindus and to assure them of protection, great impetus would have been given to Hindu-Muslim unity. While we have over-government in Bengal, Kohat suffered from no government. The Hamdam agrees with the official report that the entire responsibility for the Kohat disturbances is on the Hindus who first published the mischievous pamphlet attacking the religious sentiments of the Musalmans. In another article the same paper strongly protests against the statement of Mr. Gandhi on the Kohat disturbances and regrets that he has not a single word of sympathy for the Musalmans killed and wounded in the riot. His statement is disappointing to the Musalmans, and if he wants to retain the confidence of the Musalmans he should try to remove the misunderstanding created by it. The Vartman remarks: Can any reasonable person believe in this baseless report? It is a mere show under the cover of which the Government is changing its crooked tricks. In order to appease the Musalmans of Kohat it has decided upon the destruction of the Hindus, little caring what the latter think of the grave injustice done to them. Can the British Government continue to have a permanent hold upon the country through such mean tricks? On the basis of this action alone it can be said that it is such things which are sowing the seeds of a future revolution. The Arti opines that the report gives no impartial account of the disturbances but only attempts to whitewash the mistakes of omission and commission of the local authorities. The Viceroy's refusal to appoint an independent enquiry committee as requested by the Punjab Sanatan Dharma Sabha is due to his apprehension that its report would expose the bureaucracy in its utter nakedness. In order to protect its officials Government has supported the Muhammadans and laid all responsibility at the door of the Hindus. This has been the policy of Government in all parts of the country in respect of communal disturbances. The Hindus should carefully note this diplomacy of the Government and endeavour to be self-reliant for the protection of their religion and country. The Aj remarks that a perusal of the official report confirms the view that if the local authorities had acted with wisdom and prudence the Kohat tragedy would never have occurred, and if it had occurred at all it would not have taken such a gruesome form.

The Bengal Ordinance.

Referring to Mr. C. R. Das' reply to Lord Lytton, the Pioneer remarks that his attempt at humour in the reply is sheer buffoonery. If Mr. Das' mentality permits him to believe that this is a matter for humorous treatment, he is an object of pity as well as of contempt. The Haqiqat criticises Lord Lytton's Calcutta Durbar speech and remarks that he cannot allay the public resentment by the mere recital of anecdotes and nursery tales. He cannot gain his object by holding Durbars and bestowing honours and decorations. The Shakti attempts to refute the arguments of Lord Lytton as adduced in his speeches in defence of the Bengal Ordinance and contends that even if the persons arrested in Bengal are revolutionaries they are the products of the existing administrative policy which ignores public opinion and attaches the first importance to the interests of the Government only. If there are anarchists in the country, even after a hundred and fifty years of British rule, the Government itself should be impugned for it. The Pratap takes exception to the statement of Lord Lytton that every one who had been arrested under the new Ordinance was connected with the anarchical movement and remarks that such a statement from the lips of the highest authority in the province regarding those persons who were not given any opportunity of putting in their defence as is offered even to murderers amounts to the murder of law and justice.

The Sikh Sudhar movement in the Punjab.

The Leader says: We confess we have much more sympathy with the new Sikh Sudhar movement which has all the appearance of being both more sober and more practical and hence of holding out a better prospect of success.

H. E. the Viceroy's Executive Council.

The Hamdam hopes that Sir Muhammad Habibullah will justify the confidence reposed in him by the Viceroy and remarks that instead of an old Government servant some independent and capable Muslim leader should have been appointed as Law Member. The Aj congratulates Lord Reading on the appointment of Sir Muhammad Habibullah and Sir Bhupendra Nath Mittra as members of his Executive Council and remarks that he shall never have cause to regret these appointments. Indeed, by signing the Lee Report and recommending the loot of Indian money Sir Muhammad Habibullah had acquired the claim for the highest office in the Government. And Sir Bhupendra Nath Mittra has been appointed an Executive Councillor perhaps on account of the absence of an independent spirit and broad political outlook which is so characteristic of him as of all those who have risen up from clerical service.

H. E. the Viceroy's tour.

The Pioneer commends the Viceroy's speech and says: In his statesmanlike speech at the dinner of the European Association at Calcutta Lord Reading once more lucidly expounded the policy which, with the support of successive British Governments, has been consistently pursued by His Excellency and his co-adjutors. May thoughtful Indians ask how long the country is to be incessantly disturbed by violent agitations which lead nowhere, which have inflicted grave injury on the Indian people, which have resulted in barbarous crime and have indubitably exacerbated racial feeling and accentuated communal and religious differences. If the swaraj which these men claim were delivered into their hands what would be the fate of India? Their aims are purely negative; they would have neither the ability to carry on the civil administration nor the power to protect the country from the invasion which would follow the withdrawal of the British. It is, therefore, of the first importance to India that the more stable elements should seek means for giving public testimony to the faith that is in them and for combating the propaganda of destruction. In this task they would have the whole-hearted support of the responsible non-official British element in this country. Commenting upon the Viceroy's speech in reply to the memorial of the Musalmans of Bombay the Nejat opines that his speech must have opened the eyes of the self-appointed representatives of the Musalmans. He trampled down the demands of the Musalmans and has failed in his attempt to please them with empty words. The Musalmans are well aware of his false sympathy and know too well on what consideration he delayed the grant of passport to the Hedjaz deputation.

United Provinces Legislative Council.

Commenting on the explanation of the President of the Council for disallowing the resolutions on Muzaffarnagar affairs, the Leader remarks: An officer of Government may abuse his authority, may humiliate respectable Indians, and may defiantly proclaim that whatever the Councillors may say or do the Government was sure to support him.

If the President's ruling is correct then the Council has no right to criticise the actions of District Officers who may run amok. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The interest in educational advancement, the predominant feature of the political consciousness of the people, found vent in the resolution on the Benares Hindu University. While we sincerely desire that the grant to the Aligarh University will be enhanced in the future, we must persistently point out that in its treatment of this great Hindu institution the Government have displayed a spirit that is most unfortunate. Referring to the debate on the appointment of honorary magistrates the same paper remarks: The defeat of the resolution on honorary magistrates, after the speeches that were made on the subject, is a sad confession of lack of cohesion among the members.

Congress politics.

The Hindustani is gratified that Mr. Gandhi has accepted the Presidentship of the Congress. The Hind-i-Jadid hopes that Mr. Gandhi will try to place Hindu-Muslim unity on a stronger and permanent basis and remarks that Dominion status can neither be beneficial to the Hindus nor to the Musalmans whose cause is likely to suffer under a united Congress as in that case the Musalmans will find themselves between two enemies—the Hindu majority on one side and British Imperialism on the other. The Zulqarnain in a communicated article deplores that the leaders are making the public resentment over the Bengal Ordinance a basis for the unity of the various political parties and warns that a unity which is based on the hatred of a third party is sure to result in dire consequences.

The Punjab Political Conference.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says that one of the striking features of the Punjab political conference was the absence of Muslim leaders. The fact is the Hindus of the Punjab, as of Lucknow, have lost faith in their leaders who cannot suggest any remedy for communal differences. In the opinion of the paper the time has come when Hindu sangathan should obtain more prominence than even swaraj. After sangathan has welded the great Hindu population into an organised and harmonious whole, we can easily whistle for swaraj. For some time Hindu and Muslim leaders must agree to openly part company to work in their own way, but avoiding communal outbursts.

Muslim League.

The Hamdam lays stress on the importance of this year's session of the Muslim League and remarks that the Musalmans should first strengthen the foundation of their own national existence; then only their alliance with other communities can be useful. The Rahnuma expresses its satisfaction that the session of the League will not be held at Belgaum and heaves a sigh of relief that the Musalmans have realised the fundamental mistake of making the League subservient to the Congress.

Arti-Namaz* settlement in Lucknow.

Referring to the discussion in the Legislative Council on the resolution regarding communal disturbances in these provinces, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: Lucknow today thanks Mr. Gwynne for deliberately staking his political career, actually walking into the den of the rioters. It is no small credit to the Hindus that they have accepted temporarily a settlement which does not concede what they claim. Equally creditable it is to the Muslims that leaders like the Raja of Salempur, who demanded Mr. Ruttledge's head on a charger for his Amethi action, should have come forward to stem the Muslim fanaticism that swelled against the tinkling of the temple bell. Of course, it is not Mr. Gwynne's influence but the force of the police that is behind the back of this temporary settlement. And the present situation would never have risen at all if the British official on the spot had acted in the beginning with courage and coherency. As it is, Mr. Ruttledge behaved exactly as the Swarajist leaders did: willing to wound but afraid to strike. In the opinion of Success the atmosphere is clear. Conditions are rapidly having a happy turn. Parties appear to be satisfactory. In fact it is not the so-called grievances that actually beget troubles. "It is rather the pictures drawn by fine artists that are, to a great extent, responsible for civil commotions here and everywhere in the world. Anyhow, thank goodness, our city is once again in its normal mood and let us pray for permanent peace." The Anand expresses its gratification at the settlement of the local arti-namaz controversy by the Deputy Commissioner and remarks that it must cause satisfaction to the Hindus whose religious sentiments have been attached due weight therein. They should not grudge the concession to Muhammadans of the stoppage of conch-blowing during the last five minutes of the performance of arti. The compromise reflects great credit on the tactfulness and farsightedness of the Deputy Commissioner. The Arti, on the other hand, considers the compromise in respect of the arti-namaz question to be unsatisfactory inasmuch as it allows only five minutes' time in reality for the performance of the arti in three temples, which is altogether inadequate, inasmuch as it is very difficult to carry it out in actual practice owing to the punctual observance of the time limit and inasmuch as it does not preclude the possibility of a communal conflict, as crowds are bound to collect in the park, when the namaz is allowed to be held there. It says that the Hindus may well accept the compromise as a temporary measure but for the permanent solution of the question they should await the decision of Mahatma Gandhi.

The Agra Tenancy Act.

Nasir-ul-Hasan, zamindar of Ghazipur, in a signed article to the Haqiqat complains that in the new Bill the rights of the zamindars have been overlooked and those of the tenants have been extended to such an extent that there is every probability of the latter's going out of control and rendering the zamindars powerless to help the Government in time of need. In view of their great responsibilities and financial difficulties the petty zamindars stand more in need of protection than the tenants.

British Empire Exhibition.

The Pioneer says: The exultation of the Swarajists at the Government of India's decision not to take part in the Exhibition next year shows that they would rather mar the Exhibition's success, in order to gratify their anti-British sentiment, than advance the prosperity of Indian workmen and industrialists.

Anti-Indian propaganda in America.

Referring to the anti-Indian propaganda in America the Leader says: This misleading propaganda, full as it is of half-truths and untruths, is carried on through the American newspapers which obligingly place their columns at the disposal of those who, either through conviction or for mercenary considerations, have opened their columns to a campaign of vilification of the Indian nationalist movement and are educating the uninformed Americans into the belief that the British bureaucracy are the best friends of the Indian masses. The Vartman refers in condemnatory terms to Lord Sydenham's anti-Indian propaganda in America and points out the need of sending Indian propagandists to foreign countries with a view to refute from the press and the platform all such baseless allegations as are made against India by Lord Sydenham. The Aj holds that although the Sydenhamite propaganda may succeed in deceiving the American Imperialists yet it cannot deceive the whole world and Indians will never rest on their oars until swaraj is attained.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the fortnight ending the 3rd January, 1925.

Spain and Morocco.

THE Leader says: The coastal strip of Moroccan territory assigned to Spain is one of great strategic importance and Britain would not like that its control should pass into the hands of a great power like France. Spain may find its position untenable and decide to evacuate it. Who will then take its place? Britain may not for diplomatic reasons make a direct claim to it, but would probably be not averse to supporting the claim of Italy to control it. France would, however, be strongly opposed to Italians stepping in. The problem may be referred to the League Council. The best ccurse would be to recognise the independence of the Riffs and to come to an international agreement with them. The zone should be converted into neutral territory.

Crisis in Egypt.

Referring to the latest manifesto issued by Zaghlul Pasha the Pioneer says: If the votes of the ignorant sections of Egypt's population are sufficient to secure a majority in Parliament for Zaghlul Pasha and his party, it will be a calamity for Egypt unless the Nationalists approach their task of directing the destinies of the country in a very different spirit from that which they have evinced in the past. The Desh Bhagat in a strongly worded article exhorts the Indians to condemn the British policy in Egypt and advises them not to give any help to Great Britain against Egypt. The emancipation of India is linked with the emancipation of Egypt and if the Indians help the Egyptians in achieving independence they can themselves achieve freedom as the Suez Canal, which is the key to India's independence, will be in the possession of the Egyptians. The Hamdam severely criticises the speech of Mr. Austen Chamberlain and remarks that in the dictionary of British diplomacy the words "Liberty" and "Non-interference" are construed to mean slavery and extreme interference. If the British statesmen still do not take any lesson from the present situation they will certainly fail to make amends for their blunders and will rue the consequences of their policy.

Indians in the Colonies.

Referring to the condition of Indians in South Africa the Leader says: The Government of India have protested in the past and may protest again. But their documentary protests have produced no effect. What is needed is retaliatory action and Indian public opinion has been urging upon them the necessity of adopting such measures, but they have shrunk from a policy of strong action. Do not the Government of India owe a duty to Indians lawfully settled in South Africa? Must they look on impotently and helplessly and content themselves with ineffectual protests while the Indian settlers are being deprived of one right after another and disability after disability is being imposed upon them? The paper advises the Natal Indians to rely largely upon themselves and upon the people and the Government of India and continue unabated the struggle for tolerable and honourable existence until the Union Government undo the wrong. The anti-Indian crusade of the white settlers in South Africa has been producing a very undesirable effect on the attitude of an increasing number of Indians towards the Imperial connection, but British statesmen do not seem to realise the great injury that is being done to the imperial cause by the policy of exclusive racialism in South Africa. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The Europeans find that the Indians compete with them successfully; and the best way to meet it is to eliminate the competing factor. This is being done. The ladder by which they ascended is the Indian. Now that the ascent is over, the ladder is being kicked. And yet there are Indians who desire that we should have enthusiasm for an Empire, where such gross outrage on Indian citizenship is possible. The Hamdam protests against the new Municipal electorate regulations of Natal and apprehends that the Indian emigrants will be very hard hit by them. Lord Reading's Government which holds the protection of the wealth of the English capitalists to be its foremost duty cannot be expected to safeguard the rights of the Indians who have rendered greater services than the English colonists in the development of Natal and in strengthening British supremacy in South Africa.

As long as the Indians are slaves in their own country they cannot be expected to safeguard the interests of their countrymen abroad. The Bhavishya remarks that the assent given by the Governor General in Council, South Africa, to the Natal Boroughs Ordinance which deprives the Indians settled in Natal of municipal franchise shows that the Union Government is seeking to reduce the Indians to a position of utter degradation. The Indians in Natal are looking to India for help. It is therefore the duty of the Swarajists to take up the matter and press the Government of India to come to the help of the Indians in Natal.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the Lucknow and Kohat disturbances the Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The short, straight cry that the Muslims want it all their way will gather the Hindus together; and the cry that Hindus strive for swaraj, because they desire Hindu raj, would drive the Muslims to the official side. This is the inevitable culmination of the present process—unless checked. And the result? Triumph to bureaucracy and, for a time at any rate, death to all concerted political efforts in this country. Let us fight the Government and Muslims, would be the Hindu attitude. Let us join the Government and crush the Hindu majority, would be the Muslim reply. The Arti attributes the communal disturbances to the desire of Muhammadans to secure equal political rights with the Hindus and adds that the Government too directly or indirectly encourages the Muhammadans to entertain such a desire. It urges the Hindus to accept no Hindu-Muslim compact which gives the Muhammadans more than is their fair share. They should not be taken in by any camouflage seeking to curtail their rights in the name of the so-called Hindu-Muslim unity. In another article the same paper says that the renewal of proposals for Hindu-Muslim unity are out of question at the present time when the atmosphere is still surcharged with communal tension and the Hindus have not forgotten the atrocities perpetrated on them by the Muhammadans. The Hindus indeed cannot even consider any such proposals until they are convinced that the Muhammadans sincerely want peace and unity and give an assurance not to interfere with the legitimate religious observances of the Hindus. The Anand warns the Hindu congressmen against accepting any Hindu-Muslim pact at the Belgaum Congress without consulting the general Hindu public, otherwise they will find themselves placed in a very false position, in case the Hindu community refuses to recognise it.

The Belgaum Congress.

In the opinion of the Pioneer the presidential address of Mr. Gandhi at the Belgaum Congress is calculated to daze the reader. Professions of love for all mankind combined with gross and unfounded accusations against the British are there in profusion; but, above all, we find the insistence on the efficacy of the spinning wheel as India's anchor of salvation. Mr. Gandhi's advocacy of the boycott of imported cloth is backed up by preposterous charges against the British which cannot fail to inflame the minds of the ignorant. The paper thinks that Mr. Gandhi's panegyrics on the beauty of virtue and of love and his periodical penitential fasts will not bring back the dead; nor will they undo the mischief caused by non-cooperation and by the advocacy of the boycott as a divine instrument for the creation of prosperity and good-will. In another article the paper opines that the disunion which prevails in the ranks of the adherents of the Congress has been significantly emphasised by the proceedings at Belgaum. The belief that the Liberal party might be induced to throw in its lot with Mr. Gandhi and his coadjutors has been rudely dispelled by the reception accorded to the presidential speech by Liberal leaders at Lucknow. The Leader characterises Mr. Gandhi's address as "A unique address" and says that it cannot be compared with any other address of its kind. The Mahatma's singular qualities are reflected in the address as in mirror. The address is marked by simplicity, by urbanity and by honesty; it is distinguished, as it was bound to be, by moral elevation. Superficially it strikes one as being scarcely political; yet it is deadly politics in every page and in every line of it. A perusal of the address, without prejudice and with an anxious desire to glean from it some slight hope for the reunion of public workers separated since Mr. Gandhi's advent on the scene, leads one to the distressing but unescapable conclusion that there is no ground of unity, almost no meeting point except the love of country and the desire for swaraj. In politics, however, methods are hardly less important than ideals. The whole address brings one conviction to the non-cooperator's mind: there can be no united Congress on Mr. Gandhi's terms. Referring to the adoption by the Congress of the yarn franchise, the paper says that every member of the Congress must now either spin or get spun by others the prescribed quantity of yarn. The paper holds that if the new condition of Congress membership is rigidly enforced it is not improbable that after some time the Congress will become merely an association of hand-spinners and will cease to inspire the national movement to any appreciable extent. At another place the paper says: Charkha has been made for the time being to dominate the policy of the Congress, but the economic fads of a few individuals, however eminent they may be, can furnish no outlet for the surging national spirit of the country which may seek to find expression through other organisations unless Mr. Gandhi discovers his mistake in time and agrees to do away with the yarn franchise. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is perhaps the shortest address that has ever been delivered. It is a direct, forcible, face to face talk with the soldiers by the commander who is conscious that he sustained a severe defeat and does not desire to mislead his followers as to what exactly they may expect and where they stand. The vigour of imagination, the force of language and the vein of absolute sincerity, the characteristics of the Mahatma's utterances and writings certainly mark the Congress address; but as he has nothing to say that can be said to be new, the student of the address will necessarily rise from its perusal with no overpowering enthusiasm or sudden inspiration; on the other hand, the cold, merciless self-examination to which he has subjected the character and capacity of public-workers, must impart a feeling of despair whether, after all, the goal of swaraj will ever be reached. To us the presidential address reads almost as the sepulchre of the political career of Gandhi. The high idealism that Gandhi clings to will not appeal to the masses at present; it is doubtful whether they will evoke even a thought in the Government immersed in the pleasant task of legislating the Reading Ordinance into the law of the land. We must frankly say that it is almost like Lord Reading asking us to believe that Subhas Chandra Bose is guilty and is therefore in jail when Gandhi asks us to believe that swaraj would be attained by spinning because he is sure of it: or that the path to swaraj is by the Hindu showing his left cheek to the Muslim bully to beat because the bully has beaten on his right cheek. The bureaucracy would find its strength considerably increased by the confusion and evident purposelessness that characterise the conclave of Nationalist workers in Belgaum. Under an article headed "The failure of the Congress" the paper remarks:—By concentrating on what we may call domestic affairs, namely the relations between the Swarajists and the No-changers, the Indian National Congress has lost its glamour to young India, which drew inspiration year after year from the courageous exposition of views and policy that came from that quarter. The debates in the Congress are devoid of life and reality. By attempting to import into it cast iron business methods, we fear the Congress, as an appealing force to the masses, will be killed. Referring to the franchise resolution the paper says: In fact the entire debate on the subject has a false ring about it, unworthy of an assembly over which Gandhi presides. In spite of his appeal for all to think and act for themselves, they have all humoured Gandhi—to his own political destruction. The Haqiqat describes this year's Congress as the charkha Congress and remarks that the chief feature of it was that it started with and ended in charkha. The Oudh Akhbar says that it was the shortest presidential address ever read in the Congress and though under the present circumstances it may not be disappointing and unsatisfactory to the country yet certainly it cannot be termed praiseworthy. A correspondent writing in the Sada-i-Muslim favours the view of Maulana Hasrat Mohani that the attainment of complete independence outside the British Empire should be the goal of the Congress. Every Indian should insist on the change of Congress creed and definition of swaraj so that the world may be apprised of the real sentiments of the Indians. If the country really feels any sympathy for the oppressed Bengalis, it should boycott British goods and bring about the revival of the non-cooperation movement. Writing on the eve of the Congress the Aj says that the non-cooperation movement which was started with such vigour in 1920 at the Nagpur Congress will now be given an indecent burial at the Belgaum Congress. The paper hopes that Belgaum will not stigmatise its fair name by destroying the political existence of the Congress which the abandonment or the indefinite suspension of the non-cooperation programme evidently means. The same paper is strongly opposed to the yarn franchise laid down by Mr. Gandhi and remarks that while the propagation of khaddar is undoubtedly calculated to strengthen the national forces and weaken those of the enemy it cannot be made the life-work of the Congress or given a predominant place in the Congress programme. The Vartman writing on the prospects of unity in the Congress remarks: We do not want unity if it is to be obtained by sacrificing the ideal of independence. The goal of the Congress is not unity, but national freedom. The attempt to bring back the Moderates who are uncompromising opponents of republican ideals into the fold of the Congress is not only fruitless and imprudent but is also calculated to raise fresh dissensions within the Congress. Any talk of unity with those who disapprove of complete independence as the goal of the Congress is absurd. In another article the same paper remarks that the address delivered by Mr. Gandhi as president of the Congress is not only marked by brevity and lucidity which are Mr. Gandhi's characteristics but also by his ability to solve the most perplexing problems with great facility. The Aj says that Mahatma Gandhi's address makes it plain that a new era has dawned in the country. It shows that the era of words is yielding place to the era of work. The paper, however, takes exception to the Mahatma making the charkka a necessary condition for membership of the Congress. In another article the same paper regrets that the national assembly has now been converted into a charkha association. We do not hold it to be an honour for congressmen to become spinners, nor can we reconcile ourselves to the view that charkha alone can bring about India's emancipation.

The Liberal Federation.

Referring to the Lucknow session of the National Liberal Federation of India the Pioneer writes: It might have been hoped that the National Liberal Federation of India would attempt to give a lead to sober opinion in this country. But the discussions at Lucknow proved absolutely sterile. The Liberals are numerically weak; their organisation is notoriously imperfect. They would have shown political acumen if, learning from the bitter lessons of the past, they had concentrated on consolidating their position and had formulated a programme which would attract to their ranks the large and steadily increasing number of influential, thoughtful and broad-minded Indians who view with apprehension the situation which has been created in this country by insensate agitation. A perusal of the report of the proceedings shows that the Liberal Federation failed lamentably to rise to the occasion. Some of the sentiments uttered at Lucknow were worthy of Belgaum. The outstanding achievement of the Federation at Lucknow was its vehement denunciation of Government for its attitude towards criminal conspiracies in Bengal. According to the Indian Daily Telegraph the presidential speech lacks political steadiness or resolute patriotism. It traverses the usual grounds associated with that orthodox political school and where it attacks the Nationalists, it must remind even Dr. Paranjpaye of some unruly schoolboy with whom he might have had to deal. For this small man, immersed in Government conclaves, to speak in spiteful scorn and sit on judgment on selfless patriots like Gandhi, Das and Nehru is grossest piece of impertinence one could think of; and that a handful of retired ministers, who made up the grandiose National Liberal Federation, should have sat regaling themselves beneath this silly performance is the strongest condemnation of this fruitless show which the Liberals still persist in running with pathetic persistence. In one word Mr. Paranjpaye's address is intended not for the people of India but for the Government from whose embrace one fine morning the Swarajists rudely tore the doctor and his gang. Commenting on the speech of Mr. A. P. Sen, Chairman of the Reception Committee, it says: His criticism of the Swarajists is in the style and manner that must extort the respectful attention of those whom he castigates. His appeal for unity is tuned to almost Gandhian pitch for utter selflessness and height of patriotism. The Haqiqat remarks that the presidential address is replete with sarcastic remarks against the Congress and the Swarajists. It betrays a spirit which is calculated to promote disunion between the different political parties.

The Khilafat Conference.

Referring to Dr. Kitchlew's address at the Khilafat Conference, the Indian Daily Telegraph says that it is not likely to pour oil on the troubled waters in the Punjab. He has dipped his pen deep in communal ink. The Pioneer says: The leaders of the Khilafat Committee have no claim to speak for the Muslims and we believe that the Muhammadan community as a whole will realise that the resolutions passed at the Conference, notably that congratulating the Riffs, were conceived more in a spirit of hostility to the British than of sympathy with the people. The "warning" to England regarding any hostile action on her part against the Riffs was as uncalled for as it was vain, and it will be so regarded by innumerable Indian Muslims whose desire for the welfare of Muhammadans in other lands is as great as that of any of the Khilafat leaders. The Abhyudaya is not satisfied with Dr. Kitchlew's presidential address at the Khilafat Conference and remarks: Dr. Kitchlew's address has lessened rather than increased our regard for him. It is marked by an undignified attempt to minimise the faults of the Muhammadans and magnify those of the Hindus. Muslim organisation, separate representations and proselytisation is the burden of his address. The Hindus can get a glimpse into the Muslim heart through this address and beware.

The Muslim League.

The Indian Daily Telegraph congratulates the Hon'ble Syed Raza Ali for touching a deeper chord in his Muslim League address, and says: He refused to play to the gallery; he has displayed the qualities of a statesman at a time when such qualities might have been misunderstood even by his own followers who hanker for communal outlook in life. The address of the presidents of Muslim League and Bengal Provincial Muslim Conference come to hearten up nationalist workers that the canker of disunity has not yet eaten into the vitals of our Muslim brethren. The Oudh Akhbar says that the presidential address was very moderate in tone. Syed Raza Ali has faithfully voiced the views of the Musalmans on questions particularly concerning themselves.

The Punjab Political Conference.

The Muslim press is dissatisfied with Mr. Gandhi's attitude. The Sada-i-Muslim describes Mr. Gandhi's speech in the Punjab Political Conference as his greatest political blunder and an incitement to the Hindus against the Musalmans. It asks whether the principle of non-violence is to be applied only towards a powerful enemy, the English, and whether a strong party can be permitted to indulge in violence against the weaker one. The Al Bureed says that Mr. Gandhi's speech has dealt a severe blow to the trust which the Musalmans hitherto reposed in him and has gone a long way in provocating the Hindus against the Musalmans. If he wants to throw a challenge to the Musalmans we have no other alternative but to accept it.

The Maha Sabha.

The Indian Daily Telegraph recommends to the public the address delivered by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya at the Hindu Maha Sabha and says: His definite pronouncement that self-government and communal aggression in India cannot go together is the last word on the subject. The solution of Hindu-Muslim differences is not political pact; the appetite of the political minded Muslim has grown as he gets more. He has already outlived the Lucknow pact; he wants more. The only secret of Hindu-Muslim unity is in the strength of the Hindus. Power in the hands of Hindus would never be abused, as it is being abused by Europeans in Europe or Americans in America. And it were time that every Hindu concentrated on Hindu sangathan. The resolutions passed by the Hindu Sabha stand out as a powerful call to the community to combine and act. But the strongest call is Kohat, not for money which is the least, but for the determination that such things shall never be again. With the fall of the Congress the Hindu Maha Sabha has risen. And once Hindus display their strength and their will to unite and win swaraj the Muslims would rapidly fall in line with them.

Kohat riots.

The Al Bashir says that the attempt of the Hindu leaders to lay the entire responsibility of the Kohat disturbances at the door of the Musalmans is tantamount to throwing dust at the moon. This will result in widening the gulf between the two communities all the more and increasing a feeling of hatred and animosity between them. It is a pity that even Mr. Gandhi could not refrain himself from betraying national partiality. Writing in a similar strain the Medina describes the official report as quite impartial and free from communal hatred, religious antipathy and communal animosity. It takes to task the Hindu leaders for raising a hue and cry over it and calling it one sided. The Nizam-i-Alam resents the statement of Mr. Gandhi regarding the Kohat disturbances and takes to task the Muslim leaders for being pro-Hindu and thereby losing credit in the eyes of their community. They are sympathising with the Hindus and have not a word to say regarding the losses suffered by the Musalmans. The Arya Varta describes the official report as unjust, one sided and disappointing and regrets that the Viceroy did not accept Pandit Malaviya's suggestion of appointing a mixed enquiry committee of the officials and non-officials. By describing it as mere error of judgment the Government has tried to whitewash the criminal negligence of the local authorities in not protecting the Hindus. The Swadesh remarks that the fact that the official report on the Kohat affairs is one sided and lavishes encomiums on the official need not cause surprise to anybody seeing that the accomplices themselves conducted the inquiry. The attempt to throw all the blame on the Hindus and exonerate the Muhammadans of any share in it, the paper suspects, is the outcome of the new policy of the replacement of Sikhs in the army by frontier tribesmen.

Viceroy's speech.

Referring to the reply given by the Viceroy to a deputation of Bengal Muslims that waited upon him, the Leader says: The Viceroy concluded his observations with high-sounding advice to the community to work for the larger interests of the country and promote the cause of unity. Those familiar with the course of Indian politics will not be surprised at what is happening in Bengal and elsewhere. We will only say that whatever success it may achieve will be temporary and that those who are working for self-government have to fear nothing from it provided they go forward wisely and earnestly with their task.

The U. P. Legislative Council.

Referring to the Council proceedings in respect of the Leader's remarks about the President, the Indian Daily Telegraph expresses regret for the vote of censure passed by the Legislative Council against the Leader and opines that instead of moving a censure and taking vote on it, the purpose would have been served if the article had been formally brought to the notice of the Council and the President had administered rebuke. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that the commission of such an act of intolerance by such a powerful body is the precursor of a deplorable and disgraceful state of affairs not only for the press, but also for the country. Such actions of the Council deserve to be condemned. The Azad remarks that the attitude of the Council towards the Leader was totally unjustified and was the result of personal prejudices. In strongly criticising the action of the President in disallowing the resolution of censure against the District Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar the Leader has simply discharged its duty. The action of the President is calculated to stiffle public voice and adversely affect the right and power of the Legislature. The Haqiqat resents the Government opposition to the resolution of Babu Mohan Lal Saxena regarding the Hindu-Muslim disturbances and condemns the non-official members for sacrificing their independence of opinion simply to please the Government. They are in fact pieces of Government machinery and care little for national interests. In another article the same paper regrets that in all important questions which particularly concern the public the zamindar members of the Council always support the Government against the people. If they persist in thus ignoring the claims of the people whose representatives they are they will certainly lose their confidence.

The Benares Hindu University.

Referring to the refusal of the grant-in-aid to the Benares Hindu University by the United Provinces Council, the Leader says: Where would the several lakhs of money come from to give effect to the Lee Commission recommendations? More than enough money is always available for pampering the higher services but the Government becomes bankrupt when the question of more expenditure on beneficial objects comes up. The Hindu community must feel grateful to the Muslim members for the support they gave to the resolution. In spite of the opposition of the Finance Member we hope the Government will reconsider the position and respect the wishes of the Council in the matter by making a substantial provision in the next budget for rendering assistance to the university, though not at the expense of other educational institutions.

Political propaganda.

Strongly protesting against the Viceroy's Calcutta speech the Nejat exhorts the Indians to go on vehemently opposing the present system of Government and remarks: It is better to die than to lead a life of humiliation. It is deplorable that His Excellency is still labouring under the illusion that the Indians repose trust in the English Government. The Medina says that the policy adopted by the Conservative Government is a prologue to the Imperialistic policy of the German Emperor before the Great War for the destruction of which the entire world had combined. Indians should combat against this policy otherwise the seal of perpetual slavery will be impressed on their country's fate. The Vartman supports Mr. C. R. Das' scheme about village organisation in Bengal and remarks that if it is carried into effect it is bound to accelerate the political emancipation of Bengal. It asks the leaders of other provinces to emulate the example of Mr. Das. The Hamdard notes that the village panchayats have defeated their very object and have been converted into bodies for personal aggrandisement. It suggests that they can perform their functions properly only when they are made elective bodies and the elections are held every year. One Mr. Shiva Charan Lal Sharma writing to the paper remarks that the Hindus should feel ashamed that a considerable portion of their community should be declared criminal by the Government and handed over to the Salvation Army which is an organisation of the Christians and preaches Christianity to them. What right has the Government to cut off a portion of any community, declare it criminal and hand it over to the Salvation Army, an organisation of different nationality and religion? The Arti says that Lord Willingdon's recent speech on further reforms in India cannot satisfy the Indians specially when they know that the history of British rule in India is a glaring example of breaches of promises that even the Labour Government with all its high and noble principles sanctioned the promulgation of the black Bengal Ordinance. No honourable country can tolerate to remain within the British Empire as it is constituted at present. The Indians would consider it to be desirable to be a part of the British Empire were it a federation of Commonwealths constituted on a true basis of equality. Indians know that British rule in India is weakening them day by day and that though its withdrawal may prove very dangerous to them in the beginning, it will be to their permanent good ultimately. They will therefore do well not to be taken in by camouflage but to depend upon self-help only for the attainment of their political ideal.

Evacuation of Cologne zone.

THE Pioneer says that the British Government can have no desire to remain in Cologne a moment longer than is necessary to secure the fulfilment of Germany's obligations, and prompt compliance with the demands which will be based on the report of the Inter-Allied Commission of Control is the only course open to Germany if she desires to remove the distrust which at present exists in regard to her intentions and motives and to hasten the time when it will be possible to commence the evacuation of the occupied areas. The Leader remarks: The decision of the British Government not to evacuate the Cologne zone on the ground of the failure of the Germans to carry out the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles must be regarded as unfortunate. It will retard the process of reconciliation and produce a reaction in Germany. The decision implies the abandonment of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's policy of conciliation and a concession to the earlier French militarist policy.

Indians in the Colonies.

In a leading article headed "The Kenya Trusteeship" the Leader deplores some recent transfers of land to white settlers and says that the policy of land-grabbing and the ruthless exploitation of the natives in Kenya continues unabated. It was given out to the world that every other interest would be subordinated to that of the natives, but it appears that in Kenya while His Majesty's Government proposes Sir Robert Coryndon disposes. It was he who backed by the threat of the armed revolt of the white settlers brought about the abandonment of the Wood-Winterton agreement and it is he who is making the policy of the Kenya White Paper so far as it is in favour of the natives a dead letter. The Anand expresses surprise that England which strongly condemned the action of the Turks in expelling the Armenians from their territory does not protest against the measures of the South African Government in seeking to oust the Indians in Natal and asks whether such ways are calculated to strengthen the good will of Indians towards the British Empire.

The Singapore Naval Base.

Tha Vartman holds that the determination of the Conservative Government to establish a naval base at Singapore, the despatch of battleships from Great Britain to Australia and also their manufacture there and the rapid increase of the naval expenditure of America go to demonstrate that within the next ten years Britain and America will declare a terrible war against Japan.

The Congress.

Referring to the Congress presidential address the Mahashakti remarks: The address is as different from the speeches delivered in previous years from the same chair as the present Congress from the old. It is not a speech. It is a message, hope-inspiring, thought-provoking. It is not political discourse. It is an exposition of faith, as unshakable as he himself. It is a performance eminently characteristic of him. We see Mahatma Gandhi in every line of it. At another place the paper regards both the attendance and the results achieved at the Congress as a notable success. The Hamdam holds it dangerous to make the emancipation of India dependent on the propagation of charkha as the ideal set up by the Congress is not likely to benefit the country and may even jeopardise the cause of the Congress itself. The emancipation of Egypt is of primary importance for the success of India's struggle for liberty and it is to be regretted that no words of sympathy on behalf of united India were expressed for the Egyptians regarding the oppressions and tyrannies perpetrated there by the Conservative Government. In another article the same paper remarks: It is our earnest desire that every Indian should try his best to make the khaddar programme a success, as the stoppage of the import of Lancashire cloth is likely to awaken the Englishmen and make them realise their duties towards India. The Medina says tkat no one can doubt the truth of Mr. Gandhi's statement regarding the boycott of foreign cloth and if the country acts upon his advice the British attitude is sure to undergo a change. The Haqiqat has no doubts as to the failure of the Belgaum Congress and calls it imprudence to ask men to spin. No useful results are likely to accrue from the charkha resolution. India's future hope is centered in the Swaraj party only. The Nizam-i-Alam says that the presidential address, though short and simple, contains nothing new in it for the Indians. Mr. Gandhi has tried to assert his personality and to merge the Swaraj party in the Congress and strengthen the Hindu sangathan. It has given absolutely no lead to the country. The Hindustani favours the introduction of khaddar on economic grounds, but doubts its success as an instrument for the attainment of swaraj. It hopes that the meaning assigned to swaraj by Mr. Gandhi will go a long way in removing the distrust and misunderstanding prevailing in the country. The Sada-i-Muslim resents the attitude of the Congress in trying to defend the Hindus and throwing the entire responsibility of communal disturbances on the Musalmans. In referring to the Gulbarga riot the Hindus of the Congress seem to have been actuated with no other motive than to insult and defame the Nizam because he is a Muslim ruler. The Al Khalil says that by laying stress on the charkha Mr. Gandhi has rendered impossible the unity of different political parties. Musalmans are losing their power in the Congress which is falling under the control of the Hindus and is likely to become subservient to the Hindu Sabha. Mr. Gandhi owes his influence to the Ali Brothers only who continue to be loyal to him though thereby they are injuring the interests of the Musalmans. The Bharat Bandhu considers the Belgaum Congress session to be a great success inasmuch as it has re-united the two wings of the National Assembly and inaugurated a new era in the political life of the country by introducing the yarn franchise. On the other hand the Anand thinks that the adoption of the yarn franchise by the Congress will in no way bring the country nearer to swaraj, but on the contrary thin the membership of the Congress. It also opines that neither the spinning-wheel nor the boycott of foreign cloth can bring about the industrial regeneration of India and thereby help it forward on the path to swaraj and that the Belgaum Congress session has instead of pushing forward the political agitation in the country dragged it backwards. The Abhyudaya maintains that the Belgaum Congress was unique and indicative of Mahatma Gandhi's greatness and statesmanship. It was by no means a contemptible achievement of the Congress that party factions were buried and a common programme which would be worked up alike by all parties within the Congress was arrived at. The Aj remarks that now that the Congress has decided upon the propagation of the charkha it is incumbent upon the non-cooperators and the Swarajists to devote themselves whole-heartedly to the task and that other political parties also should help in the furtherance of the cause. If every Indian becomes independent in the matter of food and clothing and has not to look to the foreigners for these necessaries of life, India will surely have made one big move towards swaraj. The Vartman considers it to be a great misfortune for the Congress that Maulana Hasrat Mohani has resigned from it. The Congress has lost in him one of its oldest and truest leaders. By the Maulana's resignation the party of "complete independence" in the Congress has received the greatest set back.

The Liberal Federation.

The Leader opines that the Liberal party considers the establishment of responsible self-government the safest and soundest way of counteracting the disintegrating forces that are at work, and therefore the Federation has rightly indicated in clear terms what the party wants in the interests of the country. What the country needs is a well-considered and well-thought-out scheme which is suitable to its special requirements and is also in keeping with modern democratic conceptions. The Indian Daily Telegraph thinks that the Liberals are gaining ground and says: Unless Gandhi once more bursts upon the land with some powerful rallying cry, the Swarajists will go under, beneath the stroke of the Government and the steady progress of the Liberals and either merge in them or evaporate into nothingness. The Medina is sceptical about the success of the Liberal creed and remarks that resolutions passed at Lucknow will remain confined to paper only as the Liberals have neither the determination nor the capacity to act. The president has indulged only in abusing the Congress, non-cooperation and the Swarajists. The Hamdam takes to task the Liberal Federation for not accepting the invitation of the Congress for unity at such a critical juncture. The presidential address was rather a militant one and every attempt was made to undo all the efforts for unity and obstruct the path of reconciliation. The Aj remarks that the difference between the Congress presidential address and Dr. Paranjpaye's address at the Liberal Federation cannot but strike even a superficial observer; while the former breathes an atmosphere of love and peace, the latter fulminates every prejudice and even malice. It is regrettable that Dr. Paranjpaye should have presided over the Liberal Federation at a time when the leaders are engaged in establishing unity in the country. It is a redeeming feature, however, that there are not many among the Liberals of Dr. Paranjpaye's way of thinking. The Vartman says that a perusal of Dr. Paranjpaye's presidential address leads one to the conclusion that he belongs to that class of Moderates which lost its political influence long ago and which even now when the British policy regarding India has been completely exposed, regards British rule as a divine favour and a heavenly blessing. This address will act like a bomb upon the prevailing talk for political unity and is likely to completely block the narrow path for it.

The Muslim League.

The Hamdam expresses its gratification at the success of the Muslim League session and remarks that the League has fully discharged its duty in representing the Muslim sentiments regarding the Kohat disturbances and in refuting the misrepresentations spread in that connection. The resolutions passed by the League are not devoid of conciliatory spirit and have pointed out a path for cooperation with other political and communal bodies. The Abhyudaya observes that all those who know Syed Raza Ali or who have read his presidential address at the Muslim League will agree with us that his election as president of the League specially in December 1924 was unsuitable. Narrow outlook and the achievement of hollow selfish interests are his ideal. He has not only attributed the communal riots wholly to the shuddhi and sangathan movements but has also in a suppressed tone supported the Bengal Ordinance. We have no complaint against him. We only want the country and the Hindus to beware of the activities of the Musalmans.

The Khilafat Conference.

The Aj characterises Dr. Kitchlu's presidential address at the Khilafat Conference as disappointing and remarks: Although Dr. Kitchlu has left the political field for some time, yet the Indian public had not expected such an anti-Hindu spirit from him as he exhibited in his address. His remarks regarding the Hindu agitation in the Punjab and the Kohat disturbances are mere assertions without proof. It does not become a Nationalist leader like him to rule the Hindus alone as selfish. His assumption of the rôle of a party advocate is most regrettable.

The Hindu Mahasabha.

The Patriot, a new weekly from Lucknow, congratulates the entire Hindu community on the successful deliberations at the special session of the Hindu Sabha and says: We are sure that if both Hindus and Musalmans keep this point in view that communalism and nationalism cannot co-exist we shall soon see the end of the tragedies such as happened at Kohat and many other places during the last four years. We do not agree with those who are never tired of telling us that the causes do not matter as much as how we propose to bring about a unity, without which we are handicapped at every step in our national life. The paper entirely agrees with the president, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, when he said, referring to the recent Hindu-Muslim riot, that he was convinced that but for the weakness and cowardice of the Hindus some of them could have been averted. The Oudh Akhbar is opposed to separate communal bodies like the Hindu Maha Sabha as the Congress provides a common platform for all religious and political questions and remarks that the establishment of separate schools and places of worship for the "untouchables" will adversely affect the upliftment of the depressed classes and will afford a loophole to the high caste Hindus. The Sada-i-Muslim describes the Maha Sabha as an effective weapon of creating a majority against the Musalmans; while rejoicing at the independence of Nepal the Hindu Sabha ought to have shed a tear at the slavery of India. The Aj congratulates Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on the improvement which the recent session of the Hindu Maha Sabha marked over the previous ones inasmuch as the last session was a conference of the patriots who are really grieved at the misery of the Hindu community and not of orthodox conventional pandits and was also attended by National Muslim leaders. The paper, however, does not agree with the views of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya regarding the functions of the Maha Sabha and contends that if the Sabha is to help in the emancipation of the country it should have nothing to do with political questions and should by no means be conceded the rights of the Congress and that separate political organisation of a particular community will do more harm than good to the country.

The Cow Conference.

The Nizam-i-Alam doubts the success of Pandit Malaviya's scheme of establishing Hindu Sabhas and Cow Sabhas in every village and apprehends that they will prove a forerunner of disturbances at places where none has taken place as yet. Writing in a similar strain the Sada-i-Muslim remarks that the Hindu-Muslim rupture will become complete if Cow Sabhas are extensively established as in that case it will not be difficult for the parties to pick up quarrels.

The Bengal Muslim Conference.

The Advocate criticises the proceedings of the Conference, but praises the presidential speech. The paper says : The president who is a man of independent views made an excellent speech. He has truly expressed his inmost feeling and has given sound advice to his Muhammadan brethren. Referring to the event that some of the members left the meeting as a mark of protest against the speech of the president, the paper says : This is the first occasion that we find that men of prominence are behaving in such a rude way. Their present conduct has cast a great slur on the etiquette of the society and if such will be their behaviour what else can we expect from their followers and descendants. The Medina condemns the resolution passed by the Conference in support of the Bengal Ordinance and remarks that the Conference did not represent the views of the Musalmans of that province. The Conference and the resolutions passed are an open disgrace to the Musalmans of Bengal. We hope our great men will not disgrace Indian Musalmans by supporting the tyrannies perpetrated by the Government. The Abhyudaya says that it is clear from the address of Nawab Muhammad Husain, the president of the Bengal Muslim Conference, and the resolution passed against him by the Conference what the Muslim heart aspires to. The Musalmans now want to seek once again the protection of the Government and the Government also in order to weaken the power of the people is desirous of bringing the Musalmans under its influence by throwing to them crumbs from its table. The Hindus should bear it in mind that the angle of vision of every Musalman from Mr. Shaukat Ali downwards is one and the same. The Aj insinuates that the Conference was held at the instigation of the Government and that its real object was to help Lord Lytton in his desire to lay low the Swaraj party and place the life of the Bengalis at the mercy of the bureaucracy by making the illegal Bengal Ordinance the permanent law of the province. But it is gratifying, remarks the paper, that despite these preparations several patriotic and religious Musalmans did not deviate from the right path and refused to be led away by these machinations. The Anand reads in the Bengal Muslim Conference the revival of the old policy of patting the Muhammadans and pitching them against the Hindus and remarks that it is to be seen how many people are ensnared in this net by the tempting bait of the fifty-five per cent. of representation.

Constitutional advance.

A new weekly from Allahabad, the Muslim Views says : It appears expedient to devise ways and means of safeguarding the Muslim interests in the present reformed institutions and in all further instalment of reforms that may be granted. "Swaraj" with all its blessings, if it has any for the Musalmans, can very well be secured tomorrow if not today but nothing can compensate for a drop of Muslim blood shed in wanton annoyance. Let the Musalmans see that their separate interests are not only guarded and respected but are also not brought into conflict with other sister communities. Further, the paper remarks : Mr. Gandhi has submitted and completely surrendered to the Swarajists and in this way has retarded the progress of the country for a century still to come. It urges upon the Muslims the necessity of safeguarding their interests in the present constitution and in all future reforms. It would be unwise to adhere to the Lucknow Pact of the Congress and Muslim League which has brought down the Musalmans in India to the point of nonentity. As the Reforms Enquiry Committee has concluded their investigation time is ripe to pay particular attention to the demand of the Muslim community in all matters educational. Their education is being hopelessly neglected and something must be done to brighten the future. In considering all these matters we would suggest that a radical change be effected in the Government of India Act, the Local Board Act, the Universities Act and the Intermediate Education Boards Act to provide effective representations and due shares to the Muslims in all the representative and controlling institutions in the services of the country along with all their religious and social feelings and sentiments. Nothing short of it is likely to give peace or bring prosperity to the Muslims in India.

The Swaraj party.

The Pioneer, in a leading article, remarks : The unreality of the programme of the Swarajists has contributed to obscure vital issues, and if the Muhammadans concentrate on those issues and cultivate the discipline and solidarity of a vigorous party group they may be of service to their community and also to the country at large. Referring to the announcement that the Swarajists in the Central Provinces would accept responsibility to work the Reforms, the Indian Daily Telegraph writes to say that signs are that all the political parties in India will soon dwindle into helpless nothing as before the powerful communal move that surges all around. The firmer tone from inside the Muslim League is not for swaraj nor in the offer of thanks for the Hindus for standing by them during their Khilafat travail, but for the tearing up the scrap of paper known as the Lucknow Pact and reapportioning the loaves and fishes of office and seats in elected bodies so as to secure adequate Muslim representation from the Muslim standpoint. The paper advises those who work for the political emancipation of this country that they must make up their minds to take into account this new Muslim phase in Indian politics. It is not a question of what the Hindus have done to alienate Muslim feeling and action for swaraj: it is the actual reality that the Muslims suspect Hindus. And the price at which this suspicion can be removed is the revision of the Lucknow Pact into some near approximation of the Bengal Pact. Are the politicians prepared to pay the price? The Aj expresses its strong disapproval of the rumoured decision of the Central Provinces Swarajists to accept office and remarks that in the face of this decision there is little difference between them and the Liberals. If the local Swarajists are tired of the resumption of the administration of the transferred subjects by the Governor they should better leave the Ministerships to the Liberals and themselves support or oppose their action as the situation may demand.

The Bengal Ordinance.

The Leader congratulates the Bengal Legislative Council on having done the right thing in throwing out the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. The paper praises Lord Lytton's speech in the Council, which it says is marked by evident sincerity and worded in temperate language. It was their plain duty, remarks the paper, to throw the Bill out and it is glad that they did their duty patriotically and manfully under the leadership of Bengal's most active Liberal, Sir P. C. Mitter. The Pioneer, on the other hand, says that the decision will render it necessary for the Government to act independently of the Council. So long as Great Britain is responsible for the maintenance of order there will be no shrinking from full acceptance of that responsibility. Terrorism must and will be suppressed, whether the representatives of a limited electorate support Government or refuse their cooperation. It is lamentable that such a situation should have arisen. But when within a year attempt after attempt has been made to ship arms to this country for revolutionary purposes, when active Bolshevik propaganda is being carried on in the East, there can be no faltering on the part of those to whom the solemn duty of maintaining civilised government in India has been entrusted. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks that it is to the credit of the self-respect and patriotism of the Council that the Bill was rejected. India has considerably risen in status by the conduct of the representatives of Bengal in the Council. The Government have suffered a defeat, the most crushing in the annals of the British India. The Government have been defeated, but not yet disillusioned. They will still persist. They will certify the Bill that has been rejected. They may suspend the Council—the precious gift that the Swarajists want only to destroy. There is no hope at all of any broad-minded action on the part of the Government, which have gone on far too long defying the people. They would only get more excited by this display of popular will.

Crisis in Egypt.

THE Indian press continues to adversely criticise the British policy in Egypt. In a leading article headed "Britain's love for the Sudan" the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The most important product of the Sudan from the point of view of Manchester is cotton. And it is this that makes the Sudan so valuable to Great Britain and the Empire cotton growing corporation besides some plantation companies, so much so that Great Britain is ever anxious not to allow any one to come in the way of this precious possession. The Haqiqat is sceptical as to the success of the Moderate party in Egypt in the pending elections as the Egyptians are now intoxicated with the spirit of liberty and can hardly be duped by the tactics of the Zewar party which is probably secretly supported by the English. The Sada-i-Muslim says that the British Government's attitude towards Egypt is more deplorable than the murder of Sir Lee Stack and that a Government cannot be made responsible for an act which is the result of political intrigues. The Aj remarks that the terrorism which the British Government has spread in Egypt is altogether unjust. Britain's opposition of the desire of the Egyptian Government to refer the dispute to the League of Nations is based on the apprehension that no impartial judge will support its Nadir Shahi (absolute despotism). The oil of Mosul, the cotton of the Sudan and the man-power of India are necessary for the maintenance of the British Empire and so justice must ever yield to necessity in British politics.

Deputation to the Hedjaz.

A correspondent writing to the Mashriq remarks that the Indian deputation to the Hedjaz does not represent the general Muslim public of India as it has had no hand in selecting the delegates. The latter are the sympathisers of the Wahabis and the deputation can hardly be expected to serve any useful purpose. The Conference of the Muslim world should not be held at a place which is under the influence of the Sultan of Nejd.

Indians in the Colonies.

The Indian Daily Telegraph has little hope of any beneficent result from the Indian protest against the Natal Boroughs Ordinance and says: Natal knows how Indians are being treated in India, and surely would not respect our brethren more than we are respected here. The Anand says that despair has begun to prevail among Indians in Natal in consequence of the recent activities of the White Colonists to reduce them to the position of serfs and urges that if the British Empire is to be preserved the British Parliament and the British public must deal justly by the Indians and curb the high-handedness of the South African Government.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Al Bashir sees little chance of lasting peace being established between the two communities. It is only when a spirit of true nationality is created among the Indians that a foundation of real unity can be laid. The distrust prevailing between the two communities should be removed and separate representation is the only remedy. The Hindu Gazette regrets that no resolution of sympathy for the Hindus who have suffered in the Kohat and Gulbarga disturbances was passed by the Khilafat Conference. If the Musalmans had condemned their co-religionists for desecrating the holy temples the bad characters would not have dared again to commit such base acts and the Hindus would have been consoled. Under the circumstances how can we know that the Musalmans are as desirous of unity as the Hindus. The Gyan Shakti complains that at the last anniversary of the Anjuman Islamia, Gorakhpur, poems were recited which were calculated to hurt Hindu feelings. The Hindu advocates of shuddhi were described as bastards.

The Congress.

In a leading article the Muslim Views writes: Those looking forward for the communal uplift and the welfare of the country must return disappointed and disgusted from all that they have witnessed within the Congress pandal at Belgaum. Undeceived by Gandhian sophistries, no doubt, it requires some moral courage for the Musalmans to think freely and independently without the help of the filmy circumstances—Hindu obligations and benefaction, by working out their own problems and encouraging self-growth, self-expression and self-respect to safeguard Islamic culture and civilisation politically and morally. Further, the paper asks as to what length Mr. Shaukat Ali will go in pursuit of setting up blasphemy and anarchy, and says: Long months in mockery of hope and efforts have passed and now we must cease to look to these so-called leaders, who have no right to speak in the name of Musalmans and their failure to mete out popular Muslim feelings and sentiments with gross breach of faith of Islamic injunctions have torn from the heart of Musalmans all confidence and reliance. The Medina deplores that the Congress has belied all expectations and has failed to place any sensible programme before the country. The rejection of the resolution of condolence on the death of Lenin can only be interpreted as a demonstration of presidential autocracy. It is possible Mr. Gandhi may not have liked to displease his English friends to whom Bolshevism is a terror. The Oudh Akhbar takes to task the Liberal Federation for regarding Congress as a backward body which would merge itself into the Federation. Mr. Gandhi should try his best to make all the political parties join the Congress. The Mashriq opines that the presidential address is full of inconsistencies and contradictions and the greatest defect of the Congress is that it has no means for enforcing its resolutions. The Hindustani doubts the success of the Congress in uniting the Hindus and the Musalmans in view of the present communal bitterness. The Arya · Varta exhorts the Indians to carry out the programme chalked out by Mr. Gandhi, at least for one year. It describes Mr. Gandhi's voice as the message of liberty and remarks that it has emancipated us from the fear of death. It is the voice which Rama had raised against Ravan, Maharana Pratap had raised against Akbar and Sivaji had raised against Aurangzeb. The Sada-i-Muslim describes the Congress session at Belgaum as a failure and regrets that its resolutions have not gained the confidence of Indians. The Swadhin opines that the propagation of the charkha cult adopted at the Belgaum Congress cannot enable Indians to get rid of alien rule and that the Congress failed to place before the country a practical programme capable of spreading political education among the masses, which is the crying need of the time. The Surya remarks that Mr. Gandhi attached too much importance to the spinning-wheel in utter disregard of the conditions of this Twentieth Century and that the country cannot adopt it as an effective instrument for the attainment of swaraj unless Mr. Gandhi convincingly expounds its miraculous powers. The Garhwali points out that the adoption of the yarn franchise in the Congress makes it clear that the experienced Liberal party will perhaps be able to identify itself with that body. The Hindi Kesari says that at the Belgaum session the Congress has greatly narrowed its sphere of action, displayed utter indifference to its own traditions and altogether ignored many important political and economic problems and thus it is difficult to maintain that the last Congress session was a success.

The Liberal Federation.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: If the programme of the Liberal party entailed any sacrifice, the prospects of the party would be more bright than what the Liberal Federation showed us—merely abusing Mahatmas and Maulanas and actually giving indirect support to the Bengal Ordinance. The Swadhin thinks that the proceedings of the Liberal Federation were very promising and if they are carried out they can do more good to the country than Mr. Gandhi's charkha. The paper, however, regrets that the President of the Federation has increased the difficulties of political unity by unnecessarily condemning the Swarajists and the Congressmen.

Non-cooperation.

Under an article headed "Is non-cooperation dead?" the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: Our rulers need not be under a delusion, and re-start their wreckless career. Non-cooperation is not dead. It is a great mistake to say otherwise. Non-cooperation has carried in its train all that is necessary for the uplifting of the people. It has imparted a vision that is not going to die and will not die. It is true it is inactive, but, all the same, it is fully alive to give battle to the bureaucracy, whenever seriously challenged. In the opinion of the Muslim Views non-cooperation has failed hopelessly. The Leader says: There are few things more amusing or pathetic in present day public life in this country than the peculiar courage with which the apostles of the forlorn cause of non-cooperation go about trumpeting its achievements and abusing its critics whose every prediction has been justified by the event.

The Muslim League.

The Mahashakti is of opinion that the debate at the All-India Muslim League at Belgaum on the Kohat tragedy was wild and windy, striking out of the current of controversy beautiful bubbles, some iridescent emptiness and some emptiness without the iridescence, which it describes as putting the cart before the horse. In a communicated article the Hamdam remarks that the Bombay session of the Muslim League was more successful than the Congress, the Khilafat Conference and in fact other conferences held at various places in India. The presidential address of the League is in no way behind the contemporary presidential addresses in enthusiastic support of the national interests and the president deserves to be congratulated on successfully rowing the boat of the League through turbulent waters.

The Bengal Muslim Conference.

Commenting upon the Muslim Conference in Bengal the Hamdam remarks that the Government of Bengal is trying to win over the Musalmans in order to crush the Hindus. By holding out all sorts of inducements it succeeded in making the "loyal" Musalmans convene a conference in defence of the new Ordinance. But we want to warn the Government that it should not repose too much confidence in the resolutions of loyalty passed by the Conference. It is a pity that the Viceroy and the Governor of Bengal pay no regard to the signs of the time and the British officers in India intentionally want to remain in a "Fool's paradise". The Indian Musalmans should abstain from taking any step which may turn them into puppets in the hands of the bureaucracy.

Constitutional advances.

In a leading article entitled "The hope of India" the Pioneer writes: The stumbling blocks in the path of material advance are not insurmountable; most of the factors that make for poverty could be eradicated by scientific application and cooperative effort. The opportunities for genuine public service are boundless, and there is, indeed, no country in the world where greater benefits could be secured by co-operation for the common weal by the classes which enjoy educational advantages as yet inaccessible to the bulk of the population. There is, then, hope for the future of India. That hope would be brighter if less were heard of the glories of a mythical past and more of the practical possibilities of the living present. In an article headed "The only remedy" the Leader says: Between extremists at either end, one set of them constantly wavering between policy and policy and having consequently become forcible feeble at the best, the cause of the country is suffering enormously and steady progress is at a discount. There can be only one remedy for this undesirable and unhappy impasse. Moderation and reason must re-assert themselves and reign in the place of obscurantism and recklessness. In another words, salvation lies in Liberalism. In another article the same paper remarks: The present transitional system of government, while it is not responsible government, is not even genuine diarchy but a travesty of it hardly distinguishable from autocracy. The sooner the constitution is mended so as to bring into being genuine responsible government, not diarchical but unitary, the better for India and England and for the cause of good government.

The Bengal Ordinance.

Referring to the appeal made by Lord Lytton in his address to the Bengal Legislative Council the Leader says: No one can question the transparent sincerity of this appeal nor the goodness of heart from which it proceeded. A great deal can be done if officials and non-officials joined hands and earnestly tried to improve the lot of the people and to develop local self-government on sound lines. A courageous constructive policy is needed. But it is not in sight. It is one of the tragedies of the situation that such a good and sympathetic Governor as Lord Lytton should have rendered himself responsible for a measure of repression which has aroused almost universal opposition among Indians and made him the target of attack. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is understood that Lord Lytton has certified the Ordinance Bill that the Bengal Council threw out. This was expected. After all it is Lord Lytton and Lord Reading that are responsible to the British Parliament for the government of India, and not Mr. C. R. Das or Gandhi. Hence, while the Congress vote and the voice of the people rise against repression, the bureaucracy rolls on in silent unconcern—they are certainly not responsible to the people but to Parliament. The Weekly Observer says: That the measure was summarily thrown out by the Bengal Legislative Council is an index of the state of feeling prevalent at present in Calcutta. The absolute rejection of the Bill, however, does not mean it will not be passed into law by executive action. The Hamdam is gratified that the Bengal Council has rejected the Bengal Ordinance Bill and that the Governor of Bengal has totally failed in his attempts to win over the Musalmans by holding out all sorts of inducements and temptations. The members have discharged the duty imposed upon them as the representative of the people and deserve to be congratulated on. Writing in a similar strain the Oudh Akhbar remarks that the alleged anarchy in Bengal does not require any special law for its prevention and the efforts which are being made to suppress it are calculated to spread a more dangerous unrest throughout the country. The Haqiqat says that the Governor by adopting a wrong policy has alienated the sympathy and support of the public. The Anand points out that the failure of the Government to secure support to the Criminal Law Amendment Bill in the Bengal Council must convince it that it is not proceeding on right lines in regard to the suppression of anarchy and that it should only adopt such measures for the purpose as commend themselves to the public. The Aj is elated at the rejection of the Black Bill by the Bengal Legislative Council and remarks that although the Bill will be passed into law by means of certification, yet it is a matter reflecting glory on the Council and the future of India that popular representatives did not join hands with the Government in the suppression of freedom. In another article the same paper says that by rejecting the Bill the Bengal Legislative Council has maintained its own self-respect and preserved the honour of Bengal. The Vartman writes: The rejection of the "Black Bill" by the Bengal Legislative Council shows that the warnings, threats and counsels of Lord Lytton, the pleadings of Sir Hugh Stephenson, the prolonged stay of Lord Reading at Calcutta, and the secret midnight conferences in Government House have all proved futile. Lord Lytton must be rubbing his eyes at the unexpected decision of the Legislature and Lord Reading must be wondering as to what is going to happen in India. The Musalmans of Bengal voted against the Bill in spite of the certificate of loyalty given to them by Lord Reading. Such an insult to Readingism! And such a jest played upon the ex-Lord Chief Justice of England in his old age!

The Swaraj party.

The Pioneer says: Even Pandit Motilal Nehru has been constrained to admit that the Swaraj party has not up till now achieved anything definite for the country's good, yet instead of attempting to win swaraj by working the Reforms and thus demonstrating their fitness for it, the Swarajists obstinately persist in the very tactics which have proved barren in the past and are not a whit more likely to achieve "anything definite" in the future. The Leader observes that the best course for the Central Provinces Swarajists would certainly be to revise their policy once for all in the light of experience and to seek re-election on its basis. They may also consider Lala Lajpat Rai's advice who is reported to have said that the Swarajists should support the Moderates in office when they initiate or propose measures beneficial to the country. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The struggle between the Central Provinces Swarajists and the Swarajist leaders over the question of acceptance of Ministerships seems to be rather sharp. They are evidently tired of ennui in the Central Provinces and after the breezy scenes from Caloutta they would perhaps prefer action to sloth. But to accept Ministerships would mean to work the system of diarchy: a thing that even the Liberals are now ashamed of. The Medina remarks: We are perfectly sure that the Nagpur meeting will advise the Swarajists to accept the ministerial portfolios and the Swarajists will gradually step into the shoes of the Liberals, as if the Congress is gradually receding to the place whence it started. In another article the same paper remarks that the work of Mr. Das can neither be destructive nor a constructive one, but it is rather a political delusion and deception. The Swarajists have adopted this method as the sacrifice demanded by the movement of Mr. Gandhi was beyond their power and by degrees they will come to have the same angle of vision as the Moderates.

Kohat affairs.

The Pioneer remarks: The breakdown in the negotiations over the settlement of the Kohat question has happily turned out to be only temporary, and the signature of an agreement, now announced, is to be welcomed, although it would be premature to express a decided opinion on the reality of the reconciliation effected. In the opinion of the Indian Daily Telegraph the Kohat agreement does not place the Hindus in any favoured position: it is, on the other hand, a frank acknowledgment of the helplessness of the Hindus that they should have had to agree to such conditions. The Hindus of India will have Kohat rankling in their minds until they have come under the influence of sangathan. Even more poignant than the loot is this agreement: it is the helpless lamb walking into the lion's den, because it has no other to go to.

President of the Punjab Legislative Council.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Punjab has no hope: even the election of the president of the Council is made a communal question. The Muslims want a Muslim; and because the Muslims are combined and the Muslim candidate is backed by Sir Fazl-i-Husain, the Hindus are alarmed and are making a dead set. They are for a European president. Of course, what Sir Fazl wills is law in the Punjab and so the European president will go to the wall. The Hindus have explained their attitude with a frankness that must give heart to the bureaucracy.

The United Provinces excise policy.

The Leader characterises the Government resolution on excise administration as a somewhat curious document, and says: We daresay there has been a certain increase of illicit practices. It has been an age-old pretext of revenue and excise officers in opposing proposals of temperance reform that the consequence of the adoption of such proposals will be the growth of illicit practices. The paper asks: Are the Government content in the light of experience to make progress on the lines laid down by the Pim Committee and followed by the late Governor and the late Ministers, or at least to let well alone instead of showing themselves unduly revenue-minded? We derive some encouragement from the announcement made in the resolution of the institution of new licensing boards in seven more towns. May we humbly suggest that while this is good it is not enough? They should confer more powers upon such boards. They should resist the temptation of upsetting their recommendations because of the opinions of Collectors of districts. They should treat the boards as responsible and self-governing bodies should be treated. There is one point more of real importance to which attention must be drawn. They should not increase the interest of Collectors in excise administration. Collectors are purely revenue officers. Temperance reform is not their concern. The direction of reform in excise policy and administration should be increasing freedom for the department from the control of the District Officer and not vice versa. We are thoroughly satisfied that it will do no good to the cause of temperance reform to draw Collectors nearer to the Excise department. We think that Deputy Collector excise officers should disappear. The Ministers, acting through the Excise Commissioner in full control over officers of his own department and with no obligation to respect the views or wishes of Collectors, should be the real and sole authority.

Government and Muhammadans.

The Anand apprehends that the old policy of patting the Muhammadans and pitching them against the Hindus is being revived throughout the country in general and in Bengal in particular. The bait held out to Muhammadans of fifty-five per cent. of representation in Bengal forms part of the same game. The Swadhin says that the Viceroy's reply to the Muhammadan deputation offering them the bait of excessive representation in Services and Councils is designed to secure their support in the policy of repression and autocratic government. These regrettable and reprehensible ways of strengthening the autocratic alien rule in India may well serve the interests of the Government for a time but they are bound to prove very dangerous ultimately both to itself and the country.

The Fine Arts Exhibition, Lucknow.

Referring to the speech delivered by Sir William Marris in opening the Exhibition, the Leader remarks: It was a masterly address. It is difficult to say which to admire most, its elevated style and elegant diction, or its thorough grasp of a difficult and ethereal subject and the lucid presentation of the same in pregnant and expressive language, or the sound advice contained in it. Further, it says that if the Government revise their policy of indifference and actively help in the stimulation of Indian art rapid progress can be achieved.

The Bombay outrage.

The Indian Daily Telegraph, referring to the recent outrage at Bombay, says: The brave act of Lieutenant Siegert in standing between the victims and the murderers in the outrage is a golden link which makes us, for a moment, forget Lyttons and Readings with their hands dripping with Ordinances and repression, and that impels us to embrace the Britisher with esteem and affection. For the sake of unknown men and women, here were Englishmen willing to lay down their own lives simply because they thought that they must help the distressed. This is bravery; such acts bring man nearest to his Maker.

LUCKNOW:
The 17th January, 1925.

ZAFAR OMAR,
Publicity Officer, United Provinces.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 24th January, 1925.

The Paris Conference.

THE Pioneer says: The new Conservative Government in Great Britain are to be congratulated upon the success of the Paris Conference, which has been received with general satisfaction by the British and French people. Definite progress has been made from time to time, and the Paris Conference undoubtedly marks a further step towards the goal which responsible statesmen have in view.

Situation in the Hedjaz.

The Muslim press continues to show concern with regard to affairs in the Hedjaz. The Hamdam hopes that Great Britain will not create any fresh complications in the politics of the Middle East by interfering in the Hedjaz affairs and will not plunge into fresh troubles the Muslim world which has already been excited by the treatment meted out to the Muslim Powers by Great Britain. Any slight interference on the part of Great Britain will prove to be the last straw to break Muslim patience. The Medina resents the British High Commissioner's note to Ibn Saud and remarks: Sultan Ibn Saud is not a Sultan of Egypt and is not under British subjection. He is the master of about three hundred thousand Arabs and a friend to the Musalmans. If under international law air raids are lawful on account of the misdeeds of a few tribesmen the defence of the fatherland and the protection of life and property of the Musalmans is a divine injunction for them. In another article the same paper views with suspicion the activities of Zaid, the youngest son of Sharif Husain in England and suspects that he is busy in purchasing arms and ammunition there instead of prosecuting his studies. The Allies are still playing a deceitful game and striving to further their object and resorting to anti-Muslim policy. The Nejat says that Great Britain in spite of its professions of neutrality is interfering in the Hedjaz affairs and wants either to reinstate the Sharif's family on the throne or make the Sultan of Nejd act according to her policy. But this is impossible as the Muslim world is now well aware of the anti-Muslim policy of Great Britain. The latter cannot now check the growing power of the Musalmans and if she interferes in their religious affairs she will lose the moral and material support of the Indians.

Struggle for liberty in Morocco.

The Haqiqat is jubilant over the victories of the Riffs which have perturbed the European Powers. If the Riffs remain firmly united and do not fall a prey to the bribes offered to them by the European conspirators they are sure to achieve still greater victories and inspire an indomitable spirit of liberty amongst the Musalmans of Africa.

Indians in the Colonies.

Referring to the portion of the Viceroy's speech dealing with the position of Indians in South Africa, the Leader says: If the representations made to His Majesty's Government by the Government of India fail, His Excellency has no remedy to suggest except counselling patience. Should not the Governor General move His Majesty's Government to advise the Crown to disallow the Ordinance under section 65 of the South Africa Act? A policy of retaliation ought also to be adopted as a protest against the anti-Indian policy of the Union Government. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Lord Reading may claim relationship with the Orient on account of his religion, but certainly the man has no imagination, else he would have made capital use of the Natal Ordinance in the present excited state of the popular mind. The Leader says: In his speech in opening the winter session of the Indian Legislature Lord Reading announced that his Government was considering the question of deputing an officer to examine the lowland areas in Kenya from the aspect of their suitability for Indian settlement. Have the Government of India accepted the principle of racial segregation in Kenya and of the decision to exclude Indians from the highlands? The Indian Legislature ought to see that there is no sliding back in the matter. It should make it clear to Government that it is emphatically opposed to the introduction of the principle in Kenya.

Khilafat funds.

Commenting on the statement of the income and expenditure of the Central Khilafat Committee, the Leader remarks: The impression left on one's mind on glancing at the figures is that there was considerable waste of funds raised from an unquestioning public. What amount of good could not have been done to the community if a fraction of the amount raised had been devoted to the promotion of its well-being. The net result of all this expenditure of huge sums of money and Khilafat propaganda has been to intensify the communal feeling among Muhammadans, which has reacted on the Hindus, and to cause a serious set-back to the national movement. There is mutual bickering and fault-finding among the communal leaders who, very naturally, are trying to cast the responsibility for the existing deplorable state of feelings on shoulders other than their own. The Indian Daily Telegraph does not criticise the Khilafat accounts, but admires the cohesion and feeling of the seventy millions of Muslims in India who moved as one mass and collected nearly half a crore of rupees, not for their own good but for the good of their co-religionists far away. That is a remarkable testimony to the bond that binds the Muslims to their religion. Those interested in Hindu sangathan might well imitate them in finding the sinews of war for the purpose and profit by avoiding Muslim lavishness. The Oudh Akhbar says: Everybody including Maulana Muhammad Ali is aware that the miserable condition of Indian Musalmans is not such as to warrant the postponement of the rendering of the account in Heaven more than once.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Al Bashir accuses the Hindus of narrow-mindedness, short-sightedness, selfishness and bigotry and exhorts the Musalmans to forbear from taking any part in the emancipation of India and devote themselves to their national organisation and education. It further remarks that a time will come when the future generations of the Hindus will curse and condemn the Hindu leaders of the present day. The Hamdam takes strong exception to the resolution regarding the prevention of cow-slaughter to be moved in the United Provinces Legislative Council and exhorts all the Muslim and Christian members to oppose it. The efforts of the Hindus to stop the slaughter of cows by legislation will only result in aggravating the existing unpleasantness between the two communities and strengthening the tension between them at the cost of national progress and welfare. The Hifazat protests against the efforts of certain leaders to place the responsibility of communal disturbances at the door of the Government and remarks that they are chiefly the result of our religious prejudices and ignorance. Swaraj will be a Hindu raj and will be prejudicial to the interests of the Musalmans. The Al Khalil deplores that the Muslim leaders have been so solicitous for the maintenance of the spurious Hindu-Muslim unity that they have not dared to raise their voice against the excesses committed by the Hindus. The Prem publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap urging that the Hindu-Muslim problem can be easily solved if propaganda work in this direction is conducted on right lines. If the religion of love is propagated by a band of earnest workers who regard themselves to be equally Hindu and Musalman, most of the Hindu-Muslim dissensions can be removed. The Swadesh tries to make out that all the activities of the Government as reported in the press in connection with the Criminal Law Amendment Bill in the Bengal Legislative Council clearly go to show that it is the bureaucracy itself which sows the seed of discord between the Hindus and the Muhammadans by its policy of divide and rule in order to strengthen its own hold on the country. The Aj says that the Musalmans of Nagpur have displayed generosity, forbearance and patriotism in the settlement of the communal quarrels there and urges the Hindus to rise equal to the occasion and reciprocate this feeling by deciding not to play music before mosques as it is likely to disturb the Muslims in their prayers. The Mahashakti says: The Arabs failed to conquer the Hindus in spite of almost desperate efforts for three hundred years. Muhammad bin Kasim had succeeded in planting his foot in Sindh, but was ignominiously routed from Rajputana, and not long after his death Sindh was reconquered by the Rajputs. Indeed, the Hindus, as fighters, have proved unsurpassable even at the present day. Hindus are not inherently weak or cowardly, though surely not up to the mark in hooliganism. Their weakness, as sometimes manifested in relation to modern hooliganism, is the want of cohesion among them.

Hindu organisation.

The Pratap urges that the organisation of the Hindus should be carried on not for serving narrow political interests, securing official favour and Government service or retarding progress of other communities, but for removing the weaknesses, dissensions and evil customs prevailing among the Hindus. The Arya Mittra warns the Hindus against the activities of the Muhammadans to increase their own numbers by gaining converts from among the former by fair or foul means and says that Government too finding the Hindus to be weak and disorganised considers it desirable to pay greater attention to the strong and organised Muhammadans. The entire attitude of the Government towards the Kohat affair seems to confirm this suspicion. The Muhammadans under the pretext of propagating socialism are also gaining the sympathy of the Soviet Government. They are always dreaming of pan-Islamism and there appears to be lurking in the heart of some Muhammadans the desire to invite outsiders to invade India. As regards conversion of Hindus to Christianity the missionaries are having a happy time of it and the manner in which the Government has entrusted the reclamation of criminal tribes to the Salvation Army shows that the Indian Government renders the fullest possible help to missionaries in their proselytising activities. The Muhammadans and the Christians do not consider themselves to be Indians and thus they are a burden to India and serve to tighten the chains of slavery. The paper opines that if the Hindus become organised it is very probable that the Muhammadans and the Christians too may come to the right path. The Anand asks the local Government to provide a special grant for the spread of education among Hindus in rural areas where they are educationally more backward than the Muhammadans and says that it should have no objection to the proposal as it has already made a similar provision for special Muhammadan education in the province.

Persecution of the Musalmans in Siam.

The Hamdam protests against the religious persecution of the Musalmans in Siam, who are being forced to change their religion on pain of forfeiture of their civil rights and exhorts the Musalmans of India to send a strong deputation to Siam to represent Muslim feelings and views on the subject. It advises the adoption of jehad as a duty of every Musalman in case the deputation fails. The Medina says that it is a strange irony of fate that the followers of Buddha's religion which is a strong advocate of peace and non-violence and which even holds it to be a sin to injure even an insect, perpetrate all sorts of atrocities on the Musalmans whose sad plight in Siam should serve as a warning to the Indian Musalmans. It exhorts all Muslim associations which profess to be the guardians of Muslim honour to give their early attention to the matter.

The Viceroy's speech.

In an article headed "A pitiless criminal organisation" the Pioneer refers to the address delivered by Lord Reading at the new session of the Indian Legislature and thinks that Lord Reading's masterly exposition of the events which led up to the promulgation of the Bengal Ordinance and his justification of the policy adopted by his Government will carry conviction to every enlightened and unprejudiced observer. If any doubt remained in the minds of the Swarajists and their allies regarding the determination of the authorities in this country, backed up by His Majesty's Government, by the British Parliament and by British public opinion, to deal relentlessly with criminal conspirators in Bengal, it should effectively have been dissipated by Lord Reading's speech. The uncompromising attitude adopted at Delhi by His Excellency will be heartily welcomed by the sober and responsible elements in Indian society. In the opinion of the Leader Lord Reading's speech was full of platitudes and gave no indication of any progressive policy in the matter of constitutional advance, though it is a subject which overshadows all others. We will not say that the utterance was a disappointing one, for we did not expect that His Excellency would strike any note of far-sighted statesmanship, or would make a hope-inspiring statement. Indeed, it would have caused surprise if he had done so. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that, as anticipated, the speech of His Excellency the Viceroy will be read with disappointment by the politically-minded people. The Viceroy can send Subash to jail without trial; but he cannot make an Indian trust him simply because he asks for that trust. The country, in fact, is rudely awakened to a sense of utter insecurity by the happenings in the Bengal Legislature. The paper asks: What are Reforms worth in the face of the bureaucratic terrorism of which the Ordinance is the dreadful emblem? Today the attention of the people is concentrated on the contemptuous disregard of public opinion on a matter that has exercised the intensest feelings all over the country. In the name of self-respect we must protest against Lord Reading assuring us that the Bengal Ordinance would not interfere with the ordered progress of the country and the Reforms. Further it says: Nothing that Lord Reading has had to say on any other subject would, after this, be read with patience or appreciation by the public. His reference to the Reforms was as hollow as his anxiety over the Hindu-Muslim dispute was overdrawn. The message of patience from the author of the Bengal Ordinance to a nation seething with humiliation and dismay at the Natal Ordinance is not likely to appeal. It is not patience but despair that has possessed the people. And Lord Reading's speech has made it clear that there is no remedy. Never was there such utter helplessness and irresolute wavering in the popular mind in India as at the present time.

The Taxation Committee.

The Hamdam regrets that no efforts have hitherto been made to voice the sentiments of the poor Indians in the evidence given before the Taxation Committee. In fact nothing could be expected from a committee which was appointed in the teeth of opposition of the Legislature and against the wishes of the public and it fears that Indians will be forced to bear the burden of additional taxation. Such things can be done in India where autocracy is the order of the day, while it is asserted before the world that the Government is being run on constitutional lines. This state of affairs can only be remedied if the present Reforms are scrapped and fresh Reforms on democratic principles are introduced.

Problem of medical relief in Bombay.

Referring to the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay on the extension of medical relief in the villages the Indian Daily Telegraph says: It serves to sharply remind us amidst our struggles for swaraj and the self-laudation of the British on their grand work done in India, of the condition of savagery in our villages as distinguished from the enlightenment in towns. A standing scandal against the efficiency of the system of government in this country is the woeful neglect of medical relief. To the villager, from whom the tax is gathered with unrelenting regularity, medical relief on modern lines is practically unknown. On the principle that something is better than nothing the paper welcomes any move in the direction of providing better medical relief. But it opines that it is more effective to acknowledge the benefits of the indigenous systems, and to strive to bring under the folds of some organisation and training the thousands of hakims and vaids who are to be found in the villages. The medical graduate is sure to fail, because his prescriptions are not likely to be made. The Government ought to come forward to subsidise the village physician, to enable him to prepare his medicines on a large scale to distribute them to the poor and to train apprentices.

Constitutional advance.

Quoting passages from the views expressed by Mr. Oswald Moseley in an interview with a representative of the Bengalee, the Leader writes: Some of the best friends of India in England are misled by the mendacious propaganda which is carried on by opponents of Indian progress, and it is very regrettable that there is no organisation of our own to counteract it by means of publicity. The result is that the reactionaries are having it all their own way except for the British Committee on Indian Affairs under whose auspices Major Graham Pole, Mr. John Scurr and others have been doing admirable work in circumstances none too encouraging. Commending the observations of Mr. Moseley regarding the policy of terrorism to those who believe in methods of violence and those who inwardly sympathise with them, the paper hopes that those who rely on methods of terrorism for achieving the freedom of India will ponder over his observations and derive instruction therefrom. Indian Liberals have also been trying to emphasise this truth on the public and the paper is glad that Mr. Moseley has so forcibly and lucidly pointed out the direction in which lies the prospect of assured progress. What is needed at present is concentration on political issues without neglect of economic questions. Political power is essential for economic amelioration.

The Bengal Ordinance.

Commenting on the certification of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill, the Pioneer says: The action of the Governor of Bengal will be welcomed by the law-abiding section of the community, however unpalatable it may be to certain politicians who obstinately refuse, in the face of the clearest evidence, to recognise the gravity of the situation with which the Bengal Government are confronted. The comparative tranquillity which Bengal enjoys at the present time is entirely due to the salutary effect of the arrests which have been authorised under the Ordinance. The Leader observes that as expected Lord Lytton has committed the fresh blunder of certifying the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. To have certified the Bill was on the part of Lord Lytton easily a greater blunder than his recommendation to the Governor General to promulgate the Ordinance of October last. We are perverse enough to continue to hold that no adequate case was made out for the Ordinance and none whatever for the use of the Regulation III of 1818 or for the certification of the Bill as Lord Lytton has now done. The Government's disregard of Indian opinion has been unmistakable, persistent and increasing. Referring to the Viceroy's speech in the Indian Legislature the paper says: The whole attitude of Government in the matter has been one of flouting the most clearly and widely expressed public opinion. The entire country, with the exception of a handful of misguided fanatics, abhors the methods of political assassination and violent crime. But in spite of this fact, it cannot but view with the greatest misgiving the enactment of a measure which substitutes the reign of discretion for the reign of law, and makes no provision for the speedy trial by a judicial tribunal of those whom the executive believe to be guilty. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The most natural piece of intelligence that one had in the course of the last few years of political sensations is the certification of the Bengal Ordinance Bill by Lord Lytton. In fact certification is as natural a legislative process nowadays as the assent of the Governor to any Bill. And in this particular case certification was almost a predetermined factor if the popular elements asserted as they did assert. The Liberal Minister has eagerly come forward to proclaim that only "Liberal methods" should be pursued; which of course mean protest and petition and repetition of the mantram of the Rowlatt Act. The loyal Muslim is, as might be expected, certain that the Government have done right. But what is to be the answer of the Swarajists? They represent now the only force that counts in the country. In other words, what is the view of Mr. C. R. Das? The Advocate, in an article headed "Lord Lytton's Obstinacy," writes: The obstinacy of Lord Lytton is leading him into a series of blunders and the result of the latest one will be that Bengal will remain for five years under the reign of discretion or indiscretion in the place of the reign of law. The Vartman remarks: The Governor of Bengal may be thinking that the national movement will now come to an end. But he does not know how can that movement now die out which could not be suppressed even by the Rowlatt Act, Martial Law and the firing upon innocent persons by machine-guns. He should bear in mind that this movement will cease only that day when Indians will have attained swaraj. The Azad is gratified at the rejection of the Bengal Ordinance Bill in spite of the persuasions of the Government and congratulates the people of Bengal on their political sagacity. It thanks the Bengal Musalmans for wisely adopting the right course and making common cause with the Hindus. The Hind-i-Jadid says that now that the Government has witnessed its discomfiture and tested the force of patriotism and the spirit of nationalism, it should, to safeguard its own honour regard the Swaraj party as the representative of entire India. Repression serves only to stimulate the national movements instead of suppressing them. The Government should now release all the prisoners on bail, prosecute them in open courts and strike off Regulation no. III from the Indian Statute Book for good. The Oudh Akhbar says that the reliance of the Pioneer on the strong arm of British officials can only be justified if the present Reforms are admitted to be a total failure. Every political party in every province of India has individually opposed the enforcement of the new Ordinance in Bengal. Anarchy and disaffection should certainly be suppressed, but not through the new Ordinance or through the exercise of special powers, or by destroying the political life of the country or by unnecessarily harassing innocent people. The Anand remarks that if the Bengal Government after what has happened to the Criminal Law Amendment Bill in the local Legislative Council does not realise its mistake and still considers it to be its duty to adopt a repressive policy it cannot inspire feelings of love and good-will among the people, but will only accentuate discontent which will be harmful both to the Government and the people. The Swadhin opines that if the Government spreads panic and terrorism in Bengal by certifying the Criminal Law Amendment Bill despite its rejection in the local Legislative Council it will only establish that inebriated with autocracy it is reducing the Councils into a mere plaything. The Hindi Kesari says that every Indian will congratulate the Bengal Legislative Council on the sense of devotion to duty displayed by it in rejecting the "black Bill" and thereby frustrating the designs of Lord Lytton to legalise his bludgeon-rule in Bengal for five years.

The Swaraj party.

The Leader says that Mr. Moti Lal Nehru's Nagpur speech is the latest evidence that has been furnished to the public that the points of view of Swarajists on one side and Liberals on the other still diverge materially and that unity as distinguished from cooperation between the parties is as yet unattainable. The Haqiqat advises the Swarajists to accept the Ministerial offices and take into their hands the administration of transferred subjects in order to expose the defects of the Reforms. The Pioneer refers to a speech made by a Swarajist legislator at Nagpur and says: The Swarajists could no more "run the Government" in India than they could control the solar system, and their ridiculous pretensions emphasise the futility of parleying with such people. In an article headed "Bengal Ordinance in Assembly" the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The Swarajists long ago ceased to play the part of persistent obstructionists. It would now seem that they have willingly taken up the rôle of the clown. The Oudh Akhbar approves the decision of the Nagpur meeting and remarks that as far as national interests are concerned it is an accepted fact that without a change being effected in the present constitution it will not serve a useful purpose to accept the Ministerial posts. The Zulqarnain remarks that swaraj cannot be attained through the charkha or through the obstructionist policy of the Swarajists. The day is not far off when the Swarajists will also adopt the ways of the Liberals and will not hesitate from visiting the bungalows of the Government officials for consultation and exchange of views. The Aj says that the willingness of the Nagpur Swaraj party to accept "true and real responsibility" and the appointment of a committee by it to consider the existing situation with a view to bring about the necessary changes in its policy are but a farce. The time has certainly not come when the Swaraj party should consider the question of revising its policy. If the Swaraj party is tired of obstruction it should confess that in unequivocal terms. The Abhyudaya remarks that the executive committee of the Nagpur Swaraj party has acted wisely in deciding that the members of the Swaraj party will not accept office, because its acceptance would have been equivalent to laying an axe at its own feet.

President of the Punjab Legislative Council.

The Pioneer, referring to the appointment of the new President of the Legislative Council in the Punjab, considers that it is unfortunate that the desirability of electing a President by a unanimous vote did not seem to have occurred to the members of the Punjab Legislative Council, and the voting for Mr. H. A. Casson's successor appears to have run almost entirely on communal lines. Still it is satisfactory that, on taking the chair, Mr. Shaikh Abdul Qadir was congratulated by and assured of the support of all parties. The new President will have a difficult task before him as the events preceding his election have shown, and his success will depend in no small degree on the readiness with which both shades of opinion are prepared to rely on his impartiality.

The Agra Tenancy Bill.

The Abhir Samachar remarks that if the Agra Tenancy Bill is passed into law in its present form it will very seriously injure the interests of the cultivators and their life will become one of slavery to the zamindars, the slaves of the Government, and urges that if the Government and the zamindars do not listen to their just demand and pass an arbitrary Act they should prefer death rather than yield to such an injustice and they should not stop their agitation till that Act is suitably amended.

The Bombay outrage.

The Advocate says that the tragic drama which was enacted on Malabar Hill has struck the whole country with horror and disgust. It is the duty of the Government to find out the real culprit and book him at once. Under no circumstances should he be allowed to go scot free, otherwise it will cast a great slur on the prestige of the British Government. It is the bounden duty of Lord Reading to lead all his mighty forces in tracing out the real culprit of this horrible crime. The Indian Daily Telegraph fears that the Mumtaz Begum affair will cost the Maharaja of Indore very dear. Already there have been ugly rumours of his voluntary abdication, hardly contradicted. Close upon the heels comes this sorry scandal implicating intrigue in high quarters. But the paper has one consolation. At the head of the Indore administration today is a distinguished statesman Mr. Narasinga Row who will fight every inch of ground before allowing the Ruling Prince to be made a scapegoat by his designing courtiers. The Leader does not make any comments but advises those papers which are writing on the subject to remember that every person should be presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proved, and that journalistic zeal ought not to outrun certain well-recognized canons of fair play.

Exportation of monkeys.

The vernacular press is much perturbed at the export of monkeys which are held sacred by the Hindus. The Hindustani resents the slaughter of monkeys in connection with rejuvenescence experiments and exhorts the Hindus to protest strongly against this brutality. Writing in a similar strain the Oudh Akhbar apprehends that the Hindus will launch a great agitation against it. The Medina sympathises with the Hindus on the export of the descendants of "Hanuman" and regards the expulsion of the ancestors of Darwin as a good omen for India. The Swadhin remarks that as monkeys cause immense loss to the people there should be no objection to their exportation for scientific purposes, but that if the people are ready to bear this loss cheerfully under the influence of religious sentiments it is futile to oppose their strong religious susceptibilities. The Aj favours the deportation of monkeys from inhabited areas to jungles, but not their exportation to Germany for thyroid gland treatment.

Revolutionism.

The Vartman publishes two articles on "Revolutionism" in which it points out that as a result of the failure of peaceful and constitutional methods for the attainment of liberty and the determination of the rulers to dub the subject people as anarchists and revolutionaries and subject them to boundless and impudent repression so as to suppress the national movement for freedom, Indian youths are now inclining towards red revolution. It describes how youths come to entertain revolutionary ideas when national efforts at emancipation are defeated with brute force by foreign Governments. The success of revolution in European countries, England, Italy and Russia serve as a historical allurement to India. The paper next expounds the principles of anarchism and says that the time when the influence of Mahatma Gandhi's personality will after his failures vanish in the political field the ideas of armed anarchism will be born in the mind of Indian youths. Alarmed at this fear the Government of India do not want to allow even the smallest sprouts of anarchism to remain in India. This is the reason for enforcing the black Ordinance in Bengal so autocratically. But can it be proper for a foreign Government to do things against the feelings of the people? Is it not an open proclamation on its part that this Government has allowed to be forfeited all rights and sanctions of keeping administrative authority in its own hands!

Bolshevism.

The Vartman points out that if moneyed classes in the world continue to covet other's land and wealth and ruin the poor, the number of capitalists will decline and the poor who form the majority will one day or another establish a socialistic republic by subverting the capitalistic rule.

Political propaganda.

The Jain Martand in the course of an article headed "Expiation of Sin" remarks: "The Indians who are the descendants of great rishis are today insulted everywhere in the world, and are slaves even in their own home. Those people whom they allowed to set their foot into the bosom of their mother under the influence of their principle of universal brotherhood are today engaged in sucking the blood of the mother. If the Indians claim that they alone have a right to the milk of their mother and that no power should dare to grind daily their brethren in the mill-stones of humiliation in foreign countries by making them black coolies against their will, they are repressed. If one were to say that India is of Indians and that aliens could live here only as friends of the world, then those intoxicated with the wine of self-interest are seen appearing with irons, fetters and gallows: . . Let us boycott foreign cloth, the main prop of dependence." The Pratap exhorts political workers to devote themselves to village organisation, impressing upon them that though village work may not bear fruit immediately, it will greatly increase their strength in the long run. The Swadesh writes: We will do well to be ready to face repression. It can do us no harm if we do not bow down before it. The more the Government indulges in repression the more it weakens itself and strengthens us. If we but remain firm and courageous our future is assured and our efforts for the attainment of swaraj bid fair to be crowned with success. The Pratap publishes a letter from Lala Har Dayal from Sweden stating that he is working for the Labour movement and that he has now become a regular contributor to the Karambir of Lahore and expressing the opinion that India will attain freedom and swaraj through sacrifice and courage. The same paper also publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap from Paris in which he controverts the statement of that paper that until Indian Muslims give up the idea that they come from Arabia, Persia or Kabul they cannot love India and remarks that Indian-Aryans can under no circumstances consider Kabul or Persia to be foreign countries. It was Mahmud Ghaznavi who separated Afghanistan from India and sowed the seeds of dissensions between these two countries. These dissensions which were created by Mahmud Ghaznavi for the attainment of his selfish ends proved advantageous to other foreign ruling Powers also and are even now useful to the British. This is why they still prevail. The British may say what they like and those who eat the crumbs from their tables may ditto them but an Indian should never say anything against the Afghans or the Persians who belong to his own race. When the Punjabis and Madrasis are fellow-countrymen the Afghans and the Persians can never be considered to be foreigners. This feeling should be propagated throughout the whole of India, Afghanistan and Persia.

Situation in Egypt.

In a leading article the Pioneer refers to the coming Egyptian elections and remarks: The new Government in Egypt have a strenuous task before them in their fight against the corruption and intimidation which have gained for the Wafd party an unenviable notoriety. The Wafd party is well organised and it has shown that it is utterly unscrupulous in its methods. The contest, therefore, is likely to be a keen one. The success of Ziwar Pasha would be in the best interests of Egypt, which might then look forward to a period of stable government. But the inexperience of the electorate which lends itself to facile exploitation by unscrupulous politicians is a factor in favour of Zaghlul and his party. The Aj remarks that the subjection of the Sudan is now complete with the removal of its army from Egyptian control. Old Egypt has been divided into two. The Sudan has been sacrificed to meet the requirements of the Manchester manufacturers. And Egypt has been awarded subjection in the name of freedom in order to maintain intact Britain's control over India. It is to be seen where this terrible imperialism and commercial greed would end.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Nejat views with suspicion the warlike preparations of Amir Ali whom it characterises as a mere toy in the hands of aliens and one who has inherited disloyalty and faithlessness from his aged father. It is the duty of the Musalmans not to allow any member of the Sharif's family to carry on intrigues against Islam. The Sada-i-Muslim regards the convening of the Muslim Conference and the proclamations of Ibn Saud as the outcome of British propaganda. If he is independent enough to establish relations with foreign nations the Musalmans can repose confidence in him, otherwise there is no difference between him and Sharif Husain. The Mansur remarks that it is prudent for British officers not to interfere in the affairs of Islamic States as it will antagonise the Muslim world against them and they shall never be able to appease the Indian Musalmans. The Hamdam bitterly resents the action of Amir Ali in detaining the Indian deputation at Jeddah and remarks that in case the deputation is forced to come back the Indian Musalmans will naturally conclude that there is some other Power behind the curtain, which has stood in their way. On the basis of the obstacles thrown in their way by the Indian Government in the matter of passports they will be justified in suspecting Britain as the cause of all this trouble.

The Natal Ordinance.

Referring to the address presented to His Excellency the Viceroy, the Pioneer observes: The address, while putting the Indian point of view with cogency, did not overlook the existence of certain economic difficulties confronting South African statesmen in their handling of the situation. This recognition of the need for a sober interchange of view is admirable and the reply given by the Viceroy should make it clear that on this subject both the Government of India and responsible European and Indian opinion are at one.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the strained relations between the Hindus and the Musalmans the Success observes: What lies at the root of the mutual hatred and enmity is religious antagonism. It is this religious antagonism which, however, carried to extremes, has many a time turned gardens of Eden into pools of misery and human degradation. We may join hands with each other for some time like hypocrites but real peace and lasting tranquillity can only be attained if we, from the bottom of our hearts, accept the Vedas and Rishis as from God, and the Hindus likewise expel all malice from their hearts and accept the Holy Prophet as a true prophet from God. Remember that it is this course alone which can bring about a real union between the Hindus and the Musalmans. It will act like water and wash away for good all dross from the hearts.

The Haqiqat opines that the Hindus and Musalmans can never be reconciled to each other unless the Lucknow pact of 1916 is revised and the Musalmans are assured that their just rights as regards their representation in public bodies and their share in public services will not be assailed by the Hindus. The progress of the swaraj movement depends only on the removal of mutual ill-will and distrust. The Bharat Dharma publishes an article by Rao Gopal Singh Bahadur of Kharwa who deplores the existing Hindu-Muslim dissensions and pleads for unity between the two communities saying that even the establishment of swaraj will be of no good, if Hindus and Muhammadans remain hostile to each other and thereby ruin the country. The bellicose attitude of the Muhammadan hooligans cannot but react on the Hindus and prepare them for retaliation with the result that blood feuds will become the order of the day to the misfortune of their common country.

The Viceroy's speech.

With the exception of the Pioneer and the Weekly Observer which applaud the Viceroy's speech at the opening of the Indian Legislature the papers are generally dissatisfied with it. The Weekly Observer characterises His Excellency the Viceroy's speech as a notable pronouncement, surveying comprehensively the whole field of Indian administration and politics, internal as well as external, and remarks: It is to be hoped that the new legislation will not only scotch the terrorist movement but also help the people of Bengal to realise that the Government's action, despite widespread opposition, has saved them from a very real danger. The Pioneer says: The speech has evoked from a section of the anti-British press a torrent of abuse which, when the great position occupied by His Excellency is considered, may justly be characterised as indecent. Among the responsible classes outside the ranks of strenuous politicians there is a strong sentiment in favour of the measures adopted to suppress revolutionary conspiracies which, if unchecked, would bring ruin upon India. The opponents of the Government, however, are impervious to reason or argument, and indifferent to the fact that their proceedings are regarded with hostility by the responsible members of every political party in England. The Nejat describes the Viceroy's speech as an ode in the praise of his own Government and remarks that it has only sprinkled salt over the wounds of the Musalmans. It shows that the greatest protector of the bureaucracy has not been the least affected by our wailings and lamentations and that the late Chief Justice of England is not at all prepared to give up his autocracy and despotism. The Hindustani regards the speech as meaningless and disappointing and remarks that Indians can never agree with the views expressed by him. The Garhwali says that whatever hopeful view the Viceroy may take of the economic condition of the country the grim spectacle of dire poverty and gross ignorance among the masses tells a different tale. As regards the Viceroy's remarks about the position of Indians in South Africa, the paper observes that if the Government of India had courage and sympathy it could get the Natal Borough Ordinance repealed, or at any rate could adopt the policy of retaliation. The Anand remarks that the speech cannot satisfy the Indians. The Government of India should accord stronger support to the cause of Indians in the Colonies before it can claim to have championed it effectively. His Excellency's statement regarding the Bengal Ordinance Bill and his reticence over the Reforms Enquiry Committee go to show that the Government of India's attitude towards Indian aspirations is getting unfavourable. Hindu-Muslim unity and vigorous political agitation are an absolute necessity to counteract this. In the opinion of the Abhyudaya there is nothing in the speech which may give indication of the Viceroy's farsightedness, political sagacity and loving solicitude for the people. A perusal of the speech leaves the impression that a grown up person has attempted to coax or mislead children. Not in one but in several matters His Excellency has done whitewashing, and concealing the real picture has placed before the members a spurious one. The Vartman writes: The speech was a sort of phonograph on hearing which the members of the Assembly must have thought what a nice record the British have sent which sounds the same note every time. It appears that the farce enacted by the Viceroy has come to an end and that he too wants to leave India discredited like Lord Curzon.

India's leper problem.

The Viceroy's appeal for help to fight leprosy has been well supported by all sections of the press. The Pioneer remarks: Seldom has a Viceroy called for public support of a campaign in which the whole of India is more deeply interested than on Tuesday, when Lord Reading at Delhi launched his timely "appeal for the moral and financial support of all classes in India in my endeavour to remove the menace of leprosy from our midst." The spread of knowledge of modern discoveries in regard to the disease will encourage people to insist on active search for its victims. It will hearten the victims themselves with the knowledge that theirs is not an incurable malady exposing them to the disgust of others, and that facilities exist for them to be restored to full health, a restoration which will be all the speedier if they present themselves for treatment as soon as they are aware of their condition. This is a form of propaganda which should be welcomed in every province and State in India, since leprosy is not local in its incidence, nearly all parts of this country being, in greater or less degree, affected. The Leader says that the appeal of Lord Reading should meet with generous response from those who are not insensible to the terrible sufferings of those afflicted by this dreadful malady and who are not blind to the danger of its spread. If the community makes up its mind to help this labour of mercy, we have little doubt that in a generation or two the disease can be extirpated, as it has been in other countries, where a systematic campaign was waged against it. The humanitarian campaign started by Lord Reading has received the blessings of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and we hope that sufficient funds will be forthcoming for achieving the noble purpose in view. In the opinion of the Indian Daily Telegraph it was a great humanitarian movement that His Excellency the Viceroy inaugurated when he gave his support to the movement to eradicate leprosy in India. Never before had any Viceroy used his influence and position to better purpose than did Lord Reading when he undertook to give the lead to the philanthropic work connected with leprosy work. It is essential, if the movement is to succeed, that the leprosy homes should be devoid of missionary influence.

The Reforms.

Referring to the "anti-Indian propaganda" started in England the Leader says: The die-hards are at work. They have virtually a clear field before them. At such a time is it not the duty of Indians to close up their ranks and to offer united constitutional opposition to the forces of reaction? Any policy which has the effect of strengthening the hands of the reactionary forces ought to be abandoned as suicidal at the present juncture. Referring to the rumour that the Reforms will be shortly withdrawn as the people failed to cooperate in working them out, the Hamdam remarks that Indians regarded it as an insult and disgrace to cooperate in the working of the Reforms which are mere crumbs from the table of the British Parliament. Even the confirmed cooperator will not now venture to cooperate with a Government which has displayed such a spirit of autocracy in the enforcement of the Bengal Ordinance.

The Nagpur compromise.

The Hamdam expresses its dissatisfaction at the compromise arrived at between the two communities and regrets the want of toleration on the part of the Hindus. The Sada-i-Muslim regards the Nagpur decision as the outcome of force and compulsion and based on religious bigotry and hatred. The Musalmans should adopt all possible means to stop the practice of the Hindus of playing on musical instruments before mosques and should condemn the fatua of Maulana Abul Kalam Azad and the weakness displayed by the Nagpur Musalmans in accepting the decision. The Oudh Akhbar congratulates the Nagpur Musalmans for displaying unique toleration and broad-mindedness.

All-Parties Conference.

Referring to the proceedings of the All-Parties Conference the Indian Daily Telegraph says: Frankly speaking, the account of the preliminary meeting of the Unity Conference at Delhi does not encourage the hope that any large sacrifices would be made by any political party to attain unity. The paper thinks that the rock on which the Unity Conference threatens to split is the Hindu-Muslim problem and says that the worst that can happen to the unity sub-committee now sitting at Delhi is that it may break away without coming to any conclusions. The Advocate regrets that Mr. Jinnah does not stick to one principle but he advocates both the principles so that the Muhammadans may derive full benefit without losing in any way. We strongly condemn these tactics and wish to point out that no real unity can be arrived at unless the leaders give up these tactics and adhere to one principle. Commenting on the proceedings of the All-Parties Conference the Success observes: In the background of Hindu-Muslim unity lurk dangerous demons that are awaiting the fateful hour when they will pounce upon the last toilers for peace. These two demons are the communal tension and the distrust and the suspicion that exist in India today. The Vartman remarks that along with the scheme of swaraj the All-Parties Conference should also formulate such a programme of vigorous agitation as may be acceptable to all the political parties in the country and may help in carrying into effect the swaraj scheme successfully. The Hamdam regrets that the Hindu leaders have totally ignored the point that the duty of showing toleration and granting concessions to the minorities has been enjoined upon them by virtue of their being in majority in this country. The Sada-i-Muslim lays stress upon the fact that before any lasting compromise is effected it is essential that the decision arrived at in the conference held in September last should be totally ignored as the conference was not a representative one and its decision cannot be binding on the Musalmans. Any reference to that conference is useless as the Musalmans cannot accept the decision of Maulanas Muhammad Ali and Abul Kalam Azad.

The Bengal Ordinance.

The Pioneer says: Is it too much to hope that those members of the Assembly who are prepared to give attention to reasoned expositions of policy will take note of the gravity of the Viceroy's reference to Bengal at the opening of the Legislature and of the abundant assurance which he and Lord Lytton had previously given of the stern necessity for the Ordinance and the measures taken under it. Referring to the Home Member's speech in the Legislative Assembly the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The speech of the Home Member was the purest performance that we have had hitherto ever from him. His persistent cry of wolf can never perturb the patriots who have the hand on the pulse, and who are surely not irresponsible when they uncompromisingly stand against such Russian methods of rule. If, as the Home Member said, the back of the movement is broken, surely it were time to gracefully withdraw a piece of legislation that seeks to deny to the people the elementary right of trial before conviction. The Leader says: It is extremely doubtful if the debate in the Legislative Assembly in connection with the Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance would induce the Government to revise their decision which has aroused such an amount of feeling and opposition in the country. If the time has come close in Bengal when the safety of the State is the only law and if it is a time when the State must grapple with the forces of terrorism or go under, it means that there exists such a powerful revolutionary organisation in Bengal that it was about to overthrow the Government. The existence of such a serious state of affairs ought to make Government furiously to think as to what is wrong with the system. Such a desperate political movement must have a cause. Do the Government think that without any serious attempt to deal with the cause or causes they can suppress the movement by clapping into jail scores of men on suspicion and without trial? The revolutionaries probably regard the Ordinance as a triumph of their activities and as creating an atmosphere suitable for securing fresh recruits. It is the verdict of history that revolutionary movememts which work underground cannot be suppressed by repressive laws only, however drastic. A purely negative policy is no remedy and the Government should not rely merely on force. The Azad deplores that Lord Lytton has used his last weapon in enforcing the new Ordinance in Bengal and remarks that the result alone will show whether the remedy applied will cure the disease and allay the unrest in Bengal. When Martial Law and machine-guns failed to suppress the movement for liberty, this remedy will also fail and will rather aggravate popular discontent and alienate public sympathy. The Oudh Akhbar says: The obstinate attitude adopted by Government in direct opposition to public opinion can never be termed desirable. Commenting on the certification of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill the Aj remarks: Lord Lytton has certified the Bill and with the assent of the Viceroy which must come forth as a matter of course it will become the permanent law of the land. Let the rulers think what respect the people can have for law in a country where laws are enacted against the wishes of the latter. The Bharat Bandhu wonders how long the administration can be carried on by the exercise of special powers and says that there can be no peace and happiness in the country where public opinion is disregarded. The Vartman observes that this black ordinance will re-enact the scenes of the Martial Law days and then it will be difficult to improve the state of affairs. The days are past when tyranny and despotism could be the order of the day. So far the Congress is only endeavouring for swaraj within the British Empire, but if the Viceroy's autocracy continues things may assume a different aspect. The Bharat Dharma writes: The Governor of Bengal placed the milk-mouthed pitcher of poison before the people who kicked it. So His Excellency will now forcibly make the Bengalis and for the matter of that the Indians drink that poison by the exercise of his special powers. But he should bear in mind that that poison after circulating in the veins of the people cannot but find its entry into the stomach of the Government itself. Then will he realise what fun there is in playing with fire.

Legislative Assembly.

The Leader praises the Legislative Assembly for passing the resolution for granting bounty to firms manufacturing steel. The attitude of Government in the matter of protecting this industry against Continental competition is highly commendable. The Indian Daily Tel·g·aph expresses surprise at the attitude of the Government in the Legislative Assembly against Dr. Gour's Bill and regrets that the Government should ever adopt such suspicious attitude against genuine attempts at social reforms. The charge against the British Governm nt is that in the name of religious neutrality, it seeks to perpetuate ignorance and superstitions by giving undue importance to retrograde social views.

Exportation of monkeys.

The Prem urges that the resolution of the Brindaban municipality regarding the deportation of monkeys should not be given effect to until satisfactory arrangements have been made for their safe transportation and accommodation and the people have been given an assurance that the monkeys will not be exported to Europe for scientific experiments involving their destruction.

The Malabar Hill tragedy.

The Anand says that the murder of M. Abdul Qadir Bawla at Bombay has exposed the depravity of the Maharaja of Indore. People should be got rid of such mean-minded princes in some way or other. The Government of India in order to vindicate justice should punish the guilty persons in this case, howsoever exalted their rank may be. The Prem remarks that the disclosures in the Midland Bank and the Bombay murder cases betray fully the moral degradation of Indian princes and show what sort of education and training is imparted to them and how the one way of betaking themselves to licentiousness and moral depravity is left open to them under the British Government. The Pratap thinks that it is a wrong and improper course for various journals to cast aspersions on the Maharaja of Indore for the Bombay murder until his guilt is established in a law court. Even if it is proved that he had a hand in the murder yet in existing circumstances much blame cannot be thrown on him. Indian Chiefs are themselves not to blame if they take to licentiousness. As a result of the manner in which the British Government has arranged for the upbringing of Indian Chiefs such a passion is reared in them in their young days for enjoyment, licentiousness, drinking, young women and trips to Europe that they cannot get over them even in their manhood. The Haqiqat opines that deterrent punishment should be inflicted on the perpetrators of the murder. The Government of India will stand discredited in the eyes of the Indian public if it shows the least favour to any one in this connection. The Medina says that the perpetration of the tragic murder is the worst blot on the British Government established by law. We find no moral, religious or legal cause on the basis of which the worldly position and status of a culprit may shield him from the penalty for his tyrannical crime. The ever-growing oppressions and misdeeds of the Indian Rajas demand that they should be treated like ordinary criminals. The Hindustani resents the disparaging remarks of certain papers about the Maharaja of Indore and remarks that to accuse the Maharaja of a charge which has not yet been proved against him is the outcome of personal malice. The Oudh Akhbar says that the responsibility for the misdeeds of the Indian Princes to a great extent lies on the Political Agents and the Residents who shirk their duty of reforming them. The Legislative Assembly should agitate and see that the affairs of the Native States are not allowed to pass unnoticed.

United Provinces Legislative Council.

The Leader is in entire sympathy with the resolution moved by Maulvi Shahab-ud-din for making the courses of study easier and reducing the number of subjects prescribed for the middle and high school examinations. Intellectual development of pupils of tender age is not helped but retarded by an overcrowded curriculum. The Pioneer characterises the resolution as a deliberate attempt made to lower the standard of the School Leaving Certificate examination and says: The disposition to temper the wind to the shorn lamb is so strong among certain politicians that it is a wonder some one does not seriously propose to abolish examinations altogether and to give certificates of matriculation or even of graduation to all candidates who can show that they have attended classes in a recognised institution. Referring to the resolution on corruption in public services the Leader observes: No one can deny that the evil exists in almost all departments in varying degrees, but the conditions are not so bad as some members tried to make out. While it is certainly the duty of Government to check corruption by strict supervision and by removing the economic causes, as far as possible, which make honesty an almost impossible virtue in the case of a certain class of its employees, we agree with the Finance Member that the evil is bound to grow less with the spread of education and growth of public opinion. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: We cannot congratulate our Government on the stand taken with regard to corruption in public service. The Government did not deny that there was corruption; but it was quite content in pointing out that so long as the majority of the people were not educated, there must be corruption. Referring to the resolution recommending the establishment of a university at Cawnpore, the Pioneer remarks: In the opinion of some people the be-all and end-all of educational policy would seem to be summed up in the multiplication of universities. The adverse effect of this multiplication of universities upon educational progress by its tendency to lower the standard of examinations is admitted by many who are not opposed in principle to a policy of university expansion, and the Council are to be congratulated on their prudence in rejecting the proposal.

Excise policy in the United Provinces.

The Leader says: The annual report on the administration of the Excise department in the United Provinces for the year 1923-24 must afford gratifying reading to the advocates of temperance reform. The Anand notes with satisfaction the decline in the consumption of intoxicants in the United Provinces as disclosed by the last excise report, but urges that the provincial Government should adopt a more vigorous policy so as to stop the consumption of intoxicants altogether without delay and before it has produced serious deleterious effects upon public health.

Revolutionism.

In continuation of its previous articles on the subject the Vartman opines that from the standpoint of civilisation and psychological evolution it is not desirable for any country to employ revolutionary methods, because even the success of revolution has been found to be attended with serious dangers to its people and their economic development. In such countries as are badly sunk in the mire of poverty like India, where the villagers cannot bear the terrible effects of revolution and the reaction thereafter, it is very dangerous to make revolution the weapon of political emancipation. Mahatma Gandhi's movement can succeed and the red revolutionists of India can be quietened only when the British Government does not allow repression to assume a provocative aspect. In the success of Mahatma Gandhi's movement lies the good of both the people and the British Government.

Bolshevism.

The Vartman publishes an appreciatory article on the occasion of Lenin's first death anniversary saying that it was he who broke the brutal authority of money and religion and laid the foundation of the destruction of those who on the strength of money were making the people of such a big world dance at their bidding. His gospel to the poor is being more honoured in the world than the Vedas, the Qoran and the Bible. The workers, the cultivators and the labourers hold him as their God. The sinful and the selfish fear him as much as murderers and dacoits fear a judge.

LUCKNOW:
The 31st January, 1925.

ZAFAR OMAR,
Publicity Officer, United Provinces.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED AT THE GOVERNMENT BRANCH PRESS, LUCKNOW.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 7th February, 1925.

Russo-Japanese treaty.

THE Abhyudaya congratulates not only Russia and Japan, but also the whole East on the conclusion of the Russo-Japanese treaty and says that the alliance of Russia and Japan is no ordinary thing as it has a great importance in international politics.

Persia and Great Britain.

The Medina avers that Great Britain, the great enemy of the Muslim world, was secretly supporting the rebellion of Shaikh Khizil and that recent developments in Persia show that she has suffered an unforgettable defeat in her greedy designs.

Egyptain affairs.

Referring to Mr. Chamberlain's speech on Great Britain's foreign policy, the Pioneer says: The speech at least can be said to have summed up clearly and concisely the efforts which the Government are making to cope with the different problems with which they are confronted. His reference to the "sharp lesson" which the murder of Sir Lee Stack compelled the British Government to give to the Government of Zaghlul Pasha and to the latter's exorbitant and exaggerated claims and evasion of responsibility admirably sums up recent events in Egypt and the question at issue between the British and Egyptian Governments, and will be generally welcomed by Englishmen who have a due regard for their country's obligation and prestige.

Situation in the Hedjaz.

The Medina in a series of articles strongly protests against the detention of the Khilafat deputation by Amir Ali and remarks that the members of the deputation are entitled to British protection as they are duly armed with British passports. They are neither Swarajists nor ex-convicts who may be regarded as offenders. The preparations of Amir Ali have aroused the suspicions of thinking Musalmans and they are justified in accusing Great Britain of secretly helping him to shed Muslim blood on the sacred soil of Arabia. In another article the same paper remarks that both the rebel Sharif and his son are unfit to govern Hedjaz which should be made a common republic of the entire Muslim world and no non-Muslim Power should be allowed to interfere in its affairs. The Haqiqat says that the stay of the deputation in Jeddah is a sheer waste of time and an unnecessary burden on the Khilafat Committee, which would not have been put to such financial loss if it had consulted Amir Ali before the departure of the deputation from India.

Indians in South Africa.

Referring to the reply of the Viceroy to the deputation which waited on him to represent the position of Indians in South Africa, the Leader says: The reply indicates that His Excellency fully realised the gravity of the issues involved and the intensity of feeling aroused among Indians by the disabilities that are being heaped upon them in that part of the British Empire. Quoting passages from the Natal Advertiser and the Natal Mercury the paper remarks that an ungodly and un-Christian spirit is prompting the white settlers in South Africa. If allowed to triumph, it is bound to produce an enormous repercussion in India. The Mahashakti in an article headed "Legalising the colour bar" writes: Those of our friends who are so eloquent in criticising the caste system of the Hindus are significantly silent on so real an evil and so revolting an insult to humanity as the colour bar among Christians. If Christ were to come back, how would he fare in Christian South Africa with its anti-Asiatic laws? The Weekly Observer says that the delicate negotiations to which the Viceroy referred and in which the Union Government is believed to be participating should not be impeded by foolish or precipitate action from any quarter. The Anand says that the helpless position of Indian colonists in South Africa which the British Government does nothing to improve despite the representatives of the Government of India, has exasperated the Indians and they have begun to apprehend that it is difficult for them to secure justice and equality of treatment within the British Empire.

10 [illegible] 1925

Afghanistan and India.

The Nejat reproduces an article from the Ittihad-i-Mashriq of Kabul denying that Afghanistan is aiming at territorial aggrandisement like the Western Powers. The Afghans only desire their brethren in Africa and Asia to lead a life of freedom. The Hindu leaders should rest assured that the ruler of Afghanistan or any of his servants never desire to cut the throat of the Indians, assail their honour, destroy their liberty or force them to give up their religion. The Indians should unite if they want freedom.

Indian States.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: A most pathetic story comes from Bastar of how a marriage is being forced on the young Rani who has succeeded to the throne. The mother protested in vain. Religious objections, so important to Hindus, were cast to the winds. The orders of the Governor "were final" and had to be obeyed to avoid "serious consequences"—was it voluntary abdication or any new terrors that the bureaucracy has invented for use against Indian princes? The story as unfolded by the Rajput Mahasabha, with the prestige of the name of the Maharaja of Alwar behind it, is sorry reading. Where is this new policy towards Indian States leading to? Over every Indian prince and princess a veritable Damocles' sword seems to hang on a hair. Yet another incident is the unauthorised marriage of the daughter of the Maharaja of Nabha with Kalsia. It is terrible that even with "voluntary abdication" the terrors of the bureaucracy for that independent Indian prince should not be exhausted. It is a disgrace to the princes that such callous treatment of one of their order should be tolerated without a manly protest from them. Perish their Narendra Mandal the assembly of slaves and flatterers of political officers in uniform.

The Viceroy's speech.

The Azad severely criticises the speech of the Viceroy at the opening of the Indian Legislature and remarks: He said nothing about the Reforms, treatment meted out to Indians in the Colonies, and while he is anxious to cement happy relations between the Hindus and the Musalmans, he does not mention what practical steps his Government has taken to achieve this end. The Medina describes the speech as greatly disappointing to the Indians and accuses the Viceroy of showing utter disregard to Indian public opinion. His utterance regarding the Bengal Ordinance is insulting to Indians. The Hind-i-Jadid says that the Viceroy in supporting the Bengal Ordinance has shown that in the armoury of special powers there are arrows still more fatal and deadly. He reckoned on the support of certain classes of Indians but he must have been disappointed to find the new Ordinance condemned by Indians of all shades of opinion. If entire responsibility of everything lies on the Viceroy, what is then the use of the Legislative Assembly, and why is the wealth of India and the precious time of its representatives being wasted. The Swadhin remarks that Lord Reading's expression of gratification at the growing commercial prosperity of the country is a pretty indication of the British greed for exploitation of India. If His Excellency had the least sympathy for the grievances of Indian colonists in South Africa he would never have ignored the Indians in their own country. His remarks regarding the Bengal Ordinance only add insult to injury.

All-Parties Conference.

The Patriot says: We have no faith in pacts. We only wish there were no pact at Lucknow. Is there any guarantee that in case any new pact is made the same thing would not happen again and after a few years we shall have to face once more this very question? To us the question can only be solved permanently on one basis, the only one possible—i.e., the leaders of both parties should try to create an atmosphere of real confidence in each other. The Indian Daily Telegraph hopes that the statement made to a press agency by Pandit Moti Lal Nehru on the working of the unity conference committee is not the faint herald of the announcement that the committee had to break up for want of common debating ground. Owing to its extreme backwardness the Muslim community in India lends itself to be conveniently sold by its leaders for some concessions from the Government. The Hindu sangathan must be politically acknowledged; and side by side with the yarn franchise we must have the severest of active participation in the sangathan movement. The Anand urges the Hindu members of the All-Parties Conference to be on their guard against the baseless pretensions of Muhammadans to excessive political rights and not to lose sight of Hindu interests in the mirage of the so-called unity. The demand of Muhammadans for ever-growing political rights after every tension of communal feeling goes to show that communal disturbances are always engineered with an ulterior motive. The Sada-i-Muslim strongly protests against the opposition of the Hindu leaders to the separate representation of the Musalmans and remarks that it is due to the deplorable mentality and the vindicative spirit of the Hindus that they resent Muslim sympathy with their brethren abroad. Musalmans cannot sacrifice Islam to unity or liberty and as long as they follow the teachings of the Qoran they can never sever their connection with Hedjaz and Turkey. The Al Khalil expresses its disappointment at the speeches of Pandit Malaviya and Lala Lajpat Rai and remarks that unity between the two communities is impossible. The Hamdam is gratified at the appointment of a sub-committee to consider the question of Hindu-Muslim unity and the scheme of swaraj and hopes that the country will attach due value to its findings. The Medina says that the Hindus have little to lose in remaining under the British rule and in slavery, but the Musalmans cannot remain inactive as they are being ground down between the tyrannies of the foreigners and the excesses of the Hindus. There is no hope for swaraj if the Hindu feelings are so delicate as to get outraged at the cutting of certain trees and killing of certain animals. The Nejat resents the speeches of the Hindu leaders and remarks that they are trying to keep the Musalmans in their present deplorable condition. The presence of an alien Government is ever a source of danger to our unity and before preparing any programme for swaraj it is essential that the tension prevailing between the two communities should be removed.

The Bengal Ordinance.

Commenting upon the debate in the Legislative Assembly on Mr. Patel's Bill the Pioneer says: The support given by the members of the Assembly to Mr. Patel will be taken to mean that they endorse his extravagant contention that the Government were responsible for the menace in Bengal. Nor can there be too strong condemnation of the monstrous insinuation by a prominent member that the leaflet now being circulated is the outcome of the activities of Government agents. In another article the paper refers to the resolution condemning the Bengal Ordinance passed by the Legislative Assembly and says: We cannot believe that those who composed the majority were all of them happy in their own minds in giving their votes. Members of the Assembly may treat lightly the Home Member's pointed reference to the possible interpretation which may be placed on their action by the world outside, they cannot thereby escape the consequences. The airy impertinence of the member who dared to abuse the privileges of parliamentary debate by bringing two of his lawyer confrères on to the same plane of judicial eminence as that occupied by Lord Reading may be gratifying to the callow exuberance of Young Swarajya. It must utterly fail, however, to convince the larger world, to which the Viceroy's reputation as a man of affairs and a distinguished jurist is fully known. And the verdict passed on the Assembly's decision in that light will be authoritatively and devastatingly damaging to its claim for consideration as an exponent of democratic principles. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that though the Government would throw Mr. Patel's resolution into the waste paper basket it would have been sufficiently impressed by this face-to-face talk with the elected representatives, heed the popular view and would supersede the ordinance at the earliest opportunity. Never before has public opinion been more ruthlessly trampled down upon them than now. Referring to the debate in the Legislative Assembly on the Bengal Ordinance, the Vartman remarks that in view of the obdurate and shameless policy of the Government regarding the ordinance it is a great mistake for the members of the Assembly to hope that such debates can do the least good. The Pratap writes: The impotent rage of the leaders in the Assembly can do no good. Debates cannot prove useful to a subject nation. Councils and Assemblies can be effective only when the Cabinet depend for their existence on their vote. Where the Councils and the Assemblies depend on the Cabinet for their existence, they are imbecile bodies. The destruction of that nation which is dependent upon others is inevitable. Self-reliance is the only way to emancipation. Will the nation move forward on the path? The Hamdam remarks that by vesting autocratic powers in the hands of an irresponsible and incapable bureaucracy Government is itself playing with human lives.

Legislative Assembly.

Commenting on Mr. Neogy's Bill for the abolition of the reservation of third class compartments for Europeans in certain railway trains the Pioneer observes: Here is to be found a curious example of the zeal with which some of our politicians will tilt at windmills. The attempt to use the Indian Legislature to remove this small privilege must be characterised as not merely a gesture of defiance of the rights of minorities, but a lamentable lack of sense of proportion. The Leader says: We confess to a certain sympathy with the criticism of Sir Charles Innes that matters of petty detail affecting railway administration and management should not form the subject of interpellation or debate in the Legislative Assembly. We entirely agree that non-official members should show greater discretion and an increasing capacity of selection of proper subjects as well as of drawing their questions and resolutions in a skilful parliamentary manner. But the officers of the Government have also a great deal to learn and a great deal to do to bring about a result that will be satisfactory to all parties.

United Provinces Legislative Council.

The Leader says: We do not know how the Government would have lost or how the interests of the Allied Indian Woodcrafts Company and the Bobbin Company would have been adversely affected if they had vouchsafed information on the relations subsisting between these two companies, as desired by an honourable member of the local Legislative Council who put a number of searching questions on the subject. The Government know that a great deal of curiosity, not idle but justifiable, exists in the public mind about the genesis of these companies and as to the extent, if any, to which the interests of the tax-payer may have been sacrificed. Far from satisfying this legitimate desire, the Government have been trying further to mystify the atmosphere of mystery by their reticence and secretiveness. Referring to the resolution of Thakur Hukum Singh urging the amendment of the Oudh Rent Act the paper says: The defeat of the resolution by a large majority shows how weak is the position in the Council of those who may be expected to espouse the cause of the tenants. Referring to the resolution of Pandit Har Govind Pant for liberalising the rules for the issue of arms licences the paper remarks: The whole policy of the Government in the matter is dominated by a spirit of distrust. Although the resolution was carried we do not expect that anything will come out of it. Referring to the Hon'ble the Finance Member's speech in the Council on the question of dates and duration of the Council the papar says: It is the opinion of many an observant and informed critic that of the many defects of the present transitory constitution there is none more glaring or more urgently calling for remedy than the excessive and arbitrary powers vested in the Governor, the while he is rendered immune from criticism by the Council. Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan and probably a few other members of the Council have been affecting grave concern at the non-conferment upon the Council of powers of discipline over outsiders. The paper suggests that they will be more usefully employing their time and talents if they divert a portion of their energy to an effort to secure some more powers to the Council over the executive.

Judicial administration.

The Gharib says that in a poor country like India where millions of people have to go without sufficient food it is derogatory to the dignity of the Government to charge high court fees and stamp duties in the name of administration of justice and to make it a source of income. This system of selling justice, so to say, makes it impossible for poor people to obtain it. The Empire where justice becomes a rare commodity in this manner cannot expect itself to be secure and the Government and the members of the Council alike should take steps to stop this business in justice to vindicate the honour of the country and the Empire. The Aj says that whether bribery may or may not have been more rife under Muhammadan rule it is certain that the existing bribery is of a very bad type. It beats down even the existing legal trickery and the pompous show of justice. It is common knowledge that to have recourse to a law court against a rich man is to court one's own ruin. The root of the prevailing bribery lies embedded in the alien, unnatural and harmful systems of education and of administration. Unless and until they are radically changed bribery cannot be stopped.

Chief Court for Oudh.

Referring to the Hon'ble the Home Member's speech in the United Provinces Legislative Council when introducing the Chief Court Bill, the Leader observes: It is to be hoped that the non-official members of the United Provinces Legislative Council will resolutely decline to be dictated to by the local Government or the Government of India or the Secretary of State on the important question of the constitution of the court. It should consist, if not wholly, at least of a majority of lawyer judges. And the Chief Judge should always be a lawyer and never an officer of the I. C. S. As a matter of administrative practice the majority of the judges should be Indians. If this is not to be better far that the Bill should be defeated. If we are only to be blessed with a court with an I. C. S. Chief Judge and a majority of service judges, Oudh and the United Provinces will do very well without it. In principle, too, legislature should never permit dictation by any executive authorities however eminent.

The Swaraj party.

The Surya opines that the experience of the last four years shows that neither the non-cooperation movement nor the obstructionist tactics of the Swarajists have done any good to the country. The policy of obstruction can yield no results unless the country has recourse to mass civil disobedience, but it is quite obvious that it is not prepared to follow such a perilous path. The obstructionist policy of the Swarajists only provokes the Government to enact repressive legislation and in no way brings the country nearer to its goal.

Export of monkeys.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The monkey is looked upon as a sacred animal in India, and if they should catch a monkey at Ajodhya or Muttra a commotion among the Hindus may be predicted. Perhaps the monkey is serving humanity by dying so as to give youth to a human being on the verge of collapse. Man is mortal. Has he the right to kill for the sake of living a little longer in the possession of youthful powers? This war against nature is something that will not appeal to Indian philosophy.

Revolutionary party of India.

The Pioneer in a leading article headed "Revolutionaries and India" says that it is of special significance that the revolutionary manifesto now being circulated secretly in India bears a close resemblance both in sentiment and phraseology to the Bolshevik literature which was disseminated in Persia during the closing stages of the Great War. A situation has arisen in India when it is essential that India should possess a striking force adequate to meet any contingency that may arise on her frontiers and that revolutionary efforts within her borders should be firmly suppressed. A grave responsibility lies on the authorities in India and an equally obvious duty rests with Indian public men. Referring to the situation in Bengal the paper remarks: It is not too late for the Legislative Assembly at Delhi to rise to a full sense of its duties in the grave situation that has arisen. In the controversy over the action taken by the Government in Bengal the opponents of the Ordinance have signally failed to adduce a single valid argument in support of their case. The Weekly Observer says: There is no question that this revolutionary party is bent upon a determined pursuit of its sinister and secret activities. The debate in the Assembly on the Bengal Ordinance shows that the majority of non-official members have not yet fully realised the extent of the widespread and powerful organisation which aims at the destruction of Government by assassination. The Vartman remarks that the repression practised by the Government under the impression that it would help in making its rule permanent has caused despondency in the country and has also led the people to think that the agitators have been suppressed thereby. This has afforded the revolutionary party a great opportunity to convert the despondency of the people into indignation and violence. The Government wants to crush the constitutional agitators by repression, but it is unable to trace out the real revolutionaries. It is due to this folly of the Government that the revolutionary party is growing strong.

Agra Tenancy Act.

In a signed article to the Hamdam Rao Bahadur Muhammad Abdul Rahman of Raipur, district Saharanpur, remarks: The present Agra Tenancy Bill, like the Bolsheviks, has made an open attack upon capitalism as the zamindars have invested lakhs of rupees in agricultural projects and crores of rupees in the purchase of land. On what ground the persons accused in connection with the Bolshevik conspiracy case have been punished when the Government itself is following the ways of the Bolsheviks? People are at a loss to understand for what fault the loyal zamindars are being thus punished. The Government should realise the delicacy of the situation and refrain from adopting a policy which may create discord and disunion between the tenants and the zamindars.

Bolshevism.

A correspondent writing to the Agra Akhbar takes strong exception to the message sent by the notorious agitator M. N. Roy on the occasion of the Belgaum Congress and describes him to be a disguised enemy of India. Indians can never accept the Bolshevik doctrines which are opposed both to Hinduism and Islam and have caused great misery in Russia.

Political propaganda.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: That the two speeches on one day, one from Sir William Vincent and the other from Sir Michael O'Dwyer, followed by a memorial from the Anglo-Indian Association against the abolition of the Indian Medical Service point to the existence of active foreign propaganda against this country. Sir William

Vincent has touched unerringly the weakest point in the Indian situation today when he says that the people are tired of political agitation. The Vartman urges that it is not only difficult but impossible to attain swaraj without organising the labourer and the kisan. The same paper says that the territorial aggrandisement of the imperialistic powers of the world and the enslavement of the poor by capitalists have created misery and unrest in the world and that both Bolshevism and non-cooperation have proved ineffective in ameliorating this state of things. But, says the paper, those who want to make this earth heaven have not been disappointed at this. They are endeavouring that the people of the world may advance along both the lines and bring about an opportunity when mankind may become deserving of heavenly government. The Aj reproduces from the Bharat Mittra of Calcutta an article from Lala Hardayal from Sweden in which he remarks that the responsibility for awakening political life in the country lies on the Swaraj party. It is imperative to make the Swaraj party in the Punjab a strong body. The Hindu nation of the Punjab lost its swaraj during the war that took place between the years 1845 and 1849 and only half swaraj has been left in some of the Indian States. The Gharib in a lengthy article tries to show that British rule in India is merely a business concern, which while keeping the Indians in a dependent position maintains itself by finding markets among them for English goods and by raising taxes from them and that it is mere camouflage to assert that British rule in India is based on altruistic motives. The consumption of foreign goods in India to the value of billions which yield forty-five crores of rupees in customs duty alone has rendered the Indians utterly destitute. Such was not the case in India even under Muhammadan rule, owing to the Muhammadans having adopted it as their motherland. The Vartman publishes an article by Mr. Savarkar in which he says that if the Congress calls itself the Indian National Congress it is its duty to give a suitable place to Nepal also within its fold, because from a geographical, historical and national standpoint, Nepal, like other provinces, is a part of India. Nepal is a Hindu State, and lest it should be lost sight of as such we should exhort our Nepalese brethren to organise a Hindu Sabha in Nepal and send to the next session of the Hindu Mahasabha delegates who may be able to take part in deliberations dealing with social and sectarian questions and with sangathan. The Hamdam says that the subject nations have now well realised that the awakening will come through repression and coercion only and without a general awakening the goal of liberty cannot be reached. A little foresight would have shown to British statesmen that a policy of repression is prejudicial to their own imperialistic interests and the bitter feelings and ill-will which it gives rise to among the subject nations are a deadly poison for the ruling nation. The Vartman apprehends a war in Asia as the result of the new Anglo-American alliance and the establishment of a naval base at Singapore and remarks that it is a settled fact that the next war will be closely bound up with the future of India, and that if England and America become unanimous there will be no delay in declaring it. The same paper publishes an article from Ras Behari Bose from Japan in which he writes : The Singapore naval base is a pistol aimed at Japan with a view to swallow China. The object of the establishment of this base is not only to crush Japan and China, but also to dominate over other Asiatic nations and perpetuate the slavery of India. But India has sufficiently awakened through Mahatma Gandhi's movement and the activities of the Swaraj party. India should not send one single soldier or gun to help in the fulfilment of Britain's wicked design at Singapore. Indian leaders should proclaim it to the world that they have nothing to do with this action of the British.

Situation in Europe.

REFERRING to the British note to France with regard to the debt question the Pioneer says that this note constitutes a remarkably generous offer can hardly be disputed. The French have somewhat misrepresented the British offer in their contention that the less Germany pays the more they will have to pay. A fairer way of putting it would be to lay stress on the fact that the more Germany pays the less France will have to pay. The conflict of opinion as to the precise interpretation to be placed on the principle embodied in the Balfour Note seems to preclude the possibility of an early settlement. It will be seen that a settlement of the question is beset with difficulties, though the friendly spirit shown by both French and British statesmen at the Paris Conference affords grounds for hoping that these will not prove insuperable. The Leader has no doubt that from the point of view from which the British public has looked at the question of the repayment of the debt which France owes to Britain, the offer contained in the British note is a generous one. In another leading article headed "An indefensible position" the same paper observes: The comments of the French press on the British note regarding the Franco-British debt indicate the difficulties in the way of an early settlement of the question. While Britain did not, nor perhaps America either, join the war through wholly altruistic motives and that the former, in making the stupendous sacrifices it did was strongly influenced by the desire to safeguard its own imperial interests, this fact cannot in the least afford any justification for the extremely selfish attitude of France. Far from feeling grateful to Britain for the crowning victory which it was able to achieve over Germany with the assistance of the British Empire and British credit, the French Government are drawing fine distinctions between commercial and political debts and have adopted an attitude which can only be described as being opposed to national honour as also to national security. Unless it abandons this attitude and accepts the principle of the very fair British proposals with good grace it may feel assured that in future in the hour of need it will receive no financial, military or naval help from Britain or America and thus its shortsighted policy of security will bring on its own nemesis. If the light of truth does not dawn on France it will be destroyed by its own suicidal policy. Under the heading "Tangle of inter-allied debts" the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The latest British note to France with regard to the debt question is rightly characterised as a generous offer which brings the repayment of France's debt to England within the range of practical politics. Nothing could have been more generous than the Balfour Note as regards France. Britain has brought down her claims to an irreducible minimum. One wonders when and where all this tangle is likely to end. If France will meet the offer in the same spirit as that in which it is sent and a new basis for American co-operation with Europe is established it is all well and good otherwise Europe may again plunge in a chaos.

The International Opium Conference.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: America's withdrawal from the Opium Conference is at once a protest against the waste of time and absolute insincerity of the entire show. The fraud, in fact, was too transparent; some Powers were unwilling to sacrifice the advantages of the income from opium. America has done several great services to the cause of civilisation; nothing has been greater than this contemptuous gesture against insincere verbiage and fraudulent benevolence which have sickened all careful observers of the Opium Conference proceedings. The Bhoot says that Lord Cecil's advocacy of the retention of opium cultivation in India need not cause surprise to anybody seeing that his Lordship is a mere tool in the hands of the same British Government which in its greed for money forced the whole of China to become opium-eater and left no mean act undone in order to further this scheme.

Spain and Morocco.

The Sada-i-Muslim exhorts the Indian Musalmans to respond liberally to the appeal made by His Highness Sir Agha Khan and the Right Hon'ble Justice Ameer Ali for the relief of the Riffs and to subscribe to the relief fund started by the Muslim Outlook of Lahore emphasising that the Riffs stand in need of immediate relief as Spain still covets their land and the exigencies of the situation leave them no time to attend to their internal affairs.

The Albanian Republic.

The Rohilkhand Gazette hails with delight the establishment of a Republic in Albania. It comemnds the spirit of independence displayed by the Albanians and prays for the prosperity and the stability of the Republic.

Hedjaz affairs.

The Success says that of such cardinal importance is the present political situation in the Hedjaz that a study of the same is imperative. To Islam it is a question upon the solution of which hinge many of all-important problems very closely connected with interests of every Musalman whether he belongs to Cairo or Calcutta. The entire Islamic world is directly connected with even the most insignificant incident that occurs in the Hedjaz today. Let alone the intentions of the various political praties the foremost duty of every Musalman today is to do his utmost in putting a stop to the bloodshed on the holy soil. Commenting on the refusal of Ibn Saud to interview the Indian deputation in connection with the management of the Muslim holy places the Aj remarks: This is but natural. So long as the Indian Musalmans do not think themselves to be the sons of India and give proof of their political existence no nation can have any dealings with them. The Indian Musalmans overlook this fact. They disregard their own country and want to make other Muslim nations their own. They have repeatedly failed in their attempts and it were better if they took a lesson now and gave up their extra-territorial patriotism. Hindu-Muslim unity and the freedom of India are indispensable for the protection of Islam.

Commonwealth of India Bill.

The Leader records its sense of grateful appreciation of the vast labour that contributed to the making of the draft by Dr. Besant of the Commonwealth of India Bill, and says: If on careful and detailed examination it is found that the draft Bill, for all the conscientious care bestowed upon it, is defective in several respects, this does not detract from the credit due to Dr. Besant. Probably it will be found to be more convenient for Indian reformers to put forward a scheme in a series of propositions as was done in 1916 and to leave to expert draftsmen their translation into precise legal terminology. The Hamdam holds that the Commonwealth of India Bill on which Mrs. Besant is laying such stress has no chance of being accepted by the British Parliament. It, however, agrees with Mrs. Besant that by drafting a unanimous scheme of swaraj the Indians should disarm the bureaucracy of the plea which it often puts forward that there is no unanimity amongst the Indians as to the kind of swaraj they want.

Indians in the Colonies.

Referring to Mr. Gandhi's views that a vigorous satyagraha campaign is needed to meet the situation, the Leader remarks: His own passive resistance in South Africa yielded only temporary results and the fact that everything won by him and more has been lost does not encourage the hope that the adoption of his methods will bring about a lasting solution. Referring to the debate in the Legislative Assembly the Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is impossible for anyone to read the speech delivered by Mr. Graham in reply to the resolution on Tanganyika without a feeling of pity for the Government that could so unblushingly speak to us in the spirit of the Boer of Africa. The debate and the vote on the resolution distinctly proved that the patience of the people of this country had been sorely tried. There has been, of late, woeful relaxation in the treatment of the various problems that arise in connection with Indians overseas. We insist that our Government must take up our cause and not plead for Tanganyika and South Africa. If the Government were wise they would mark and profit by determined attitude of the Assembly in such matters and cease repeating the irritating mantram of "representation." The Aj remarks: We hope our leaders will not repose faith in the sweet words of Lord Reading regarding domiciled Indians. The Government of India were formerly opposed to the reservation of the entire highlands in Kenya for the Whites but it now appears that it has secretly played false to India and has recognised the special rights of the Whites with regard to the highlands.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Gyan Shakti says that it was all a diplomatic move on the part of the Muhammadans to obtain the support of the Hindus in the Khilafat agitation. All the talk of love and unity at that time on the part of the Muhammadans was intended to serve their own selfish ends. If the Hindu realise this they can improve their condition even now without being deluded any more by sophistry.

All-Parties Conference.

In an article headed "Communal representation" the Leader observes that it is a position accepted by many, although approved by fewer, that communal representation should continue for as long as the Muslims did not say that they no longer wanted it. It is a very difficult and delicate position in which Indian nationalists find themselves. Should they boldly declare themselves against the continuance of the separatist arrangements, they run the risk of alienating an overwhelming body of even advanced Muslim opinion, of which Mr. Jinnah may still be taken as the exponent, albeit he has for a little time lamentably imbibed the accents of a communalist and only feebly whispers true national sentiments. Thereby they add enormously to the lions in the path of swaraj. If for this reason they were to make a fresh compromise with what they believe to be a bad thing, they find themselves faced by so many new demands which never can be settled. The situation illustrates the unwisdom of "illegitimate compromises" for the sake of a passing advantage. The area over which communalism and separatism extend should not be enlarged. It is far more in the public interest that we should wait and watch in the hope that the combined wisdom and patriotism of the public men who will re-assemble in Delhi at the end of the month may not fail to reach agreed conclusions marked by moderation and equity and acceptable to temperate and reasonable men in both communities. The Hamdam is gratified that the committee appointed by the conference has accepted the principle of communal representation. It says that while in Bengal and the Punjab the system of mixed electorate can be adopted it is imperative that the system of separate electorate should be applied to those provinces where the Musalmans are in a minority. In another article the same paper asserts that all sections of the Muslim community are unanimously in favour of the retention of communal representation and that no Muslim leader however popular and respected he may be can dissuade the community from demanding separate representation. In yet another article the same paper supports Mr. Jinnah in demanding the amendment of the Lucknow Pact with a view to giving to the Musalmans due representation in the legislatures and local bodies and in public services in accordance with their importance and numerical strength in different provinces. The Vartman remarks that by accepting the principle of communal representation the All-Parties Conference has committed itself to a position from which it cannot come out successfully. At the bottom of this anti-national principle lie such selfish and despicable aspirations as can never be fulfilled by any agreement whatsoever.

Bengal Ordinance.

Referring to the Bengal Ordinance debate in the Legislative Assembly the Leader says: It is useless for the supporters of the Ordinance to make vilification of critics do duty for argument. It would be wiser for them to recognise the extent and the intensity of the opposition to that special legislation not only in Bengal but throughout India and also the complete failure of a whole series of repressive laws beginning with the year 1897 to achieve their professed object, and to set about sincerely and earnestly to apply those constructive remedies, political and economic, which alone can be an effective and enduring cure of a chronic situation steadily growing worse. The Weekly Observer says: Were a continuance of such defeats on matters affecting the peace and tranquillity of the country at large or any part of it to become the principal feature of such discussions in the Legislative Assembly in future the outlook would become extremely grave, as it would show the farcical nature of the Legislature's so-called responsibility, besides emphasising the apparent futility of the Government's attempt to placate the politicians. After all, if the ultimate results of these Council debates were to be nothing but government by certification, none could shut his eyes to the obvious fact of the failure of the Reforms. Under such circumstances, any kind of responsible government or swaraj would be a mere chimera. The Bharat Jiwan says that the certification of the Bengal Ordinance Bill, despite its rejection in the Council, shows what value Government attaches to the councils. The indiscriminate repression practised by the Government after the enforcement of the Bengal Ordinance has only victimised the Swarajists and has failed to reach the real revolutionaries. The Viceroy should know that brickbats thrown in the dark will hurt himself and cannot check the march of the country towards swaraj.

Legislative Assembly.

In an article headed "The Legislature and the Indian Railways" the Pioneer writes: The creation of the Central Railway Advisory Council and its off-shoots, the Local Advisory Committees, marks a definite attempt on the part of the Government to keep the Board in the closest possible touch with public opinion. It is, therefore, a matter for serious notice that within the last few days the Commerce Member has had to give expression to more than one warning of the danger of undue interference by the Legislature in the administration of the railways. It cannot be too strongly emphasised that if the railways are to perform their function of giving the public a cheap and efficient means of transportation, their management must be allowed to exercise freely and fairly its expert knowledge of railway problems, which include the handling and control of large bodies of men of all grades and capabilities. The Leader regrets that Mr. Patel's Bill for the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code so as to do away with advantages given to colonial whites over Indians in criminal trials in India, should not have succeeded. The Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: Government in India depends on its force not on popular approval. The mandated majority in the Assembly may vote and voice what they like; the Government knows what it wants and would not be argued into reason or justice. The budget is coming. The Swarajist menace last year cast a shadow over the Government and shattered its prestige throughout the world. This year the Government stands for naked repression. It would be fatal for any Swarajist to sacrifice any principle in a fight with repression for the purpose of conciliating Jinnahs and Rangacharis. Referring to Pandit Moti Lal Nehru's speech on Mr. Patel's Bill the paper says: To have made a speech as the one for which the leader of the Swarajist party had to castigate the money bag from Bombay was a disgrace to any Indian. The poor man cannot understand the difference between self-respect and retaliation. Politicians who hope to barter national rights for official favours might study the superb speech of the Panditjee. In an article headed "Postal employees' grievances" the same paper says: The reply on behalf of the Government by Sir B. Mitra to the resolution on the grievances of postal employees is surely not calculated to put heart into that class of hard-working and honest men. Referring to the Hon'ble Raja Rampal Singh's resolution on military training, the paper is glad to notice that the Commander-in-Chief was able to hold forth some promise, what it is will be known in less than a fortnight. We sincerely hope that a stone will not be thrown at the Raja when he is asking for bread; if the Commander-in-Chief should surprise us with a faint imitation of his wonderful scheme of Indianising the Army and formulate a plan by which one-hundredth of our young men in the universities would have facilities in the short space of three hundred years. Every time that the question of fitting the people of this country for military service comes up and the Government is confronted with a direct question, we have failed to get the correct answer. The Aj refers to Mr. Patel's Bill regarding the repeal of repressive measures and remarks: The Government should give up its method of administering the country, establishing peace and protecting the lives of the citizens and the officials with the help of old and undesirable regulations. The régime of these regulations is the miniature of Martial Law. It is only when universal dissatisfaction prevails in the country that these regulations are enforced. Let the Government first admit the existence of universal dissatisfaction and then think of carrying on the administration with the help of arbitrary regulations. To call its administration popular and yet to rule by a century old regulations is at least disingenuous if nothing else. The Anand says that there is no organised revolutionary party in the country and that the propaganda of a few misguided anarchists can have no effect on the people. Government should repeal the repressive laws and thereby show that it attaches no value to anarchists who will disappear of themselves for want of support from any quarters.

British Empire Exhibition.

Commenting on the final report on the United Provinces Court of the Indian Pavilion of the British Empire Exhibition the Pioneer says: The report testifies to the remarkable interest taken in Indian articles by visitors. The Leader congratulates the secretaries on their excellent report and on the admitted success of the United Provinces Court, which was largely due to their indefatigable exertions. Whatever one might think of Indian participation in the Exhibition on political grounds, due to the disgraceful Kenya decision of the British Government, there can be no two opinions that Mr. Madan Mohan Sinha amply justified his selection as the secretary of the United Provinces Court.

Malabar Hill tragedy.

The Muslim Views says: The murder of Abdul Qadir Bawla at Bombay has sent a thrill of horror throughout all Muslim India. The Aj refers to the press comments on the alleged complicity of the Maharaja of Indore in the Bombay murder and remarks: Our contemporaries ought to know that the matter is still sub judice and that it is an offence to hold one guilty before trial. Is it not a matter for surprise and regret that in the face of the injustice meted out to the ex-Maharaja of Nabha we should ourselves be anxious to sacrifice one more State at the altar of Reading justice? On account of his independent-mindedness the Maharaja of Indore has become the object of bureaucratic wrath. We fear that finding public opinion to be hostile to him the Government of India may mete out the same treatment to him as it did to the ex-Maharaja of Nabha. The heir-apparent of Indore is a minor, and if the Maharaja of Indore is dethroned the State will fall into the hands of the bureaucracy. Even the thought of it is unbearable to us. We know that the majority of the States are badly administered. But even knowing this, we do not wish that the Indian States may be destroyed and bureaucratic administration established in their place. Indian States whether good or bad are ours. When we get an opportunity we will improve them. We do not want to hand them over to the foreigners. In all disputes between the Indian States and the bureaucracy we must side with the former, and in those between the States and their subjects we must side with the latter. The Haqiqat views with suspicion the appointment of Sir Sivaswami Iyer to a high post in the Indore State and insinuates that the Maharaja is now trying to screen the real culprits responsible for the murder of Mr. Bawla and to influence through Sir Sivaswami Iyer the decision of the Government.

National schools.

Referring to the decision of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee to close down the Arts courses of the "National" College, Bombay, the Pioneer says: The popularity of such institutions, even among the young hot-heads of the non-cooperation movement, has long been on the wane, and pupils and their parents have become thoroughly disillusioned. Lapse of time and an opportunity for sober reflection have convinced the young men and their parents that the solid advantages to be derived from the education provided in the Government schools and colleges are not lightly to be cast aside. The Leader says: We are not surprised, and we frankly do not regret, that there is a "paucity of students" at the Bombay "National College" and that in consequence its "Art courses" will be closed down. Nor are we surprised, neither do we regret, that the Marathi "National School" is to be closed and, probably, the Gujarati "National School" as well. These institutions were the constructive expression of the rebel movement against the universities, colleges and schools which form the established educational system of the land, which with its many and grave defects has produced the present national awakening in India. Thousands of young men were led astray by the patriots and most of them have lived to be sadder man—may we hope, wiser too? The truth is that the problem of national emancipation is too difficult and complex to be solved in a frenzied moment by passion and prejudice. It requires an infinite amount of wise thought and patient toil, of which the whirlwind campaign of 1921 was the very negation.

Kohat affairs.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is pathetic to read that the Kohat Muslims insulted Mahatma Gandhi by ignoring his presence to effect a settlement between Hindus and Musalmans. The alleged settlement through Government intervention is evidently very pleasing to the ruffian elements in that place that laid Hindu houses low and beggared the Hindu rich. The Hindus are, as it is, helpless. The world is told that there has been a settlement and the Government does not care—unless, when the next riot breaks out, they generously come forward to provide special trains for Hindus to get away. Gandhi has been dreaming till now when he talked of union. Union is certainly impossible with the specimens that he saw at Kohat.

Indian Communist party.

Mr. Satya Bhakta writing in the Vartman refers to the Council question of Mr. Paliwal whether the Indian Communist party was legal or illegal, which could not be put in the last Council session and remarks: It is apparent that the Government is trying to put off this question but ultimately it will have to make this point clear. If for this work (for becoming the member of the Communist party) even a few persons have to go to jail it does not matter because without such a thing no organisation can become strong.

Revolutionary propaganda.

The Oudh Akhbar refers to the debate in the Assembly regarding the seditious leaflets recently distributed at Cawnpore, Allahabad, Benares, Amritsar and other places and remarks: We do not see anything objectionable in the extracts read out by the Home Member in the Assembly. The new party on whose behalf the leaflets are purported to have been distributed should not be all the more provoked by condemnation of its activities but it should be appeased by the adoption of a statesmanlike and sympathetic attitude. The Nizam-i-Alam infers from the distribution of seditious leaflets that the revolutionaries are carrying on their activities fearlessly. It asks the Government to take special and precautionary measures and impose effective restrictions on their activities so that the innocent people may be protected from the misdeeds of the rebels.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 21st February, 1925.

The Hedjaz deputation.

THE Medina deplores the failure of the Hedjaz deputation and says that Amir Ali, the son of the treacherous Sharif, relying on the support of his British patrons, has dashed to the ground all hopes regarding a united decision of the Muslim world. British supremacy is sure to prevail if this treacherous member of the Sharif's family succeeds in establishing his rule over the Hedjaz.

Turkey and Balkan States.

The Hamdam sounds a note of warning to the British Government that whatever may be the hue and cry of the Balkan States over the expulsion of the Greek Patriarch from Constantinople it should see that no military demonstrations are made in the Balkans against the Turks or else the Muslim powers which look upon the British Government with a suspicious eye will hold it blamable for it and it will be difficult to control the feelings of the Indian Musalmans.

Afghanistan.

Referring to the persecution of the Ahmadis in Afghanistan the Sucess writes: Kabul has run amok. The rude Afghan is mercilessly aggressive. He has little respect for life. He does not know what is law. The gruesome atrocities from which shudder our tender and merciful nature, are everyday routine with the cruel Kabuli. The butchering of innocent and helpless persons is a glorious sport for the Afghan. To those who have some experience of the life in Kabul it would be perfectly true that a foreigner's life is safer in the claws of a Bengal tiger than in the city of Kabul. Butchery is the hallmark of Kabul. Cruelty is its birthright. Lawlessness is its working principle. Brutal crime is the order of the day in the Amir's capital. The paper concludes the article with the remark: It is a sad contrast that while St. Paul's Cathedral tolerates the piercing voice of the Muazzin, Amanullah Khan, born a Muslim, called a Muslim, and eulogised as a Muslim should behave in the utterly shameful manner as he has done. Allah! have mercy on Thy servants the Muslims.

Russo-Japanese agreement.

The Nejat remarks that the recent Russo-Japanese agreement has seriously disturbed European politics. In view of the fact that nearly all the Eastern nations have come under Bolshevik influence it would not be out of place to hazard the opinion that the East has now been saved for a long time from foreign interference. It is at any rate certain that the continuance of a favourable atmosphere for Britain in the East is now impossible.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on the Muslim Outlook's article headed "Hindu Raj" the Leader remarks: In our view there is no better method of obtaining self-government and of retaining it than by the subordination of communal to national interests and the development of a political consciousness which transcends the barriers of race and religion. The right ideal to be pursued by both communities is that of cooperation and not of domination. If there are Hindus who think that the salvation of the country lies in a Hindu raj they are equally mistaken. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Muslims are stampeding into the bureaucratic parlour. As for the Hindus, they must tremble because of Muhammad Ali's invitation to Turkey and Afghanistan. Muhammad Ali need not go so far as that: it is enough if he invites his Kohat co-religionists to descend on the Hindus. The Bharat Dharma says that Khwaja Hasan Nizami has only betrayed the meanness of his heart in describing Mahatma Gandhi as false and deceitful when the Mahatma has all along been opposing Hindu sangathan and sacrificing Hindu interests in order to conciliate the Muhammadans.

Communal representation.

The Hindu press is unanimous in denouncing the system of separate communal representation. The Tohfa-i-Hind refers to the recent Hindu-Muslim tension over the question of communal representation and criticises the Lucknow pact as wholly unjust and the present Muslim demands as devoid of reasonableness. The representation should be on a popular basis with a mixed electorate. The Gyan Shakti urges that in view of the deleterious effect of separate representation on communal relations this system should be altogether abolished, and if minority communities are not prepared for it the number of seats reserved for them should be fixed but the election should take place only through mixed electorates. The Abhyudaya opines that communal representation is the root of all the Hindu-Muslim dissensions and says that the poison of special representation has caused irretrievable injury to the country. It suggests the adoption of the system of mixed electorate and remarks that until this is done progress is impossible. The Pratap remarks that separate representation is not wanted in India. It has created two divisions in the country and if it continues to exist the divisions will be multiplied with the result that Indian nationalism will receive a huge shock. In another article the same paper observes: We should bear in mind that our policy regarding representation in councils, local bodies and services means that we want to remain for ever under British protection and that we do not at all want to prepare ourselves for the battle of freedom. Today India does not want either Hindus or Musalmans. It wants Indians who may move forward to break its chains. The Anand says that the Lucknow pact was a grievous blunder inasmuch as without satisfying the Muhammadans it has only whetted their appetite for further concessions and encouraged other communities also to demand separate representation for themselves. This state of things has weakened and will continue to weaken the people in their national struggle. It is therefore desirable that the system of communal representation should no longer be allowed to exist in the country.

All-Parties Conference.

The Medina is dissatisfied with the All-Parties Conference and remarks that as long as the Hindus persist in treading upon the rights of others it is impossible to come to a mutual settlement. The position taken up at the conference by Pandit Malaviya and Lala Lajpat Rai was based on want of straight-forwardness and large-heartedness. Can there be any hope that these Hindu nationalists will deal fairly with any minority?

The Swarajists.

According to the Indian Daily Telegraph the Bengal Swarajists have lost faith in themselves. Mr. C. R. Das might have surely made another dramatic presence in the Council if he had been sure of his mind. But he is wavering. His party is wavering. The ground is cut under them. They have so far forgotten their first principles as to say that they would negotiate for ministry if the Ordinance prisoners were released. In another article the same paper observes: The scene that come from Bengal, the recriminations between Nationalists in the Assembly and the hollow rumblings in the minds of the Central Provinces Swarajists all serve to point out that their days of obstruction and even gestures are over.

Bengal Ordinance.

The Haqiqat remarks that the Bengal Ordinance debate in the Legislative Assembly has exposed the hollowness of the Reforms but it is regrettable that responsible authorities in India and England have remained unmoved yet. The question is how long this policy of certification will prove successful. It cannot bring peace to the country nor can it beget trust and faith in Government. It will only lead to a revival of the anarchist movement in an intensified and dangerous form. The Medina welcomes with delight the rejection of the Bengal Ordinance by the Assembly. It says that it has now been made clear to the blind and intoxicated persons who want to deprive India of all the divine blessings, that the country can in no way tolerate any autocracy like that of Nadir Shah or Changez Khan. To send Subash Chandra to Burma and not to allow an innocent victim to see his expiring father are such cruel and tyrannical acts as can never be indulged in by any civilised Government.

Bengal Legislative Council.

The Leader is elated because the Bengal Legislative Council has carried the resolution asking the Government to make provision for the salaries of Ministers in Bengal. Referring to Sir Abdur Rahim's speech the paper says: His assurance to the Council put the Governor of Bengal absolutely in the right, and, after that, there would have been no excuse for any non-Swarajist to go into the lobby with Mr. Das's locum tenens. Quoting a passage from Sir Surendranath's speech in which he condemns the obstructionist methods, the paper says: His words of statesmanship ought to be reflected upon not only by Bengal Swarajists but by the members of the party in other provinces as well and at present nowhere more than by those of the Central Provinces and Berar. Non-cooperation having been formally "suspended" and really abandoned, wholesale obstruction having been given up almost everywhere and nowhere more than in the most important of legislative bodies, the Assembly, there being differences in the Swaraj party itself, of what avail is a nominal adherence to shibboleths? Is it a weakness for prestige that deters them from a thorough reconsideration of their position? The Pioneer says that by accepting the principle of a Ministry appointed by the Governor the Council has administered a decided check to the Swarajist policy of unqualified obstruction.

The Legislative Assembly.

Referring to the debate in the Assembly on the salary of the elected President of the Legislative Assembly the Pioneer says: The proposal of a low salary was justified on the ground that it would not prejudice the operations of a future Swarajist Government which would desire to reduce the salaries of public servants. That the Assembly disregarded this suggestion may be duly noted, and there seems to be little doubt that Indian political opinion will not favour a greater discrimination between the salaries paid to Europeans and Indians beyond that entailed by the overseas allowance. Referring to the resolution recommending the creation of a Supreme Court for India the same paper observes: Some of the Swarajists and Independents alike have lately shown a readiness to discuss proposals in a manner which even to those who disagree with them, appears at least to be reasonable. A Swarajist member is also reported to have declared during debate that the Budget this year will be considered on its merits. This may be found to be an elastic undertaking, but that it should have been given is suggestive. The Leader on the other hand says: We cannot congratulate the Legislative Assembly on their performance in throwing out the resolution of Sir Hari Singh Gour asking for the establishment of a Supreme Court in India. It was a happy day for the Swarajists; they could so demonstratively pay off old scores: whether the country lost or gained is a small matter, while the party's reputation does not suffer for "consistency is the virtue of donkeys." In another article the paper congratulates both the Swarajists and the Independents on having taken timely precaution this year not to be compelled to vote indiscriminately against the Budget or the Finance Bill. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: We are afraid a strange demoralisation is coming over the Assembly. For the second time, by a narrow margin, the Government have been outvoting the advanced party on a vital question. The first was over the postponement of the Patel Bill regarding the treatment of Colonials in India; the second was when an attempt to assert the self-respect of the Assembly by rejecting the departmental committees was defeated. This is a serious charge to be brought against the Government. The remedy is in the hands of the self-respecting members of the Assembly in refusing to serve in such committees and wishing the Home Member God-speed with Prince Akram of Bengal. It is doubtful whether such a step would commend itself to the Independents. Perhaps they hope that having exposed the mistaken policy of the Government, matters would mend hereafter. What is of immediate interest to the public is this hasty glimpse into the spirit behind the Government in its relations with the representatives of the people.

The Viceroy's speech.

The Prabha remarks that the Viceroy's speech at the opening of the Legislative Assembly was marked by self-conceit and obduracy and reflected the mentality of the ruler. It did not at all indicate what public opinion wanted, what dictates of duty demanded and what futurity had in store for the country. It is quite obvious what effect can such a speech and mentality have on the public mind. It will be no wonder if after this speech of the Viceroy any youth may be provoked to exclaim that the good of the country can be accomplished only through red revolution.

United Provinces capital.

In an article headed "No hope from Delhi" the Leader says: Nothing could be more unsatisfactory than the reply of the Government of India to the memorial and the resolutions of the citizens of Allahabad against the local Government's latest move of chronic if insidious hostility to the city of Allahabad. Delhi cares a brass farthing for provincial autonomy—it is guilty of no such common sense. The whole of the precious document in which the rehash of the local Government's unpublished defence yclept the Government of India, Home department's letter, has been conveyed is a sorry affair. It is a rebuke to believers in appeals to constituted authority, it is a satire on the exercise by the central Government of the appellate or revisional jurisdiction which resides in them. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Widowed Allahabad, it seems, will not be satisfied by the assurance of the doctor that the man is not dead: she would like to see him very much alive. We are promised more paroxysms of agitation. Let us wait and see.

The Oudh Chief Court Bill.

The Taraqqi praises the Hon'ble the Home Member for espousing the cause of Oudh in connection with the creation of a Chief Court and favours the Chief Justice being a barrister and urges the necessity of the grant of original appellate jurisdiction.

The Cawnpore municipal board.

The Aj disapproves of the appointment of Mr. Christie as the executive officer of the Cawnpore municipal board and remarks: We do not know what considerations weighed with the members of the board in appointing him in preference to a patriot like Shriyut Purshotam Das Tandon. If the board looked with contempt at the Congress and the non-cooperators it should have appointed a cooperator to the post. If it is true that Mr. Christie had not even applied for the post then his election is certainly mysterious. What is regrettable is that an elective body should help in Indian money being drained away by foreigners. It exhorts the tax-payers of Cawnpore to hold a public meeting and express their candid opinion in regard to this appointment.

Bribery and corruption.

The Azad says that the evil of bribery and corruption is rampant in all the departments of the Government and can only be eradicated by raising the standard of public honesty by means of advanced education, by subordinate officials being adequately paid and by the firm determination of the Government to root it out. It urges that the system of da'is should also be abolished forthwith as it sets bad precedents for the subordinate officials and the public and sometimes leads to objectionable practices. The Nejat remarks that the worst culprits in the matter of taking bribes are the tahsildars and honorary magistrates. For the prevention of bribery it is most necessary that those who offer bribes should not be brought to book and some C. I. D. men should be deputed to watch the conduct of the holders of honorary posts.

His Excellency's visit to Aligarh.

In the opinion of the Pioneer His Excellency travelled far beyond the scope of an academic address to the Muslim University. He put forward an eloquent plea for spirit of toleration as the need of the moment in India. In these days of communal tension and communal strife and vain efforts after a spurious unity based on racial antagonism Sir William Marris did well to hold aloft the ideal of mutual toleration and mutual forbearance as the hall-mark of the man of education and genuine culture. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: It was left to His Excellency to give a courageous lead to the Muslims who today waver on the fringe of Indian politics, not knowing which way to turn. In a speech marked by beauty of thought and diction—the characteristics of His Excellency that have marked him as scholar-administrator—His Excellency whispered the magic words that must set minds at work. In another article the paper remarks: Non-cooperation has melted before His Excellency Sir William Marris at Aligarh when Mr. Khwaja presented him an address on behalf of the Aligarh municipality. The fact is the character of the Governor while it has rendered him hateful to the Liberals, has endeared him to the Nationalists not because he has done anything out of the way.

British Empire Exhibition.

Commenting on the final report on the United Provinces Court at the British Empire Exhibition, the Pioneer says: The report amply bears out the forecast of the United Provinces Government and testifies to the almost world-wide interest in Indian industries and arts that has resulted from participation in the Exhibition and to the expansion in the demand for United Provinces manufactures which may reasonably be expected. That the prospects of a permanent expansion in the trade of the province is good cannot be gainsaid; the evidence adduced seems conclusive on the point. Referring to the amount of business done the paper observes that the results obtained, looked at from a purely business standpoint, were most encouraging. In an article headed "A proud United Provinces achievement" the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The report on the United Provinces section of the Exhibition as unfolded by the joint secretaries, is a record of which the Government of the United Provinces may well be proud. The Exhibition itself did not commend any sympathy among the public men; on the other hand it would be correct to say that a great deal of antipathy was roused at what was understood as a wasteful contribution to an Empire holiday. Direct financial results from a strictly business viewpoint may not be described as satisfactory. The chapter dealing with the work of preparation is of arresting interest as showing the considerable work that entailed on our officers who had been entrusted with the task and the faith and perseverance with which they carried on, until they had the satisfaction of feeling that the United Provinces Court was the most popular of Indian courts. The enterprise of the merchants who took part has been well rewarded, while the Government have in their employ officers who have had practical experience in preparing for an exhibition on a large scale. The excitement of work and constant attendance before a never-ending stream of visitors has besides its own compensation.

Exportation of wheat.

The Oudh Akhbar thinks that the recent rise in the price of wheat is due to its exports and draws the attention of the Government of India and the provincial Governments to the immediate necessity of stopping its export till such time as the conditions of the new crops is ascertained, otherwise the middle class people will be put to great hardship. The Surma-i-Rozgar urges the Government to put suitable restrictions on the purchase of wheat for foreign countries and thus save the poor Indians from hardship. The Haqiqat writes in a similar strain and adds that the activities of grain dealers should also be controlled as they are storing grain at the cost of the poor.

Complete independence.

The Medina favours Maulana Hasrat Mohani's views regarding complete independence for India. The leaders of the country should once for all decide that the meaning of swaraj is complete independence and that no Englishman should be allowed to come to India as her Viceroy and Governor. The paper further remarks that India wants to be within the British Empire only on account of the mutual distrust prevailing amongst her people and that the time has now come when all this mutual distrust must be eradicated and complete independence fixed as our goal.

Bolshevism.

The Medina remarks that the expulsion of Mr. M. N. Roy from France is an outcome of that imperialism and despotism which these days reign supreme in Britain and other European countries. Mr. M. N. Roy's expulsion will all the more provoke the enmity of the Bolsheviks against Britain and it is quite possible that they may become more active in guiding the Indian revolutionary party. It is not advisable to irritate the Bolshevists before the internal affairs of all the European countries have been set right.

Political propaganda.

The Abhyudaya publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap written from aboard a French ship en route to America in the course of which he remarks: Today a struggle is going on between India and England and it will continue until India has attained its goal. Indian leaders have advocated the boycott of British goods. Indeed financial loss is a severe blow. It is necessary, therefore, that we should boycott British ships as well. My Indian brethren! I tell you on the basis of my exprience as a traveller that if you want comfort and happiness you should travel only by French and Japanese ships. Here you get the best food and you are respected. Racial discrimination is never observed and the rates are also cheap. The Vartman remarks: At present the Indian States are again in trouble. Those princes who are self-respecting, who have the glory of their forefathers in view and who possess such feelings as are likely to create awakening in their States cannot retain their throne. They cannot escape from the evil eye of the bureaucracy. They are interned as being incapable, idle and quarrelsome. It was because of his self-respect that the Maharaja of Nabha was dethroned and his daughter was married to a Kalsiya prince against his will. After him the Raja of Suket has also been dethroned. His offence is also said to be similar to that of the Maharaja of Nabha. The Maharani of Bastar has been interned and her daughter is being married to a prince against her will and thus an encroachment has been made on the social usages of the Bastar family. It cannot be said how many more princes will be carried away by this storm. Verily, the Indian Chiefs do not enjoy even that freedom as is enjoyed by an ordinary labourer of British India. When even social customs are being interfered with the future of the Indian princes is still more dark and gloomy. The Prabha remarks: The rulers of India and official members of the ruled community are sowing seeds of revolution in the minds of India by their short-sightedness. Through their inordinate love of position and under the influence of false self-conceit they take steps to suppress the revolution, the outcome of their own previous misdeeds, but it only serves to add fuel to the fire. If the rulers of India will consider this question they will be convinced of the futility of their administrative and repressive policy. But it is idle to expect such an attitude on their part seeing that they have little time to spare from plying the wheel of repression. The Vartman remarks that if ever a red revolution in any form takes place in India it will not take place on account of the outburst of the people but on account of the repressive conspiracies of the bureaucracy. And even at that time the country will be saved by the non-violent movement alone. The Medina publishes a contributed article in which the writer deplores that the Congress volunteers have not fulfilled the conditions for civil disobedience, that the country is not prepared for breaking the law and for non-payment of taxes and that the non-cooperation programme has been dropped. He desires that a few patriots should go and explain the advantages of Home Rule to soldiers also. After accusing Britain of ignoring the loyal services of the Indians and breaking its promises to them, he opines that Home Rule cannot be secured from Britain by the pen and hopes that the Swarajists will act according to the decisions of the Gaya Congress. The same paper protests against the Iraq Government's ban on the paper and accuses Britain of the policy of keeping her subject people ignorant by shutting out foreign papers and asks if the ban will prevent the light of truth from entering the country. The Nejat accuses Lord Reading's Government of paying no heed to popular opinion and creating a situation likely to lead people into desperate action. The present policy of the Government is directed more towards its own maintenance than towards the public good. The Oudh Akhbar refers to the distribution of revolutionary leaflets and suspects that it is the work of a man who is specially interested in ever defaming the so-called revolutionary party. If any such party does exist it would not be so blind to its own interests. It hopes that sufficient care will be exercised in dealing with the matter. The Arya Varta describes the humble life which Lala Har Dayal is leading in Sweden and remarks: The hardships endured by patriots give birth to such a spirit of self-sacrifice and courage amongst their people as ultimately brings about their emancipation. May the country produce thousands of such patriots as Har Dayal so that this country which has been under subjection for centuries may be able to secure a place amongst free countries of the world. The same paper publishes an article from Lala Har Dayal dilating upon the harm done to China by the doctrines of non-violence and peace. As long as the avaricious and savage nations are armed such doctrines for other nations are only suicidal. Those of the Indian patriots who harp upon non-violence and peace so untimely should take a lesson from China which has fallen into the abyss of slavery by adhering to a faith of piety and non-injury. The introduction of such doctrines into politics is fraught with danger. Today the English, the Turks, the Japanese and other strong nations need the teachings of Buddha, but the Punjabis, the Bengalis, the Egyptians, the Iranians, the Chinese and other weak and oppressed nations stand in need of the teachings of Guru Govind Singh and Cromwell who taught us to be brave and courageous. The Nejat reproduces from the Hamdard (Delhi) a Kumauni song composed before the Mutiny in which the English of those days are described as deceitful robbers of the ryot and introducers of all social and domestic unhappiness. The Sach publishes an article contributed by one Abdul Majid who asserts that the entire Muslim world is directly or indirectly under the slavery of the Western powers and specially the British. He contends that it is futile for Indian Muslims to set themselves against the Hindus alone who are as much under the slavery of Britain as they themselves are and concludes: Is it not our first and the last duty to fight vigorously that system of government which has imprisoned our religious liberty on all sides? Many sympathetic Musalmans were very anxious to go to Hedjaz and to take a practical part in unknotting the tangled affairs there, and has not the Government stood in the way of their serving Islam by imposing restrictions on the issue of passports? Can a Musalman by entering the police or the military refuse to fire at and kill another Musalman?

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 28th February, 1925.

Egypt.

THE Sada-i-Muslim considers the defeat of Zaghlul Pasha at the recent elections in Egypt as fatal to the progress of the country and attributes his failure to the murder of Sir Lee Stack and the consequent terrorisation of the Egyptian people by British military demonstrations.

The Hedjaz affairs.

Referring to the struggle in the Hedjaz the Oudh Akhbar regrets that at last the worst fears of the Muslim world have come to be realised. If Ibn-i-Saud wins, he will not at all favour the establishment of a republic after the heavy bloodshed which his victory would entail, and in case of Amir Ali's success it is absurd to expect anything from him. The Medina condemns Amir Ali as an unworthy member of the Hashimite dynasty and describes him as a puppet in the hands of the British Government. It takes to task the British Consul at Jeddah for not protesting against the insults and humiliation showered upon the British subjects who composed the Indian deputation and remarks that this indifference exposes the dishonest policy of the Foreign Office and brings to light British participation in conspiracies which are every day being hatched against the Muslim world. The Nejat deplores the unsuccessful return of the Muslim deputation from Jeddah and avers that not only Amir Ali but other European diplomats as well are doing their best to bring about the ruin and destruction of Islam.

Afghanistan.

The Medina strongly disapproves of the policy of the Afghan Government in condemning to death the members of the Ahmadya community and remarks that it will give an opportunity to the enemies of Islam and Afghanistan to carry out their wishes. The Afghan Government should forbear from taking a step which may be prejudicial to the interests of Islam and the best course will be to banish the members of the Ahmadya community from Afghanistan.

The Russo-Japanese Treaty.

The Vartman remarks that a new conspiracy is being hatched to humiliate Germany. France and Britain are its chief movers. The object of this conspiracy is to render Germany quite powerless and impotent so that she may never be able to raise her head. It is the alliance among Japan, China and Bolshevik Russia which has led France and Britain to hatch an international conspiracy in Europe in the name of peace.

Indians in the Colonies.

Commenting on Dr. Norman Leys' book on Kenya the Leader says: The British Government's week-kneed surrender to the threats of armed revolt of the Kenya whites, and the absence of any strong protest in Britain against that humiliation, shows that there is little likelihood of the policy suggested by Dr. Leys being followed by the present-day statesmen in Britain.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the proceedings of the United Provinces Muslim League the Pioneer says: The disposition on the part of many representatives of Muhammadan opinion to draw closer to the Government is very largely the outcome of the misgivings engendered by the regrettable communal tension which has been in evidence for some time past. The frank exposition, from the Muhammadan standpoint, of the factors making for increased friction between the two communities furnished a convincing answer to the charges of exaggeration of communal differences which have been brought against English newspapers in this country and the correspondents in India of London journals. Referring to Mr. Alay Nabi's remarks regarding the sangathan movement in his speech at the meeting of the Muslim League the Leader says: We fear the scope and purpose of the movement are much misunderstood by its critics. Rightly understood, and discreetly conducted, it is a movement which should receive no hing but support from every right-minded man to whatever community he may belong. In the paper's opinion Mr. Alay Nabi has done excellent public service by speaking with so much moderation and discretion with so little bias. In another article the paper remarks: We are glad that the chairman of the reception committee, the Hon'ble Mr. Raza Ali, kept up in his speech the spirit of moderation. It is more than we can tell whether we can similarly appreciate his views on concrete questions. The League has taken a more or less extreme position on almost every matter of contention between the two communities. It need not be said that those who have been striving to bring about a nearer approximation between the view-point of the two communities must regret the opinions embodied in the League's resolution. Referring to Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan's speech at the Allahabad Muslim educational conference, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is agreed on all hands that one of the essentials before swaraj is Hindu-Muslim unity. By playing into the hands of officials who are interested in prolonging the period of probation, the Muslims will not surely keep back swaraj from Hindus; they can at best help the bureaucrat to keep up the present conditions. They will undoubtedly alienate Hindu sympathy. In another article the paper refers to the great emphasis that is placed by the Muslim conference on the need for over representation of Muslims all round, and says that the Hindus cannot help feeling that they cannot give up their religious revival simply because the Muslim bully is abroad. In another article the paper says: Attention is being drawn all over India to certain resolutions passed by the United Provinces Muslim League which prove the grotesque character of the demands of the community that barely counts 15 per cent. of the population of these provinces. But one purpose will be undoubtedly served by such specific demands, adhered to with all the fatal obstinacy of communal idealism; it will strengthen the hands of the enemies of Indian swaraj. It is a question of time when Maulana Muhammad Ali, who is already readjusting his sails, will steer clear into the open seas of rank communalism, cutting off anchor from Gandhi who will be solitarily spinning his charkha and helplessly pointing to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya as the sole support to the Hindus. The Tohfa-i-Hind describes separate representation as a fatal poison to Indian nationality and remarks that this sweet cake of communal representation has been ingeniously introduced in this unfortunate country by those notorious cooks of the West who want to continue their policy of repression. This cake has set some hungry and selfish people of India to fight among themselves, little knowing that by so doing they strengthen the hands of those who are striving to put a clog to the moving wheel of Hindu-Muslim unity. The Sada-i-Muslim reads in the move of Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan of merging all Muslim associations into a central organisation an attempt to alienate the Musalmans from the Congress. It exhorts the Musalmans to remain in the Congress fold as in addition to demanding their rights from the Hindus they have to demand the same from the English. If we are tired of Hindu mentality the remedy lies in facing the situation with determination and patience rather than running away from the field. It will be great cowardice on our part to forget our national interests and co-operate in the destruction of India. The Rohilkhand Gazette agrees with Sir William Vincent that the Indian Musalmans are now rallying to the side of the Government and most of them have come to realise that they can receive better treatment from the Government than from the Hindus. It remarks that the Musalmans will be lacking in wisdom if they fail to do so as the Hindus are inflicting greater wounds upon them than did the Government. The Abhaya says that Hindus should refuse to consider the question of increased Muhammadan representation until and unless the Muhammadans stop cow-slaughter altogether. If the Muhammadans want to win over the heart of the Hindus, they should at once take into consideration the question of cow-protection. No communal pact can be said to be complete unless it includes the question of cow-protection upon which rests the foundation of a true Hindu-Muslim unity and the attainment of swaraj. The Surya points out that the more the Muhammadans are given special concessions and facilities the more their demands grow and their price for Hindu-Muslim unity rises at every suitable opportunity. The Hindus will therefore do well to leave the question of Hindu-Muslim unity to the vicissitudes of time which alone will convince the Muhammadans of the error of their ways.

Communal representation.

The Hindi Press continues to unanimously denounce the system of separate or communal representation. The Garhwali remarks that separate communal representation has interfered seriously with the development of nationalism in the country and has only strengthened the communal spirit among the Muhammadans who have so far enjoyed it. Excessive communal representation has only aggravated the demands of the Muhammadans instead of bringing them over to the nationalistic way of thinking and should no longer be conceded, even if separate representation has to be granted to them. The Vartman says that any attempt to secure separate communal representation is to destroy the glory of the country and the nation. By fighting against one another the different communities allow the country to pass into the hands of the foreigners. Wisdom does not lie in fighting for crumbs but in destroying the communal spirit. The Aj is strongly opposed to the principle of communal representation in services and favours recruitment to them on the basis of merit alone. It says that communal representation is the path to national destruction and that the rapidity with whch communalism is spreading in the country cannot but cause irretrievable injury to it.

The Swarajists.

The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the Swarajists in the Bihar Council made a "gesture" by walking out of the Council—a futile performance, for the Chief Secretary was only spared thereby the pains to abuse them for their mischievous yarns. The Council voted and chuckled happily as if nothing had happened. The Bihar Swarajists acted without instruction from "headquarters," for which in the Central Provinces, Dr. Moonje, for instance, is waiting before calling upon Sir Montagu Butler to accept the ministership. In the meanwhile in the headquarters there is still deep panting after the hot contact with the bureaucrat in the same lobby as against Sir Hari Singh and his Supreme Court Bill. The Leader in an article headed "The C. P. Swarajists" writes: While the C. P. Swarajists are unable to move without orders from above, one of the generals has been in practice so much diluting the original policy of the party that a microscopic examination can alone disclose whether any vestiges of it are left. The Pratap remarks that having realised the imprudent and impractical nature of their policy of "obstruction" and "non-cooperation from within," the Swarajist leaders are now going to adopt Mr. Tilak's policy of responsive cooperation. It is really sad that men like Das, Nehru and Kelkar should waste their energies in the Councils and the Assembly. Liberal leaders like Messrs. Shastri, Chintamani and Kunzru are more fitted for carrying on the policy of responsive cooperation than the Swarajist leaders. The true work of personages like Das and Nehru lies in the direction of nation-building and preparing the country for direct action.

Mr. Gandhi.

Referring to the refusal by His Excellency the Viceroy of permission to Mr. Gandhi to proceed to Kohat, the Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is a pity that Mr. Gandhi is not able to help in the solution of a question that has eaten into the vitals of the Hindu community. This is yet another argument why Hindus should lose no time to organise their community and stem the disruptive influence at work against swaraj. The extreme step of passive resistance against the order of the Viceroy by Gandhi, at this time, would be unwise, for the simple reason that Gandhi is not wanted by the Muslims at Kohat.

The Bengal Legislative Council.

The Hamdam expresses its surprise at the success of the Government regarding the salaries of the Ministers and attributes the defeat of the Swarajists to the absence of Mr. C. R. Das. The Nationalists and the Swarajists are both responsible for this disregard of public opinion. If they show a spirit of toleration towards each other the Bengal Government would have no chance to announce its success. The party spirit in Bengal where the new Ordinance has been enforced in the teeth of public opposition and protest is deplorable.

The Council of State.

The Leader says that the Council of State has done its duty by the Government by throwing out the Bill for the repeal of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, Part II, 1908, passed by the Assembly by a majority. This Council has so acted systematically during the whole of its four years of existence as to have made it nothing short of a peril to popular liberties. And one of the reforms most essential is that its constitution should be mended. If the proposal made by many in 1920 that its members should be returned by a method of indirect election, the principal constituencies being provincial legislative councils, had been accepted, the Council of State would not have become such a hopeless preserve of the aristocracy of wealth and age and conservatism as it unfortunately is today.

The Legislative Assembly.

In the opinion of the Pioneer the action of the Legislative Assembly in rejecting the Government's offer to accept a resolution recommending the appointment of a committee to report on the possibility of training Indians for King's commissions in an institution in India is as amazing as its adoption of a motion virtually directing a committee to report on the steps to be taken to set up such a college and at the same time to make recommendations for accelerating the pace of Indianisation of the Army with the view of attracting educated Indians. It is unfortunate that the Assembly rejected Lord Rawlinson's offer to appoint a committee, for by that means India could obtain an authoritative exposition of a problem which, as the constitutional development proceeds, emerges more clearly into the foreground. In supporting the visionary inaccuracies of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, as embodied in his proposal to appoint a committee which would omit the vital stage in enquiry into that problem, the Assembly was grasping shadows and rejecting the substance. The Leader congratulates the Independents of the Legislative Assembly on having recovered their soul and the Assembly itself on having definitely rejected Mr. Moti Lal Nehru's lead into the no-man's land of purposeless and bootless obstruction. It was enough that last year there was farce of a wholesale rejection of certain demands for grants and of the Finance Bill. A repetition of the blunder would have been very regrettable. The Indian Daily Telegraph thinks that the debate on the military college for India clearly showed the martial spirit of the awakening Hindus and it will not take long before the Hindu millions are a disciplined nation, able to enforce their word against the world. The Leader congratulates Sir Charles Innes on the first Railway Budget and commends an attentive perusal of it to its readers. The problems of finding capital for improvements on open lines as well as for additions to the existing mileage of railways, working expenses, goods rates and passenger fares, and Indianisation of the railway services are all of supreme importance, and it is the function of the legislature to act as the vigilant guardian of the tax-payer's interests and to see that the right policy is adopted in respect of all of them. The apprehension that the separation of railway from the general finances might involve a lessening of the legislature's control over railway policy and finance has been proved by Sir Charles Innes to be entirely unfounded. Sir Charles Innes has attempted to make a brave show of such improvement as there has been in the larger employment of Indians in the superior railway services. We say without hesitation that the improvement that still has to be effected is infinitely more than what has been. The Pioneer says that the presentation of the Railway Budget may be regarded as a landmark in the history of Indian railway administration. It was a singularly lucid statement of the financial position which Sir Charles Innes placed before the Assembly, and if any members still entertain the suspicion that the object of the separation of railway finance was to weaken the control of the Assembly over the railway estimates, that suspicion must surely have been dispelled. The Indian Daily Telegraph considers the Railway Budget, from the profit and loss account, to be satisfactory and remarks: The second class and first class passenger will get some substantial reduction. That is also the way of the gods that rule over the railways: they give to them who hath and from him who hath not, they take away the little he hath. The Vartman writes: Never before were the martial spirit of the Indians and their manliness treated with such indifference or murdered in such a manner as during the British rule. Only 150 years of British administration has made Indians ease-loving, weak, spiritless, unfamiliar with the methods of warfare and unfit for self-defence. The British authorities desirous of perpetually keeping India under their feet have relieved the Indian youths and soldiers of the care to protect their country. Educated Indians have now come to realise that this military policy of the Government has maimed them and rendered them more helpless than domestic animals. It was in view of this that the resolution for the establishment of a military college in India for imparting military training to Indian youths was moved in the Legislative Assembly the other day. But the opposition of the Government to this resolution shows that the bureaucracy thinks that to facilitate the military training of Indian youths is equivalent to digging its own grave.

The Agra Tenancy Bill.

The Al Bureed opposes the grant of life tenancy to the tenants as it will entail great hardships on the petty zamindars most of whom in course of time will be deprived of their land. It makes a strong request to His Excellency the Governor to get the returns of the transfer of the holdings of petty zamindars prepared from the khewats of the last 25 years which will show that many cultivators have virtually become the masters of the lands of their zamindars.

British Empire Exhibition.

The Pioneer hopes that it should be possible for the exhibitors who appreciate the solid advantages which they obtained from appearance at Wembley last year to make their plans for participation in the enterprise likely to bring even more substantial benefits to them than before. In another article the paper says that although the Government of India have decided not to participate officially in the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley this year, Indian products and manufactures, it seems, are likely to be adequately represented. In view of the popularity of the Exhibition last year among Indian merchants and exporters it seems probable that its expectations will be realised.

Complete independence.

The Sada-i-Muslim endorses the views of Maulana Hasrat regarding complete independence and draws the attention of the political committee of the all-parties conference to the necessity of carefully considering the question of the future government of the country. The Muslims are apprehensive of their position in a Dominion status for India as they think that under it they will have to serve two masters--the English and the Hindus.

Indian States.

The Medina strongly criticises the attitude of the Viceroy regarding the abdication of the Maharaja of Nabha, the conduct of Raja Sir Hari Singh, the misdeeds of the Maharaja of Indore, litigation between the Nawab of Rampur and his wife, the affairs of the Suket State and the marriage of the daughter of Maharaja of Nabha and remarks that his régime is full of the events of abdication and dethronement and that he is following the despotic policy of Lord Dalhousie. In another article the same paper accuses the Viceroy of "criminal indifference" in paying no heed to the grievances of the Kashmir Musalmans and sending back their memorial to the Kashmir authorities. What mercy can the Musalmans expect when the culprit himself is the judge? It is a pity that those who signed the memorial are being banished from the State and their very lives and property are at the mercy of a few pandits who are their masters. Will Lord Reading appoint a commission to make an independent enquiry? The Abhyudaya says: What greater injustice can there be than this that the daughter of the ex-Maharaja of Nabha should be given in marriage to a Khalsia prince by the Political Agent against the wishes of the Maharaja. This is the height of the autocracy of Political Agents. If today the ex-Maharaja of Nabha and the Maharani Sahiba of Basual have fallen victims to autocracy who knows which other prince may fall victim to it next. The Indian Chiefs should at once attend to this matter.

Proposed usury legislation.

The Anand notes with regret that the Government of India did not accept Mr. Yamin Khan's resolution regarding usury says that the arguments adduced against usury legislation are neither convincing nor effective and show that the officials only care for their own opinions and have little sympathy with the poor.

Exportation of monkeys.

A correspondent writing in the Sudharak exhorts the Jains who are such great protagonists of the principle of non-injury to raise their united voice of protest against the exportation of monkeys involving their destruction for thyroid gland treatment in Europe.

Revolution in India.

The Naiyar-i-Azam deprecates the activities of the revolutionary party in India and exhorts the people not to tolerate the movement as it is fraught with great danger to the country. Any one who shows sympathy to the dreamers of "Red India" is a traitor to his motherland. Referring to the seditious leaflets recently distributed the Aligarh Gazette is sure that the Bolsheviks are spreading their fatal doctrines in this country and condemns the agitation started against the Bengal Ordinance. It enjoins upon the people the duty of fully helping the Government in the suppression of seditious conspiracies.

Political propaganda.

Vehemently protesting against the export of food-stuffs from India the Hindustani asserts that it has resulted in draining the wealth of the country and reducing it to extreme poverty. It is a pity that the Government is indulging in selfishness with eyes shut and cares not the least if the Indians die of starvation and hunger. Divine vengeance will fall upon it. Instead of attending to the needs of its subjects or feeding them from its own coffers it takes away from them the products of their country which are the mainstay of their life. Viceroys and Governors can spend our country's money like water in any way they like and frame any legislation in spite of the opposition of the Council. The Abhaya publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Lala Har Dayal, M.A., urges the Indian cultivators to have a separate organisation of their own to protect their economic rights and property against Indian capitalists and British officials. As regards the political emancipation of the country they should work along with other communities. He exhorts Indian students and educated classes to devote themselves to the service of cultivators and spread enlightenment among them, as the latter form the very basis of the nation.

Hedjaz affairs.

THE Medina continues to suspect British intentions regarding the Hedjaz. Referring to the terms offered to the British Consul by Ibn Saud the paper remarks: Does the British Government think that the world is blind, the Muslims are fools and the Indians are ignorant of the British nature? British statesmen should no more indulge in their habit of seeking pretexts for creating trouble for the Musalmans. If Great Britain kindles the fire of war on the shores of Arabia its sparks will burn to ashes the peace of England. The Nejat reproduces an article from the Al Shurà in which Sultan Ibn Saud is advised not to let himself enmeshed in the net which Britain has spread in Arabia to dominate it by setting Ibn Saud and Amir Ali against each other. Referring to the failure of the Indian deputation to the Hedjaz, the Haqiqat remarks that the destinies of kingdoms and countries are decided by the sword and not by deputations. Amir Ali's actions are quite in accordance with the dictates of human nature and no purpose can be served by condemning them.

The Khilafat.

The Sada-i-Muslim does not favour the Egyptian suggestion of electing Amir Abdul Karim as the Khalifa of the Musalmans and remarks that what is required is a Khalifa who may be able to draw sword against the greedy nations of Europe and be astute enough to be a match against the cunning policy of Britain, France and Russia. It is only the Turks who can successfully perform the functions of the Khalifat.

Rebellion in Kurdistan.

The Hamdam takes exception to the views expressed by the Pioneer that the outbreak of rebellion falsifies the Turkish claim to Mosul and remarks that the rebellion does not equally signify that the Kurds like the British mandate or the semi-British Government of Iraq. The attempt to start propaganda in favour of Great Britain is more likely to weaken its claim in the eyes of the Indians. The Medina lays the responsibility of this rebellion at the door of the British Government which is pulling the wires from behind.

Struggle for liberty in Morroco.

The Nejat says that Great Britain owing to its anti-Muslim policy is perturbed at the defeat of Spain and it is useless to expect that it will raise its voice against the inhuman atrocities perpetrated by the latter. The activities of Spain resemble those of Great Britain in Waziristan and Iraq.

Afghanistan.

The Medina resents the appeal of the Ahmadiya community to the Viceroy and the League of Nations and says: We are strongly opposed to the treatment meted out to the Qadyanis by the Kabul Government, still we cannot help expressing our regret at the shameful conduct of the head of the Ahmadiyas who should not have invoked the help of infidels against a Muslim ruler.

Indians in the Colonies.

Referring to the pending legislation seeking to impose by law new disabilities upon Asiatics and Africans the Leader regrets that the impending danger has so far not received from the public bodies and public men the prompt and serious attention which it deserves and requires. In a leading article the same paper says that the Bill legalising the colour bar which has been introduced in the South African Parliament raises a question of fundamental imperial importance inasmuch as it seeks to create two classes of citizenship, one superior and another inferior. It raises racial issues in an acute form which are likely to lead to racial bitterness between the whites and the non-whites. The Bill legalising the colour bar, if passed, is bound to accentuate the existing situation and give an enormous impetus to the development of race-consciousness.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the resolution passed by the Legislative Council regarding the grant to the Aligarh University the Indian Daily Telegraph says: It is a sign of the times that even such an innocuous resolution should have necessitated an apologetic tone from speakers and elaborate flourishes on religious differences. This over-protestation only emphasised the inner current of hostility between the two communities which, unfortunately, is the predominant feature of public life in India at the present time. Referring to the statement issued by Mr. Gandhi and Pandit Moti Lal Nehru regarding the sub-committee appointed by the committee of the All-Parties Conference the Pioneer says: The problem of Hindu-Muhammadan antagonism is too grave, and the friction between the two communities is too deep-seated for any settlement to be reached by mere discussion. A great deal of spade work will have to be done by the leaders of both communities before it will be possible to remove the mutual disrtust and other factors making for disunion.

Communal representation.

The Azad opines that separate representaion has only resulted in creating a gulf between the two communities, and that the fixing of communal share in the Government services will be fatal to good administration and the mental development of future generations. If the Musalmans insist on securing adequate representation in those provinces where they are in a majority they should expect no concession in those where they are in minority. The Sada-i-Muslim, while favouring the separate representation of the Sikhs, is opposed to their excessive demand. It deplores the aggressive attitude of the Sikhs and advises them to base their case on sound arguments rather than on threats. The Chun Chun ka Morabba remarks that the competition between Hindus and Musalmans for Government posts and separate representation in Council and local bodies is responsible for communal tension. The Bharat Jiwan is strongly opposed to separate communal representation as it stands in the way of the creation of one nation in the country and thereby strengthens the alien rule.

Muslim conferences at Allahabad.

The Hamdam pays a tribute to Syed Aley Nabi for his learned presidential address and endorses his views that to carry on the work of political organisation paid workers who can give their full time should be employed. In another article the same paper draws the attention of the Hindu members of local boards and of the Hindu national workers to the grievances and the demands of the Musalmans set forth in the address of Syed Zahur Ahmed and points out how the extensive rights given by the new Act have been abused by the Hindus. If this state of affairs is allowed to continue the little unity left after the onslaughts of shuddhi and sangathan will also be done away with. The Medina urges upon the need of an Islamic conference in India and remarks that if the Musalmans of all sects come to have the same angle of vision they will not only become free themselves but will also bring about the emancipation of India. The Sada-i-Muslim describes the presidential address of Syed Aley Nabi as disappointing and deplores that the League is now carrying on a propaganda against pan-Islamism and holds the Musalmans responsible for the present communal bitterness prevailing in the country. The Anand says that the demand of 40 per cent. representation for Muhammadans in the councils, local bodies and services voiced at the Provincial Muslim League at Allahabad shows how the Muhammadans have been obsessed with selfishness and how they want to deprive others of their rights for their self-aggrandisement. Such a demand on their part betrays their utter indifference to material interests and renders the attainment of Hindu-Muslim unity and peace impossible.

The Swarajists.

The Pioneer thinks that there appears to be a strong feeling among the rank and file of the Swarajists in the Central Provinces that the policy of indiscriminate obstruction should be modified to the extent that Ministers should once more be allowed to assume charge of the transferred departments. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the public eye is keenly on the Swarajists, the proud heroes of a faded yesterday, who courageously parted company from Gandhi with the loud boast of obstruction and of carrying fire and sword into the heart of the bureaucratic citadel. Today they seem helplessly grovelling in the dust, unable to do any effective harm. The Haqiqat remarks that in view of their defeat in the Assembly and the Bengal Council the Swarajists should change their policy and benefit the country by accepting Government offices. A Swarajist minister can be more useful than a non-Swarajist provided he gives up his policy of obstruction.

Bengal Legislative Council.

In a leading article, headed "Well done Bengal!" the Success writes: There are clear indications that common sense, and not emotionalism, is slowly regaining control of the reins of political agitation all over the country. The news therefore that Sir Abdur Rahim's resolution in the Bengal Legislative Council recommending the provision of ministerial salaries in the budget has been carried by a majority of 24 votes is a welcome sign of this return to sobriety of which we are speaking. We hope that the olive branch thus proffered by the Bengal Legislative Council will be accepted by the Government in the same spirit of goodwill and statesmanship.

Legislative Assembly.

The Leader congratulates Sir Basil Blackett on his admirable speech in introducing the budget, but complains that greater relief has not been afforded to the provinces. We are not at all satisfied that our own provinces have got anything like their just dues. The United Provinces have been assessed to a far heavier contribution than could be justified from any point of relief than Bengal or the Punjab. We record a strong protest against the injustice. Our point is that in addition to the relief to the provinces an attempt should have been made to deal with the cotton excise duty as it could have been if a more serious attempt had been made to deal with military expenditure, if somewhat smaller provision had been made for the reduction or avoidance of debt, if unnecessary new expenditure had not been incurred, such as the increased emoluments to superior civil services, and if the cost of civil administration had been further reduced, as it would have been without detriment to efficiency by the speeding up of Indianisation and by the more rigorous enforcement of economy. The Indian Daily Telegraph thinks that the budget statements provide ample justification for satisfaction. It is a long time since we had what may be termed a prosperity budget. The substantial reduction in military expenditure is largely responsible for this result, and if the executive will further consider the criticisms of the popular representatives in this direction, we have no doubt that the nightmare of deficits and additional taxation on salt would be definitely laid up. The greatest disappointment will be felt that the postal rates are still kept high. In the opinion of the paper the trend of the budget debate shows unmistakably the strong differences of opinion between the two wings of the Nationalist party. In another article the paper says that perhaps the Commander-in-Chief's participation in the budget debate was intended to stifle the frequent references to the need for further retrenchment in the Army by his expert and emphatic pronouncement that the Indian Army was the best of its kind and that it was worth the money spent on it. In yet another article the paper remarks: The impression is rapidly gaining ground that under the resolute policy of the Government the Indian politicians, who came into contact with it in the Councils, are rapidly being demoralised. When they find that they will not get everything they are inclined to reconcile their lot to something. Referring to the debate in the Assembly on the cotton excise duty the paper says: The speeches go to demonstrate the sickening attitude of the Government towards the growing industry of India. It is too late in the day to justify the cotton excise duty after it had been condemned by responsible statesmen. It is a scandal that the Government should persist in repeating pious generalisation in the face of the outstanding fact that the duty was a deliberate attempt to stifle an indigenous industry in the interests of Lancashire. The Advocate congratulates Sir Basil Blackett for presenting a surplus budget in the Legislative Assembly, but says: The way in which the surplus has been distributed between various provinces clearly indicate some hidden motive of the bureaucracy which wants to create provincial jealousies and which might lead to the split between the Nationalists and the Swarajists and thereby the Government may gain its object. The Medina takes to task those members of the Council who have callously and blindly voted against Mr. Patel's resolution for the repeal of repressive laws and remarks: How long will the honour and liberty of India be assailed and when will that blessed day come that a poor Indian will enjoy the same privileges in the law courts which even the beasts enjoy. Today the pen, the tongue and even the heart of an Indian are fettered by the chain of the country's laws. But you feel no mercy for them and never realise why thirty crores of Indians have been deprived of those divine blessings which you are appropriating to yourself alone. The Hind-i-Jadid resents the Home Member's reply to Mr. Patel's resolution and deplores that the Government is opposed to such a beneficial resolution. It describes those Indian members who opposed the resolution as sycophants and traitors. In another article the same paper praises the members of the Assembly for opposing the Bengal Ordinance and remarks that India has now become alive to its interests and no amount of deceit can weaken the strength of public opinion. The Vartman says that considering the budget from an economic point of view it will have to be admitted that the bureaucracy has tried to make this year's budget more satisfactory than that of the last year, but whether the budget of an alien bureaucracy may be good or bad the people can have nothing to do with it unless they or their representatives have the power to control it. Until it is so it is the duty of every non-official member to reject it off hand. The Aj remarks that by his new arrangements for the administration of the Railways and the Telegraph and Postal departments and by his scheme to regulate the provincial loans from the Government of India, Sir Basil Blackett has immortalised his name in the history of the financial administration of India. Had not the financial department come under his supervision after Sir Malcolm Hailey's mal-administration we would have been confronted with a situation that would have called for the imposition of fresh taxation. In another article the same paper opines that the debate on the various items of the railway budget proves that the bureaucracy has taken a vow not to allow the Indians to control State concerns. The Anand congratulates the Independents on their wisdom in not siding with the Swarajists but supporting the Government in passing the railway budget. Their prudent action is sure to benefit the country whereas the attempt of the Swarajists to reject the railway budget would have only resulted in setting back the hands of the clock of progress. The Vartman remarks that the bureaucracy must have greatly relished the fight between the Swarajists and the so-called Nationalists in the Assembly over the railway budget. This fight has made it abundantly clear that the members of the Nationalist party, the majority of whom are very selfish, will no longer support the Swaraj party in its policy of obstruction. Thus the present programme of the Swarajists which depends for its success on the support of the Nationalist party is doomed to failure. It is high time that the Swarajists realised their position and came out of the Council.

The Viceroy's leave.

In a leading article headed "The latest announcement" the Leader asks: Would it not have been more advantageous if Lord Birkenhead had decided to follow Mr. Montagu's example and come out to India instead of sending for this galaxy of gubernatorial and official talent to confabulate with him in King Charles' Street? He could then have got not only at still more Governors and councillors, but also at Indian opinion, which we submit should count for something even with a Tory government. We regret to say it, but it is our duty not to omit to say it, that Lord Reading does not today inspire the same confidence in the Indian mind as his talk of justice created hope in his first year of office. If Lord Birkenhead has an idea that he will get at the whole of fact and truth from interviews with Governors on leave, the noble Earl is much mistaken.

Indianisation of the Army.

The Leader in a leading article headed "Downright Reactionaryism" says: The general budget debate in the Legislative Assembly would have remained a more or less humdrum and uneventful affair if the Commander-in-Chief had not thought fit to intervene with an hour's oration. The present speech of Lord Rawlinson's goes a long way to disillusion such of our countrymen as still needed to have the scales taken from their eyes as to what is to be expected of the British Government for as long as it is not representative of and not responsible to the Indian Legislature. India is not to have swaraj because Indians cannot defend the country. Indians cannot defend the country because the British Government have not prepared and will not allow them to do so. There can be no national self-government without a national army. The drain of wealth is to continue. India is to be "bled" for excessive military expenditure. Indians are to be kept down in a state of pupilage and subjection. Of the whole of that policy, decidedly the most unfavourable to India has been the military policy. It is rooted in self-interest and distrust. It has done incalculable injury to the most cherished interests and aspirations. It is for the people of India to awake to the situation, to close up their ranks, and to set afoot a mighty organised agitation which will not miscalculate the relative strength of the opposing forces, will not be guilty of the costly indiscretion of overstepping the bounds of law and practicality, and will promise success by its righteousness and its constitutional, orderly, sustained, and determined character.

United Provinces Legislative Council.

The Leader congratulates the United Provinces Legislative Council on having rejected the proposal of Babu Sangam Lal Agarwala that the Government should advise the Board of High School and Intermediate Education and the external side of the Allahabad University to institute higher Hindi and Urdu examinations, and says:

On the merits the proposal had little to commend it and much against it, while, even if it had been sound and feasible it would have been perilously inexpedient for the legislature or the Government to have countenanced the course of action that was suggested. Referring to the provincial budget the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The dark shadow of the recent floods hover over the finances of the United Provinces darkening every sphere of activity and compelling the generosity of the Ministers to continue their self-denying gesture of reduced salary amidst the voluptuous Lee-fed bureaucrats among whom they move. The Wealth and Welfare says: It is wrong of the Ministers to have not provided for girls' education properly. The provincial budget ought to have provided four times the amount now provided for education and shown the budget to work at a deficit. This low provision in the budget is widely to be misunderstood as another move to keep the masses in ignorance, and divide and rule. Unless the budget is made to work at a deficit this province with its tendency to feed the highly paid and enrich the rich further has no future before it. Commenting upon the budget the Hamdam remarks that the Hon'ble the Finance Member has attempted to show that the Government does not ignore the claims of the transferred subjects but as a matter of fact the major portion of the provincial revenue is appropriated by the reserve subjects. The improvement and progress of the people is linked with the transferred subjects hence it is but just and equitable that the greater portion of the increase in revenue should be made over to the transferred subjects. The Gharib says that the Government replies to questions regarding the Ganges fair at Ganj (Bijnor) were quite untrue. It is a matter for deep shame that the Government which makes so high professions of justice has recourse to such shifty practices. If no ladies were arrested at the fair why are the newspapers which published the false allegation not prosecuted. When the Collector was not empowered to levy tax, why were the people who refused to pay this illegal tax prosecuted?

The Kohat affair.

In an article headed "Kohat and Hindu sangathan" the Patriot says: Mahatma Gandhi must now realise the importance of Hindu sangathan. As a Hindu leader he must encourage and support Hindu sangathan and make a beginning in that direction by doing something for the help of the Kohat refugees. Commenting on the refusal of permission by the Viceroy to Mr. Gandhi to visit Kohat the Vartman exclaims: It is such despotic actions of the Government which create excitement among the people. It is the duty of the people to carry on an agitation against the insult done to them by the Viceroy refusing permission to Mahatma Gandhi. It is also the duty of the Kohat Hindus not to go back to Kohat from Rawalpindi unless the Mahatma has said they are asked to return on honourable terms.

Racial distinctions in volunteer corps.

The Aj protests against the racial distinctions observed by the Government men in the volunteer corps, and as an example of it refers to the exclusive enlistment of Europeans in the Auxiliary force where they enjoy special privileges as against the Indians in the Territorial force. It, however, urges that despite this humiliating distinction Indians should not fail to profit by military training.

Indian States.

The Mahila Sudhar is not satisfied with the Viceroy's decision to postpone the proposed marriage of the Princess of Bastar with a prince of the Mayurbhanj State for the next two years and says that it is not free from some political move. It insists that if the Viceroy really wants to do justice in this matter he should allow the Patrani to live with the Princess, remove the two European tutoresses of the latter and permit the princess to marry a husband of her own choice without any interference on the part of the Central Provinces Government.

Katarpur prisoners.

The Awaz interprets the Hon'ble Home Member's reply to the interpellation of Rai Sita Ram Bahadur regarding the release of Katarpur prisoners as the outcome of communal bigotry and remarks that the Musalmans are a source of danger to the Government. It is a pity that while the badmash Moplah prisoners who fought against the Government have been released, the poor Hindu prisoners of Katarpur are rotting in jail. The Musalmans are having a happy time everywhere as a Musalman Raja is the right hand man of the Governor.

British Empire exhibition.

The Hamdam says that the remarkable success achieved by the United Provinces Court in the exhibition was the result of the efforts of industrious Muslim artizans for which they well deserve to be patronised and praised. But it is a pity that not a single medal was awarded to them. The Oudh Akhbar remarks that India can gain nothing by participating in the exhibition, on the other hand there is every chance of its losing in the bargain.

Political propaganda.

Protesting against racial distinctions the Hindustani remarks that for the work of the same nature an ordinary Englishman is paid much more than the ablest Indian. Britain's policy is directed towards the enslavement of subject nations and the development of her trade only. It is only swaraj which can save India from utter ruin and destruction. The Abhyudaya publishes a letter from Lala Hardayal from Sweden in which he criticises the charkha programme and says that if it is not removed from the national movement it will prove fatal to that movement. The freedom of India may be attained by violent methods, by war, by national organisation, by economic struggle, by self-help and by the help of Japan or Nepal, but it can never be attained by the charkha. It is not the era of the yarn but that of steel. He also disapproves of the Congress work being carried on in English and suggests that an association of the entire Hindi speaking Indians should be organised, for such an association alone can be called the true Congress. The Abhaya says that India now requires such leaders as may advance with their lives in their palms for the country. It is certain that there will be an internecine war and we shall approach nearer swaraj when we have finished it. The existing leaders only work for self-aggrandisement. It is true that leaders like Mahatma Gandhi and Lala Lajpat Rai are true patriots but their task is finished now. The country now needs a leader who may be free from the shackles of peace and civilisation. It is a mere dream to expect emancipation of the country from persons who work most cautiously. We pray to God to produce a leader who may infuse a new spirit in the country and save the Hindus and Hindustan from the atrocities of melchchas.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

The Hedjaz affairs.

THE Nejat condemns the activities of Amir Ali and describes his supporters as intellectual imbeciles and selfish knaves. It exhorts the Indian Musalmans not to tolerate the perpetration of tyrannies in the Hedjaz by the kafirs, but to boldly come forward and help the Khilafat Committee in the achievement of its object.

Report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee.

In the opinion of the Pioneer the report of the Muddiman Committee clears up a number of misapprehensions and obscurities in the minds of those who have been exercised over the working of the constitution. It mainly deals with the mechanical processes of democratic government imperfectly functioning in India with little relation to the actual working of the administration except in so far they have brought to the surface deep-rooted prejudices and feelings of which perhaps the authors of Reforms were inclined to make too light. India as a nation exists mainly because of the infusion of that British element into her population which, coming from over the seas with traditions behind them of ordered and organised government, have shut the door from which emerged successive waves of invaders. By working for the ultimate elimination of the British, for that is how the Reforms are too often interpreted, exponents of the need for a further advance are really attempting to remove the one sure foundation of India's nationality. The Leader in an article headed "The mountain in Labour," says: The spirit of disregard of opinion communicated to the forces of reaction by the sad division of our political organisation into fragments, many of them suspicious of and some of them hostile to one another, the grave menace to future progress that the recent deterioration of Hindu-Muslim relations constitutes, these are factors in the situation which may justifiably give rise to the fear that not only will there be no advance but there may be progress backward. We witnessed the other day the unhesitating outspokenness of the Commander-in-Chief on military policy. Today we have the quintessence of bureaucratic friendliness embodied in the majority report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee. The signatories of the report of the majority of the Committee have shown themselves to be adepts in the art of believing what they desire. The paper concludes the article with the following remarks: The Indian report makes out a conclusive case against the continuance of the present system either in the provinces or in the central Government, and in effect pleads for the establishment of complete, responsible government. In another article the paper remarks: The minute of dissent of the Hon'ble the Raja Sahib of Mahmudabad is more satisfactory than the joint note of the Hon'ble Ministers. It is of special gratification to us to notice that he prefers joint electorates with reservation of seats for Muslims to the present separate electorates. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: We must frankly warn that the Government will be responsible for the starting of an agitation that will unite all political parties if all that they would do is to further winnow the majority recommendations in the light of the retrograde views of certain local Governments. They are making a mistake who believe that the few concessions recommended by the majority would disarm opposition. The opposition will not be disarmed until the present anomalies, brought pointedly into public notice since the advent of the Swarajists in the Council, are removed. In another article the paper says: If any one believes that the majority recommendations would appease popular feeling for ending dyarchy, he would live to realise his mistake by the agitation that will soon start all over India. The Weekly Observer fears that the Reforms Enquiry Report will prove a veritable apple of discord among all communities in India, particularly among the so-called politically-minded, and says: The Secretary of State is bound to stand by the majority report, that is to say, by its principal recommendations, in preference to the apparently drastic ones of the minority report. This will certainly not please the Indian politicians who will see in the report another instance of the Government's determination not to relax its grip on the country. Thus the Muddiman Report will keep the ball of agitation rolling. We do not envy the present position of the Government of India.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hamdam regrets the breakdown of the sub-committee appointed to reconcile the Hindus and the Musalmans and remarks that it is deplorable that the members of the committee ignored a question which was of vital importance to the national existence of the Indians. The unjust attitude of the Hindu leaders was solely responsible for this failure. We hope the leaders of both the communities will not slacken their efforts in this direction and will work in right earnest with redoubled energy otherwise all the attempts hitherto made for the achievement of freedom will prove fruitless. Writing in a similar strain the Sada-e-Muslim justifies the Muslim demands and throws the entire responsibility for the breakdown of the proceeding on Lala Lajpat Rai and other Hindu leaders. This failure will strengthen the hands of the Government all the more and deal a severe blow to the national cause. The Arya Varta expresses its disappointment at the breakdown of the sub-committee and remarks that no reconciliation can be effected between the two parties as long as the Musalmans hold out threats and try to usurp the rights of others. The Pratap says that the threat held out by Dr. Kitchlew and Maulana Zafar Ali that if the Hindus do not concede the demands made by the Muhammadans, the latter will unite with Afghanistan against them is calculated to excite the Hindus and betrays cowardice and hooliganism on the part of those who make it. And those who may be led to make concessions by these threats are also cowards. When we will be in a position to ask the British to leave this country we shall surely be strong enough to ignore Afghanistan and Turkey as well. If at that time persons like Dr. Kitchlew and Maulana Zafar Ali raise their heads they will be crushed not only by Hindus but by the Musalmans also.

Communal representation.

The Nejat says that the resolutions adopted in the Muslim League meeting at Allahabad represent the true wishes and aspirations of the Musalmans. Unless the Muslim demand for 40 per cent. of posts in Government services is accepted the administrative machinery cannot be successfully worked nor can the relations between the two communities be friendly. It is unjust that the Musalmans have been given only 25 per cent. seats in local bodies. The compulsory introduction of Hindi script in place of Urdu is very harmful to the cause of unity. The Tohfa-e-Hind takes exception to the resolution of the Muslim League regarding the discontinuance of the Hindi script and does not believe that the Government by favouring the resolution will give proof of its shortsightedness and hurt the feelings of 22 crores of Hindus. Commenting upon the resolution of Syed Raza Ali in the Council of State regarding the proportion of Musalmans in Government services the Hamdam is gratified that the Home Member has promised to give one-third posts in I. C. S., Engineering, Forest and Police to the Musalmans by nomination if they fail to achieve them by competition. We hope our Hindu brethren will not be annoyed by this decision as examinations are not the real test of ability and the superiority of the Musalmans as regards administrative ability has been admitted by Mr. Gandhi himself and is also borne out by practical experience. The Al Bashir hopes that Mr. Raza Ali's resolution will remove the apprehensions entertained by the Musalmans in regard to their position in the furture self-government. It is the duty of the non-Muslims to satisfy the Musalmans by supporting the resolution. The Bir Hindu is strongly opposed to the separate representation of the Musalmans and their demand for more seats in the local bodies and more posts in Government services. The Anand says that the Muhammadans under the influence of selfishness may well praise the assurance of the Government in the Council of State that it would see that Muhammadans are adequately represented in the Services, but it will seriously injure national interests by affecting efficiency in the Services.

The Swaraj party.

Referring to the action of the Central Provinces Government in issuing leaflets explaining to the electorate the effect of the obstructionist tactics pursued by the Swarajists in the Legislative Council, the Pioneer says: That the Government were within their rights in doing so cannot be gainsaid by anyone who is at the pains to study the implications of the Montagu-Chelmsford report and the Government of India Act. The action of the Swarajists, as is well known, has brought all progress in the Transferred departments in the Central Provinces to a standstill. In an article headed "The C. P. Swarajists" the Leader says: They should face realities and if they honestly feel that the policy of indiscriminate obstruction can only injure themselves, the province and the country, they should have no difficulty in coming to a decision. We are all for their formal and real abandonment of the barren policy to which they unwisely committed themselves. But we are not less strong or clear that they must at the same time resign and seek re-election on the strength of their reformed and wiser policy. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: Signs are that the Swarajists in the Central Provinces would accept the ministry and run the council with perhaps an occasional gesture against the Government but, otherwise, playing the Liberals in right orthodox fashion. In another article headed "Death of Diarchy in C. P." the paper says: The vote on the ministerial salaries in the Central Provinces Council must give the quietus to the determined rumours that had been set afloat that the Swarajists would accept ministerships in Nagpur and that their camp was divided. The Hamdam deplores the split in the Swaraj party in Central Provinces and remarks that as it was only in that province that the Swaraj party was in a majority it would have given a lead to the members of the party in other provinces by adhering to its programme with perserverance and steadfastness. The Bharat Jiwan urges that now that with the defection of the Independents the Swaraj party cannot succeed in its obstructionist policy, it should change its policy at least temporarily and utilise the Councils in securing improvements in administration as far as possible till such time as the country is prepared for a more ambitious programme.

The Governor of Bengal.

Referring to the appointment of the officiating Governor of Bengal the Leader says: The meanness of the treatment which has been meted out to Sir Abdur Rahim is more than would have been expected even by detractors of British methods in relation to India. As the senior Member in Bengal happens to be a non-white a different treatment is applied to him. The lesson of this he who runs may read. The arrangement is not merely illiberal, it is an insult to Indians. And we shall be very sorry if Sir Abdur Rahim should submit to the insult by continuing in office. Considerations of self-respect, not merely personal but national, demand his resignation. In another article the paper says that the argument that has been employed to justify the appointment of Sir John Kerr to officiate as the Governor of Bengal is the addition of insult to injury and it will be deeply humiliating to all India if Sir Abdur Rahim were to pocket the wanton insult for the sake of the few months of office which remain to him instead of resigning straight away. The Indian Daily Telegraph in an article headed "The political crisis in Bengal" refers to the claims of Sir Abdur Rahim for the acting Governorship of Bengal and says: Sir Abdur Rahim, at this crisis, ought not to forget that he is where he is not merely because he is able but because he is an Indian—and as such he ought to assert himself and uphold the self-respect and dignity of the nation. Else it would be the most usual thing for the Government to conveniently ignore Indian claims on such occasions. Without Sir Abdur Rahim's protest—not private but as public as has been his supersession—the agitation will not obtain the strength that it deserves.

Legislative Assembly.

In an article headed "The perils of Indianisation" the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The explicit statements of the Commander-in-Chief have cleared the air in matters military. India, we now know, is not a nation, and that the process of Indianisation cannot go further than what, in his generosity, the Commander-in-Chief has laid down. It were better if a similar statement were forthcoming from an equally authoritative source in the non-military zone instead of these ominous whispers and subterranean burrowings. Referring to the Government policy regarding cotton excise duty the paper says: The silence of Sir Basil Blackett over the cotton excise duty to which Pandit Moti Lal Nehru referred only showed that he does not care what others think of him—there is the Viceroy to certify, and surely no thought need be given to the critics who must need clear their lungs. In another article the paper refers to the opium policy of Government and remarks: The speeches of the Indian members of the Assembly must come as a revelation to the world of how the Government of India have not done, in this direction, what both civilisation and morality require them to do. Evidently, the shopkeeper instincts of our rulers cannot be easily suppressed. These arguments only help to drag down the prestige of the Government of India. It shows that they do not care for the moral elevation of the people whom they govern. The Medina strongly protests against the decision of the Legislative Assembly requiring the hajis to purchase return tickets and describes it as a great calamity and misfortune to the Musalmans. It is deplorable that Muslim members have also joined the members of the Council to cut the throats of their brethren. The Government is abusing the blessings of God and has absolutely no regard for the rights of His creatures. The Musalmans should unanimously raise their voice against it and pray to His Excellency Lord Reading to exercise his special powers in rejecting the decision of the Assembly which is a clear interference in religious affairs. The Haqiqat advises the Independents to forget for a time their grievances against the Swarajists and support them during the budget debates so that Lord Reading who is proceeding to England to confer with the British statesmen regarding the Indian constitutional reforms may carry with him the impression of the sentiments of the Indians. The Hamdam congratulates the Viceroy on having secured the services of such a clever and experienced Finance Member who is very shrewd and expert in financial matters and for whom it is a mere plaything to paint black as white and vice versa. He has veiled the most deplorable situation in brilliant phraseology and illusive logic. The Azad pays a tribute to Sir Basil Blackett on his statesmanlike budget speech. It, however, deplores that the rights of the Indian tax-payers are always ignored as against the interest of the British tradesmen and this preference will continue as long as the Government of India is subservient to the British Parliament instead of the Legislative Assembly. The one satisfactory feature of the budget is that no fresh loan or tax is proposed. The Anand points out that the Commander-in-Chief's statement in the Legislative Assembly regarding the Indianisation of the Army shows that even after centuries the English will remain supreme in the Indian Army. This means that Indians should depend upon themselves alone and not on others for the attainment of freedom. The Commander-in-Chief and the bureaucracy will do their utmost to oppose the transfer of the control of the Army into Indian hands and the Indians will have to resist this policy at every step and it is desirable that a vigorous agitation should be started. The Aj says that the most important part of Lord Rawlinson's speech on the Indian Army in the Legislative Assembly was where he discussed the recent alliance between China and Russia, and his statement that he could not remain indifferent to the consequences of the new turn which Russian policy has taken in India is full of venom. It is a threat to China and Russia, and conveys a warning to India that it should not expect any curtailment in military expenditure. It also means that preparations for a great war have begun to be made in Central Asia. For this purpose India has been made a plaything of the Empire. At the cost of the Indian exchequer military preparations have begun to be made in India, the ultimate object of which is to bring the whole of Asia under the domination of the whites by destroying the freedom of China. The Anand pays a tribute to Sir Basil Blackett for his framing a budget with a satisfactory balance. It however expresses dissatisfaction that the military expenditure is still very heavy and that the cotton excise duty has not been abolished. It urges the non-official members of the Assembly to do their level best to get this duty removed and says that if the Government will do its duty in this connection it will surely remove the impression that it subordinates Indian interests to those of the Lancashire manufacturers. The Bharat Dharma remarks that the railway budget is altogether based on selfishness. If the Government were to devote a portion of the earnings of the railways to the development of the railway industry in this country, to the encouragement of indigenous trade, to the provision of comforts for the third class passengers, and to the entertainment of the services of Indians in all the high posts of the railway department, it would be said to have discharged its duties at least partially towards the people. But why will the alien government do so?

The Viceroy's leave.

The Hamdam resents the secrecy observed in regard to the object of the Viceroy's visit to England and says that he is going to confer with the Secretary of State regarding the present situation in India. He will perhaps exercise his special powers of certification in enforcing the decision arrived at in England without consulting Indians as was done in the case of the Bengal Ordinance and Jaito affairs, etc. This is the first step towards the swaraj which is being given so much publicity throughout the world and on the basis of which Indians are being declared as incapable and unfit. The Hindustani welcomes the departure of the Viceroy and is gratified that the Indians will get rid of him at least for some months. The Aj commenting on the rumoured appointment of Lord Lytton as officiating Viceroy remarks: Lord Lytton ranks next after Lord Reading among the advocates of repression and the enemies of Indian progress. Although at present he is only officiating as Viceroy, but it is most likely that this office will go to him permanently. Indeed, there is no need for Lord Reading to return from leave, because Lord Lytton is in no way inferior to him in the art of digging the roots of the remnants of Indian freedom under the cover of sweet words.

The Kohat affair.

The Bharat Bandhu remarks that the refusal of permission to Mahatma Gandhi by the Viceroy to visit Kohat is sheer injustice and wonders why the Government unnecessarily engenders bitterness of feeling among the people by such actions. Is it because the Government does not want permanent peace in Kohat?

United Provinces Legislative Council.

The Haqiqat praises the Finance Member for effecting retrenchment and economy and presenting a budget which though not very satisfactory is better than that of most other provinces. It hopes that a substantial portion of the reduction made by the Government of India in the provincial contribution will be spent on works of public utility. Referring to the resolution in the United Provinces Council for the amendment of the Court of Wards Act, the Oudh Akhtar is gratified that Raja Jagannath Bakhsh Singh has moved a resolution for the amendment of the Court of Wards Act and remarks that the possession of the Court of Wards over the properties of others without their consent and the facts of the advisory committees being given no special powers, the owners of the property having no right to raise objections against the actions of the Court of Wards servants and the interference in the domestic and religious affairs of the owners on the part of Government and its servants are things which demand a speedy amendment of the Act.

Political propaganda.

The Mahila Sudhar writes: Our Holi festival will succeed in its object only when such a strong spirit is created among the people that they may be ready to sacrifice themselves in the fire of satyagraha to secure the emancipation of the country. The Abhaya says that the Holi festival teaches us that when the necessity may arise we may shed our blood for our religion and country, in order to vindicate our honour. The Vartman remarks that during the last six years the imperialists have proclaimed that the dependent countries are their hereditary property and that they will retain them for ever with the help of the military because in view of the next great war they will have to establish fortresses in various places for their defence. The next war is going to be waged against the imperialists and the future of this "hereditary property" depends on the attitude which the people of the world adopt towards this war. Will the ambitious and advanced people of the present age side with the imperialists? The Aj writes: How sad that preparations are being made in this very country to destroy the freedom of China, Japan and other Asiatic countries. We Indians are so unfortunate that we have not only lost our own freedom but we are also proving helpful against our wishes in bringing our neighbouring countries into subjection. We should descend into the field of action and endeavour to save Asia from the poison which is being prepared in India today. This can only be done by the establishment of a League of the Asiatic nations. The Bhavishya publishes a contributed article in which the writer under the pseudonym "Bhartiya Yogi" expresses the apprehension that within the next five or six years a terrible war will break out between Germany, Russia and Japan on one side and England, France and America on the other. He asserts that the Indians will be bound to take part in this war and that since it is their conviction that whatever country becomes the master of India its rule will prove better than that of the British, they will surely display slackness at the time of war and it will be altogether impossible for them to help the British At that time the British will either have to lose India or confer swaraj on the Indians. A correspondent writing in the Shakti dwells on the sanctity of Kumaun and says that as the English have not fulfilled the condition on which they were to rule it they should evacuate it. Contrary to the agreement which transferred Kumaun to the English they are practising cow-slaughter in it. Kumaun is the Khilafat of India and no foreigner should interfere with it. Foreigners should not live in the holy land and its administration should be entrusted to a Hindu religious head. The editor dissociates himself from the above views and says that Kumaun cannot be separated from the rest of India.

CONFIDENTIAL. No. 12 of 1925.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the week ending the 21st March, 1925.

The Mosul question.

THE Sada-i-Muslim finds fault with the British Government for stationing its armies in Mosul and holding out threats to Turkey to forbear from sending troops while the League of Nations' delegation is holding its session there and remarks that the excesses of the Christian world over the Musalmans have not yet ended. If the Musalmans desire to live in peace and comfort they should wake up and strengthen themselves. The Nejat describes the rebellion as another addition to the misfortunes of Islam and remarks that it was planned beforehand by the Allies who are still indulging in their old policy against the Turks. The Kurds' struggle for liberty only betrays British intention to swallow up Mosul.

Civil Justice Committee.

The Pioneer says that the information set forth in the report of the Civil Justice Committee will prove a revelation to the average layman, who has perhaps only a vague idea of the gross abuses and malpractices associated with the process of law in this country. It is to be hoped that a strenuous and sustained effort will now be made to put an end to the monstrous abuses exposed by the Civil Justice Committee.

Reforms Enquiry Committee.

In a leading article headed "The Muddiman Committee and Forests" the Pioneer says: The recommendation by the majority of the Muddiman Committee that the Forest department should be transferred in all provinces to the control of Ministers demands very careful consideration. In the opinion of the paper it is not conceivable that for many years to come a Provincial Legislature would be in a position to appreciate the broad questions of practical policy involved in the development and maintenance of the forests, scientific research work to their interests and commercial marketing of their products. In an article headed "Sir Muhammad Shafi's partial recantation" the Leader refers to the statement made by Sir Muhammad Shafi and remarks: It will be wise on the part of the Secretary of State and the Viceroy to note the significance of Sir Muhammad Shafi's independent opinion uttered as a free man, that it will be no statesmanship for them to wait until the mystic year 1929 before setting in train the machinery which is to produce a satisfactory constitution for India. In another article the same paper congratulates the Bombay Legislative Council on having passed Mr. Jayakar's motion, in condemnation of the majority report and support of Sapru Four's report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee and commends to the non-official members of the United Provinces Council and other Councils the attitude and prompt decision of their compatriots of the Bombay Council. The Indian Daily Telegraph characterises Sir Muhammad Shafi's explanation as that of a shy girl, and says: This somersault of the late Law Member inclines one to the view that, after all, Lord Reading might be in favour of a Royal Commission. The Advocate says: The report has cost us about half a lakh of rupees without producing any good result to the country. The official report is not only disappointing and unsatisfactory but it is reactionary and a direct insult to the country. It is the duty of the legislatures all over India to pass resolutions in support of the non-official report and point out to the Government that all political parties have agreed upon this point and the Government should give effect to the non-official report. In a lengthy article headed "Tinkering Reforms" the paper says: The Reforms Enquiry Committee verily reminds one of the proverbial mountain in labour producing a mouse. If His Excellency wants to redeem his promise made on the eve of assuming the Viceroyalty of India, he must do something to place the Reforms on a footing satisfactory to the people and not fall in with the reactionary view of delaying the desired advance as long as possible. The Hamdam regrets that those members of the Committee whose recommendations were likely to be given effect to have suggested no reform in the present constitution. The recommendations of the Committee should not be allowed to affect our national programme and all the political parties should take united action. We should thank the writers of the majority report that they have given us another chance for national unity. If it is correctly reported that the Viceroy is inclined towards the minority report, we certainly expect him to strongly support the grant of provincial autonomy and the appointment of a Royal Commission. Commenting upon the Raja Sahib of Mahmudabad's memorandum the paper praises his independence of opinion and disinterested criticism. Its perusal leaves no room for doubt as to his sincerity, honesty of purpose and soundness of judgment and it is hoped it will go a long way in restoring the popularity he once enjoyed in the country. The Medina says that the majority report will fall like an iron hammer on the Liberals and the Moderates who in their hearts still repose confidence in Government. Will not the Moderates apply themselves to the real work and unite to achieve complete freedom for India? The Haqiqat in a series of articles criticises the majority report and describes it as absurd and useless and takes Sir Muhammad Shafi to task for siding with the majority. The report fails to remove the defects of the Government of India Act and the grievance of the people. In another article the same paper highly appreciates the memorandum of the Hon'ble the Raja of Mahmudabad and pays a tribute to his patriotism and independence. The Vartman says that the report may cause disappointment to the Moderates but we do not care whether we get further reforms or not. It is our conviction that we can get only so many reforms as will but strengthen the foundation of British rule. We do not want reforms through committees. We shall take swaraj from the British people directly. The Aj remarks that the majority report wants to complete the mischief initiated by the Lee Commission. The signatories of the minority report also do not want change in the present system of administration which is the cause of India's ruin and would be satisfied with further reforms. We are unable to support even the minority report but we cannot help complimenting its writers for their exposure of the Reforms.

The Viceroy's leave.

The Sada-i-Muslim disapproves the appointment of Lord Lytton, the author of the Bengal Ordinance, as a Viceroy and describes it as a great blunder on the part of the Government which by doing so has hurt the feelings of the people and sprinkled salt over their wounds. It refuses to believe that the Reforms will be withdrawn as a result of consultation between the Secretary of State and the Viceroy and Governors. The Hindustani remarks that India is likely to lose by this conference of the Secretary of State and the Governors and that the Indians should now prepare themselves for greater repression and tyranny.

Constitutional advance.

Speculating on the impending visit of the Viceroy to the Secretary of State the Leader says: Will they decide that the weight of evidence before the Committee as well as every noticeable feature of the situation must compel them to agree with the minority and set up a Royal Commission to make recommendations as to remedial measures that should be introduced? If they should decide in favour of the latter course, no Indian need immediately jump to the conclusion that the party of reform has succeeded. For knowing as we do the political complexion of his Majesty's present Government, it is as probable that they may set up a Commission to help them go back upon the Act of 1919 as to help them go forward. Referring to the question of services the paper says that there is a long struggle ahead for Indian reformers. As regards military policy, it should be made clear to our countrymen whether Lord Rawlinson in his last speech in the Assembly has said the last word on the subject or his Majesty's Government have a policy less obnoxious to Indian nationalism, and if they have, what it is, when it is going to be introduced and whether it is to be resolutely proceeded with so as to bring about the Indianisation of the army within a reasonable time. We are at a critical and delicate juncture in national affairs and this is the time for every patriotic Indian to be alert, to think wisely, to plan thoughtfully, to act promptly, and to act with persistence and resoluteness.

The Legislative Assembly.

According to the Pioneer the debate in the Legislative Assembly cannot be held to have produced any effective condemnation of the Government's opium policy. There is no doubt that a certain section of political opinion is merely using the temporary prominence of the opium problem as a convenient stick with which to beat the Government. In a leading article headed "The Cotton Excise debate" the paper says that the debate cannot be said to have enhanced the reputation of the Legislative Assembly as a practical body. If the excise duty is eventually abolished, the amount realised by the duty will have to come out of the pockets of the tax-payer somehow, whether it be by new taxation or by the retention of existing taxation or by the retention of existing taxation that might otherwise have been remitted.

In this field unfortunately political prejudice still reigns supreme, and it is this prejudice which is this year responsible for the indefinite postponement of the hopes of the cotton industry. Referring to the debate on the Finance Bill and the resolution relating to the salt tax, the same paper remarks: It seems unfortunate that certain Independent members of the House did not realise the implications of their action, and, however much they may protest against the suggestion that they have jeopardised the grant of urgent relief to provincial finances, the fact is there. Referring to His Excellency the Viceroy's proceeding on leave the Leader writes: It is a twentieth century miracle if the Report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee be not at least one of the problems which will be considered. Cynical contempt for the legislature by the executive can scarcely go farther and the Assembly as a self-respecting body charged with the duty of safeguarding India's honour and interests will be amply justified in showing its resentment of the cavalier way in which the Government of India have deliberately chosen to treat it. In another article the paper remarks: In the old Assembly, which included the much maligned Moderates, such petty and revengeful sectional spirit was never manifested and many a time Government had to descend from their high pedestal to negotiate via media on fundamental issues. But now they can rely for victory on Swarajist action against the Independents. Is it a wonder that in the face of their inconsistencies, internecine jealousies and quarrels, Government look on with amused self-complaisance upon Swarajist fireworks in the Assembly and outside? At another place the same paper says: Whatever the Council of State may do with the salt duty it will be a grievous injustice to Madras, the United Provinces, the Punjab and Burma if the reduction of contributions already announced were at this stage to be interfered with. Nothing can reconcile us in these provinces or them in Madras to the removal at the last moment of the cup held to the lip. In a leading article, headed "The Assembly and the Reforms" the Indian Daily Telegraph remarks: The Muddiman Report has become notorious in its honest efforts to breathe the narrow spirit of the Government of India. Of course the certification will restore the grant, but that will not detract from the importance of the vote of the elected representatives of the people who are all not mandated to obstruct and destroy. What the country would acclaim as a frank and fearless statement was made by the leader of the Swarajists in his best style and with a sweep and wealth of details that must make it unanswerable. Rendered callous by frequent resort to certification, the Government have carried on as if enlightened public opinion never existed in India. Referring to the discussion of the salt tax the paper says that we can only hope that every Independent who voted for this cruel tax on the poorest people on earth would be marked down at the next elections, so that this pernicious obstruction to the progress of the country might be exterminated. It is crime to perpetuate this tax on a commodity which is a necessity of life. At another place the paper says: The Finance Bill has been passed with the solitary innovation—the reduced duty on salt. Even this is sure to be restored in the Council of State, so that the will of Sir Basil Blackett will be law. Although the august councillors have not—except the reduction of the salt duty—they have the satisfaction that they are contributing to the gaieties of the political world by internecine quarrels and mutual recriminations. In another article the paper says: Instead of the Commander-in-Chief fighting Pandit Moti Lal Nehru on the banks of the Ganges at Prayag the real battle seems to be between the Independents and the Swarajists on the floor of the Assembly. The Hamdam describes the vote of no confidence in Government passed by the Assembly as very opportune and remarks the vote is a distinct proof of the fact that no self-respecting Indian whether Swarajist or Independent likes the present system of government. The Surya says that Sir Basil Blackett has displayed extraordinary financial skill in framing the budget. Its only unsatisfactory features are inadequate reduction in the military expenditure and the non-abolition of the cotton excise. The surplus in the budget should be devoted first of all to the reduction of postal rates and the abolition of the cotton excise. The Aj urges the desirability of recourse to satyagraha in the matter of the payment of cotton excise, inasmuch as it has not been abolished despite repeated opposition of the central legislature. It remarks: Will not our legislators even now explain the position to the people and call upon them to practise civil disobedience in respect of this excise? Cannot the mill-owners themselves refuse to pay this duty?

The Swarajists.

Referring to the passing of the motion in the Assembly for the consideration of the Finance Bill the Indian Daily Telegraph praises the Swarajists for voting against the Finance

Bill. The Independents have religiously taken up the banner of the Liberals, making angry denunciations against the Government and yet contenting themselves with mere words. This will not carry them far. They will not, thereby, enhance their political reputation in the eyes of the Government who are ready, like Mr. Pal, to work with them as long as it pays them but to repudiate them the moment such repudiation suits their purpose. Referring to the debate on the Finance Bill the paper says: The chances of effective obstruction in the Assembly by the Swarajists are not many; if ever they transpire, it must be only in the mild mannered way of the Independents. Referring to the passage of arms between Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal and the Swarajists the same paper says: What Lord Reading will remember out of the debate is only this that the Independents and Swarajists saved the Government inside the Council as unerringly as the Hindu-Muslim differences always save Government outside the Council. At another place the paper says: Except their helpless reiteration of the need and efficiency of obstructionist policy in the face of the new discovery of responsive cooperation by the Independents, the Swarajists have nothing to show this session as their achievement. The Leader in an article headed "Mending or Ending" asks: Have the Swarajists ever seriously thought that their reckless tactics are calculated more to end than to mend it, and says: Though they publicly glory in their policy, it is hard to believe that their more intelligent and experienced leaders do not realise that their antics have strengthened the hands of the opponents and weakened those of the friends of Indian progress, while they have not even the negative advantage of arousing public enthusiasm and stimulating political conciousness in the country. The Pioneer says that the Swarajists in the Central Provinces Legislative Council seem incapable of learning even the rudiments of constitutional procedure under the Government of India Act. By refusing to vote Ministers' salaries the Council are again deliberately standing in the way of any progress in the Transferred departments, yet they appear to be trying to shirk responsibility for the inevitable consequences of their own actions. The Aj congratulates the Central Provinces Swarajists on having reduced the demand for the Ministerial salaries, and says that the question is not whether this policy of the Swarajists will bear any fruit but that whether any such change has come over the political situation as may necessitate corresponding change in the Swarajist policy. It is abundantly clear that no such change has taken place and it was consistent on the part of the Swarajists to have reduced the demand for the Ministerial salaries. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: No one could have taken up the cause of the bureaucracy with more single-minded devotion than Sir Abdur Rahim and yet he was sacrificed at the altar of colour. It is a mistake to suppose that the Government of India is actuated by any other motive than utter selfishness.

The Governor of Bengal.

The Indian Press is unanimous in condemning the new appointment in Bengal. In a leading article headed "The lesson of the Bengal appointment" the Leader hopes that those whose brains are befogged and political vision is narrowed by the spirit of communalism will mark and digest the lesson conveyed by the brushing aside of the claims of Sir Abdur Rahim to officiate in place of Lord Lytton. The ardent communalists ought to know that both Hindus and Muhammadans suffer from common disabilities and that the favouritism of either at any particular time does not mean that in things that really matter to the bureaucracy the brand of infericrity will be removed. Those who ignoring this basic fact seek to promote the interests of one community at the expense of another are not really promoting the cause of national emancipation but playing the game of those who desire to perpetuate the chains of bondage. The Hamdam regrets that Sir Abdur Rahim's claims have been ignored and remarks that in the present system of government favouritism and partiality to the I. C. S. is the order of the day and to be an Indian is a crime which nullifies qualification and ability. The incident should teach the Musalmans of Bengal to cooperate with their countrymen and apply themselves whole-heartedly to the realisation of their common object. The Haqiqat resents the action of the Government in overlooking the claims of Sir Abdur Rahim and describes it as an insult and humiliation to the Indians. It is this sort of preference which is responsible for creating general hatred throughout the country and shaking the foundation of British rule. In another article the same paper advises Sir Abdur Rahim to resign at once and exhorts the Musalmans of Bengal to join with the Swarajists in adopting a policy of obstruction and non-cooperation. If Sir Abdur Rahim does not resign the Musalmans will be humiliated and he will himself lose his prestige in the eyes of his countrymen. The Hindustani remarks that the only drawback in Sir Abdur Rahim's not being appointed a Governor was that of his being an Indian. His appointment would have gone a long way in satisfying the Indians and making them realise that they are trusted in an increasing measure by the English. It is only such acts which antagonise the Indian feelings against the Englishmen. The Aj remarks that although Sir Abdur Rahim is also an opponent of Indian progress, although he supported dyarchy before the Muddiman Committee, and although he is a supporter of the autocratic powers of the bureaucracy, yet he was not appointed the Governor of Bengal. The reason for this supersession of his claims is that he is not white-skinned. By this action the bureaucracy has perpetrated great injustice on Sir Abdur Rahim and has also betrayed racial discrimination.

United Provinces Legislative Council.

Referring to the Hon'ble the Finance Member's reply to Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant's objection in respect of appointment of Indians as secretaries and deputy secretaries, the Leader says: Unfortunately, the statement that the Government make no distinctions of race and always select the best available man has been repeated so often that it has lost all force. The fact is that the British Government have always conscientiously found the best available men only among their own countrymen. Possibly, here is one of the rare cases of the coincidence of duty and interest. Referring to the discussion on the provincial budget the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Hon'ble Mr. O'Donnell in his reply touched on the various points raised with the deftness of a master hand thus enabling the general debate to end under the best of spirits on all sides.

Provincial Muslim League at Allahabad.

The Prabha refutes the contention of Syed Aley Nabi, President of the Provincial Muslim League at Allahabad, that the present communal tension was the outcome of the shuddhi and sangathan movements and asserts that these movements came into existence by way of reaction against Muslim aggressiveness. It says that the resolutions passed at the League will only further foment Hindu-Muslim animosity and shake the faith of other communities in Muslim honesty.

Political propaganda.

The Gharib says that the worst enemies of Government are not the constitutional agitators, but the sycophants who deceive the officials by their misrepresentations. The Indians are steadily losing their faith in the British Government owing to the diplomacy of the bureaucracy. If the British Government wants to remain in this country it should adopt wiser ways. The same paper writes: Cultivators and labourers produce necessaries of life but are unable to enjoy the fruits of their labour to their heart's content. The bureaucracy does not care for them as it regards them to be their food. Zamindars and money-lenders also do not care for them and on the contrary they go one better than the bureaucracy in oppressing them and in sucking their blood. The cultivators can get their grievances redressed only when they organise themselves and subscribe the Gharib, which is the only champion of their rights.

For the week ending the 28th March, 1925.

Situation in Egypt.

THE Pioneer says that in the best interests of Egypt it may be hoped that at the forthcoming elections, the Ziwar Government will secure an adequate working majority. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that Zaghlul Pasha's statement on the Egyptian election results was what was expected from him. To charge him with any responsibility for the Lee Stack murder is to betray the Prussian spirit. But, all the same, there is the fact that Zaghlul represents to Britain all that is patriotic and resolute in Egypt and hence all this trouble.

Return tickets for Haj pilgrims.

The Hamdam disapproves of the decision of the Assembly and remarks that the difficulties of the pilgrims cannot be removed by making them purchase return tickets. An insistence on the purchase of return tickets can only be interpretted as an open interference in religious matters. The Medina regrets that the Government of India never feels any sympathy for the hajis and is ever ready to add to their difficulties. This law can still be repealed if the Musalmans make a united effort. The Al Bureed remarks that the new law is not without defects. Great Britain by imposing restrictions on the pilgrims has adopted an avaricious policy. The Nejat describes it as an open interference in religious affairs and regrets that the law will keep back the poor people from discharging a religious duty.

Lord Curzon.

All sections of the press deplore the death of Lord Curzon and pay a warm tribute to his achievements. The Pioneer says: By the death of Marquess Curzon the Empire has lost a great Englishman and a gifted administrator. His period of office was marked by a bitter controversy arising from the partition of Bengal, and by the wild outcry raised against his projects of University reform. Lord Curzon throughout his career was animated by a high-minded devotion to what he felt to be right. He came to India with high ideals and a love for the people and the country. The Leader says: Every one who admires intellect and force of character will deplore the death of Lord Curzon. Truly was it said that in trying to unmake a community he made a nation. Our public life entered upon a new phase and the exasperation produced by Lord Curzon was the origin of unsuspected developments not all of them of a salutary character. Lord Curzon was a man of uncommon qualities. There are few who equalled him and far fewer who surpassed him in the power and the range of his intellect, in his capacity of industry, in his learning and command of splendid English, in his eloquence and oratory, in his purposefulness and determination. But, take him as he was, England is unquestionably the poorer for his early demise. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The death of Lord Curzon removes an outstanding figure from the British political firmament. Until the moment of the sudden arresting hand of death on this mighty personality he was in harness, compressing into his life systematic work and study that entitled him to the respect of the world. India will recall in him the most brilliant Viceroy it has ever had. The Hamdam is grieved at the death of Lord Curzon whose marvellous achievements in the cause of British Imperialism deserve to be written in letters of gold in the history of England. While paying a tribute to his extraordinary abilities the Haqiqat disapproves of Lord Curzon's Eastern policy. The discomfitures suffered by Great Britain in the Near East, the increasing British unpopularity in Muslim countries and the injustice done to Turkey were all due to that policy.

Hindu organisation.

Referring to the forthcoming Hindu conference at Lucknow the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The issues which are facing the Hindu world today are momentous. The Hindu has to adopt measures in order to protect his hearth and home against the depredations of future Kohats. Hindus have realised, at the point of lathis and knives, that if they wish to live as peaceful citizens, if they wish to carry out peacefully their day to day duties, whether they be religious or social, they must strengthen their organisation and so "sangathanise" themselves as to be able to hold their own in every walk of life. The Advocate says: It devolves upon every Hindu of this province to take part in its deliberation and make it a unique one. The Hindus have to devise some means for the protection of their lives and property against the aggressions of other communities so that no repetition of the next Kohat may take place in future. The recent communal riots have taught a good lesson to the Hindus and have awakened them from the dormant state in which they were living till now. The Patriot observes that the fate of the Hindu community is trembling in the balance, and it is a matter of deep regret that the Hindus as a whole are not as yet fully alive to the seriousness of the situation. But it is a matter of some satisfaction that farsighted leaders like Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Lala Lajpat Rai have fully realised the gravity of the situation and have sounded the clarion call to the Hindus: "Awake! Arise! and stop not till the goal is reached." We Hindus, have slept long enough. The time is come for us to be up and doing and make for the goal.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Anand says that the new demand of Muhammadans for excessive representation in services and public bodies will stand in the way of Hindu-Muslim unity and prevent the development of nationalism in the country. The supersession of Sir Abdur Rahim should serve as an eye opener to the Muhammadans. The Vartman remarks that the repetition of communal disturbances at Delhi frustrates all hopes of the restoration of Hindu-Muslim unity. The fact that instead of coming to an end these disturbances go on increasing casts a serious reflection upon the administration of the Government which calls itself the custodian of peace and order. Let the Hindus and Musalmans bear in mind that it is impossible to remove subjection unless they unite. The Anand opines that the recurrence of such disturbances not only postpones the day of Hindu-Muslim rapprochement but also that of the attainment of swaraj.

Reforms Enquiry Committee.

The Leader says: In the speeches delivered in the Legislative Councils the majority report was characterised as 'unsatisfactory,' 'retrograde,' 'utterly inadequate,' etc., while the minority report has been welcomed and generally approved. The Government in India and England cannot perhaps do better than accept the suggestions contained in that masterly document and act upon them without any avoidable loss of time. We can only say that the Government will be committing a grave blunder if they disregard this enormous volume of public opinion repeatedly voiced in our legislative bodies, in the press and on the platform, and by political and communal associations, and if they refuse to move forward courageously, and obstinately try to maintain the status quo, giving undue weight to the counsels of reactionaries. In another article the paper says that Legislative Council after Legislative Council has been condemning the majority and commending the minority report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee and asks: Will the significance of this national demand be wholly lost upon the Secretary of State for India? The Sada-i-Muslim remarks that the object of the majority report is to strengthen the hands of the bureaucracy all the more. The Hindustani says that the minority report is quite justified in its recommendation for a change in the constitution. The present system of government is a deadly poison to the Indians. Lord Reading and Sir Harcourt Butler should urge upon the Cabinet to establish full responsible government in India, as this alone will appease the people and remove the prevailing unrest. The Azad says that it is now as clear as day light that the people desire important and constitutional changes in the system of government, and if this long-standing demand is not attended to immediately it will tend to widen the gulf between the rulers and the ruled all the more and result in increasing the communal tension. The Arya Mitra wonders why Government wastes money and time on committees which produce no substantial results. If it does not want that Indians should be given rights in the administration of the country it should plainly say so. The maintenance of dyarchy which has fully been proved to be futile and worthless reflects nothing but autocracy on the part of the Government. The Anand opines that the recommendations of the Reforms Enquiry Committee show that the labours of the committee have been in vain and to no purpose. The Swadhin remarks that there is nothing in the majority report to prevent the central Government from ignoring the decisions of the majority of the Legislative Assembly and thus leaves it as irresponsible and autocratic as ever before. The attitude of the Conservative Government shows that the Councils will be strangled and India will again be ruled by an iron hand. The Abhyudaya writes: The report has caused us neither surprise nor grief, as we had based no hopes on it. But it will do one good to the country inasmuch as it will open the eyes of those who have faith in the sincerity of the Government and present to their view the real form of its officials with the result that they will give up faith in the so-called noble intentions of the Government officials.

Lee Commission.

Referring to the introduction of the recommendations of the Lee Commission in the House of Lords the Leader says: The people of India may be lacking in the strength to assert themselves. But they have the intelligence to understand the meaning of things. The cumulative effect of successive acts of defiance of opinion may take time to declare itself but it will one day. And when that day comes the authors of those acts will not be considered by history to have been either wise statesmen or true imperialists.

The Civil Justice Committee's Report.

The Leader says: The committee have, in a thorough and elaborate manner, brought under critical review the whole system of administration of civil justice and made many excellent suggestions. We hope that the report will receive from the legal profession and public men as well as from the Government the consideration which its importance deserves.

Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Supplementary Bill.

The Pioneer says that appropriate action has been taken by the Government of India to secure the passage through the Indian Legislature of the Bill supplementing the Bengal Ordinance Act. The seriousness of the situation in Bengal is not disputed, but while the Government contend it can only be satisfactorily met by recourse to extraordinary legal machinery, those who do not take the view that the ordinary law is adequate maintain that some other plan should have been adopted. They do not appear, so far as we can gather, to give precise details of that plan, so once more we are brought back to the Government's position as stated by the Home Member. The methods adopted by the Government, accompanied by all possible safeguards against error, afford the only practical solution. It is obviously impossible to apply the ordinary legal machinery involving publicity, which must inevitably lead to loss of life and miscarriage of justice. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the voting on the Bengal Bill unmistakably showed that the Nationalists do not dare go against popular will when there is no such blind as provincial contributions to protect them from popular fury. The paper has no doubt that the Government will ignore the Assembly and certify the Bill. The unrelenting opposition of the Independents must all the more be a warning to the Government that they ought not to play with popular feeling in Bengal. Dyarchy cannot be silently replaced by pre-Reform conditions. There can be no going backward. Educated opinion will not tolerate that a Government that seeks to go back will live to repent. Signs are that there is a gathering storm, and that the authorities are unconcerned.

Legislative Assembly.

The Pioneer considers the passage of the Finance Bill in the Legislative Assembly as a notable victory of the Government. In another article the same paper regrets the rejection by the Assembly of the Age of Consent Bill of Sir Hari Singh Gour for the improvement of the lot of India's women, and for the development of stronger and healthier population. The Leader regrets that the Government adopted an openly hostile attitude against the Age of Consent Bill and says: The Government qua Government should have remained neutral, at the same time giving freedom to nominated official members to vote as they chose. Such an attitude would have been far more correct than the one they preferred. We hope that social reformers in the Assembly will not be dispirited by the defeat but will return to the struggle by introducing another Bill after a suitable interval.

The Indian budget.

The Mashriq pays a tribute to the Finance Member for presenting a surplus budget and justifies the Government's decision regarding provincial contributions. It, however, hopes that the Government will abolish the cotton excise duty which is causing so much public resentment. The Oudh Akhbar says that the passage of the Finance Bill by an overwhelming majority was the inevitable consequence of the split between the Independents and the Swarajists in the Assembly. The Anand says that whatever the Government may do with regard to the salt duty it should by no means fail to relieve the provinces in respect of their contributions as they stand in urgent need of help. The Prem while eulogising the Finance Member for a satisfactory surplus in the Indian budget complains that he has done nothing to lighten the burden of the poorer classes. He has neither reduced the salt duty nor abolished the cotton excise. It remarks that no budget can produce beneficial results to India unless its control is transferred to the Indians and the interests of India are not subordinated to those of England. Referring to the combined opposition of the officials and the Independents to the Swarajist motion rejecting the budget the Aj remarks: The Independent party has gradually begun to side with the bureaucracy. Although in the speeches which are made in the Assembly it condemns the policy of the bureaucracy yet at the time of voting it supports the officials. It is good that the unnatural liaison between the Swaraj party and the Independent party has now been broken. At the present time there can be only two parties in the country, one representing the bureaucracy and the other representing the patriots of India. The same paper says that it is a settled point that the Swaraj party and the Independent party cannot now work jointly. They may work separately but let them not fight between themselves. The Swarajists will do well to cease to take part in the activities of the Legislative Assembly and only watch how the Independents can conciliate the bureaucracy.

Situation in Bengal.

The Pioneer in a leading article headed "A new light on Bengal" says: If India could conceivably win self-government on the principles of the Bengal Revolutionary Party she would, indeed, look back to the days of British rule as paradise compared with the anarchy caused by the monster of the revolutionaries' creation. There is no doubt that those who consistently attempt to hamper the authorities in India in their efforts to extirpate revolutionary conspiracies are encouraging the policy of terrorism and are raising a deadly obstacle to the attainment of self-government in India. The Leader refers to the refusal by the Bengal Legislative Council to vote the salaries of Ministers and says: The majority of the non-official members of the Bengal Legislative Council have, to say the least of it, behaved childishly. There is no question whatsoever that the only meaning that can be attached to Monday's vote is that a majority of the Bengal Legislative Council do not want government by Ministers. The vote really means that until the Swaraj party and its changing and inconstant allies have a system of government of which they can approve, they prefer the unmitigated autocracy of the pre-Montagu Act to the present half-way house between that and responsible government. We understand and do not approve Mr. C. R. Das's policy. We understand and naturally approve the Liberal policy. We neither understand nor appreciate the policy of those members of the Bengal Legislative Council who were the day before yesterday with Mr. Das, yesterday with the Government and have today gone back to Mr. Das. Their lack of policy is a gross reflection upon their fitness to be members of the legislature. It is nearly certain to lead to a heavy setback under the present government. We deeply deplore their policy. Such is the type of men upon whom the bureaucracy rely to prolong the life of the present system of government, in other words to remain in continued enjoyment of political power over the people of this country. Such allies can do them no good. The bureaucracy will, no doubt, realise the truth, but they will realise it too late. The Indian Daily Telegraph refers to the discussion on the police grant in the Bengal Legislative Council and says: The scene that comes from the Bengal Council is the last nail on the coffin of dyarchy. It is not possible to write with any restraint or dignity of the action of the President of the Council, who entrusted with powers and engaged as an expert in Parliamentary procedure, has deserved the protest administered to him by the respected leaders of the Swarajists and the Independents.

Kohat affairs.

Referring to the debate in the Assembly on Kohat affairs the Patriot says: The Government are not willing either to give guarantees for the protection of Hindus in Kohat, nor to appoint an independent enquiry committee, on the ground that any enquiry could do no more than what had been done by Government. We maintain that an independent enquiry would do a deal of good. It would place the real facts of the case in lurid light and find out whether, and if so, to what extent the local authorities were responsible for delinquency of their duty. If the local authorities are brought to book for delinquency of duty, it will lessen the chances of a repetition of the tragedy.

Oudh Chief Court Bill.

The Leader says that it must be admitted that His Excellency the Governor was justified in returning to the Legislative Council the Oudh Courts Bill for a reconsideration of the clause inserted by the Council prescribing that three-fifths of the judges must be Indians. The theory of the constitution is that there shall be no racial discrimination. But the practice of the Government has been racial preference in favour of Europeans. It is the long continuance of this practice which led our countrymen to discount the value of their theoretical equality with the members of the ruling race and to insist upon a statutory recognition of the claims of Indians to at least a specified proportion of posts in the superior services. It will be a further improvement if it is provided that one-half or three-fifths of lawyer judges should include the chief judge. We reiterate the opinion that the Council will not be acting prudently if it merely cut out the clause responsible for the communication from the Governor.

High prices of food-grains.

The Anand says that as a result of the failure of the Government to take any steps to check the rapid rise in the price of food-grains a feeling of despair is seizing the people which is beneficial neither to the Government nor to the country. It insists that it is absolutely necessary to place some restrictions on the export of food-grains.

Political propaganda.

In a lengthy article the Nejat predicts a war between England and America on one side and Japan, Afghanistan, Russia and Turkey on the other. The Amir is training the Afghan army and purchasing air ships which may possibly drop bombs one day on Lahore. England is afraid of Japan and is constructing a naval base at Singapore. She will join America in order to ruin Japan, which in turn will launch an attack on India. Writing in a similar strain the Medina remarks that such a war can only be avoided if England gives up her imperialism, appeases the hearts of the Indians and forbears for ever from annoying the Musalmans, otherwise Japan will not wait for the naval base to be constructed and a war will break out in the near future in which America and England will be the greatest losers. The Prem apprehends that the next great war will be fought between whites and non-whites and that it will take place either in Asia or in the Pacific Ocean. The territorial greed of the western nations, the paper says, cannot but lead to a war, as the Asiatics must assert their right of independent existence. The establishment of the naval base at Singapore and the American preparations for a sham naval fight in the Pacific Ocean are sure indications of a forthcoming war in the East.

LUCKNOW:
The 28th March, 1925.

ZAFAR OMAR,
Publicity Officer, United Provinces.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED AT THE GOVERNMENT BRANCH PRESS, LUCKNOW.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

For the fortnight ending the 11*th April*, 1925.

The Near East.

The Kurdish revolt and the Egyptian elections continue to receive attention in the Muslim press. The Medina is convinced that the "hidden hand" was as much responsible for the Kurdish revolt as for the Khost rebellion. The oil-fields of Mosul are such a prize that there can be no method which Britain can leave untried to obtain them. However, Turkish arms are fast extinguishing the fire of treason which Britain is fanning. For fear of the awakening in Turkey, the federation of the Arab states and of the unrest in India, it has become practically impossible for Britain to evacuate Mesopotamia. Commenting on the Egyptian situation the paper says that Ziwar is a cat's paw in Lord Allenby's hands and every method will be employed to prevent a Zaghlulist majority at the next elections.

Haj Pilgrimage.

The Haqiqat urges England, France and Muslim states to press Ibn Saud and Emir Ali to conclude a three months' armistice for the sake of Haj pilgrimage. The Medina says that Emir Ali is sticking to Jeddah probably because of British instigation. The Haqiqat publishes an article by Haji Wahid-ud-din, M.L.A., saying that the Haj Bill has been adequately amended to meet the wishes of all but penniless beggars on whom the pilgrimage is not a religious obligation.

The Civil Services Bill.

The speech of the Secretary of State in moving the second reading of the Civil Services Bill has revived interest in the question of the pay and personnel of the civil services. The Leader strongly opposes the Bill on the ground that it increases the number of non-votable items. "It increases the powers of control and interference of the Secretary of State. The whole of the Bill is tantamount to an assurance to the people of India that their views and wishes are very far from being a determining factor in England's policy in the governance of this country". In another article, complaining of the paucity of Indians in higher posts, the paper asks:—"Is it a very right policy to let only one out of five posts of Secretaries in the (United Provinces) Civil Secretariat and only one out of five posts of Deputy Secretaries be filled by Indians? How many heads of departments are Indians?" The paper is of opinion that no position for which a competent Indian is available should be occupied by a non-Indian. The Bharat Jivan observes that the Civil Service has been established in India not to better the government of the country, but to maintain the British hold on it and to construct a broad channel for draining away its wealth. If the situation in India continues to remain as unsatisfactory as it is at the present juncture and if movements like those of non-co-operation, Satyagraha and Charkha persist in their full vigour, no English youth would care to come to this country on any salary whatsoever. The Hamdam regrets that Lord Birkenhead regards the interests of the services as supreme and India, torn by communal factions, cannot effectively protest against the additional expenditure with which she will be saddled owing to the Civil Services Bill. The Oudh Punch says that Lord Birkenhead is assuming a claim over Indian public money to which he is not entitled.

"Hindu Swaraj."

During the fortnight under review the attention of the vernacular press has been concentrated on the question of Hindu organization. Considerable prominence has been given to an article on the question by Lala Har Dayal from Sweden in which he says that the Muslims cannot live on terms of friendship with any other community, that the ideal of Hindu Sangathan should, therefore, be the establishment of a Hindu Swaraj, and the Hindu Maha Sabha should supersede the Congress. Proceeding, the writer says:—"It is also the duty of the Hindus to convert the Muhammadans as well as the Christians . . . . The Christians and Muhammadans must observe Hindu festivals and give up foreign customs and manners. Hindu Swaraj and Shuddhi must be the ideal of the Hindu Sangathan . . . . . Every true Hindu is anxious to make the country free from Muhammadans and Christians. We shall have to make sacrifices for realizing the ideal like the Guru who sacrificed his four sons.". While admitting that there is much force in the line of thought taken up by Lala Har Dayal the Patriot does not think it desirable to give up the present ideal of democratic Swaraj in which all communities will enjoy equal rights. The paper, however, holds:—"The Hindus have a double claim upon India—it is their motherland and it is the special sacred domain of their religion. Therefore, it would in no wise be unjust for Hindus if they want to be supreme masters in their own sacred motherland, in the same way as Muslims desire their sacred Jazirat-ul-Arab to be in the possession of a Moslem power." The Pratap thinks that the views of Lala Har Dayal are unpractical and the course suggested by him is unnecessary as there are several examples of people professing different religions and speaking different languages living together. The Aj takes a similar view and says: A number of religions will continue to exist in India as in other countries, but their basic principles will be toleration and the good of the nation and humanity and to create this feeling it is necessary to organize the nation and not the Hindus or Muhammadans. Lala Har Dayal's views have evoked a chorus of protest in the Muslim press. The Hamdam observes that any effort by one community to prevail over the other at any place can only lead to bloodshed. It ridicules the Lala's idea that the Punjab can be brought under Hindu or even Sikh rule and says that Indian progress can be achieved only through inter-communal unity.

Hindu organization.

In the course of an article headed "Hindu Maha Sabha and Shuddhi," the Leader wonders why such a large number of Muhammadans look askance at the Hindu Sabha when they have their Muslim League. One has as little right to object to the Shuddhi activities as to the proselytization work of Christians and Tabligh Associations. Referring to the recent speeches of Dr. Kitchlew and Maulana Zafar Ali at Peshawar, the States says: "There is one solution to Hindu-Muslim problem. The Hindus must bundle in a corner their glorious religion of 'Ahinsa' (non-violence) and organize their society from to-day until they are able to present before the oppressors and hooligans their Indian (sic) prototype who will give blow for blow with equal mercilessness." In an article headed "Government and Hindus", the Patriot alleges that the Government is openly preparing the Musalman in his attacks on the Hindu. "The Moplahs are no longer in jail, the rioters in Gulbarga have been released. Can we say the same with regard to Katarpur Hindus? In the competitive examinations the Hindu who stands second in order of merit is sacrificed at the altar of a Musalman who stands fourth. The result? Not only an injustice is done to the Hindus, but administrative efficiency suffers. At such a time as this when Hindu interests are being attacked from every side it will be nothing short of criminal if Hindus do not organize themselves and take action which will counteract all these opposing forces." The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—"The cry of Hindu organization and Sangathan will do more harm than good unless the Hindus are prepared to strengthen their society by striking at the root of evils and unless they are prepared to adopt drastic measures for the reorganization of society. We must be prepared to jettison the sectional exclusiveness that lies at the root of the disunity amongst the Hindus . . . There must be that spirit that knits together the Sikhs and the Muhammadans". The Aj deplores the communal quarrels and seeks to impress upon the Hindus and Muhammadans alike that it is on account of these dissensions that the sword of black laws is hanging over their heads, that public life in the country is being destroyed by lawless laws and that the Viceroy "is emptying their houses" by his powers of certification. Will they not wake up even now and will the Jallianwala massacre go in vain? Hindi papers publish leading articles emphasizing the importance of the forthcoming session of the Hindu Maha Sabha. Discussing the proceedings of the Oudh Hindu Sabha at Lucknow, the Haqiqat says that the object of the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements are far from innocent and are embittering inter-communal relations. The Hamdam complains that the occasion was utilized to attack not only the present generation of Muslims, but also their ancestors. Imaginary tales of Muslim oppression were recited to incite the Hindus to measure strength with the Muslims. Who can deny that it is unfair to force Muslims to forsake their religion by overawing them with huge processions and by exerting economic pressure on them?

Kohat affairs.

Comments on the statements of Messrs. Gandhi and Shaukat Ali on the Kohat affairs are communal in character. Muhammadan papers think that by his partiality for Hindus Mr. Gandhi has forfeited the confidence of the Muslim community. In the opinion of the Abhyudaya the Mahatma has proceeded on facts, while the Maulana has greatly drawn upon imagination. The Hamdam questions the impartiality of Mr. Gandhi's verdict and says that his insistence on the grant of compensation to the Hindu sufferers and on the withdrawal of legal proceedings against Jiwan Das, the author of the incendiary poem, clearly betray him to be a partizan of the Hindus. Mr. Shaukat Ali's report, however, shows that he has been able to preserve a judicial frame of mind.

The Secretary of State and Mr. Das.

The recent statements of the Secretary of State and Mr. C. R. Das have received considerable attention and evoked a good deal of speculation. The Leader says:—There is something delightfully intriguing about the love messages which are being exchanged between the exalted Tory Secretary of State and the redoubtable and uncompromising Deshbandhu. . . . Has the former taken fright of the latter's destructive capacity? Or, has the Deshbandhu been revising his notions of the untouchability of the foreign Government? In another article the paper writes:—"The friendly gestures from both sides are certainly very interesting, but we are naturally not sanguine about definite results. It is difficult to reconcile the policy which is being pursued in connection with the superior services with any genuine desire to advance the cause of India's freedom." The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We wish that at this moment Lord Birkenhead could take courage in both hands and strike the imagination of the people by inviting to England the chosen leaders of the people so that they, with the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, would hold a small conference in London and devise means for securing the British connection and cementing the two peoples for the good of both and the world". The Aj says: So far as Lord Birkenhead's promise goes India is not prepared, in view of her bitter experience of the past, to believe in the words of British administrators and politicians. The Anand advises Mr. C. R. Das not to miss the opportunity offered by Lord Birkenhead's favourable attitude at present of securing a satisfactory settlement of the Indian problem as it is unlikely that Mahatma Gandhi can achieve anything now especially after the Maulana's defection. All hopes of the success of the present political agitation in the country are henceforward centred in the Swaraj party.

Bengal Ordinance.

Commenting on the debate in the House of Lords on the promulgation of the Bengal Ordinance the Leader says:—We have read every word that has been said by and in behalf of the Government and we are not ashamed to affirm that we remain as unconvinced of the necessity and the wisdom of the action they took as before we read a single word of what they said. To the principal contentions of the critics there has not only been no adequate reply, but not even a serious attempt at reply. Lord Birkenhead's speech in the House of Lords leaves the position where it was. He has not produced a single new fact or a single new argument. The Bharat Jivan is of opinion that the certification of the Bengal Ordinance by the Viceroy in face of the united opposition of the entire country must suffice to confirm the hollowness of the Reforms, and adds:—Will not blood boil in the veins of subject India to see the way in which the wishes of the public have been openly ignored? Will she submit to this kick quietly even now? Will the whole of the civilized world have to take it that Indians are not men, but brutes, to be kept under restraint only by force? The Pratap describes Lord Birkenhead's speech in the House of Lords as a diplomatic oration intended to make a display of authority and says that Lord Olivier's easy acquiescense in his views despite his criticism of the Secretary of State's policy shows that his interpellations on the subject and Lord Birkenhead's reply thereto, were of no serious import, but were the outcome of a preconcerted understanding.

The Viceroy.

The Aj writes: It is now difficult for Lord Reading to return to India. He came here flying the banner of "justice" and is going back after framing the black laws. No Indian will regret his departure. India does not want him. May no subject country like India fall a prey to his "justice"! In another article, commenting on the appointment of Lord Lytton as Viceroy the same paper remarks: The progenitor of the black laws will now become the Viceroy of India and the militarists will control the Indian policy from London which will mean that India will now be crushed between the mill-stones of the lawless laws for the next five years at least, that police repression and salaries of high officials will increase and that from time to time Indians will be made to feel the existence of the " steel frame ". This will be a crucial time for Indians and if they are able to abide by the vow of non-violence and base their efforts for the attainment of swaraj on soul-force, they are sure to succeed.

The United Provinces Council.

In the course of an article on the work of the United Provinces Legislative Council, the Leader writes: " The Budget of the year is a budget of the floods. No improvement, no expansion, of beneficial services has been provided for to the minimum extent compatible with even moderate progress. The Hon'ble Ministers have glibly spoken of progress in their various departments. There may have been progress according to the notions of conservative landlords. But there is none or next to nothing perceptible to the ordinary eye." With regard to the work of non-official members, the paper thinks that, on the whole, they have achieved little and that few of them have shown the requisite standard of knowledge, ability, and earnestness. The Haqiqat deplores non-official apathy and says that the elected members mostly helped to swell the official division list. The Council could make itself felt only twice or thrice and the Governor had his way even over the Oudh Courts Bill. The Swarajists should not hesitate to contest the Presidentship of the Council. Protesting against the strictures passed on the Home Member during the debate on the jail grant, the Oudh Punch says that during the days of non-co-operation the Lucknow jail for political prisoners, compared with the conditions in other provinces, was a veritable abode of luxury.

Oudh Courts Bill.

The Leader is not convinced of the necessity of a Chief Court in preference to a Judicial Commissioner's court and is doubtful of the wisdom of the clause of the Bill which endows the coming Chief Court with original jurisdiction in a certain class of cases. " In any event we are certain that it is a luxury which should have been left for a more propitious financial period. Under the present dispensation necessities are made to wait and luxuries given preference. The interests, the wishes, and even the whims of the privileged few get precedence over the interests of the poor and helpless many."

The Civil Justice Committee's report.

The Leader commends the recommendations of the Civil Justice Committe regarding the remuneration of legal practitioners and says that if the scale of fee is revised, as suggested, it will not only have a salutary effect on the mofussil bar, but will check to an appreciable extent abuse of legal processes which causes delay and waste of time. The Aj remarks that the net of British legislature has closed the way to honesty and broadened the road to dishonesty. Proceeding, it says that if the power of appointing arbitrators (punches) is vested in the hands of District Magistrates it will be difficult to find sincere workers, the chances of official toadies and seekers after power will increase and the parties will go dissatisfied.

Indian States.

Some of the Indian States have received a good deal of attention in the vernacular press. The Haqiqat says that the recent disclosures about the Maharajas of Nabha and Indore and Raja Hari Singh of Kashmir afford but a glimpse of even worse things which are passing in most Indian States. It is a pity that most Indian Ruling Chiefs squander public money and time in debauchery, but secure immunity from public criticism by humouring high-placed English officials with dinners and hunting parties. The Ferishta is similarly dissatisfied with the moral life of the Maharaja of Bharatpur. The Haqiqat points out that Government was only waiting to take action against the Maharaja of Indore and wonders whether his internment in England will be life-long. While the Oudh Punch does not regard internment as much of a punishment, it complains that it is likely to involve the State in heavy expenditure. The Hamdam denies that the Muslim press has ever demanded the deposition of the Maharaja of Indore. Muslim papers complain of the attitude of the Kashmir State towards its Muslim subjects and of the supermacy of the pandits there. The Medina points out that Muslims in Kashmir are being treated worse than Indians in the colonies simply for submitting a memorial to the Viceroy for the protection of their rights and the Mukhbir-i-Alam quotes the specific instance of Khwaja Nur-ud-din who has been expelled for this offence.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The throwing out of the Age of Consent Bill by the Legislative Assembly was a dramatic gesture which neither the triumphant actors nor the country they represent ought to be proud of. Proceeding, the paper complains of the attitude of Government with regard to this Bill and says:—"The voiceless woman of India expected Government to give a clear lead and it is rather unfortunate for the country that both Government and the accredited representatives of the country have shirked their responsibility in the matter". The Aj regrets the rejection of the Bill and blames the progressive members of the Assembly for having carried their reforming zeal a bit too far, and having thereby alienated the sympathy of the orthodox section.

The Age of Consent Bill.

The Oudh Akhbar urges that the money saved by economies in the Posts and Telegraphs department should be utilized to restore postal charges to the old level.

Posts and Telegraphs Economy Committee.

Referring to the trade boycott preached against Indians at Johannesburg the Hind-i-Jadid says that Indians should insist on their rights in all the colonies and if they do not meet with success they should resort to retaliation. The colonial capitalists should bear in mind that too much oppression will only hasten the day of the emancipation of the "coolies".

Indians in the Colonies.

Commenting on the Muddiman Committee's Report the Oudh Punch compares the Reforms to a heap of bones and says that in the presence of the provision which empowers the Viceroy to veto any resolution passed by the Legislature, it is futile to talk of Reforms.

The Muddiman Committee's Report.

The Aj sees in the new protectionist policy of the British Government in India a desire to further the interests of foreigners in the country, apprehends that it may lead to the establishment of a second "steel frame" and says that Indians should not be instrumental in establishing such factories as may help the bureaucracy in depriving their neighbours of their liberty.

The Policy of "Protection".

The Bharat Dharma interprets the conferment of the title of Field-Marshal upon Sir William Birdwood before his appointment as the Commander-in-Chief of India as placing that authority over the head of the Viceroy and the Governors who will have to submit quietly to what he says, and as barring all reduction in military expenditure. The Field-Marshal will thus succeed in achieving for the Empire what none of his predecessors has yet been able to do. Who can imagine how much blood of India will be sucked in this enterprise?

The Commander-in-Chief.

The Medina vehemently protests against the transportation of Moplah prisoners to the Andamans in view of its "deadly and enervating" climate, and says:—It appears that the Government of India, instigated by the Hindu community, is bent upon clearing the holy soil of India of the Moplahs. This is why the poor wives and children of these men are now being sent to the Andamans along with their husbands, although these islands were previously abandoned for climatic reasons as a convict settlement. This obvious tyranny is bound to produce its consequences.

The Moplahs.

The Aj publishes an appeal from Babu Sampurnanand on the subject of the Asiatic Federation in which he says that the selfish policy of England and America is cementing the Sino-Japanese friendship on the one hand, and Pan-Islamic solidarity on the other. Indications are not wanting that there will soon be a conflict between the white races of the West and the coloured races of the East, and this war will be more a clash of ideals than a trial of military strength. India forms the connecting link between the Buddhist states of the Far East and Muslim states of the Near East, and would be the best place for preliminary work in connection with the Asiatic Federation and the next Congress session should be utilised to hold a conference of Asiatic politicians and publicists. The Pratap publishes an appeal from Lala Har Dayal (Sweden) in which he urges the necessity for the establishment of a society for rendering service to the Nepalese. This society should have nothing to do with politics; its object should be to sympathize with Nepal, to advance money for promoting the education of her people and to help the indigent Nepalese living outside their country. A new festival called "Nepalotsava" should be instituted to commemorate the preservation of the independence of Nepal. The Brahman Hitaishi invokes goddess Durga on the occasion of the Nava Durga fast to re-incarnate herself in the country to destory the wicked rakshasas who abduct 'our' women, slaughter cows and otherwise oppress 'us.' The Pratap publishes the first instalment of an article by Lala Har Dayal (Sweden) in which he advocates radical changes in the creed, policy and constitution of the Congress. The Congress should, in future, be called Rashtriya Maha Sabha (National Assembly) and should conduct its proceedings in provincial languages. The provincial branches should hold their sessions in an historic centre in their respective provinces. The Hindus alone should be eligible for its membership and it should help in the Hindu Sangathan and Shuddhi movements. In short, the Congress should now become the Hindu Swarajya Sabha. It must accept two practical principles, i.e., the attainment of self-government within the British Empire and the propagation of peaceful non-violence without which they cannot carry on a great movement openly. This is a game of politics and Indians too should practise diplomacy in order to score success therein. If the idealist patriots clamour for complete independence, are they prepared for an armed revolution and the sacrifices involved therein?

Afghanistan.

The Ittihad-i-Islam condemns the excessive nervousness displayed by the Government of India regarding Afghanistan and the wasteful military expenditure on the frontier to meet the imaginary Afghan bogey. It is well-known that excessive nervousness sometimes brings into existence those very dangers which are apprehended. The Medina ridicules Hindu perturbation at the possession of some aeroplanes by Afghanistan and points out that it is Britain with per unbounded Imperialistic greed that controls the destinies of the weaker and subject nationalities. She has rendered lifeless within a few years a country of such vast resources as India. If India were freed from her despotic grip all other Asiatic and African countries could also be liberated. The greatest obstacle in the way of Russia is British capitalism and the liberation of India is the first means of crushing it. Every patriotic Indian who loves freedom should, therefore, pray that the Russo-Afghan peril may become so imminent that the Government of India who have so far ignored all defeats in the Legislative Assembly may yield and conclude an honourable peace with the Indian nation.

Haj.

The Sada-i-Muslim urges Muslims to postpone Haj this year not only because of the war going on in the Hedjaz but also in view of the scarcity of water and food-grains there.

The Civil Services.

The question of the Indianization of the Services continues to receive a good deal of attention. The Pioneer says: The maintenance of a regular supply of British recruits to the Indian Services is essential. The balance prescribed by the Lee Commission can be ensured only by removing the present disinclination of British youths of the right type to enter the Indian Services. For if India is to progress to the goal marked out for her the provision of a competent and reliable civil administration is all important and it depends on the blending of British and Indian genius in the Services. The Arya Mitra wonders why English youths reading in colleges are being exhorted to join the Indian bureaucracy when there are plenty of capable Indians to fill the vacancies in the Indian Civil Service. Is their black skin a sufficient disqualification for their sitting on the chairs of their white lords? The Oudh Punch ridicules Lord Birkenhead's solicitude for the recruitment of English youths for the Indian Civil Service and says that while the Lee Commission's recommendations may prove advantageous to Englishmen they mean a loss of a crore and a half to Indian revenues. India cannot have political progress, but only enhanced taxes and unsympathetic treatment of its industries!

The Hindu Maha Sabha.

The proceedings of the Maha Sabha have evoked a good deal of enthusiasm in Hindu papers. Commending the main items in the programme of the Sabha the Leader writes: It is the bounden duty of the Hindus to see that the helpless members of their community are properly taken care of and have not to seek shelter in non Hindu folds. The Hindu Sangathan movement opens out a large field of constructive work which, if carried out systematically and with complete freedom from anti-Muslim bias should absorb the energies of many young men willing to serve their country and community along fruitful lines. The Advocate says: The fact that Hindu leaders like Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya are supporting whole-heartedly the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements shows that there is going to be a new orientation in the Hindu community and the Hindu Maha Sabha will grow in the near future into a mighty organization for the protection of the Hindus. The force of circumstances is compelling even orthodox Hindus to accept Shuddhi and the removal of the curse of untouchability as necessary for the protection of the Hindu community as a whole. The Indian Daily Telegraph is of opinion that Lala Lajpat Rai has told some home truths which must be an eye-opener to all Hindu and Muhammadan leaders who really want to establish peace and good-will in the country. The paper hopes that the Hindus will make an earnest and united effort to sink their narrow differences and to regain that lost heritage which was once their glory. The Swadhin wonders as to the meaning of the demand for further rights on the part of the Musalmans when the leading principle of the democratic form of Government is that every nation and every individual has an equal right in the administration of the state. It remarks that it is a misfortune that Indians have fallen into the hands of a people whose interests can be served only by keeping the two important communities of the country apart, which is clear from the difference in the policies regarding the Hindus and Musalmans. The Arya Mitra urges that it is necessary for the well-being of the Hindus that Arya Samajists and Sanatandharmists should sink their differences, unite together and adopt the policy of least resistance towards each other. The Hamdam is pained to find that even a political leader of the calibre of Lala Lajpat Rai could not shake off the narrow communal outlook in his presidential speech at the Hindu Maha Sabha. Muslim separatist demands, the Lala must note, are contingent solely on Hindu injustice and will disappear with a change of heart on the part of the Hindus.

The Secretary of State and Mr. Das.

The manifesto of Mr. Das and the Secretary of State's pronouncement continue to be widely discussed, the general opinion being that the present policy of the Government is not favourable for a successful conference between representatives of His Majesty's Government and Indian political parties. The Leader writes: Has Mr. Das really brought about a magic transformation in the Indian situation? And can there be any settlement of the Indian problem unless the British Government is prepared and anxious to meet Indians half way? Is there any evidence of this? Are there not, on the contrary, clear indications that the forces of reaction are in the ascendant and that the Conservative Government have no intention of moving forward? The Patriot remarks: Unless the Government give up their reactionary policy and meet the aspirations of the people it is not possible to create the favourable atmosphere desired by Mr. Das. Instead of meeting the aspirations of the people, Government has resorted to extraordinary arbitrary powers under the Bengal Ordinance. It has made the atmosphere more tense and confirmed the belief of many ardent youths that the Government will never give real self-government unless it is forced to. The Kisan wonders why people are being asked to co-operate with the Government when the bureaucracy is still ruling the country with the help of the sword and the policy of divide and rule, when even now the birthrights of the people are being trampled upon with the help of special powers. The paper is not prepared to agree with the views expressed in Mr. C. R. Das's manifesto and says:—"We belong to that party which does not want to co-operate and bear the yoke of British Imperialism under any condition, because co-operation is impossible between the devourer and the victim. The words of Lord Birkenhead inviting the Deshbandhu to suppress the revolutionaries smack of hypocrisy because the aim of the party to which he belongs is to spread the net-work of British Imperialism all over the world and keep other nations in perpetual bondage for the well-being of the white man." The Vartman surmises from Lord Birkenhead's "invitation" to Mr. Das that at the present time the British, moved by self-interest in view of the impending war between Asia and Europe, are feeling the necessity of once more coaxing Indians into being taken in by greater allurements than the "reforms" and warns the Indian leaders to bide their time till the demands of self-interest become imperatively urgent when the British will disgorge a good deal. In another article the paper remarks that Lord Reading's visit to England, Lord Birkenhead's conciliatory statement, and whispers in Parliament to hold a round table conference in England including Indian leaders fully testify to the soundness of the Swaraj party's programme which alone can secure real liberty for India. The Surya says that the clear terms in which Mr. Das has opposed political violence leave no room for the charge that the Swaraj party is responsible for the outbreak of political crime in India. If the bureaucracy really wants co-operation it should establish colonial Swaraj in India as soon as possible. The paper is not at all sanguine that the conference of the Secretary of State with Lord Reading and provincial heads and Mr. O'Donnell will result in any good to India. The Pratap is of opinion that Lord Birkenhead only wants to throw dust into the eyes of Indians and that his invitation for co-operation is like that of the spider to the fly.

The Liberal Conference.

In the course of a highly appreciative article on the work of the United Provinces Liberal Conference held at Cawnpore the Leader says: In voicing in the form of well-considered resolutions the unanimous opinions of intelligent Indians on some of the most vital questions of the day, the Cawnpore conference has achieved a notable success and rendered a valuable public service. In the opinion of the paper Mr. Kunzru's presidential address will rank high in the literature that has gathered round the working of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. Strongly urging the acceptance of Indian demands for further reforms as voiced in Mr. Kunzru's address, the paper severely criticizes the present policy of the Government and says: "The one fact that consistently emerges from the whole of the Government of India's attitude ever since Mr. Montagu ceased to be Secretary of State is their sovereign unwillingness to part with a particle of their irresponsible power in favour of the legislature in India. They are content to live in an atmosphere of almost perpetual conflict with the legislature. They do not mind the increasing distrust which nearly every thinking Indian feels of their motives and purposes. Uttering the accents of altruism they pretend that their seemingly unfriendly attitude is really most friendly and is dictated wholly and solely by a genuine, deep-seated and abiding regard for the welfare of the masses whom they distinguish from the classes of the people of India. Their acts and the tendencies of their policy are, however, driving even moderate Indians to the reluctant conclusion that at bottom the whole policy is a policy of racial and political selfishness." The Pioneer criticizes the policy of the Liberal party as disclosed by the proceedings of the conference and says: The presidential speech of Pandit Hirdaynath Kunzru serves to emphasize how lamentably he and his party are failing to take advantage of the opportunity which is offered them to play a dominant part in assisting India along the path towards self-government. It is no use inveighing, as Pandit Hirdaynath Kunzru did, against "the forces of reaction" or declaiming the need for a "united India." If the Liberals wish to assist in their country's political advance, it can only be by exerting their influence on the side of stability. The Indian Daily Telegraph perceives signs of Liberals becoming more alive to the danger that threatens the cause of Indian constitutional progress. The Vartman remarks that a perusal of Pandit Hirdaynath Kunzru's presidential address discloses the fact that as a result of the official patting of the Zamindar party and the change in the Swaraj party's programme the Liberals too have begun to show signs of activity. But they must bear in mind that mere speeches, deputations or crushing council debates will not secure reforms or Swaraj. They should work among the masses also. The Hamdam regards the holding of the session of the conference at the present juncture as quite inopportune in view of the disintegrating forces already adrift in the country and says that Pandit Hirdaynath Kunzru's lengthy diatribe against the Muddiman Committee's report was a sheer waste of time as his views are not likely to carry much weight with the authorities in England. It would have been better if he had devoted a greater portion of his address to problems which affect India more closely.

Bengal Ordinance.

The Najat characterizes as a farce the proceedings in the House of Lords during the debate on the Bengal Ordinance. Lords Olivier and Birkenhead only agreed to differ and the former was as indifferent to the difficulties of India as the latter was subservient to Indian bureaucratic policy. Their sole object appears to have been to lower the prestige of Indian leaders and patriots and it is up to every self-respecting Indian to refuse the Secretary of State's invitation for an exchange of views.

The Oudh Courts Bill.

The Surya observes that through his crooked diplomacy Sir William Marris has at last succeeded in securing the deletion of the clause providing for the reservation of three out of the five judgeships for Indians on the ground that the observance of such a colour and race distinction is opposed to the spirit of the Queen's Proclamation and asks whether any regard was paid to this before. The fact that no Indian has been given the post of the Director of Public Instruction for the last fifty years and that only 19 Indians have been appointed to the 59 vacancies that occured in the Allahabad High Court during the last 25 years is sufficient to establish the charge of racial favouritism. No better instance of favouritism in the name of justice, repression in the name of order, and murder in the name of humanity can be found anywhere than under the administration of our bureaucracy.

Report on primary education.

The Leader heartily supports the recommendations of Mr. Kichlu's report on primary education and hopes that they will not be shelved on the ground of want of funds. "This excellent and 'practical' document affords a very good basis for the formulation of a definite and workable scheme for the expansion of primary education for a decade and deserves to be carefully studied by officials and non-officials."

Indians in colonies.

The Leader strongly criticizes General Hertzog's attitude with regard to the Colour Bar Bill and says: To the party which the General leads the Imperial considerations involved in the issues raised by the Bill are of the least importance and as for claims of justice and righteousness, of equality and brotherhood, etc., he does not appear to be very much afflicted by the finer instincts which recoil from proposals rooted in race arrogance and class selfishness. The policy he is pursuing will, if persisted in, bring its own nemesis on those who are allied with it.

Colour distinction in jails.

The Surya wonders at the Hon'ble Home Member's reply in the Council to the effect that the flogging of the Eurasian convicts in the Tundla rape case by another Eurasian was in accordance with the jail regulations of the United Provinces and points out that the punishment which is meted out to prisoners under these regulations is meant for offences which are committed inside the jail and are tried by the Superintendent himself. Such cases are not brought before the ordinary courts of law. The Raja Sahib alone understands the secret of punishing offences under the Indian Penal Code in accordance with the jail regulations. Referring to another question in this connection the paper observes that if it is necessary to provide punkhas for white convicts they should be pulled by prisoners of the same race. Does it not show that Indians have got to serve Europeans whether they live inside or outside the jail?

The Indian Viceroyalty.

Some vernacular papers are strongly criticising the policy of Lord Reading and expressing the hope that he may not return to India. The Hindustani is relieved even at the temporary departure of Lord Reading as the four years' administration of "this clever and diplomatic Viceroy" was a continuous source of disgrace to India and did much harm to it. His Lordship was responsible not only for the Bengal Ordinance but also for inviting the Prince of Wales in spite of the protests of the Indian public. When Indians refused to welcome the Prince, thousands were thrown into prison by him. He was also responsible for the Nabha affair and the firing on harmless Jathas and could not mete out justice to the Hindu sufferers at Kohat.

Indian States.

The Nyaya deplores that under the system of administration at present obtaining in Indian States the rights of the people have been completely trampled down. Every Ruling Chief can do what he likes. So long as Europeans are pleased with him no one can prevent him from doing what he likes. This condition has prevailed in Indian States since the establishment of British rule in the country. The British Government too does not prevent the Ruling Chiefs from practising oppression. The Haqiqat is perturbed at the contradiction of the rumour regarding the deportation of the Maharaja of Indore and says that as the Maharaja continues unrepentant even after the damaging disclosures in the Bombay trial as is shown by his continuance of his revelries, and as the need for the protection of Mumtaz Begum and her witnesses continues to be as pressing as before, Government should take some action against him. The Sada-i-Muslim complains that Lord Reading instead of redressing the grievances detailed by Kashmir Muslims in their memorial to him has returned that document to the Maharaja and has brought about the institution of a reign of terror for the unfortunate signatories.

The Vartman sedition case.

The Haqiqat regards as ill-advised the stern refusal of the Government to grant a pardon to the editor of the Vartman after his repeated apologies for the offending articles in his paper and says that the offender should be allowed an opportunity to reform himself.

Political Propaganda.

The Shakti urges the necessity of organizing the whole nation and not only different communities. All communities should sink their petty differences and refrain from doing anything which might harm any community and should combine to emancipate India. The Swadhin writes :—Irresponsible and autocratic foreigners who are covetous of our wealth are sacrificing the interests of the people of this country. Indians receive blows after blows from the British, yet they remain asleep. The reason for this is to be found in the crooked policy of the Government. In addition to the recruitment of white men in higher posts these foreigners are exhausting our resources by their insidious despotic policy of exploitation. It is the duty of the educated classes to awaken their uneducated countrymen. The Aj says :—The last sambat (Hindu year) was very auspicious for the servant-masters of India. It may be that our babies were dying for want of milk, that the mothers administered opium to their children to prevent their crying, that there was a dearth of money in the bureaucratic treasury for spending on education, health and public works yet a burden of crores of rupees a year has been placed on the shoulders of this poor and miserable country for offering conveniences to those already drawing princely salaries. May Lord Reading never return to India to give her again the taste of his "justice" as embodied in the Bengal Ordinance Act. The Arya Mitra urges the establishment of an association of Arya Samaj volunteers in every province. While agreeing with Professor Radha Kamal Mukerji's statement before the Economic Enquiry Committee that the growth of population and the defective system of land tenure are responsible for the poverty of the peasants, the Hamdam considers the main cause to be the present system of administration which is adding to their poverty and leaving them a prey to usurious money-lenders. The fruits of the peasant's toil now pass out of the country and until the present system of administration is changed there can be no hope of improvement.

Registration of money-lenders.

The Swadhin remarks that the bill for the registration of money-lenders introduced by the Muslim party in the Panjab, if passed into law, will hit the Hindus very hard.

The Near East.

The Muslim press is jubilant over the public protests that have attended Mr. Balfour's visit to Palestine. The Sada-i-Muslim assures the Muhammadans of Palestine of Indian aid and trusts to their determination not to allow its sacred soil to become a prey to political subjection or profaneness. The Medina attributes the Jewish and Armenian colonizations in Palestine to the desire to disunite the Arab states. It is evident from the attitude of the British kings towards the Jews in the past that this new-born solicitude of Britain for them is inspired solely by imperialistic greed for oil and minerals. The Ittihad-i-Islam quotes the opinion of an expert politician that Britain's prolonged inactivity in the Hedjaz shows that she is waiting for her opportunity when all Arab combatants are exhausted. The Hamdam finds in the news from Kurdistan evidence of British manipulation behind the revolt and wonders whether the throne of that country is being proposed for Sheriff Husain who has been staying in Mesopotamia ever since his expulsion from the Hedjaz.

Haj pilgrimage.

The Haj question continues to absorb the interest of the Muslim press which has taken umbrage at the resolution passed by the Haj Committee regarding the advisability of postponing the Haj pilgrimage this year. The Rahnuma warns the Government against the consequences of interfering with this religious obligation of the Muslims especially after the generous and widely published invitation of Ibn Saud to the Hajis. The Hamdam appeals to Government not to let political considerations outweigh its regard for Muslim religious sentiment in India. The feeling caused by the discomfiture of the Hedjaz deputation would be nothing as compared with that roused by the stoppage of the Haj pilgrimage. The Mansur regrets that Emir Ali is prolonging his occupation of Jeddah and has received munitions from Britain. It thanks Ibn Saud for throwing open three other ports for Hajis and advises Indian Muslims to respond without any fear to his invitation for the pilgrimage. The Medina denounces the members of the Haj Committee as Muslims in name only and says that the pilgrimage is sought to be postponed out of regard for British interests. The Sada-i-Muslim, however, has faith in Government's good intentions, and in order to calm Muslim agitation urges the publication of the reasons for the Haj Committee's resolutions. The Mashriq publishes a contributed article urging that the Hajis should be allowed to proceed on pilgrimage if they can show a postal savings bank balance sufficient to cover the return fare. The Pioneer calls attention to the dangers of sending pilgrim ships to one or other of the lesser known ports of the Hedjaz and hopes that no such step will be taken without the fullest inquiries being made regarding the facilities at the port itself and along the road to Mecca. A more satisfactory solution of the present difficulties would be found if the Islamic world were to insist that the two combatants should declare a truce during the holy season, in order that the sacred duty of the pilgrimage might be performed.

Hindu Maha Sabha.

The resolutions passed by the recent session of the Hindu Maha Sabha have evoked animated discussion. Some Hindu papers hold that they did not go far enough in the direction of social reform while others, though much fewer in number, emphasize the need of caution out of regard for the sentiments of the orthodox section. Muslim papers bitterly criticize the attitude of Lala Lajpat Rai and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and hold that all activities of the Maha Sabha are instinct with sinister designs against the Muhammadan community. The Indian Daily Telegraph deprecates the half-hearted measures adopted by the Maha Sabha with regard to social reform and invokes the spirit of Swami Dayanand to give courage to the leaders of the sabha. It goes on to say: "Our aim is no less than the re-installation of Hinduism on the throne where it sat in the days of our glorious past. We must elevate and organize the rank and file comprising the lower classes, the depressed classes, the non-Brahmans, the untouchables and the Panchamas. There is no hope for Hinduism unless they are raised, embraced like brothers and treated like real Hindus with equal rights and opportunities. For the very existence of Hinduism such extreme steps as widow marriage, removal of untouchability and the fusion of the various castes and sub-castes by inter-marriage have become necessary." Commenting on Lala Lajpat Rai's presidential address the Vartman says that Sangathan is the only power which can give swaraj to India. The Abhyudaya in its special Hindu Maha Sabha number publishes an article by Babu Ganga Prasad Upadhyaya, M.A, who remarks that it is a peculiar mystery that every attempt at Hindu-Muslim combination has been followed by communal dissensions and that it is altogether wrong to attribute these dissensions to the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements, seeing that they had existed long before these movements came into existence. Muhammadans, adds the writer, should not look askance at Hindu organization, as it will greatly help in the attainment of swaraj which should be the avowed goal of both Hindus and Muhammadans. The paper publishes a poem by Janardan Prasad Jha, Dwij which concludes with the prayer:—"O God, awaken us. May we get up, push forward and come to grips. Destroying the opponents may we make (our) community raise its head high by putting the laurel of victory on the head of the mother." The Abhaya exhorts Hindus to renounce selfishness and make necessary sacrifices for the Sangathan movement for their very existence. In another article the paper exhorts the Hindus to "awake, arise or be for ever fallen" and says that "the sinful" are alarmed at the prospect of the awakening among them as they know that henceforward they will not be able to commit sins with impunity. It asks Hindus to protect their community by making sacrifices for it and organizing it. The Brahmachari says that if the Muslim leaders wish to organize their community they are welcome to do so, but they should not indulge in loose talk and try to intimidate the Hindus by idle threats. The Pratap and the Vartman condemn the hostile attitude of the orthodox sanatanists towards the sabha. The Aj says that the unprecedented success of the sabha this year was due to their opposition and urges that it should confine its attention to the solution of social questions and leave political problems to the Congress. The Surya, on the other hand, opines that it should devote itself to the question of Sanyathan only and leave Shuddhi and untouchability alone as these are likely to create a split in the camp. The Brajmandal expresses a similar opinion. Referring to the trend of the proceedings of the session the Medina says that the Maha Sabha is so obssessed by fear of Muslim aggression that its main object appears to be to rid India of Muslims. The inspiring motive behind the uplift of the depressed classes, and the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements is simply hatred and enmity towards Muslims and a desire to acquire supremacy over them. India must be purged of its Muslim population. This holy land must be rid of these mlechhas who are polluting the valley of the Ganges with beef. The only object of Mr. Malaviya and his friends is to gain political, cultural, religious and national superiority over Muslims. From the very outset every speech and resolution seems to proclaim that the Muslims are tyrannical, blood-thirsty, ignorant and barbarous, have oppressed Hindus, have violated the chastity of their women and have robbed the weak and helpless Hindus and therefore the untouchables should be won over, the weak should be strengthened, the women should be protected and warlike centres should be organized throughout the country. It is a pity that even a redoubtable nationalist, like Lala Lajpat Rai, has fallen a victim to the charmer of Malwa. Alas, the Hindu Maha Sabha is thus poisoning the founts of Hindu-Muslim reunion. The Success also regards the entire programme of the Maha Sabha as an insidious move against the Muhammadans. Discussing Lala Lajpat Rai's address the Hamdam deplores the Lala's opposition to the restoration of the frontier area to Afghanistan. There are any number of Hindus in Afghanistan proper and the frontier Hindus need have no apprehensions from Afghan rule. The Lala's suggestion that Afghanistan should be made a part of India is extremely pernicious, as the Afghans are strongly imbued with love of freedom and the expression of such views by Hindu politicians can only alienate Afghan sympathy from the Indian swaraj movement.

Reunion of political parties.

Mr. Srinivas a Sastri's plea for unity among the various political parties in the country has evoked only a scathing criticism of the Liberal policy and programme in Swarajist papers. The Leader has been making repeated appeals to all parties to sink their differences in order to "create consciousness of strength." In an article headed "The Danger Ahead" the paper complains bitterly of the policy of Government since the resignation of Mr. Montagu and says: "The people have found that in matters of vital importance to the constitutional development of the country, such as the control and the Indianization of the superior civil services and the training of Indians for the defence of the country, the views of the elected representatives, backed as they have been by public opinion outside the legislature, have been flouted. The Lee Commission was appointed and its recommendations have been given effect to in spite of the strongest opposition. Military policy continues to be dominated by a spirit of distrust. Subtle and powerful forces of unrighteousness are at work to further neutralise the reforms and to undo the work of Mr. Montagu. The reactionaries are encouraged by the prevailing confusion in the ranks of Indian politicians and are feverishly busy in making hay while the sun shines . . . In view of the visible illiberal tendencies in many directions, would it be absurd to presume that Lord Reading has been invited to England for consultation not because an advance is contemplated but because of the pressure of conservative supporters of Government who are keen on changing the constitution so that, among other things, the superior services may once more be placed in a position of unchallenged supremacy . . . In such a situation is it not the duty of Indians to strengthen their own ranks, to strive further for the adjustment of internal differences and by rallying the forces of unity to create consciousness of strength?" The Aj says that a reunion between the Swarajists and the Liberals is impossible. Only those who do not hold dyarchy to be undesirable can co-operate with the Government, accept its offices and titles and carry out its instructions, but others cannot do so. Referring to the sad record of failure, as a parliamentary force, of the swaraj party during the last two years the Bir Hindu advises it to change its methods and to come to some understanding with Liberals and Independents so that a united demand may be presented. The Aryavart agrees to a coalition and abandonment of obstruction by the Swarajists, provided the Liberals promise to fight the bureaucracy tooth and nail when the united demand is rejected.

Commonwealth of India Bill.

Although pessimistic as to whether Mrs. Besant will be able to interest and agitate the vast majority of the Indian people over her Commonwealth of India Bill, the Indian Daily Telegraph advises her to concentrate her efforts on national unity and persuade all political parties to join and strengthen the Indian National Congress. "Mrs. Besant's Bill and efforts in that connection undoubtedly deserve the whole-hearted support of the country. We would appeal to all party leaders to sink their differences and strengthen the hands of Mrs. Besant."

The Secretary of State and Mr. Das.

The Shakti says that India cannot now be satisfied without a round table conference. We may not have weapons and the bureaucracy may be powerful, yet it is impossible for it to withstand the general condemnation of its administration. The drama of hypocrisy must cease with the raising of the political standard of the country by Messrs. Das and Nehru if the Sanjathan movement also gains in strength it would be a power before which both the Government and the Musalmans will have to yield. The Anand urges the British Government not to be taken in by the propagandist activities of conservative die-hards, but to convene the proposed round table conference with a view to smooth the difficulties it has to face in fulfilling its pledge of granting responsible government to India. The Surya supports the manifesto of Mr. Das and urges that Indians of all shades of opinion should jointly prepare a Bill for the establishment of self-government in India and organise public opinion by non-violent methods, so as to constrain the British Parliament to accept it and grant equal rights to Indians within the Empire.

The United Provinces Liberal Conference.

The Anand remarks that in view of the lull in the Congress activities the Cawnpore session of the Liberal Conference is certainly reassuring to politically-minded people. The one defect in the activities of the Liberals, however, is that they do not propagate their views among the masses. The Aj considers Pandit Hirdaynath Kunzru's presidential address at the conference as more important than the Muddiman report, and says that the Pandit has ruthlessly refuted the objections of various Local Governments against the grant of provincial autonomy. It however regrets that the Pandit has given very little importance to the question of political unity.

Indianization of Services.

Newspapers of all shades of opinion are taking strong exception to the efforts that are being made in Britain to stimulate the recruitment of British youths for the Indian Civil Service. The Leader writes: "We regard Indianization as an indispensable condition of the success of any scheme of self-government for India and we want British recruitment to be stopped altogether. We, therefore, object to the artificial stimulus that is being given to non-Indian recruitment." Commenting on Lord Ampthill's proposals in the House of Lords for an increase in the emoluments of non-Indians in the provincial services the Bharat Dharma says that the bureaucracy does not care for the well-being of low paid Indian employees, simply because white men do not regard Indians to be human beings. The only way in which Indians can improve their financial condition and force the bureaucracy to act according to their advice is to use swadeshi goods and boycott foreign ones.

The Viceroy.

Extremist newspapers continue to indulge in bitter attacks on the policy of Lord Reading. The Shakti writes:—Lord Reading came here with great pomp and éclat but left for England stealthily like Dyer and O'Dwyer. This self-styled apostle of justice perpetrated so much injustice and oppression in India that "Readingdom" will become a byword of contempt in the country. The Arya Varta publishes a poem saying that Lord Reading gave the black law to Bengal and wounded the Nabha State with his sword of justice. The Oudh Akhbar sees in Lord Lytton's appointment as Viceroy the enforcement of a sterner policy by the Conservative Government in England. It apprehends that the high officials are going to confabulate in England not to chalk out any progressive line of action but to compound another temporary narcotic for India. Indian leaders had better be forewarned and prepared for concerted action.

Judicial Officers' Conference.

Referring to the address of the Chief Justice at the Judicial Officers' Conference the Leader suggests "a sensible reduction in the excessive number and length of holidays" in the High Court and a greater regard for "the calibre of the persons intended to be raised to judicial eminence" as two of the remedies for the accumulation of arrears in the High Court. The paper is of opinion that in the whole of the country the average has been deplorably lowered by the Government during the last fifteen or twenty years owing to considerations other than the fitness of the individual. The Oudh Akhbar agrees with Sir Grimwood Mears' view that the system of law and procedure obtaining in the country needs radical reform to obviate the law's delays.

Report on Primary Education.

The Indian Daily Telegraph is of opinion that the adoption of Mr. Kichlu's recommendations will considerably advance the cause of primary education. The paper earnestly pleads for the introduction of free and compulsory education as indispensible to the removal of the appalling illiteracy and the fulfilment of the national aspirations of Indians.

Bengal Ordinance.

The Pioneer is gratified to learn that the situation in Bengal continues to improve and that the salutary effects of the ordinance are now almost universally admitted. "There is abundant evidence that solid public opinion in Bengal has experienced a feeling of relief since it realized that Government was determined to take the necessary measures to suppress revolutionary conspiracies and the resultant crime."

Indians in Colonies.

Commenting on the passing of the Township Ordinance by the Natal Provincial Council the Leader writes: The South African whites are unyielding in their determination to make the existence of Indians impossible. While organized efforts, by legislation, as well as direct action, are being made to prevent them from obtaining trade licences, the Government of India are supremely disinclined to adopt retaliatory measures demanded by Indian public opinion. Not only this. A contract for the purchase of a large quantity of South African coal has actually been entered into by the Bombay Government. An Indian national Government would have better vindicated the self-respect of the country in the face of the outrageous anti-Indian propaganda which is being carried on in South Africa. The Hamdam protests against the new passport regulations laying down that persons proceeding from India to Japan or any intervening port will have to sign a declaration that they do not intend to go to any of the British colonies. What a sad commentary on the rights enjoyed by subject Indians !

"Complete independence."

The Prabha is wholly opposed to the swaraj scheme of the All-Parties Conference and remarks :—We are inveterate enemies of long-standing imperialism as being detrimental to humanity. The well-being of India lies in determining her destiny outside the British Empire, specially in view of its policy of subjugating and trying to destroy the old and civilised nations of the world. We are votaries of complete independence which is also in keeping with the spirit of the times, when liberty is the order of the day. We shall court death if we fail to strive for the attainment of complete independence, which is so necessary for the perfect evolution of our national genius. To play with the toy of colonial self-government or semi-independence of any sort is beneath our manhood.

The Buddha Gaya Temple.

The Kailash urges the necessity of admitting fifty-two crores of Buddhists into the fold of Hinduism by deciding the question of the Buddha Gaya Temple in their favour. The Bharat Dharma, on the other hand, opposes the suggestion on the ground that the Buddhists are "cow-eaters" and have no right to visit or control the temple which contains many images of Hindu gods. The Lokmat, however, suggests a middle course, saying that the temple should remain in the joint possession of the Hindus and the Buddhists.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina is wroth with those Englishmen who have protested against the stoning to death of certain Qadians in Afghanistan and insists that it is a matter for Muslims alone to decide among themselves. Why were these gentlemen who now seek to make political capital out of the Afghanistan affair silent when the Greeks were perpetrating atrocities on the Turks in Anatolia ? What is to be said of those Muslims who look to non-Muslims for sympathy ? The Mansur appeals for funds for the Central Jammiat Tablighul Islam deputation to save Siam Muslims from gradual absorption in the Buddhist majority. The proposal for the observance of a Tabligh day on the last Friday before Id has met with a chorus of approval in the Muslim press and the Sada-i-Muslim is of opinion that the activities of the day should be prolonged throughout the following period till Idul Fitar. Every occasion for gathering, whether for prayers or sermons, should be utilized to further the cause of Tabligh and special efforts should be made to collect funds. Feeling is gathering in the Muslim press at the alleged inhuman act of certain Hindus of Konch (Jalaun) in sacrificing a Muslim girl at the altar of a goddess. The Medina hopes that the perpetrators of this barbarous crime will be speedily run to justice. Such are the acts of the stalwarts of Sangathan and supporters of Shuddhi due to the secret conspiracies of Lala Lajpat Rai and Malaviyaji. The Al Barid reports that a paper fastened to the arm of the murdered girl bore the threat that the heart of Muslim babies would be offered to the goddess Durga every year.

Restrictions on religious mendicants.

The Haqiqat urges the general adoption of the Madras Corporation's suggestions that beggars should not be allowed to ply their trade at any public place except places of worship and bathing-ghats and that begging by persons suffering from infectious or contagious diseases and by children should be penalised. The Anand Pracharak is alarmed at repeated reports at Muttra of abduction of boys by sadhus and asks Government to legislate with a view to prevent the possession of minor boys by sadhus.

Indian States.

The Shia section of the Muslim press has been particularly agitated over the affront offered to the Zul-Jinah procession by the Kashmir police authorities and endorses the action taken by the All-India Shia Conference in the matter. Its joint secretary writing in the Ittihad urges Muslims to continue to agitate until a satisfactory reply is received from the Kashmir State.

Political propaganda.

The Pratap publishes the second instalment of Lala Har Dayal's article from Sweden in which he ridicules the demand for complete independence and says that the demand of swaraj within the Empire does not amount to sedition under the British law. If the leaders do anything seditious they will be sent to jail, with the result that the Congress will fall into the hands of the Moderates and the national work will suffer. The Bharat Jiwan remarks that the Indians realized the need for swaraj when they found that their rulers who pose everywhere as apostles of justice have crippled India by sucking her blood. India can be freed, says the paper, only if all the political leaders sink their differences, adopt a common programme, and carry it out to the best of their power.

The Kohat affair.

The Surya regards the conviction of Lala Jivan Das as unjust when it had already been established that the riots were caused by the rowdyism of the Musalmans and the weakness of the Government officials and says that the sentence of 18 months' rigorous imprisonment is too severe.

The Near East.

British policy in Palestine continues to be severely criticized in Muslim papers, but without breaking any fresh ground. Referring to the statement made by the Arab delegation to Colonel Amery that the Arabs were much better off under the Turkish régime, and that Britain had not fulfilled her promises to them, the Leader writes:—"They have to thank themselves for the position in which they find themselves. They betrayed Turkey and they find that they are in a worse position than they were in before. Imperialists, when their object is achieved, are apt to forget their promises and the experience of the unsophisticated Arabs is by no means novel. India has had sufficient experience of promises uttered to the ear and broken to the heart." The paper refers to the complaint "in certain well-informed quarters" that many of the Jewish immigrants belong to the dregs of society, and says in conclusion:—"Colonel Amery's reply which was nothing but a rebuff administered to the delegation, is only calculated to increase Arab bitterness and distrust."

Haj pilgrimage.

The Muslim Press remains perturbed over the prospects of the pilgrimage this year, and suspicious of Government attitude towards the question. Referring to the Government's statement regarding Haj the Pioneer says:—"The idea that the Government are placing obstacles in the way of pilgrims is absolutely devoid of foundation. But they are doing no more than their duty in directing attention to the situation which exists. The Government's statement discounts the easy optimism displayed by Sultan Ibn Saud in his letter to Mr. Shaukat Ali." The Hamdam scents some mystery in the broadcasting of discouraging news about the Hedjaz by the Government and says that the same secret diplomacy which made the Arabs and Turks go to war is now busy setting Emir Ali and Ibn Saud by the ears, so that it may be able to reap the harvest when both the combatants are exhausted. In view of the conflicting reports about the situation it advises Muslim Associations to give a lead in the matter of Haj, only after mature deliberation. The Oudh Akhbar suggests that Muslims should either force Ali to evacuate Jeddah or press the Government of India not to interfere with the pilgrimage. The Haqiqat contradicts the news that the Egyptian Government has issued any fatwa for postponing Hoj this year.

Reforms.

Referring to Lord Meston's recent suggestions regarding the Reforms, the Advocate writes:—"The advice contains nothing but germs of poison and if Lord Reading yields to his wishes the result will be that these germs will spread all over the country and they will add to the discontent which is already prevailing. The failure of the Reforms was due to a certain extent to the mischievous financial settlement made by Lord Meston, whose sole motive and aim was to feed Delhi at the expense of other provinces." The Surya says that the obstructionist policy coupled with enjoyment of Council allowances has neither abated the autocracy of the bureaucracy nor created an awakening in the country. This clearly establishes that the Swarajists have failed in their mission. The Vartman exhorts people to lend strong support to the Swarajists and says that the day this party gains strength enough to cripple the bureaucracy, Reforms will be granted to India in big instalments. It adds that the liberals and independents are mere self-seekers who kotow to the bureaucrats and delude the public by their speeches. The Swadhin regrets that the United Provinces Liberal Conference did not attach due importance to the question of uniting all political parties to combat the dirty designs of the bureaucracy to ignore our just aspirations and to exploit the resources of our country. The Bharat Jiwan doubts whether Mr. Das will prove more than a match for the British diplomats, who have extended an "invitation" to him to co-operate with the Government in securing further substantial reforms, specially when the British press is openly opposed to them. The Hamdam deplores the recent controversy between the Swarajists and Independents and points out that they would be better occupied in devising a concerted line of action in view of the ensuing Birkenhead-Reading conversations. The Haqiqat warns Lord Reading that all Indian political parties have condemned the Reforms and says that their demand for provincial autonomy and a further advance towards colonial self-government is quite justified. Diarchy is doomed and Lord Reading is, it is to be hoped, shrewd enough not to thrust something worse on India.

Indianization of services.

Referring to Lord Meston's view that the falling off of British recruits for the Indian Civil Service is due to the extremist attacks on the members of the service, the Leader asks :—"But what about the writings of British die-hards in England and India who depicted the Indian situation in the darkest colours, described India as a "lost dominion" and exaggerated the difficulties of British officers in the services?" Continuing, the paper says that it is not sorry for the alleged disinclination of British youths to seek an Indian career. "We do not want any new British recruits for the Indian Civil Service. If the British Government were less selfish and more faithful to the policy of leading India on to responsible government, they would take the same view." The Mashriq eulogizes the work of the Indian Civil Service and points out that as the continuance of British rule in India is necessary at least as long as the Hindus and Musalmans do not arrive at a mutual understanding the Lee Commission's recommendations should be accepted. The Oudh Punch has a cartoon suggesting that poverty-stricken and toiling India is overburdened with expenditure on the civil service and the army.

The Gurdwara Bill.

Comments on the Gurdwara Bill have so far been favourable. The Leader hopes that the Bill will prove an acceptable measure, become law and be the means of putting an end to the Akali agitation. The Indian Daily Telegraph is of opinion that the framers of the Bill have spared no pains in arriving at a solution of the vexed question, but that, being essentially a compromise measure, the Bill will require considerable improvement. The Pioneer commends the Bill and thinks that the amendments which the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee has proposed bear few signs of a spirit of compromise. "The whole tendency is unreservedly to place the administrative and financial power given under the Bill in the hands of the Central Board of Management, which in its turn would be dominated by the Akal Takht. And experience of the last three or four years indicates too well how those powers might be exercised, to the detriment of the Sikh community as a whole, to the prejudice of the rights of other communities and to the embarrassment of the Government." The Vartman thinks that if the Gurdwara Bill is passed a number of Sikh grievances will be removed.

The Hindu Maha Sabha.

The Abhyudaya writes :—The Hindu Maha Sabha was an unprecedented success. The Hindus should carry out the Sabha's resolutions and proclaim those who oppose them to be the enemies of the community and the country. How long would the Hindus remain oppressed and down-trodden? The Sabha should define Adharma (impiety, unrighteousness) as those acts which strengthen the bonds of our subjection, stand in the way of our social progress, deter the Hindus from claiming equal rights with other communities and injure their interests and those of the country. The Hindi Kesari says that the presidential address is praiseworthy and every word of it reflects the public feeling in the country. It is absolutely necessary for the Hindus to organize themselves in self-defence. The Surya says that Lala Lajpat Rai's address saved the dignity and honour of the Maha Sabha, which had seriously been menaced. The sabha should not dabble in social and religious matters, but concern itself with politics alone.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Pratap says that the contradiction of their threat to the Hindus by Maulana Zafar Ali and Dr. Kitchlew need not cause surprise. These two gentlemen have always been in the habit of changing sides. However, the threats of a foreign invasion must now be stopped. The Turks and the Afghans are not so foolish as to invade India at the instance of a few braggarts, and even if they do so, Indians have nothing to fear, because so long as Englishmen are ruling the country they will not allow any foreigners to enter India, and even when they are gone, Musalmans should remember that no one can govern a nation which is determined to remain free.

The Kohat affair.

Hindu papers are strongly protesting against the conviction of Lala Jivan Das. The Abhyudaya says that by convicting Lala Jivan Das the Government has put a screen on its own weakness in the name of justice. The Hindu Sarvaswa writes :—Responsibility for the bloody Kohat affair does not solely rest with the Muhammadan residents of the town. It also lies on the shoulders of the police and the military of our just Government who have even tried to magnify it. They have acted as devourers and not as protectors because it was due to their indirect support that the hooligans dared to commit violence. The justice administered in the Kohat and Katarpur affairs throws light on the ideal of justice of the ex-Lord Chief Justice of England.

Indians in Colonies.

Referring to the introduction of a Bill regarding the grant or renewal of trading or business licenses to Asiatics in the Transvaal, the Leader writes :—"The Union Government and Parliament are perhaps certain in their minds that the people of India can do nothing effective to prevent their nefarious designs, that the Government of India is neither a national nor a responsible Government and either will not or cannot make an effective protest and that His Majesty's Government will not exercise their powers under the law to prevent acts, legislative or administrative, which are at once both anti-imperial and inhuman. They may be right for the time being in their reading of the situation, but the faith is strong and deep in us that every perpetrator of injustice, be he an individual or a Government, will in the end have to pay dearly for every wrong that is committed. Pride goeth before destruction, and injustice, as the late Lord Salisbury said, will bring the mightiest to ruin."

Muslim affairs.

The Mukhbir-i-Alam sees in the publication of the Rangila Rasul in the Punjab, the Musalmani-ki-Zindgani in the United Provinces and the Muhammad in Gujrat at one and the same time, some secret scheme against the Muslims and appeals to Government for action against these offensive publications. One Shafaqat Ali suggests in the Hamdam that an All-India Muslim Conference should be held at Aligarh on the occasion of the Muslim University Jubilee to combat Hindu Sabha propaganda and to harness the forces of all scattered Muslim organizations. The Medina says that as the religious tenets of Ibn Saud cannot appeal to most Muslims Sheikh Senoussi is the best person to be the Emir of Mecca.

Indian Stores Department.

Commenting on the report of the Indian Stores Department, the Leader suggests that Local Governments should organize their own stores departments and says :—"We write of what we know when we say that it is all in the interests of provinces that they should aim at and realize the largest possible measure of independence of the Central Government and of its departments. We are aware that the Burn Committee recommended the very step which we strongly deprecate." The paper earnestly hopes that the Minister of Industries will not commit himself to the recommendation of the Committee with precipitate haste. In the opinion of the Pioneer the report of the Indian Stores Department shows a very creditable record for an organization which has been built up in a comparatively short time, in the face of opposition even from those who have been urgently pressing on the Government the desirability of encouraging Indian industries.

Rumours of Royal Durbar at Delhi.

The Leader wonders if there is any foundation for the rumour that next year His Majesty the Emperor is to visit India in order formally to declare new Delhi open. The paper sees absolutely no necessity for the occupation of the new capital being heralded by a Royal visit and is of opinion that neither the economic condition of the people of India nor the financial position of the Government of India is such as to warrant the expenditure involved in a Royal visit. Some vernacular papers have also commented to the same effect but in much stronger language.

Posts and Telegraphs Committee.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The report of the Posts and Telegraphs Department Committee will be a disappointment to many. Nor is it likely to arouse any public interest since the committee was precluded from taking into consideration the vested interests of any branch of the service.

The situation in Bengal.

The Bharat Jiwan says that if Mr. C. R. Das succeeds in his tactics to get Mr. Anil Baran Roy and Mr. Satyendra Chandra Mitra re-elected to the Council it will go to show that just as the Government disregards public feeling, the country too has not the least faith in its views and decisions. The Aj says that there is no proof to show that Messrs. Roy and Mitra are revolutionaries or have anything to do with any revolutionary organization. The Deshbandhu knows that the black law under which these men have been convicted is simply meant to stifle the political life of the country. He wants to prevent a bloody revolution in India, but he cannot succeed in doing so, as long as political and economic discontent is not removed from the country.

Religious controversies.

The Success publishes a lengthy article under the heading "Muhammad and Jesus" in which the writer comes to the conclusion that "the divinity of Jesus falls to the ground under all the important tests." With regard to his morals the writer says :—"Here again we are sadly disappointed by the absence of any sound argument in his favour. Speaking candidly and uprightly, not a single excellent moral in Jesus' character can be proved to any satisfaction." (Sic.) The paper concludes by saying that "excellent moral qualities which are a manifestation of the attributes of God are not to be sought for in Jesus, but they were manifested in the holy Prophet of Islam." Commenting on the speech of the Bishop of Chota Nagpur made in Albert Hall in London, the Vartman says :—India does not want Christ. She has produced more wise, pious and kind-hearted rishis than Christ and cannot expect any good from Christianity, when even Europe could not derive any benefit from it.

Presidential Election in Germany.

The election of Marshal Hindenburg as President of the German Republic is generally regarded as prejudicial to the interests of international peace. In the opinion of the Pioneer "the election to the Presidency of a reactionary soldier, who stands for a return to the social conditions of pre-war days can hardly fail to awake feelings of mistrust, even if it does not produce widespread unrest." The Leader thinks that Marshal Hindenburg's disavowal of all warlike intentions cannot get over the fact that he is a strong nationalist and monarchist and that he is a man not of peace but of war. The paper regards his election as an indication of a distinct reaction in Germany brought about by France's own policy. The Aj remarks that the election of General Hindenburg as President of the German Republic would strengthen the Royalists, and render the Kaiser's restoration easy. It would also show that as the result of the unjust policy of the allies Germany has begun to seek the shelter of her generals. It is for the Allies to answer the question whether the recovery of her lost prestige by Germany will lead to war or peace in Europe.

Political propaganda.

The Aj says :—In India individual liberty rests solely on the sweet will of the rulers and so far as anarchy is concerned there is nothing of the sort here. Even the political murderer of India cannot be called an anarchist, because he is the enemy of the present Government only and not of the established order of society. The same paper deplores the action of France in expelling Mr. M. N. Roy and other Indian students at the instance of the British Government and says that if political offenders of one country are not given shelter in another oppression will increase. The Shakti writes :—India wants dominion status because Indians are tired of this Government which is being carried on against their will. Taxation without representation is robbery in the words of Mrs. Besant. The bureaucracy is therefore robbing the people and justifying its action with the help of arbitrary laws. Englishmen are great diplomats and by their crooked policy have even outwitted the educated, industrious and well-organized Germans.

Civil disobedience.

The Aj agrees with Mr. Gandhi's view that the campaign of civil disobedience cannot be launched so long as the educated Indians do not identify themselves with the masses and share their joys and sorrows.

The Vartman sedition case.

Some papers deplore the conviction of Pandit Rama Shanker Avasthi, the editor of the Vartman, even after his frank apology and recommend a reconsideration of his case by Government. The Aj says that mercy would have raised Government and lowered the editor at the same time in public estimation.

Corruption in offices.

Some papers call attention to corruption in courts and offices and urge the Government to adopt stringent measures to remove the evil. The Zul Qarnain recalls the days of Sir Antony MacDonnell when a few facilities to complainants had almost stamped out bribery and is sure that if Government again adopts a similar attitude there would be more prosecutions and with better results.

Local Boards.

The Mashriq complains that inexperienced, incompetent and begotted members and chairmen of local boards are widening the gulf between the two communities and the Government is aggravating its blunder in granting self-government to local bodies, by adopting a policy of laissez faire towards them. A confidential enquiry by a trusted and impartial official will reveal how the majority is treating the minority in the local boards in these provinces.

Administration of justice.

The Oudh Akhbar cites a case from Rae Bareli in which owing to the failure of the Deputy Commissioner to conform to the technicalities of the law an accused was acquitted by two successive courts of appeal and urges that as such mistakes frequently involve huge waste of public money Government should devise measures to prevent them. Referring to the infliction of a capital sentence by the Allahabad High Court in a case of appeal by Government against acquittal and that also simply on the basis of circumstantial evidence the paper says that such severity is not justifiable when direct evidence is wanting.

Government pensioners.

The Dilchasp urges Government to give their best attention to the demands of pensioners who are going to hold a conference with the object of securing an enhancement in their pensions and the provision of a waiting room especially reserved for them in the treasury office.

Abolition of beggary.

The Muslim press has noticed with satisfaction the recent abolition of beggary in Afghanistan and the Rahnuma advises the British Government to follow suit.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 9TH MAY, 1925.

The Near East.

The Leader strongly condemns the bombing of recalcitrant tribes in Iraq and says:—"However bad the administration of the Turks in Mesopotamia might have been, its people were not subjected to the horrors of bombing from the air. No Government which claims to be mighty and civilized should resort to such methods, if it at all cares for its reputation." Referring to the interview granted by Colonel Amery to a Press representative at Baghdad, the Hamdam says that all the avenues of progress in Mesopotamia, outlined by the Colonial Secretary, will make for the profit of British capitalists alone and will not benefit the Arabs at all. The wealth of the Arabs will be drained, and they will lose their love of liberty and begin like Indians to look to service as their sole ideal in life.

Haj.

The Haj question continues to be discussed with anxious concern by the Muslim press which is puzzled over the discrepancies between Ibn Saud's announcements and the Government of India's communiqués. The Sada-i-Muslim asks hajis to wait till a detailed enquiry has been made by the Central Khilafat Committee. The Hamdam urges Government to try and bring about a truce between Emir Ali and Ibn Saud for the haj season and failing that to arrange with the shipping companies for the safe conveyance of the pilgrims to the newly suggested ports. While expressing satisfaction at Government's communiqué the Sach urges the Central Khilafat Committee to persuade the Ghazi or Shuster shipping company to take the hajis to the new ports. The Medina is of opinion that Ibn Saud's assurances should be trusted and that the appeals of the Meccans for help should be responded to, but it warns Muslim leaders against proferring any advice on the question of pilgrimage, as they would be laying themselves open to blame, if any haji suffered any inconvenience. The Hamdam advises Indian Muslims to proceed on haj this year only if they have sufficient money and provisions. The Haqiqat condemns Mr. Muhammad Ali's vigorous propaganda in favour of haj this year and of the reports of excellent arrangements said to have been made by Ibn Saud and wonders whether he wants to lead Indian Muslims into another hijrat folly.

Election of Marshal Hindenburg.

The election of Marshal Hindenburg is generally attributed to the harsh treatment of the Allies towards Germany and is regarded as a prelude to another great war. The Advocate writes: "Germany was badly in need of a ruler who would make the nation united, respected and prosperous, and she has at last been able to find out a man who will carry out their wishes." The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: "We have no doubt that the new German President who has the rare capacity of facing facts, will rouse the German people to accomplish the great task of purchasing their freedom from the burdens of the war. If nothing else, Marshal von Hindenburg's election is the outcome of the blood-sucking policy of Poincaire and the Allies after the war." The Anand says that the election of Marshal Hindenburg has discomfited the Allies, but the existence of a powerful state in Europe, far from being detrimental, will prove beneficial to the interests of Indians, because for fear of such a state people will look up to us for help and will not deem it advisable to accord us Nadirshahi treatment. The Bharat Jiwan sees in Marshal Hindenburg's election the vision of a very terrible war in Europe, which would scare out of their wits all those powers which are puffed up with pride. Up to this time these powers used to exhibit their exploits at the expense of subject nations, but the day is not far off when they will come to a curious pass by fighting among themselves. The Bhut remarks that Germany has been compelled by the injustices and iniquities of the Allies to elect the Marshal as President. The Oudh Akhbar says that the election of Marshal Hindenburg will make another world war a certainty if the Allies continue to turn a deaf ear to Germany's reasonable grievances.

European situation.

The Medina calls attention to the race for armaments and territories and the general atmosphere of distrust and jealousy in Europe and predicts another world war in the near future. Coloured Asia is impatient to rise to a man against white imperialism. Labour is pitted against Capital and Socialism also is straining at its leash to get to grips with imperialism. Moreover, this conflict extends into cultural and moral realms. Conflict between British and French policy in Germany and Arabia will not permit the two countries to range themselves on the same side. Marshal Hindenburg's election strengthens the expectation that Germany will side with Russia and Japan, but Italy is a dark horse and will be guided by the exigencies of the moment.

The Gurdwara Bill.

The Gurdwara Bill is generally welcomed, but the release of Akali prisoners is considered to be essential for the final solution of the problem. Some papers also urge a consideration of the interests of the Udasis. The Pioneer calls attention to the protest against the Bill made at a meeting of Udasis held at Allahabad and says: "The Bill is neither perfect nor free from the imputation so forcibly made by the Udasis. It goes almost to extreme lengths in meeting the demands of the Akalis." The Surya urges that Sanatanists should also be represented in the management committee which is going to be formed under the new Gurdwara legislation, as they also have vested interests in the Gurdwaras. The Anand appeals to the Government to see that the new Gurdwara Bill does not, in any way, injure the interests of the poor Udasis. The Abhyudaya says that the Government would commit a folly and a great political blunder, if it fails to release the Akali prisoners on the occasion of the consideration of the Gurdwara Bill. The Aj welcomes the Bill and remarks that it would inaugurate a new era in the constitution of the religious institutions of India. The Medina welcomes the Bill and says that it would have been much better if it had come earlier as so many Akali lives would have been saved. Government would be well advised to arrive at an understanding with the Akalis about the Nabha question also. The Haqiqat regards the Bill as a complete triumph for the Akalis and appeals to Government to show due regard for other Sikh sects also.

Treatment of Akali prisoners.

The Abhyudaya stresses the necessity for the appointment of an impartial committee to inquire into the allegations regarding the perpetration of atrocities on Akali prisoners in the Nabha jail and the publication of its findings at an early date. If Government fails to do so unrest will further spread among the people and their faith in its sense of justice will decline, still more. Some other papers also write to the same effect.

The Faridpur Conference.

Mr. C. R. Das's presidential address at the Faridpur Conference has, on the whole, been favourably received and the hope is expressed that all the parties concerned will respond to the spirit of conciliation and co-operation evinced in it. The Leader writes: "The address is remarkable because it makes a decided departure, alike in substance and in the tone, from non-co-operation and Swarajist deliverances and does not apotheosize destruction as such even as a necessary prelude to future construction." The paper finds in this hopeful elements of an end of political divisions and invites Mr. Das and the leaders of other parties to take the next step, so that the effort in the direction of reunion which was commenced in 1924, may be brought to a success in the present year. In the opinion of the Pioneer, each time Mr. Das makes a 'pronouncement' his incapacity for political leadership is more pitilessly exposed. Emphasizing the importance of the Conference, the Indian Daily Telegraph says that Mr. Das has rendered a real service to the country by his remarkable utterance. "What is wanted now is not merely a united front, but also a strong front and this should not be lost sight of in any effort to achieve the former. Let us hope that all the political parties of India will sink their differences in the present crisis to fight the common enemy and that Faridpur will prove to be a happy landmark in the history of India." The Advocate writes:—We have to admit candidly that the address appears to have been delivered by a moderate leader and not by a Swarajist. The terms of Mr. Das are very moderate and the Government should co-operate with him by accepting them wholesale and it should not lose this golden opportunity, otherwise it will have nothing but repentance later on. The Aj agrees with the remarks of Mr. C. R. Das regarding the suppression of political crimes and conspiracies, but regrets that he has defined his goal to be swaraj within the Empire. It is not possible for Indians to co-operate with the Government without being insulted and the Government are not going to agree to the conditions imposed by Mr. Das. The Vartman says that the Deshbandhu has thoroughly refuted the charges of those Europeans and Anglo-Indians who tried to get him arrested. The paper urges every lover of India to take the views of Mr. Das to heart and try to translate them into action. The Haqiqat hopes that the hand of fellowship and good-will extended by Mr. Das will be clasped by the authorities in India and England and a calm atmosphere will thus be secured, otherwise if the conflict between the Swaraj party and Government takes a bitter turn the advice of Mr. Das will no longer be heeded by the revolutionaries. The Hamdam is of opinion that every sensible person will acknowledge the reasonableness of Mr. Das's terms for honourable co-operation and hopes that the Government will feel no hesitation in reaffirming the royal announcement of 1919. It is glad to note that Mr. Das is prepared to revert to the original programme of non-violent non-co-operation if his demands are rejected.

Indianization of services.

Commenting on the appointment of Mr. Kichlu as officiating Director of Public Instruction, the Leader writes:—"That after so very many years of British rule and English education, that ninety-two years after the Charter Act of 1833 and sixty-seven years after the Royal Proclamation of 1858, the King's Indian subjects have got to rejoice at the temporary appointment, for the first time, of an eminent Indian to be the head of the education department is a grave reflection upon the policy followed by the Government in the matter of the appointment of Indians to high office. That even now there should have been difficulties and uncertainty for several months about this appointment, shows that the old spirit is not yet dead and that whatever else the British may do they will be extremely reluctant to surrender places of power and profit. It is a warning to our countrymen that their struggle is not yet over, that they have still to fight hard for even ordinary justice." In a note commenting on the Secretary of State's acceptance of another batch of the Lee Commission recommendations affecting "British service interests" the paper writes:— "After all, the fact is that the mis-called services are the real masters of the situation and India exists for them." The Haqiqat protests indignantly against the total exclusion of Indians from all posts of political agents and residents and says that this is specially reprehensible when there is no dearth of indigenous talent which has proved its fitness in such offices as those of Governors and Members of Executive Councils. Will some Hon'ble Member raise the question in the Assembly or the Council of State and inquire of Government what national failing stands in the way of the employment of Indians in these posts"?

Hindu organization.

The Pratap publishes the 4th instalment of an article from Lala Har Dayal (Sweden) in which he says that the Hindu-Muslim problem can be solved only if both the communities organize themselves separately and the Hindus make themselves so strong that the Musalmans may be obliged to court their friendship and this they will do only when they find that the Hindus are about to take Swaraj single-handed. The sentiments of Musalmans will not change so long as they feel that they are a separate entity. It would, therefore, be necessary that the Musalmans should discard their Arabic names, give up their alien sympathies, call themselves Muhammadi Hindus and form themselves into a section of the Hindu community like the Jains and Sikhs. The article concludes with an exhortation to the Hindu youths to sacrifice themselves in furthering the cause of Swaraj and liberate their brethren from serfdom. The Abhyudaya also publishes an article by Lala Har Dayal, in which he reiterates his view that the Hindus should organize themselves, leaving the Muhammadans severely alone. In his opinion Hindu organization is the road to Swaraj. Hindu-Muslim unity is not absolutely necessary for the attainment of Swaraj. Even if two crores of Hindus become true heroes and patriots after organizing themselves, the attainment of Swaraj will become possible. Swaraj should be adopted as the goal of the Hindu Maha Sabha, which should always hold its sessions in Benares. The Hindu Sarvaswa publishes a poem on the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements which begins with the lines—

O Companion, let us convey to the world the message of truth.
Let us acquaint the polytheists of the world with the Vedic religion.
Let us give the message of destruction to the thorns and thistles of Ka'ba,
Let us make it the (holy) fire-place by means of "sacrifices" and "havans."

The Gorakshan also publishes a poem on Hindu Sangathan in which among others the following lines occur :—

If twenty crores of Hindus had sunk their differences and become united,
They would have become invincible and the oppressors would have been struck with terror . . .
A handful of oppressors would not have been able to set the people by the ear . . .
If twenty-two crores of Hindus had become one,
No one would have dared to cast an evil eye at our chaste women and to rob us of our property.

The Medina ridicules Lala Har Dayal's suggestion that Muslims should be Hinduized and says that the Hindus themselves are hopelessly split up by caste distinctions and do not at all possess any capacity for national solidarity. Of course, if Hindus accept Islam, all caste distinctions will be levelled and this is bound to happen in due course.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Muslim press is greatly excited over the report of the sacrifice of a Muhammadan girl in Konch (Jalaun) and is making impassioned appeals to the leaders of the community to adopt necessary measures for saving their co-religionists from such cruelty at the hands of Hindus. The Anand doubts the truth of this report. The Mashriq wonders why Government is silent even after this worst phase of the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements. The Pratap agrees with Mr. Kitchlew that sangathan of the Hindu community must not be based on hatred of the Musalmans, but says that there is a party among the Musalmans whose members range from theologians like Hasan Nizami to a common grave-worshipping water-carrier—the one object of whose life is to convert by fair means or foul, at least one infidel each. If the papers like the Tanzim do not allow themselves to be carried away by their religious fervour in supporting the actions of Muhammadan badmashes who abduct Hindu women and children, the estrangement between the two communities will not be aggravated. Al Bashir discusses "the uniformly unpractical and futile nature of Mr. Gandhi's programmes" and says that instead of fighting shy of the task of reuniting Hindus and Muslims he should have probed the causes of the ever-growing estrangement between the two communities and tried to remove them. Who does not know that the seeds of inter-communal discord are sown in the tender minds of school and college boys by the present day text-books of history? And efforts should have been made to counteract this insidious but fatal propaganda. Mr. Gandhi has instead encouraged the forces of disunion by eulogizing men like Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. The Sada-i-Muslim inveighs against the publication of an offensive book entitled "Muhammad" at Ahmedabad and points out that it was the excitement caused among Muslims by a similar publication that led to the Kohat trouble. If Hindus do not exercise restraint in future and Government do not take action, it would bode ill for the peace of the country. The Medina complains of the proselytizing activities of Hindu officials in the Hamirpur district and observes that such oppressors of the Muslim minority will never flourish. The Hamdam also appeals to Government to protect Bundelkhand Muslims in general and Hamirpur Muslims in particular, from the Hindu officials and the Hindu public. The Muslim minority is in a parlous plight there.

Muslim affairs.

The Haqiqat appeals to His Excellency Sir William Marris to exercise clemency in the case of the two Muslim convicts under sentence of death in the Shahjahanpur riot case, as they acted under the influence of religious passion. Al Bashir resents the action of the Education Minister in appointing a single committee to enquire into the primary education of both Muslims and the depressed classes and enquires whether Muslims have now fallen so low as to be classed with the untouchables. It urges a boycott of this committee and an insistence on Muslim educational demands in the local Legislative Council until they are conceded.

Local Self-Government.

The Indian Daily Telegraph takes strong exception to the Local Government's suggestion that local bodies should adopt a rigorous policy of economy accompanied by fearless taxation and says: "The remedy lies in dispensing with a top-heavy administration, in substantial retrenchment in the Army, the Police, and the Civil Service, and in providing the local bodies with the necessary funds out of the treasury." The Mansur points out that matters relating to schools, pounds and slaughter-houses are a constant source of friction between Hindus and Muslims and urges that the District Boards Act should be so amended as to transfer the control of schools, pounds and slaughter-houses situated in notified areas and town areas from District Boards to the committees of those areas, as Muslims are better represented in those committees. The Nizam-i-Alam considers the new tax on circumstances and property proposed by the Cawnpore District Board as altogether unjustified and says that with a little care much economy in the present expenditure is possible. The Oudh Akhbar regards as impracticable the resolution of the Jhansi Municial Board regarding the extension of the franchise to all adults in the Municipal area and says that if it is accepted by Government the difficulties of election will be very much enhanced. The Nizam-i-Alam complains that Muslim muhallas are specially selected for the operations of Improvement Trusts and that sometimes lands of which Muslims have been dispossessed are given to Hindus for cultivation.

Political propaganda.

The Hindu Sarvaswa remarks that liberty being the birth-right of man, Indians should strive to attain it with zeal and love after making themselves strong. They should ply the disc of the spinning-wheel and, humiliating the selfish, attain liberty, the greatest bliss on earth. The same paper refers to the statement of the Colonial Secretary on the basis of the attack of the Arabs on Mr. Balfour in Palestine, to the effect that the Arabs were now fit for independence and remarks that it shows that the nation which is strong and is ever ready to destroy those who deprive it of its liberty is fit to be independent. But the Indians are such a people that if one were to slap them on one cheek they would offer the other cheek also to be slapped.

The Vartman and Swadesh sedition cases.

The Surya says that when Pandit Rama Shankar Awasthi had expressed regret for his guilt the Government should have let him off with a nominal sentence. The magistrate has not raised the dignity of the court by passing a severe sentence. The Pratap commenting on certain remarks in the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in rejecting the appeal of Pandit Dasrath Prasad Dwivedi of the Swadesh newspaper sarcastically says that it was very kind of God that even after the publication of the horrible poem the district of Gorakhpur remained as it was, that not even a mouse was killed at Chauri Chaura and that the Hindus and Muhammadans did not lose their heads on the occasion of the Dasehra.

Reforms.

The Swadhin opines that diarchy is sure to end now that even civilians like Sir William Marris are opposed to it. Full provincial autonomy alone can reform the present system of administration. The Government also know that this system is defective, but our white lords are only trying to defer the realization of our hopes.

Indian States.

The Hamdam strongly condemns the proposal to appoint a barrister from England as Diwan of Travancore and points out that his ignorance of local customs and sentiments will stand in the way of his arriving at correct decisions. It is in Indian States alone that Indians have a fair and full field for their abilities. The Mashriq regards as unfair the refusal of Government to restore Berar even after the Nizam's services during the great war and his recent remission of ten lakh pounds advanced as a loan to the Government of India. Government's attitude will be very much regretted by all the Indian Chiefs.

The North-Western Railway strike.

The Medina complains that the railway authorities while always anxious to raise fares never care to concede the just demands of their low-paid employés. Indian labour has a better claim than British capital over Indian railway earnings, and it is a pity that hungry Indians are flocking to act as strike-breakers and thus prolonging the agony of the struggle.

Foreign affairs.

Commenting on M. Painleve's statement foreshadowing a decisive blow on the Riffs, the Leader writes :—"The world will probably not even hear harrowing details of this blood and iron policy if it comes to be adopted. The ways of imperialism are everywhere the same." The Haqiqat apprehends that the relations between the Government of India and Afghanistan are not what they appear to be and says that one of the most important objects of Lord Reading's visit to England is the settlement of this thorny frontier question. The conclusion of a military alliance between Russia and Japan has not only induced the Conservative Government to re-start the suspended work on the Singapore naval base but also to court the friendship of the Muslim countries intervening between Russia and India and specially that of the buffer state of Afghanistan. The Mansur says that the Arab deputation to Colonel Amery was right in expressing dissatisfaction with British policy in Palestine. The British have failed to secure the co-operation of the Arabs, as the promises made to them during the war have not been redeemed. Britain is bent upon settling Jews in spite of the protests of the Arabs and the rise in prices. The Najat thinks that the combination of France with Spain against the Riffs is the consequence of the consultations among the European Powers at Paris and says that Europe finishing its land-grabbing activities in Asia, has now turned its attention to Africa. This may appear painful to Muslims but the more they are oppressed the sooner will they awaken. The paper hopes for a speedy end of the oppression on Muslims in Africa as was the case in Anatolia.

Haj.

In view of the conflicting reports about the conditions in the Hedjaz there is some divergence of opinion regarding the advisability of haj pilgrimage this year. The Pioneer finds it difficult to believe that the steps taken in the Hedjaz to facilitate the progress of the pilgrims to their destination are likely to eliminate risks of a serious character. A writer in the Hamdam wonders why the politically-minded ulema are insisting on the performance of haj this year when the journey is so risky. Indian Muslims should beware of Nejdian propaganda and should not be misled by their leaders into encountering the sufferings of another hijrat. Another writer suggests that the supporters of Ibn Saud and Emir Ali are pursuing conflicting propaganda in regard to the haj pilgrimage and urges Government to send a deputation to the Hedjaz to report on the situation there. The Haqiqat while condemning propaganda to induce Indian Muslims to proceed on haj this year urges Government to provide ships for the Chinese and Bokharan hajis lying at Bombay prepared to brave all the perils of the journey. The Hind-i-Jadid gives more credence to Ibn Saud's pronouncements and urges Muslims to flock to Mecca in the performance of their pious duty. The Sada-i-Muslim is grieved at the deplorable plight of the inhabitants of Mecca as revealed in the manifesto issued by 60 ulema of that place and appeals to Indian Muslims to proceed on haj in even larger numbers to succour the suffering inhabitants. Al Barid holds Government responsible for all complications in the haj situation. Government could easily induce its protégé Emir Ali to conclude a temporary truce but its negligence in this direction has strengthened the suspicion that it is supporting Ali. Ibn Saud stands surety for the protection of the life and property of the pilgrims after landing and Government also should soon publish a communiqué which might pacify the feelings of intending pilgrims. The Mansur attaches very little value to the objections raised by Government regarding lack of railway and telegraphic facilities at the ports suggested by Ibn Saud and says that if Government is at all serious it can with its wider resources easily arrange for every comfort of the hajis.

The Faridpur Conference.

In the opinion of the Leader the Faridpur Conference was more or less of a fiasco. "The meagre attendance at the Conference and the dissensions which broke out in the subjects committee proclaimed that Mr. Das's days as a popular leader are possibly nearing the end." The paper then refers to forces of disintegration and indications of serious disagreements in the swaraj party and says:—"All this may render the path of the bureaucracy easier for the time being in Bengal. But the fact that the manifestation of a spirit of restraint and reconciliation on the part of leaders who the other day were the idols of the people when they had adopted an irreconcilable attitude, has been followed by their loss of influence possesses a significance of its own and conveys a lesson which should not be ignored by British statesmen. The path of wisdom lies in the British Government utilising the temporary lull in evolving a progressive scheme of constitutional reform so that the forces of gathering discontent may not materialize." The Patriot concurs with Mr. Das's view that national civil disobedience should be adopted as a last resort but thinks that the khaddar and charkha programme alone is not sufficient to prepare the nation for it. The paper is of opinion that attention should be paid to secure sufficient sinews of war and to pay the volunteers who stand in need of money. The Aj wonders if it is possible for the British statesmen to treat the whites and the non-whites on an equal footing as urged by Mr. C. R. Das and remarks that if this becomes possible Indians will not only co-operate but will also gladly make all possible sacrifices for such a federation of states. The Abhyudaya holds that the address is a fine model of true politics and patriotism. Mr. Das has indicated to the country a royal road towards political advance at a critical juncture. If the Government and the Liberals do not agree to his reasonable proposals, it will mean that they want unrest, quarrels and passive resistance in the country, for which they alone and not Mr. Das will be to blame. The Bhavishya infers from the address that henceforward the chief leaders of the non-co-operation movement will co-qperate with the Government on certain conditions. If it acts wisely and arrives at an understanding with the Mahatmaji and the Deshbandhu the era of constitutional agitation will be resumed in the country. The Pratap thinks that the address mirrors the policy of the swaraj party. The paper is surprised that the Deshbandhu is noticing a change in the hearts of the rulers when even to-day the same haughtiness, audacity, coldness and severity mark their mentality as twenty years back. It adds that it is a part of the British policy to milch India and make the services secure for British lads. The British Empire which is strengthened by brute force does not stand in need of the moral support of Mr. Das and the subject peoples of India. We do not see any justification for fixing the political ideal of the country. This is not practical wisdom but the result of over-exultation at being patted on the back. Mr. Das is now tired of battle and is looking out for an easier course. The Medina is deeply disappointed at Mr. Das's "vague and halting" address and says that by taking the initiative in the matter of peace overtures, Mr. Das is only acknowledging defeat and ruining the morale of his army. It is a mistake to expect anything from the Conservative Government in England.

Maharashtra Provincial Conference.

The Leader calls special attention to the resolution of the Maharashtra Provincial Conference held at Satara condemning the yarn franchise and says that the views expressed on this question at the Conference are shared by the bulk of the Swarajists in other provinces also. The paper thinks that "the ovation given to Dr. Besant and the blessings bestowed on her scheme of self-government are significant of the change that has taken place—a change which may facilitate the regrouping of political forces in the country in the near future." In another article the paper says:—"The Satara conference marked a further stage in the movement of political thought towards rationalism . . . In so far as the Maharashtra Swarajists are trying to undo the mistakes of the past and to return to the well-tried original policy of the Congress they deserve to be congratulated . . . We hope these leaders will not rest content with the good work they have done at Satara but will persist in the effort to bring about unity of all parties in the Congress by suitably modifying its creed, constitution and policy. Satara has given a good lead which the Swarajists in other parts of the country cannot do better than follow."

The Gurdwara Bill.

The Aj welcomes the introduction of the Gurdwara Bill specially as it will serve as an eye-opener to the followers of other creeds and expresses the hope that the Government will everywhere uphold the principle that the property endowed to temples and monastries belongs to the members of the particular sect and that the Mahants are merely its trustees. The paper urges that a similar legislation is needed for reforming and controlling the administration of all other religious institutions throughout the country. The Abhaya, on the other hand, disapproves of the Bill on the ground that it curtails the liberty of the Sikhs by giving power to the Government to interfere in their affairs and scents in it the official policy of conciliating the Sikhs by giving them false hopes. The paper apprehends that if the Bill is passed the Sikhs will retire from the political field. The Vartman urges that the Udasis, Nirmalas and other sects also should act with the same magnanimity as has been evinced by the Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee in accepting the Bill after making so many sacrifices in reforming the gurdwaras which the Mahants had turned into hell by indulging in prostitution and other vices. The Hindustani regards the Bill as a grave attack on the proprietary and religious rights of Udasis and other sects. Government could placate the Akalis without hurting the feelings of others by simply reinstating the Maharaja of Nabha. It apprehends serious trouble on account of this Bill specially in view of the recent growth of iconoclastic tendencies among the Akalis and hopes that the Governor of the Punjab will refuse his assent to the Bill.

Indians in Burma.

Commenting on the official report of the debate in the Burma Legislative Council on the Burma Tax on Sea Passengers' Bill, the Leader says that reason and justice were on the side of Indians and that the position of the Government was untenable and inconsistent. Continuing, the paper says:—"Any one who carefully and dispassionately reads the debate can come to no other conclusion than that the measure is directed against Indians and is the result of an anti-Indian policy which is being steadily pursued in Burma. Unless the public voice is raised against this pernicious policy we may have another South Africa nearer home." In another note the paper expresses the view that beginning with the first Burmese war up till now India has received no benefit from the annexation of Burma but has had, on the other hand, to pay for it. Proceeding, it says: "If we are right in thinking that Burma has cost a good round sum to the Indian tax-payer, a just financial reparation must be an essential part of any political operation involving the separation of Burma. Meanwhile, it is strange to us that the Government of India, which should be a unifying force as between one part of the country and another, should consent to the anti-Indian legislation of the Burma Government." The Indian Daily Telegraph is of opinion that the imposition of the tax on persons entering Burma by sea militates against all fundamental canons of taxation and will prove detrimental to the growth and well-being of Burma itself.

Reforms.

Vernacular papers generally remain pessimistic with regard to the prospects of obtaining further reforms as a result of negotiations between the leaders of the swaraj party and the representatives of the Government and emphasize the need of unity among the various political parties in India in order to win self-government. The Bhavishya says that if Mr. C. R. Das's offer of accepting swaraj within the British Empire is only a political move and has been made merely by way of a reply to Lord Birkenhead we have nothing in particular to urge against it but our final goal should be complete independence. In the existing situation of the country, however, colonial self-government or even something less should satisfy us and should be accepted by us. The Abhyudaya does not expect that anything good for India will come out of the consultations between the Secretary of State and Lord Reading, although they will surely benefit "the celestial bureaucracy" to the greatest possible extent. Before the year 1929 or so long as the present Cabinet remains in power we can entertain no hopes, but if a war breaks out in Europe, or in the Pacific ocean, which is not an impossibility, England will fold hands, concede reforms and grant rights to Indians. The Vartman appreciates the recent resolution of the Independent Labour party expressing sympathy with the political aspirations of Indian labour and appealing to the British Government to give generous consideration to Mr. C. R. Das's manifesto, but opines that it is a useless recommendation, for Indians can attain swaraj only by self-help. The Aj remarks that Mrs. Besant's Commonwealth of India Bill has no more value than a petition and that it is sure to be rejected, because England cannot afford to lose the gain which she is making by her connection with India. The British will grant swaraj to India only when they are constrained to do so and Indians can exert pressure on them only by practising non-violent non-co-operation. The Shakti says that the rumour that Lord Reading will come back with some more reforms is a mere creation of the imagination of the Anglo-Indian papers. Lord Reading has proved himself to be a great cunning and astute diplomat and it is quite impossible for him to do any good to India. Another rumour about him is that he will get an extension of about two years and try to strengthen the foundation of the Empire by holding a new Durbar at Delhi, imposing fresh taxes and tightening the "steel frame." This is possible if Lord Reading succeeds in his diplomacy. We have seen few astute politicians like him and there is little wonder if he succeeds in ensnaring Birkenhead and other politicians and returns to India. We, however, pray God to send frank and straightforward men like Dyer, O'Dwyer and Sydenham but not a tiger in the skin of a cow like Lord Reading. It is better to have a number of Jallianwala Baghs than a single Kohat affair. But whoever comes, the near future of India is shrouded in gloom and so long as the Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsis, Christians, Sikhs and Jains do not offer united a prayer for the emancipation of their motherland it would continue to be so. The Najat observes that the Government of India is too much a slave to prestige to effect any reforms without outside pressure. The Viceroy clearly realises all the defects of the existing administrative machinery but he cannot take any initiative and has to act according to the orders of his masters in England. It is a pity that these European officials have no regard for the country which feeds them. The real reason for this indifference of Government is our mutual discord and we should close our ranks if we want to extort any concessions from this unwilling administration. The Medina refers to Lord Birkenhead's observation that India was not yet advanced enough for full parliamentary government of the English type and points out that political privileges were never conceded to Englishmen but were always wrested by them. Concessions were wrung from Henry VIII as an autocrat like him would never care to grant them. It was Cromwell's iron strength which led to the execution of Charles I. India also would get political power unasked when it develops such strength. For the while Lord Birkenhead is right as the two arms of the country are battling against each other, but it must be borne in mind that the soul has begun to realise the harm of this internecine struggle. In another article referring to the resolution passed by the Third International regarding propaganda in favour of Indian independence, the paper points out that many Indian nationalists are tending towards Bolshevism because of British injustice and urges Lord Reading to return with a proper policy from England if he does not want to see the tide of Bolshevism rolling up the Attock and the Ganges.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Bharat Dharm urges Hindus to sink their internal differences and unite to combat the proselytizing activities of Muhammadans and Christians. The strong organization of the missionary institutions shows that the Christians are doing more harm to the Hindus than the Muhammadans. The same paper in another article says that formerly the proselytizing activities of Muhammadans which consisted in intimidating, seducing and deceiving the Hindus were confined to individuals, but now they are being conducted in an organized form under the patronage of wealthy Muhammadans and ruling chiefs. When Jiwan Das of Kohat published a booklet which probably contained an attack on Islam there was a riot and the Muhammadans wrought ruin and destruction among the Hindus and the booklet was burnt and its author was sent to jail but the Agha Khani literature, which is deluding, injurious and defamatory to the Hindus is being sold broadcast and neither the attention of the Hindus is turned towards it nor do the Government stop its circulation. The Pratap publishes a letter from Devi Datt Dwivedi who invites attention to the statements of Khwaja Hasan Nizami and Muhammad Rauf regarding the special arrangements made in big towns for the propagation of Islam among Hindu boys, girls, men and women and appeals to the Khwaja and other Muhammadans to say their prayers in Hindi as the Turks do in the Turkish language and to fight for the freedom of India as Indians. The Abhyudaya exhorts its readers to convey the message of the Hindu Maha Sahba to Hindus in every nook and corner of India, pointing out that the delay in the organization of the Hindus means the postponement of the day of swaraj and liberty in the country. Commenting on the recent speeches of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Lala Lajpat Rai the Paigham opines that matters have now reached a climax and there is no alternative for Muslims but to give up the idea of swaraj and self-government and to devote their entire energy to the organization of their community and to the improvement of their financial and educational condition. The Hamdam contrasts the atmosphere of communal suspicion and distrust pervading the Calcutta session of the Hindu Maha Sabha with the solicitude of the Bengal Muslim conference at Faridpur for Hindu-Muslim unity as the only road to swaraj. Mr. Gandhi can now see which community is barring the way to Indian national progress. The Awaz suggests to the Hindus that the best way to stop cow-killing would be to start pig slaughter-houses to which the Government, being Christian, cannot object. The Nizam-i-Alam protests against Mr. Malaviya's statement that Jiwan Das's pamphlet published at Kohat was in reply to a certain pamphlet published by Muslims containing objectionable attacks on Lord Krishna and challenges him to produce even a single copy of the alleged publication. The Arya Musafir has an article by one Har Dayal Singh on the life of the Prophet Muhammad in which he says that the deeds of the Prophet were those of an uneducated and misguided boy and that he was declared to be an able and intelligent man because of a rich woman being enamoured of him. The Prophet removed idols so that all may come to Ka'aba and thus swell his income. The Sada-i-Muslim publishes a note from Maulana Hasan Nizami who urges the Muslim press to make an emphatic protest against the Tej which has used defamatory language in respect of Her Highness the Begam of Bhopal.

N.-W. Railway strike.

Newspapers are strongly espousing the cause of the strikers and holding the railway authorities responsible for protracting the struggle by the adoption of a harsh and unreasonable attitude. The Leader is of opinion that there are substantial grievances at the bottom of the strike and that the railway authorities are not in a conciliatory mood. It goes on to say:—"The public are entitled to know authoritatively the details of the issues involved and the reasons which prevent the railway authorities from opening negotiations on the basis of the terms that might have been offered by the strikers. And what has the Railway Board been doing to bring about a termination of the strike which, in addition to causing immense hardship to the workers, is also causing loss and inconvenience to the public?" The Aj says that it is the duty of every Indian to help the strikers. The fact that such a big strike took place on the dismissal of a petty railway employee shows that the grievances of the railway employees are of long-standing and that the railway authorities want to coerce them in every way and are not prepared to listen even to their pettiest complaints. The salaries of employees are quite inadequate as the cost of living has risen so high. They have no other course left open but to continue the strike as the authorities do not want to come to terms with them.

Indians in Colonies.

The Advocate finds from the report of the Imperial Citizenship Association that the position of Indians in the Colonies, especially in South Africa, is becoming worse day by day and says:—"We should make a vigorous campaign to establish our rights and privileges in British Colonies as we also form part and parcel of the British Empire and if we fail to do so, we should make the same sort of legislation against them and unless we do so we should never hope for any good treatment from them." Deploring the downfall of General Smuts the Aj says that his successor, General Hertzog, is a worse enemy of India. With the election of this General our compatriots in South Africa have fallen from the frying pan into the fire. We feel sorry at the fall of General Smuts as a brave man feels for his brave enemy, but on account of the meanness with which the new Government is attacking our brethren we cannot regard General Hertzog even as a brave enemy.

The next war.

Some vernacular papers are indulging in speculations regarding the prospects of another world-war. In a signed article in the Abhyudaya, the editor, Pandit Krishna Kant Malaviya, predicts another great war in the near future as, in his opinion, Japan cannot afford to wait for the establishment of the Singapore base which will weaken her own position as against that of the United States, which will have Britain as their ally. He thinks that this war will decide as to whether Asia or Europe will dominate the world in future. The election of Marshal Von Hindenburg, the ascendancy of militarism and imperialism in Europe after the last great war and the construction of the Singapore naval base are unmistakble portents of the outbreak of another world-war. The great future of Asia is assured but it is for the Asiatics themselves to take advantage of the tide in the affairs of humanity. The Medina predicts a revolt by China and Japan against the imperialism, militarism and capitalism of Britain and America and says that Britain's construction of a naval base at Singapore and America's aerial and naval manœuvres in the Pacific may prove the sparks to fire the magazine. The Russian treaty with China and Japan is only another preparation for this war and we may witness it any day. Britain will try to buy over Muslim friendship in such a situation and it is the duty of Indian Muslims to study the situation thoroughly before deciding upon their line of action. The Sada-i-Muslim says that Marshal Hindenburg's election has caused a panic in official circles in Great Britain and France. The present trend of European politics shows that another great war is fast approaching and as a matter of fact it is very much needed, because without it the oppressed Eastern nationalities can never get an opportunity for their uplift.

Local boards.

The Hamdam invites attention to the growing dissatisfaction, specially in Muslim circles, with non-official chairmen in most local boards in these provinces. The causes of this tension should be probed and remedied as it is on local boards that the foundation of Hindu-Muslim unity can best be laid. A writer in the same paper inveighs against the proposed district board tax on all persons having an annual income of Rs. 200. This tax will affect almost every individual as no one can have two meals a day without earning sixteen rupees per month. District boards should curtail their expenditure and should exploit to the full their existing sources of income before embarking on any fresh schemes of taxation. The income limit should also be raised sufficiently high in the case of the proposed tax on circumstances.

Conviction of Lala Jiwan Das.

The Sangathan congratulates Lala Jiwan Das of Kohat on his conviction and says that the action of the Government in not only not punishing but also supporting the Muhammadans who ruined the Hindus, dishonoured their wives and desecrated their temples, is a glaring specimen of the present civilisation.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 23RD MAY, 1925.

Foreign affairs.

The Haqiqat publishes an account by Jawad Pasha of the enthusiastic welcome accorded by the inhabitants of Mosul to the Turkish members of the Mosul Commission and hopes that after this clear expression of public opinion the members of the Commission will not allow themselves to be influenced by British propaganda and will give the award in favour of Turkey. The Oudh Akhbar considers the combination of France with Spain against the Riffs as wholly unjustified and says that her only motive is to crush the spirit of liberty in Africa. The paper fears that if the combination does not prove successful it is likely that Italy also may join them the next day. It is to be seen if the League of Nations is at all moved by the cries of the Riffs. Past experience, however, shows that it never takes action likely to prove prejudicial to the interests of the Allies. The Haqiqat lends its support to the proposal to offer juma prayers on the 22nd May for the victory of the Riffs. The Sada-i-Muslim expresses great satisfaction at the news that Mustafa Kamal has proposed the name of Sheikh Sennousi for the Caliphate and says that if the news is correct the Turks will once more secure the leadership of the Muslim world and will get rid of all the existing obstacles in the path of the Turkish Republic. Eulogising H. E. H. the Nizam for the princely donation of Rs. 50,000 towards the Turkish Red Crescent Fund, the paper appeals to Indian Musalmans to complete their proposed quota of ten lacs immediately and says that as the fund is in aid of the Muslim refugees from Greece, every Muslim should contribute his mite towards it.

Haj.

The announcement of the date for the departure of steamers for the Hedjaz has somewhat relieved the tension in the Muslim press. The Leader writes: "The Government of India, in spite of the knowledge they possess of the risks involved in this year's haj pilgrimage, have acted wisely in not taking any definite steps to discourage it. For, if they had done so, they would have been seriously misunderstood." The Medina while satisfied with the announcement views with suspicion the Government's note of warning and says: We have never had much faith in the good intentions of the Government and we are constrained to style this note as one coming "from the enemy's side," as both the Home and Foreign departments of the Government have rarely presented good examples of truth and sincerity. What is the meaning of this effort to produce fear and distrust among the hajis? We would hold the Government alone responsible if the haijis are molested by Emir Ali's ships in the sea. The paper pities those selfish dissension-seekers who merely because of their innate wickedness and material lust had been opposing the haj pilgrimage this year and says: We find that a nominal Sunni sect which is even now supporting the wicked and disgraceful Sheriff is vigorously opposing haj, impelled by Sheriff's-i-gold. The other opposing faction is that of the Qadians. We would fain impute motives, but is it not a fact that in Khwaja Kamaluddin's journey the wickedness of the Sheriff was mingled with the ignorance of Qadians? One should ask these eternally unfortunate people as to how opposition to haj could help them. Now when the Government have changed their view will not these people also veer round? The late Mirza disowned even the duty of jehad to please this very Government. The Oudh Akhbar observes that the happy settlement of the haj question by the Government will be received by Muslim India with great satisfaction and while congratulating M. Shaukat Ali and others to whose efforts the settlement is really due, remarks that their real work has commenced now and urges them not to rest till the pilgrims have safely returned to their home. The Sadas-i-Muslim advises Indian pilgrims to Mecca not to neglect their brethren in faith in Arabia and in view of the dire scarcity in that country to take some extra provisions for those who are eagerly waiting for their help.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hindu-Muslim tension is showing signs of growing bitterness and charges and counter-charges of high-handedness, underhand proselytizing activities and publication of offensive literature are becoming more frequent. The Bhavishya complains that Hindu children and women are being abducted in Cawnpore city and the neighbouring villages in accordance with Maulana Hasan Nizami's scheme and warns the local Hindus to be on their guard. The Abhyudaya also complains that in Sindh Muhammadans are indulging in various improper practices against the Hindus. Not only gundas (bad characters) abduct Hindu boys and women, but Mullas and Maulvis in their speeches incite their co-religionists against the Hindus, as was done only the other day at Jacobabad. What is most surprising, says the paper, is the fact that there is nobody to take them to task for it, with the result that Muhammadans are encouraged to commit breaches of peace. The Surya deplores the conduct of the Musalman vakils of Peshawar in establishing a separate association of their own and says that if it is a sin for the Musalmans to co-operate with the Hindus it would be better for them to migrate to some Muslim country. The Vartman publishes an article in which the writer refers to the incident in Bareilly in which a Muhammadan youth disguised as a Hindu mendicant was caught taking photos of Hindu women bathing in the river and suspects some conspiracy behind the matter. He says that Maulana Hasan Nizami's scheme has found such favour with the Musalmans that they are trying to convert Hindus by resorting to strange and inhuman practices. The followers of this short-sighted Nizami are treating the simple-minded Hindus in a way in which they were not treated even in the reign of the great tyrant, Aurangzeb. The Kshattriya Vir publishes a contributed article in which the writer remarks that Hindu-Muslim unity can be brought about only if the Muhammadans are made to fear the Hindus. This can be done if the Hindus give up forbearance and humility and retaliate against the ill-treatment on the part of Muhammadans by completely non-co-operating with them from one end of the country to the other. The Vartman says that, as reports of rape cases are daily received from every part of India now-a-days it is necessary that Nari Raksha Sanghas or societies for the protection of Hindu women should be established all over the country. The Gyan Shakti exhorts the Hindus to carry on their reclamation work vigorously, pointing out that the two crocodiles, the Muhammadans and the Christian missionaries—are trying their best to swallow the Hindu community. If the Hindus do not remove untouchability and further the cause of Shuddhi, a day will come when they will cease to exist. Commenting on the present communal tension in the country and its effect on the political advancement of the nation the Naiyar-i-Azam remarks that under the present circumstances the demand for Swaraj means nothing but courting a horrible and bloody war between Hindus and Muslims. The Medina ridicules the Hindu claim of reclaiming their converted co-religionists and points out that in Malabar the right of conversion was sold to the colonising Arabs and (elsewhere) the Rajput princes voluntarily sent their daughters to the harems of Muslim Emperors and if Muslim Rajputs were born of them they could not be restored to the Hindus. The Hamdam regrets that as a result of the spread of Sangathan sentiments the Hindus have become bent on injuring Urdu. Some Hindu members of the Punjab Legislative Council recently called Urdu a foreign tongue and urged its replacement by Punjabi and Hindi as media of instruction. This deliberate design to uproot Urdu is much to be deplored, specially in a province where that language has been most popular. The Medina is wrath at the recitation by an Arya Nagar Kirtan party at Bijnor of a couplet meaning that Brahmxcharis would come out of the Gurukul and proceed to Mecca and build Arya temples there. The Aryas should first remove the Muslim mosques from Kashi, Ajodhya, Hastinapur, Somnath and other places before thinking of building temples in Mecca. The Aryas who have not got a single holy place which has been spared the heathenism-consuming touch of Islam can hardly realise the pain caused by this couplet to Muslims who have always kept Arabia free from non-

Muslim influence and authority. We have unmitigated praise for those Muslim hearers who did not reply to this couplet with a slap on the face of the reciter. It is a matter for gratification that this singing party left Bijnor soon for the mischief-makers had left little undone to stir up trouble even in this peaceful city. Aryas who can build their temples in Mecca are still to be born but those men are already in existence who can with God's grace cover every inch of Indian soil with mosques. The Farishta complains that the Sur Vijaya Natak Company staged at Agra on the 13th May a drama entitled "Vir Charitra" which inculcates seditious ideas and is offensive to Muslims. Government should watch this company as it seems to be inspired by political motives. The Rohilkhand Gazette also regrets that Arya literature offensive to Muslim sentiments continues to be published at Bareilly and certain Nagri publications are sure to produce anger and excitement. One such book contains a cartoon portraying Bharat Devi armed with sword and spear fighting against the Muslims. She has killed some Muslims and is standing sword in hand over the prostrate corpse of one of them. The Hindustani publishes a letter from the President of the Arya Samaj, Bahraich, protesting against the action of the Muslim officials of the district in prohibiting Arya propaganda work in the Syed Salar fair and urging Hindus to organize a vigorous agitation against this attack on their religious freedom.

Muslim Affairs.

The Medina heartily approves of the proposal to hold an All-Muslim Parties Conference and says that the composition of differences is essential for united and organized action. All shades of opinion should be represented in it and it should be held at some central place like Delhi after at least two months. The President should be a person trusted by the majority. A writer in the Hamdam refers to Russian designs on India as evidenced by the recent Russian alliance with Japan and China, the supply of aeroplanes to Afghanistan and M Zinovieff's resolution regarding aid to Indian revolutionaries and says that neither Afghans nor Indian Muslims can ever become enamoured of Red principles as these are entirely foreign and hostile to Islam. Maulana Husain Ahmad of Deoband writing in the Medina, points out that a study of the authentic writings of the Nejdis and Wahabis has convinced him that the differences between them and the Sunnis are not so radical as they have been popularly represented to be but are confined to mere matters of detail and do not justify their condemnation as outcasts of Islam. The paper in an another article urges that the remains of the saint interred near the New Market, Calcutta, should not be disturbed, as this would deeply wound Muslim religious sentiments. Referring to the notice issued by the District Magistrate against the proposed commemoration of the Moplahs killed in the last revolt the Oudh Akhbar regrets that the District Magistrate failed to foresee the discontent his notice was likely to cause and says that, if, as appears from the notice, the feeling in favour of commemoration is really high, the District Magistrate's notice is bound to cause unrest. The paper contends that though the construction of any permanent memorial could have been disallowed, no objection should have been made to the mere observance of the death anniversary. Al Bashir has a contributed article urging that the Act of 1880 relating to Qazis may be suitably amended so that it may become possible to appoint Qazis to settle disputes relating to marriages, divorce, dowry, etc., and Muslims may be saved waste of money and miscarriage of justice in the common law courts.

Posts of Commissioners.

The Leader asks if it is a fact that a recent circular order of the Provincial Government's enjoins upon all officers the duty of calling upon Commissioners of divisions. Proceeding, the paper calls attention to the public demand for the abolition or reduction of the posts of Commissioners and says: "Coming back to the recent circular with which we started, we hope the text of it will be published for the edification and amusement of the people and further, that their ignorance will be enlightened by an explanatory note retaling the circumstances in and the reasons for which it has been promulgated. And it is to be hoped that both in the Legislative Councils and the Legislative Assembly more pressure will be put upon the Government to abolish this unnecessary post office betweeh the Local Governments and their district officers. . . . . In our local Council an attempt will doubtless be made to get at the full facts relating to the circular and to get it rescinded."

Ban against Mr. Malaviya.

His Exalted Highness the Nizam's firman prohibiting the entry of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya into his State has evoked strong protests in Hindu papers. The Leader says that it is not surprised at the firman of the Nizam, as this is not the first time he has shown such an autocratic spirit. "He has already banned a number of Indian papers and if we remember right, passed a similar order against the entry of Messrs. Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali about three years ago. But it must be admitted that the present order beats His Exalted Highness's record." The Advocate advises the Nizam-to cancel the firman and thereby pacify the Hindu population which has been much enraged. The Aj deplores the anti-Hindu attitude of the Nizam and says that he and his councillors have displayed a spirit of intolerance on several occasions not only in religious but in political matters also. His Exalted Highness has not so far fulfilled his promise to restore the Hindu temples destroyed by Musalman bad characters. The Bhavishya strongly protests against the firman and is of opinion that the Nizam has now definitely taken up the cudgels against the Hindus. Proceeding, the paper remarks :—It is doubtful in view of oppressive and proselytizing activities in Hyderabad whether any Hindu will remain a Hindu in the Nizam's dominion after some time. The more the Nizam is trying to conceal his weakness by interdicting into his territory the entry of Hindu papers describing his oppression of Hindus, the more rapidly it is becoming exposed throughout India. We wish that all Hindu Sabhas should, with one voice, oppose the unjust firman and that every Hindu newspaper and magazine should give a crushing reply to it and fall a victim to the local policy of interdiction. We also wish that every Hindu chief should, by way of a protest to this firman, issue an order prohibiting every outstation Maulvi or Mulla and every Muhammadan preacher or leader from entering his territory, so that the Nizam may be brought to his senses to some extent at least. If the Hyderabad Hindus organise themselves for self-preservation, such unjust firmans of autocrats will find their way automatically into the waste-paper basket.

Indianization of Services.

The Leader takes strong exception to the appeal for British recruits made by Lord Birkenhead in his address at Glasgow University and says: When appealing for British recruits, the authorities should bear in mind that one of our important considerations is the employment of our boys and that any seeming advantages accruing from the employment of British recruits are more than counterbalanced by the dissatisfaction they produce here." The Pioneer emphasizes the need for securing English recruits not only in the Indian Civil Service, but in other All-India Services also, even if the changes under the Lee scheme are carried out. "Vigilance too is required lest the pledges given to existing services are ignored or infringed by indirect action in this country."

Political propaganda.

The Bharat Dharma says that in addition to the British servants the British traders are also sucking the blood of India. The former are doing so only by charging a number of allowances in addition to their princely salaries, but the latter are doing so in innumerable ways. If by starving or half-starving, a man is able to save a small sum and goes in for a piece of gold or silver jewellery for his wife this jewellery is felt as an eye-sore by the Britishers and they always think of devising means for pocketing it. This crooked policy is clear from the statement made by Sir Basil Blackett before the correspondent of the Financial Review. Let us see how many fresh means they are devising for sucking the blood of India. It seems that they are utilising their power and intelligence for impoverishing the country. The Oudh Akhbar agrees with Mr. Gandhi's complaint at Faridpur that Indians and not Englishmen were responsible for the economic distress in the country. What should be said of a people who cannot devote even half an hour daily to the charkha to attain swaraj? The spinning franchise must be continued. Referring to M. Zinovieff's resolution about India at a meeting of the Third International the paper understands that Russia has got a permanent department to devise means for the annexation of India. It fears that this resolution is simply meant to create suspicion and distrust in the British mind against Indians and consequently exhorts British statesmen to give cautious and careful consideration to these mischievous activities of Russia, before taking any action against Indians. The Oudh Akhbar regrets that the Pioneer has got jealous over the railway facilities allowed to Mr. Gandhi in Bengal. He deserves special treatment owing to his services as a patriot and reformer and it is a pity that the Pioneer could not suppress its prejudice against Indians.

Indians in Colonies.

Referring to the opinions of European settlers in Kenya published in the East African Standard the Leader writes: What does it all come to? That the white men settled in Kenya think themselves masters of that unfortunate country and claim the right to compel the natives to work on their own terms in order that they may make the most money in the quickest time by the easiest means. They do not care a brass button for the British Government's professed policy of acting in the interests of the natives.....What concerns us most is that the Government of India, while following a more or less correct policy generally, are weak in their advocacy and too prone to surrender the rights of Indians.

Labour organization and Lala Lajpat Rai.

The Bhavishya remarks that Lala Lajpat Rai's recent speech at the Labour meeting in Cawnpore contains no unpractical or unnatural suggestions under the cover of specious logic, but lays down at the present juncture, in an impartial and fearless manner, a true and straight course for the attainment of our ideal. We hold Lala Lajpat Rai to be the foremost leader of India at the present time. We should organise ourselves and attain swaraj under his guidance. The Vartman agrees with the Lala's view that there is no remedy better than union and organisation for removing the malady of serfdom. The cultivators and the labourers should therefore weld themselves together into a strong organisation and prepare for a "long war" with the capitalists.

Bolshevism.

The Bhavishya says that capitalistic countries like England, France and America circulated false reports about the Bolsheviks, because they do not like the Bolshevik object of supplanting the power of unjust capitalists and rulers by a government in which both the rich and the poor may be able to live comfortably. The latest report about the Bolsheviks fomenting a revolution in India and helping the revolutionary leaders of the country is quite a false and fabricated one. The Bolsheviks are so busy with their own home affairs that they have no time to spare for such activities. It is, however, with the help of such reports that the officials of this country find justification for practising repression.

Faridpur Conference.

The Kurmanchal Mitra remarks that Mr. C. R. Das's presidential address at the Faridpur Conference shows that the swaraj party will soon have to give up its obstructionist policy and either join the Moderates or seek the shelter of Mahatma Gandhi. The Abhyudaya opines that after this speech there is no need for party divisions among Indian politicians. There is no longer any cause for differences among the Liberals and the Independents but if there is any, the present situation in the country demands that all parties should unite to present an undivided front.

Reforms.

The Medina advises Government to hold a Round Table Conference with the Indian leaders to secure relief from the nightmares of Indian revolution and Russain Bolshevism. Success was achieved by Britain in Ireland and Egypt only because some measure of freedom was granted to those countries, otherwise the material forces of England would have been distracted and she would have suffered a serious reverse. The Haqiqat assures Indians that little good can result to India out of the Birkenhead-Reading consultations. However, if Mr. Das maintains even a partially stiff attitude India may get something but that something will never come up to the expectations of the swaraj party and the Indian public. Any way Lord Reading must be fully aware that Indians can no longer be consoled with the toy of the Reforms. The Oudh Akhbar advises all Indian political parties to despatch immediately a joint representation to the British Government expressing the Indian point of view. If a joint conference be not feasible all parties should support Mr. Das's statement at Faridpur that India's case should be fully presented.

India and Nepal.

The Prem and the Hindi Kesri publish an article by Mr. Savarkar in which he contends that Nepal is not a separate country but a part of India like so many other provinces and urges that interested propaganda to create ill-feeling between India and Nepal should be counteracted, as the latter is the only independent Hindu state which can help in the organization of the Hindu community.

High prices.

The Haqiqat complains that food-grains have now again become as dear as they were during the War. It is a pity that the Government continue to be unmindful of the sufferings of the people and large quantities of grain are being exported from Karachi. As there has not been a good wheat harvest this year in America and very little grain is even now being exported from Russia, Indians are being starved to feed the hungry in Europe. Can the Government do nothing to solve this problem?

Railway affairs.

Under the heading "The Fruits of Amalgamation" the Weekly Mazdur and the Railwaymen strongly protests against the transfer of the railway clerks from these provinces to Bengal, as, in its opinion, it is altogether impossible for the people of these parts to go and settle in Calcutta on the same pay. The paper advises the clerks to cast off their fear and come out to assert themselves unitedly. The Aj urges the appointment of a board to enquire into the grievances of the North-Western Railway strikers and says that it would have been much better if there were some legislation by which both the parties could be forced to come to terms with each other.

Usury.

The Leader calls attention to the evil of usury and thinks it essential that the question should be taken up in right earnest in India and public men should press the Government to deal with it by means of equitable legislation. It has been neglected for sufficiently long and should no longer be dismissed as unworthy of serious attention.

Village panchayats.

In the opinion of the Leader the annual Administration Report of the United Provinces for 1923-24 gives a depressing account of the village panchayats. "We are disposed to think that better results would have been achieved if Government had shown an active interest in the development of the panchayats. The fact that they are languishing in many places and show little signs of progress is not one on which the Government can congratulate themselves." The paper exhorts non-official workers to interest themselves in the matter with a view to put life into the moribund panchayats and generally to see that the aims and objects of the Village Panchayats Act are better realised and hopes that the Government will offer facilities to such workers as may be desirous of taking up the work.

Indians in Burma.

The Hamdam appeals to the Government of India to stop the enforcement of the recent law passed in Burma with a view to exclude Indians from that province.

Local Boards.

A writer in the Hamdam complains that in spite of the low percentage of Muslims in high posts in the Allahabad municipality, a suitable Muslim candidate for the post of municipal engineer was not appointed though available and the Hindu members voted unanimously in favour of the old engineer, Mr. Kochar, being recalled. Another writer deplores that in utter disregard of Muslim interests the secretary of the Farrukhabad district board, has issued orders that useful cattle are not to be auctioned to those who want to have them for purposes of slaughter.

The Coal Committee's report.

Commenting on the Indian Coal Committee's report, the Pioneer says: Those who looked for heroic remedies from the Committee will be disappointed, but, taken as a whole, the report seems to be a straightforward, sensible, and business-like production recognising the difficulties with which the trade is faced, and endeavouring to propound practical remedies as might have been expected.

Attack on Indian students at Glasgow.

The Leader writes: The news of the murderous outrage on Indian students at Glasgow resulting in one death and several injuries will be received in this country with great indignation. It is to be hoped that the guardians of law and order at Glasgow will succeed in tracing the criminals and that full justice will be done to them. We await further particulars with anxious interest.

Treatment of Akali prisoners.

The Aj says that the explanation regarding the ill-treatment of the Akali prisoners in Nabha betrays the incapacity of the jail authorities. The supposed injustice of Maharaja Ripu Daman Singh which cost him his throne is nothing as compared with brute-force which is being displayed by the present Nabha authorities.

The Vartman surmises that the next war will be fought in Asia and says that England and America will have to accept Asia's challenge through Japan and Russia before they are able to pursue their imperialistic designs in Eastern Asia and conquer the world.

The next war.

The Shakti remarks that not only the Germans, but Indians also, are exultant over Marshal Hindenburg's election. The Aj condemns the lack of courtesy on the part of the Allies in not observing the formality of congratulating President Hindenburg on his election and says that the late war has shaken the foundations of European manners.

Foreign Affairs.

The Muslim press has been sympathetically following the Riffian struggle for freedom. The Medina styles their victory over Spain as a miracle of patriotism worthy of emulation by Indians whose dependence is not only political but also spiritual and religious. Hindus should cease dreaming foolish dreams of Hindu Swaraj and wholesale Shuddhi and strive, like the Riffs, for the freedom of their country. The Najat accuses France of conspiring with Spain to crush the Riffs so that the contagion of freedom may not spread to the French colonies in Africa. In order to secure a free hand in Egypt Britain has to acquiesce in French policy. Indian Muslims should realise how England supports every scheme for the undoing of Muslim nations and countries. The condition of the Jazirat-ul-Arab is before our eyes and now obstacles are being placed in the path of haj by the Government of India. England is in possession of Mesopotamia and Palestine and is not prepared to evacuate Mosul. She is also casting eyes towards Persia and is inciting her agents to foment disturbances there. Such is the state of the Islamic world and everywhere the hand of Britain is seen at work. But, alas, we see our salvation in quarrelling with the Hindus and securing our share of a few crumbs of bread. The Medina is gratified to note that the London letter published by the New York World has made it clear that British intrigues are at the bottom of most of the troubles and that it was British jealousy of German naval expansion in the North Sea that precipitated the Great War. The entire world to-day regards Britain, owing to her trickery, as the most unreliable state. The Oudh Akhbar thinks that the expected decision of the Mosul Boundary Commission is sure to embitter the existing relations between Turkey and Mesopotamia. Britain is opposed to the separation of Mosul and is trying to prejudice the attitude of the League of Nations. The Medina points out that the trials of the Kurdish rebels have clearly established the complicity of England in the revolt and says that though her material power might save her in this world, the blood of the innocent will bring down very heavily God's vengeance on her in the next world. The Muslim Press is generally satisfied with the proposed installation of Sheikh Sennousi as Emir of Mecca and the Medina replies to Mr. Philby's opposition to it with the retort that the installation of such a pro-Turk as Emir would be so disgraceful for Britain that she would have to commit suicide. There is good reason for this. During his regimé there would be no room for British intrigue, and other anti-Islamic activities, and what greater calamity can befall England than the prosperity of the Islamic world? Mr. Philby regards the Sheikh's appointment as a challenge to England. May God save Angora from her evil eye! The Sada-i-Muslim wonders why Turkey is regarded with so much suspicion and points out that the question of Caliphate being a purely religious one no non-Muslim power has a right of interference. The Mashriq scouts the idea of a Russo-Afghan attack on India and contends that in view of the basic antagonism between Bolshevism and Islam and the affinity between Afghanistan and India war between the two countries should not be thought of.

Haj.

The Extremist section of the Muslim Press is still suspicious of British intentions regarding this year's haj. The Medina alleges that the Government of India are secretly inciting their agents to discourage hajis from proceeding on pilgrimage this year though the port of Rabigh possesses a good market capable of provisioning a large number of people.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

The Leader severely criticizes Lord Birkenhead's speech at the Assam dinner and says: "Luckily for India, Lord Curzon did not, and Lord Birkenhead does not, exhaust the British capacity of statemanship. What is of vastly greater consequence and relevance, the people of India will to be free and they will not be denied. If we trust the sound instinct of the British, we naturally set much greater store by the latter circumstance, and whatever those politicians—not statesmen—who happen for the moment to be in authority may say or will to the contrary, it is the Indians on whose side the time-spirit is fighting and they will have swaraj. The Indian Daily Telegraph does not find in the speech any signs of sympathy for Indian aspirations and says:—"The clouds are fast descending on all sides of the political horizon. Our rulers are firm in their views and the people are divided in their outlook. The angel of repression is flapping its wings on the India Office corridor. It is for the Indian leaders to face the coming storm." The Aj says: Lord Birkenhead's speech in the Glasgow University shows that the main object of the British army stationed in India and maintained at our expense is not to protect the country from foreign invasion but to keep us under subjection: This is also the chief function of the Civil Service. So long as the Government of India is carried on in accordance with this military policy there can be no peace in the country. We do not care for the white or non-white element in the services; all that we want is that they should behave as servants and not as masters.

Reforms.

Commenting on the report that certain powers which under the Government of India Act were given to the Bengal Legislative Council will revert to the Governor of Bengal in Council, the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Something other than the mailed fist was expected after Das-Birkenhead conversations and the Faridpur speech of the Swarajist leader, but the proposed action shows the bureaucrat persisting in his obstinate position. He is blind to all signs. Those who think that they can terrify Bengal by repression have never studied the political developments in the country during the last twenty years. The Aj regards the proposed action of Government as evidence of swarajist success and says that swaraj cannot be attained until Indians have rendered the working of the present system of Government impossible. When the avowed object of the British authorities is to get India ruled by foreign civilians with the help of the military there is no need for legislative councils and Ministers and it is the duty of every patriot to break this net of delusion so that military government may be carried on openly. The Medina condemns Mrs. Besant's Commonwealth of India Bill as it does not give Indians control over the exchequer and the army. Commenting on Major Graham Pole's article on the Muddiman Committee's report the Oudh Akhbar asks Indian leaders to publish their joint statement on the political situation in the country at once. Else it fears that in case the failure of the reforms is officially admitted, the Government might revert to the old Morley-Minto or some other scheme of autocracy and in that case Indians would be great losers and would ever lament over their folly of negligence. Referring to the Times' comments on Mr. Das's Faridpur speech the paper observes that not only the Swarajists but all Indian political parties without exception have condemned the present system of diarchy as unworkable and even if the Swarajists condescend to stop their obstructive policy the system cannot prove a success. As a matter of fact the grant of special powers to Government has rendered the Councils a sham and unless this defect is removed and Government is made responsible to the Councils the present agitation in the country cannot subside.

The Empire Day.

Commenting on the speech of the Secretary of State for the Colonies on the Empire Day in which he emphasized the importance of the nations of the world recognizing the nations of the Empire as their equals, the Leader writes:—This full-mouthed phrase has no meaning for us as India is treated by England herself not as a partner but as a dependency and Indians settled in several other parts of the Empire are subjected to disabilities, oppressive and humiliating. Dominion Governments, particularly that of South Africa, have been going on with legislative and administrative measures to make the Indian settlers' position still more galling.

It is because of these things that the Empire day evokes no enthusiasm among our countrymen and its celebrations leave them cold.

The ban against Mr. Malaviya.

Comments on the Nizam's firman prohibiting the entry of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya into his state are deeply tinged with communal acrimony. Hindu papers strongly condemn the Nizam's action while the Muslim press with one voice supports it as an act of statesmanship intended to prevent serious communal troubles which might have resulted from the visit of one of the chief fomenters of communal disturbances. The Patriot writes: His Exalted Highness seems to have come under the baneful influence of communal fanaticism which is being assiduously cultivated by a section of Muslims in India . . . The Gulbarga riots, the manner in which the Muslims convicted in the riots have been allowed to go scot-free, the non-fulfilment so far of the promise to repair the temples out of state funds, are all glaring proofs of the fact that either the Nizam or his Minister has been very profusely inoculated with anti-Hindu views. The Vartman characterizes the action of the Nizam as despotic and asks him whether he can even now claim that the Hindus and Muhammadans enjoy equal rights in his state and whether he can, in this way, forbid any Christian missionary from entering his state. In the opinion of the Aj the ban shows that under the Nizam's Government efforts are being made to crush the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus despite the fact that they form 96 per cent. of the population. The Nizam had nothing to fear from Pandit Malaviya as the Hindu Sangathan is not meant for weakening any community but for purging various communities of their hooligan elements. The Sada-i-Muslim regards Mr. Malaviya as the person responsible for the present communal dissensions in the country. The Hamdam holds the Sangathan movement to be responsible for the Gulbarga disturbances and says that in view of the persistently truculent attitude of the Hindu press even after that incident, the Nizam's Government has acted very wisely in excluding from their territories the chief protagonist of militant Sangathan. The Medina is surprised at the action of Hyderabad Hindus in electing this dissension-breeding individual as their President. He got so many Hindu and Muslim skulls broken and his entry into Hyderabad would have resulted in a thousand Golcundas. When the voice of this wizard of Sangathan from (distant) Benares could lead to bloodshed in Golcunda, what would not his presence have done? Mr. Malaviya is the worst enemy of the country and even while working with Mr. Gandhi has been guilty of treason to the Congress. He is the greatest fomentor of discord and only recently in his speech at Delhi he conjured up a vision of attacks on the honour of Hindu women by Muslims and advised Hindus to break the heads and legs of the Muslims. The Mashriq sees in the ban an act of great administrative capacity and the Zulqarnain congratulates His Exalted Highness on having saved his state from the flames of Hindu-Muslim disunion which are swallowing British India. The Sada-i-Muslim enquiries why the Hindu press which is just now so vociferous in its protests was silent when Mr. C. R. Das and Seth Jamna Lal Bajaz were excluded from Kashmir and Jaipur respectively.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to Lala Lajpat Rai's statement that Muhammadans are making strenuous efforts to gain more political rights and privileges, the Pioneer writes that Muhammadans can hardly be blamed for seeking to improve their position, either in public bodies or in the services. And the utterances of certain Hindu politicians have certainly not tended to render the relations between the two communities more friendly. The Gyan Shakti takes exception to the remark of a local contemporary that the Muhammadans are free to sacrifice whenever and wherever they deem it necessary to do so and says that they are bound by considerations of time and place in this matter. Cow-sacrifice should never be allowed at the time when and the place where it has never taken place before.

The Bhavishya says that in the recent riot between Hindus and Muhammadans at Calcutta the latter appear to have been the aggressors which is generally the case. Leading Muhammadan barristers espouse the cause of rioters after the disturbances and this only encourages bad characters in their nefarious practices. The Arya Mitra condemns the action of the Muhammadan Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich in preventing the Arya Samajists from carrying their missionary work in the Syed Salar fair. It asks him why he is planting thorns in the path of religious liberty. Is he not solely responsible for fanning the fire of discontent in the Arya Samajist world by committing such unjustifiable acts? Have the Musalmans also been prevented from preaching in the fair? We fail to understand how the work which has been carried on so peacefully during the last twenty-seven years has now given rise to apprehensions of a horrible catastrophe overtaking the place? Do Government want that the Arya Samajists should not propagate their religion without let or hindrance? Can the people maintain religious toleration for any length of time in the face of such behaviour of Government officials? The Pratap publishes a letter from the President of the Arya Samaj, Bahraich, in which he appeals to the entire Hindu community and the press to agitate against such an action of the authorities and says that by imposing restrictions on the Arya Samajists in this way the position of the Hindu women and children visiting the fair will become very perilous. The Gyan Shakti invites the attention of the Government to the desecration of Siva images in two quarters of Jaunpur and says that these incidents have wounded the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus and caused great consternation in the town. It appeals to the Government not to allow the perpetration of such high-handedness in British India, and takes the Hindus to task for worshipping graves and tazias of Muhammadans and says that if they are not already a dead nation they will become so by worshipping dead-bodies. One Akbar Shah Khan of Najibabad appeals to Mr. Malaviya through the Medina either to desist from his communal activities which are so embittering Hindu-Muslim relations or take the permission of Government to materialise his idea of a pitched fight between Hindus and Muslims. The battle may be fought with sharp-edged weapons on the famous field of Panipat where the Muslims so utterly routed the Hindus in 1761. Mr. Malaviya may rest assured that there will be only 700 Muslims against 2,200 Hindus and there will not be a single member of the much-dreaded Afghan or Frontier community among the former. The Nizam-i-Alam complains that a most unsavoury tract entitled Asmani Firishta or Islam ki Tilili Jhar was distributed at the annual gathering of the Arya Samaj, Bijnor. Its publication is meant only to insult Islam and Muslims. The Medina is similarly aggrieved at the publication of the picture of the Prophet by one R. N. Sharma in the Madras Presidency and wants its circulation to be stopped. The Sadha-i-Muslim approves of the action of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich interdicting Arya preachings at the Syed Salar fair this year in view of the grave peril to public peace caused by the offensive language of the Aryas at the last year's fair.

Rockfeller Medical Fellowships.

The Leader's Simla correspondent complains that four of the Indian doctors selected by the Government of India for the award of Rockfeller Medical Fellowship have, on their return after acquiring special knowledge in foreign countries, not been given "their specialist work," but have been posted "for normal medical profession." Commenting on this the paper writes that if its correspondent's information is correct, the treatment accorded by Government to these doctors is astonishing to a degree. "Surely, commonsense should set limits even to race prejudice and political considerations."

Political Propaganda.

The Pratap says that news received from various quarters during the last week shows that the Bolsheviks are trying to uproot the British raj. It cannot be said how far this is correct but it shows that the Bolshevik bogey is still frightening Englishmen. It is also possible that these rumours have been circulated in order to enable the present Conservative Government of England to govern with absolute autocracy. In the course of an article entitled "Thirst for other people's blood," the Vartman says that the desire for dominating other nations is greatly increasing in the hearts of independent powers. The preparation of the Singapore base, the election of Von Hindenburg, the formulation of the Soviet programme are all the outcome of the Imperialistic ambitions mentioned above. Educated and wise men are, however, tired of this disastrous policy and it is necessary that societies should be established in every country to force the Imperialists to abstain from enslaving others and to help in the emancipation of those who are undergoing the severe tribulations of subjection. The Bhavishya compares the annual recurring expenditure on Indian defence with that incurred in Japan for the same purpose and points out that despite greater expenditure India's defences are not as good as those of Japan. One hundred and fifty years of British rule have not improved the condition of Indians but on the contrary have rendered them weak, spiritless, dependent and impoverished. Students of politics should note how costly subjection is proving to India and should try to solve the problem at an early date. The Swadhin says that Indians who are regarded as easily exploitable and willing slaves of old are so badly fettered with the chains of this crooked "trusteeship" that when any question is raised regarding her in the League of Nations our "God given trustees" frighten people by conjuring up the Bolshevik bugbear and the bogey of inter-communal quarrels. All the high posts in the army which is maintained under this "trusteeship" for protecting us from the attacks of the Russian bugbear are given to the worthy children of the white trustees. Indians are employed only for hewing wood and drawing water and rendering other services to them. In view of all this we wonder whether we should call it trusteeship or exploitation. The Shakti publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap in which he says that the Ghadar Party of America is located in house no. 5, Wood Street, Francisco (California). It is open to receive every political sanyasi and there are arrangements for board and lodging and clothing for eight or ten men. Tha Najat dwells at length on the economic exploitation of India by England and says that it was British lust for Indian gold that impelled her to extend her sway gradually over the whole of India with the fruitful weapon of "divide et impera." England is now trying to safeguard all the routes to India and this is responsible for her new born antagonism against Japan. Germany is also being sedulously excluded from the Indian market and while all Indian gold is being kept in England Indians are being beguiled with silver, nickel and paper money and made to lose heavily in the matter of exchange.

The Glasgow incident.

Referring to the assault on Indians at Glasgow the Bharat Jiwan says that it will be a matter for regret if it appears that the incident has anything to do with the colour question. The incident is unprecedented in the annals of Britain and it is to be hoped that the police will soon find out the culprits as well as the cause of this mischief. The Aj says that the incident will be remembered side by side with Lord Birkenhead's speech at Glasgow University as it took place shortly after it.

Abolition of Commissionerships.

The Oudh Akhbar regards the local Government's circular order enjoining upon all officers the duty of calling upon Commissioners of divisions as an insult to Indian officers who would be mostly affected and wonders why in spite of the public demand in these provinces for the abolition of Commissionerships the local Government are attaching so much value to them. The United Provinces can, like Madras, very well do without Commissioners. The appellate functions of these officers in second revenue appeals can be discharged either by the Board of Revenue or District Judges and the work of inspection can be delegated to Secretaries to Government.

The Gurdwara Bill.

The Vartman says that if the Akali, Namdhari, Sahajdhari and other sects of the Sikh community are dissatisfied with the Gurdwara Bill the Hindu Sabha should intervene and bring about a satisfactory settlement between the Akalis and the other twenty-two sects of the Hindu community so that their just rights may not be jeopardised. Referring to the protests of the Udasi Sikhs against the Bill the Oudh Akhbar asks the Punjab Government to make special provision for protecting the rights of the Udasis who have for long been in possession of the Gurdwaras. The object of the Bill should be to secure the administration and supervision of the Gurdwaras and not the ejectment of the present possessors in favour of the Akalis, otherwise a still stronger agitation will ensue and the Government will fail in its object of maintaining peace in the province. The Mashriq has a contributed article in which the writer warns Sir Malcolm Hailey against a policy of excessive leniency towards the Akalis and says that it will tell upon the peace of the province if their activities are allowed to continue unchecked.

Bawla Murder Case.

The Pioneer calls attention to the significance of the words "hireling" and "some exceedingly powerful influence" used by the defending counsel in his plea for mitigation of the sentence on two of the accused and says:—"The execution of the penalties prescribed will not entirely dispose of the very serious issues arising from the affair which has aroused public attention and comment in a remarkable degree". While satisfied with the sentences passed the Haqiqat enquires what action would be taken against the person to please whom the whole conspiracy, resulting in the murder of a respectable citizen, was hatched. Something must be done to deter others.

The Railway strike.

Commenting on an account of the origin and the development of the strike sent to the paper by the general secretary of the North-Western Railway Union, the Leader doubts whether the leaders of the Union have proceeded the right way about the business and used with self-restraint their influence over the workers. The paper, however, criticizes the "non-possumus" attitude of the higher railway officials and says:—It is time that the Railway Board intervened and brought about a settlement of the quarrel. A statement should be issued as to why the railway authorities are reluctant to recognize the Union. The Railway Board should issue an authoritative statement about the causes of the trouble and the steps it proposes to take to bring about a termination of the unfortunate dispute. The Bhavishya condemns the European authorities of the North-Western Railway for not putting an end to the distress of the strikers and wonders why the Punjab Government does not intervene in the matter. It says that the railway authorities can be made to yield only when the strikers force their hands by making the strike a success by means of a perfect organization. The Surya urges the members of the Legislative Assembly to solve the strike problem as soon as possible and says that the way in which the Railway Board is ignoring the grievances of the strikers shows that the employees have no other course open to them but to continue the strike.

Indian States.

The Bhavishya writes that the people of the Alwar State are now being oppressed in a very cruel manner. Most barbarous atrocities are being perpetrated on them. These atrocities come next to the Jallianwalla Bagh massacre and are a blot on the old and noble traditions of Rajputana. The Sada-i-Muslim emphasizes the need for a vigorous agitation by the Muslim leaders against the desecration of graves in tahsil Rampur in the Jammu State as it thinks that Kashmir Muslims will have no peace until their protests resound in the ears of the Viceroy and his Council.

The Next Home Member.

The Muslim Press has now passed from conjectures about the next Home Member to positive suggestions about the appointment. Mr. Aftab Ahmad Khan is ruled out as he is considered to be inseparable from the Muslim University and the Rohilkhand Gazette suggests instead Nawab Muzammil-ullah Khan as suited for that high office both by his capacity and the confidence that he enjoys in the country. The Haqiqat supports Nawab Yusuf on the ground that an Agra Zamindar should succeed an Oudh Taluqdar. The Mashriq suggests a choice between Mr. Raza Ali and Nawab Yusuf.

Indians in Burma.

The Hind-i-Jadid is pained to find that Indians are being sedulously excluded from every country that they have helped to develop and that history is now repeating itself in Burma. It is a pity that Burmese Nationalists are playing into the hands of the European officials and do not realise that the latter and not they themselves will gain by the exclusion of Indians from their country.

Indian Coal Committee.

The Indian Daily Telegraph is of opinion that though some of the recommendations of the Committee are desirable they do not go to the root cause. The paper pleads for the protection of the coal industry and says that unless a countervailing duty on the South African coal is imposed, thereby giving adequate protection to the Indian coal against foreign competition, there will be no satisfactory solution of the problem of developing the indigenous industry.

Union of Parties.

Referring to Mrs. Naidu's attempts at re-establishing unity between the different political parties, the Leader writes that the time is ripe for consultations among the most prominent leaders of the various parties with a view to discuss how far united action is possible. They may or may not result in a settlement of all points of difference but they are likely further to minimize them.

Foreign affairs.

Commenting on the agreement between England, France and Spain with regard to the Moroccan operations the Leader writes: It is all a part of the game of grab systematically practised by the powerful European nations at the expense of the weaker Africans and Asiatics, ostensibly in the name of the extension of civilization, but in reality for their own selfish purposes. As Asiatics our sympathy is naturally with the inhabitants of Morocco. The Indian Daily Telegraph regards the Moroccan war as a fight for white supremacy through the murder of the small Riff nation struggling to be free from European domination . . . The secret of the whole thing is that the gallant Riffs by putting the Spaniards to rout have shaken the white prestige in North Africa. They have been creating there a new self-consciousness for freedom amongst the subject people of the European Powers; and if they are not destroyed North Africa will not be safe for European exploitation and dominance. The Sada-i-Muslim wonders whether Britain's instinct for protecting the weak has disappeared along with the war. She was not at all moved when Greece perpetrated atrocities in Smyrna and it is yet to be seen if she cares to save the Riffs from the clutches of France and Spain. The Medina condemns British policy in regard to the Mosul question and appeals to the League of Nations to settle it very quickly if it does not want to kindle the fire of another world-war. The Vartman says that Afghanistan is justified in increasing its military strength when it knows that Europe and white nations are ready to swallow Asia and black nations. Usually when a nation becomes strong it tries to enslave other nations, but Afghanistan ought not to follow suit. It should, on the contrary, help other subject nations in making themselves free and happy like itself.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

The Bhavishya concludes from Lord Birkenhead's speech at the Assam dinner that by yielding too much to "cunning" authorities Mr. C. R. Das has not got nor is likely to get anything from them. Whatever has been obtained from the British people than whom there is no nation more selfish, cunning and promise-breaking, has been secured not by an yielding attitude, but under compulsion. This historical truth should never be forgotten by Indians. The Vartman wonders why India is asked again and again to show her bona fides when she has already done so several times. The speech shows that India should not hope to get further reforms before the expiry of the prescribed period. It is impossible to remove the unrest in India unless a scheme calculated to satisfy the starving and afflicted Indians is inaugurated. The Aj remarks that if Lords Birkenhead and Reading cannot devise some means to satisfy Indians, they should revoke the reforms and dissolve the Legislative Councils. In view of Lord Birkenhead's speech the Medina expects little from his conversations with Lord Reading and says that as foreshadowed by Mr. C. R. Das in the concluding lines of his Faridpur address, civil disobedience will be needed after the official announcement. Will our quarrelsome friends ponder awhile?

Haj.

The Medina opines that all the intrigues of the Government to dissuade hajis from proceeding on pilgrimage this year were meant to deprive the people of the Hedjaz of their annual source of income and thus to prejudice them against Ibn Saud who is a thorn in the side of European imperialism. Britain and the family of Hussain are wedded together and Ali is being secretly helped in spite of protestations of neutrality. An English vessel was caught in the Suez carrying arms to Jeddah on behalf of an English company. Who will dare trust British declarations of neutrality after this? We have cited this incident to show that the enemies of Islam who want to keep the Hedjaz and Arabia a prey to deceitful intrigues are using all their power and cunning to serve their purpose. If the Muslim leaders had not forced the Government of India to allow the pilgrimage this year then it is quite possible that the Sheriffian and British cunning would have succeeded, but God be praised that the net of deceit of the enemies proved only a spider's web and in spite of the enemies of Islam the Jehangir left with pilgrims. The paper joins with the Muslim press in the appeal for funds for the relief of the suffering people of the Hedjaz and says that Indian Muslims should send at least five lakhs of rupees.

Reforms.

Referring to the report regarding the approaching end of diarchy in Bengal, the Bharat Jiwan says that it would on the whole be good if the deception which has been practised in India in the name of swaraj were exposed in some corner of the country. The Government and the bureaucracy would then appear in their true colours and the world would know that the swaraj which had been granted to India depended on the sweet will of Government officials. It is better not to have swaraj at all than to have a defective swaraj like the present one.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers are considerably agitated over the news that notices have been posted in the streets of Dera Ismail Khan threatening Hindus either to embrace Islam or to quit the city. The Prabhat wonders if the Government, who are so keen about applying section 144 on the slightest pretext, will let the matter go uninvestigated. The paper says that these mischief-mongers ought to consider what the plight of the country would be if the Hindus were also to retaliate at places where the Muhammadans form a very small minority. The lenient treatment of the Muhammadan perpetrators of the Kohat massacre has only encouraged the Muhammadans in their mischievous activities. The Abhaya remarks that the Deputy Commissioner's reply to the Hindu deputation in this connection is ridiculous. It means that the eyes of the Deputy Commissioner will be opened only when the Hindus of Dera Ismail Khan have been massacred. It is clear that either the Government have not strength enough to protect the Hindus from Muhammadan bad characters or else they want to colonize Dera Ismail Khan with their kith and kin by sending the Muhammadans to hell when the latter have extirpated the Hindus. The Hindus should, therefore, soon devise means for protecting their Frontier brethren and, if necessary, should send volunteers from various places. The Bhavishya points out that the notice is the outcome of the proselytising propaganda of men like Dr. Kitchlew, Maulana Zafar Ali and Hasan Nizami who have led hooligans to believe that it is their religious duty to rob, plunder and forcibly convert their enemies and thus add to the number of Muhammadans. The Vartman says that it is apparent from the notice that there is certainly some secret organization which engineers the communal disturbances in the country and that this secret organization has been encouraged to issue such a notice by the scheme of Khwaja Hasan Nizami, the secret intrigues of His Highness the Agha Khan and the speeches and writings of Muslim leaders. The paper exhorts the Hindus to wake up and save their brethren from the coming danger. The Shankar publishes a letter in which the writer wonders as to the justification for the application of section 144 in Syed Salar Fair at Bahraich, when the discourses of the Arya Samajist preachers were not like gun-powder or shells which could raze to the ground Syed Salar's tomb, and remarks that such action has been taken against the Arya Samajists because at Bahraich all officials from the constable to the highest authorities are Muhammadans and they are trying to carry out Hasan Nizami's scheme. The Abhaya replying to certain "absurd" observations of Hasan Nizami says: Has "Mianji" forgotten the sword of Hari Singh Nalwa, at the mere mention of whose name the Frontier Muhammadans used to tremble with fear. This demon of shuddhi is going to swallow you; narrow-minded Maulvis like you have put an end to Muslim power in India and now the day is not distant when you and your co-religionists will grow top-knots and wear sacred threads. The Arya Mitra writes: We see that the mischievous activities of Muhammadan bad characters are increasing day by day.

They are promoting the cause of Tabligh in all possible ways. At some places they abduct women and at others steal children. The Muslim press is not inclined to attach much importance to the anti-Hindu notice said to have been posted at Dera Ismail Khan. The Jadu regards it as the work of a mad man or a mischief-maker or perhaps of a third person who by.throwing a lighted squib seeks to set the peaceful province ablaze. Anyway, the deed is execrable, and it is to be hoped that all sober-minded people will discountenance this move to create ill-feeling between Hindus and Muslims. The Medina publishes a contributed article in which the writer ridicules Lala Har Dayal's suggestion that Muslims should merge themselves into the Hindus and says that as pollution by touch, niyog, divergence of sects and gross forms of worship exist among the Hindus, their culture cannot prove acceptable to others. All the Hindus should, therefore, embrace Islam. The Al Barid refers to the Lala's suggestions regarding Hindu swaraj and complete shuddhi and says that the negligence of Muslims has emboldened the dal (pulse)-taking and dhoti (loin cloth)-wearing race to harbour such dangerous designs. Muslims beware, those, whom you always regarded as foxes are going to take advantage of your weakness and to swallow you in the guise of wolves. Those whom your blood-drinking swords kept as slaves for centuries now want not only to enslave you but also to deprive you of your religion. The Medina condemns the Lala's insistence on a separate language and culture for India and says that it would bar Indian progress. It is no use reviving the dead Sanskrit language. Urdu, Persian and Arabic would help free India in her intercourse with Muslim neighbours.

The services.

From the "persistent questioning" in the House of Commons following the debate raised in the House of Lords by Lord Ampthill, the Leader apprehends that British officers and perhaps also domiciled European and Anglo-Indian, in services other than those classified as "all-India," may get increases of emoluments and passage concessions more or less on the lines "of the Lee gifts to the more favoured ones already materialized." Concluding, the paper says: "One gets sick of this unabashed raid on the public revenues in defiance of public opinion, the while that want of funds is habitually pleaded when more expenditure on beneficial services is strongly urged."

Bawla murder case.

The Advocate is convinced that "there is some one at the bottom who has caused the perpetration of this beastly crime but has been left scot-free" and says "it is the moral duty of the Bombay Government to find out the real culprit and to punish him severely so that it may serve as an example to others and such crimes may not be perpetrated in future." The Weekly Observer says that with the passing of the sentence on the accused the case has not been altogether closed. "The side issues have now to be examined and will be a grave public scandal if no attempt is made to elucidate the still mysterious origin of the motive which led men from an Indian State to perpetrate a dastardly murder in a public thoroughfare in Bombay for the sake of a dancing girl who had at one time been the mistress of a powerful Maharaja." The Medina is grieved to note that while the poor accused in this case have been punished, their master who did everything to minister to his sensuality has escaped scot-free, because he is a capitalist and a ruler. No wonder that in view of such invidious distinctions the labourers of Russia laid the foundations of Communism and Bolshevism. No one would be surprised if in India also the children of these convicted persons were to join the Red Army one after the other. Excess always induces reaction. Why should not capitalism and mammon-worship when they exceed all bounds lead to Bolshevism? Then there would be no distinction between a Maharaja and a motor-driver and every criminal would suffer for his deeds. The Sada-i-Muslim suggests the appointment of a commission to make further inquiries into the Bawla murder case and to discover the chief personality at whose instigation the brutal deed was committed.

The ban against Mr. Malaviya.

The Kailas says that by issuing the Nadirshahi (autocratic and tyrannical) order against Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya the Nizam's government have sullied their reputation for justice and impartiality and deeply wounded the religious susceptibilities of millions of their Hindu subjects. In view of such unjust acts of Indian states it is not wrong for some people to say that British rule is better than Indian rule. The Aj deplores the approving comments of the Hamdam on the Nizam's firman and contends that though Hindus and Muhammadans were always treated on an equal footing in Hyderabad, the same treatment is not accorded to them now. The Nizam's government should have known that the organization of Hindus does not mean a challenge to Muhammadans to fight with them.

Political propaganda.

The Najat regards British influence in the East and the ascendancy of British capitalists in the West to be the two great obstacles in the progress of the Bolshevik movement. The Bolsheviks are, therefore, fired with hatred against Britain and have not only converted the Balkan peninsula into a volcano but have also established their centres in the heart of the British Empire. Britain is bent on destroying Bolshevism, but it is doubtful whether the repressive methods adopted by her will succeed in their object. In another article the paper attributes the deplorable economic condition of India to the existing system of government which sacrifices the subjects for its own selfish motives and political ends. The British Government is a government of capitalists, who in the name of free trade and by juggling with the rate of exchange are busy in looting and exporting the raw products of this country for full twelve months of the year. Freedom is the only remedy for all these ills. Communal differences should be sunk and all constitutional methods should be adopted to secure liberty. So long as Englishmen stand as buyers, their interest would be to keep us poor so that we may be compelled by necessity to offer raw products for sale. The Oudh Akhbar eulogises the work of the Swarajists in the Councils and urges them to contest seats in the Council of State. The Hamdam regrets that the exploitation of the Afghan bogey for purposes of Hindu Sangathan by such leaders as Lala Lajpat Rai and Bhai Parmanand has given occasion to Lord Birkenhead to justify British tutelage of India as the best safeguard against invasion from the North-West. Indians have in the past furnished sufficient proof of martial qualities and, given the opportunity, both Hindus and Muslims will develop the necessary capacity and protect their common country from foreign foes.

Birthday Honours.

The Pioneer thinks that the Indian Honours List covers a wide field and that it will be regarded on the whole with satisfaction by those acquainted with the work performed by the recipients of the new Honours. The Leader agrees with the American view that titles are "like the antiquated mummeries of a past age" and asks if the dispensers of the favours cannot exercise a finer discrimination than they do either in England or in India. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The length of the list of Birthday Honours and the expectancy with which these Honours have been awaited must remind the sincere non-co-operator of the utter failure of one of the planks of his programme. These Honours are sought for with the same avidity as before.

Indian states.

The Leader supports the demand for constitutional reforms in Indian states as formulated in the presidential address of Mr. Kamat to the Deccan States Subjects Conference held at Poona and is of opinion that it cannot possibly be objected to by a single reasonable ruling prince. "And every wise member of that illustrious class should, without avoidable delay, take steps to satisfy aspirations so reasonable, so moderate and so much in the interests of the rulers themselves and their states." The Bharat Jiwan remarks that the shocking Alwar incident has eclipsed even the Jallianwala bagh massacre, inasmuch as it has been perpetrated by fellow-countrymen. People in no Indian state are safe and India will have to raise her voice against the powers of Indian chiefs. The Aj says that if Indian ruling princes treat their subjects well, firmly resolve to educate them, and grant them real administrative powers the almighty bureaucracy will not dare to ill-treat them. It is using them as were tools to keep India under subjection as long as possible. The Indian chiefs should ponder over this crooked policy of our present rulers who are doing injustice in Indian states under the pretext of protecting them.

Local Self-government

The Hamdam publishes a letter from Rao Muhammad Abdul Rahman complaining of the disregard of Muslim interests by the Hindu majority in the Saharanpur District Board and suggesting that there should be official chairmen in local bodies with Muslim secretaries where there is a Hindu majority and Hindu secretaries where there is a Muslim majority. The Mashriq complains that since the non-officialization of the district boards the condition of the Islamic maktabs in these provinces has become very unsatisfactory. Taking advantage of superiority of numbers every possible effort is being made to render this useful scheme of Sir James Meston a failure. It is surprising that the Bara Banki District Board should pass a resolution to abolish the Islamia maktabs. It is to be hoped that the Local Government will take speedy steps to counteract this undesirable tendency.

Earthquake in Japan.

The Bhavishya urges Indians to render monetary help to the Japanese in the distress caused by the recent earthquake, remarking that it is their duty to do so on account of their religious and geographical connection with the Japanese, who are, besides, the sole champions of the Asiatics against Europe.

Control of the sale of opium.

The Bhavishya says that Britain can well ignore the displeasure of other powers and bear the sight of Indians, Persians, Arabs and the Chinese getting deteriorated in health, but it can never like to get its income reduced by the control of the sale of opium. In a poor country like India the consumption of opium should be totally stopped.

The next war.

Referring to the recent Russo-Japanese and Anglo-Afghan treaties, the Najat apprehends another great war in the near future, and says that now the parties will be spreading snares for entangling Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan. It regards the situation as dangerous to India and says that it is to maintain her hold on the country that Britain is increasing her power in the East. The Medina advises England to cultivate the friendship of Muslim States in view of the impending peril of another war and wonders whether the resignation of Lord Allenby foreshadows a milder policy in Egypt.

The North-Western Railway strike.

The Leader urges the Railway Board and the Hon'ble Member for Commerce to intervene and make an earnest effort to bring about a settlement. The Hindustani makes a similar request and pleads for a sympathetic consideration of the demands of the strikers.

Next Home Member.

The Leader urges that it will be a great public advantage if the next Home Member in the United Provinces is selected from among the leading members of the bar, as it will be one of his duties to deal with the numerous and important recommendations of the Civil Justice Committee.

The next Viceroy.

The Hindustani opposes the extension of Lord Reading's term as it would only mean a prolongation of his régime of repression. Lord Birkenhead would prove no better as he would only be the former's worthy pupil in oppression and cunning and being fond of Darbars would waste a good deal of public money also. This much has been made clear by Lord Birkenhead's Assam dinner speech that diarchy will continue in defiance of Indian public opinion, but it would have been better if our next Viceroy had been a man who bore no grudge against India and was not blinded by love of power.

Primary education.

The Hamdam has a contributed article protesting against Mr. Kichlu's proposal to replace the smaller village schools by larger ones in central places as, in the opinion of the writer, the disappearance of these village schools would greatly reduce the rural school-going population.

Gurdwara Bill.

The Leader emphasizes the justice and the expediency of due heed being paid to the protests which are being uttered against the inclusion in the schedules of institutions to which Hindus and Udasis may have a more just claim.

Deportation of Moplahs.

The Sada-i-Muslim appeals to the Government of India to reconsider their decision to deport the Moplahs to the Andamans which it regards as a hell on earth.

Administration of justice.

The Hamdam refers to a recent judgment of the Allahabad High Court in which the plea of rupture of spleen was accepted in extenuation in a murder appeal and remarks that the court has set up a dangerous precedent in view of the liability of the poverty-stricken people of rural areas to this disease.

Christian nuns as nurses.

The Hamdam protests against the appointment of Christian nuns as nurses in public hospitals in the Madras Presidency and fears that they would carry on proselytising propaganda there to the great annoyance of other communities.

Foreign affairs.

The Pioneer advocates joint and effective action against the Riffs and says: If peace is to be established in Morocco, it can only be done by a joint prosecution of the campaign against Abdel Krim to the logical conclusion of all wars of this nature, namely, the reduction of the enemy to a state in which he is able to fight no longer. The Pratap evinces hearty sympathy with the Riffs in their struggle for freedom and strongly condemns the French and Spanish efforts to crush them. The paper remarks that the way in which European and American nations are "milking" the Africans and Asiatics cannot continue for long. The Riffs might be regarded as small sparks that can be extinguished in a moment, but they can also set up a mighty conflagration capable, on the one hand, of reducing to ashes the wielders of power and privileges and, on the other hand, of imparting the light of life to the oppressed nations. The Hamdam says that the delicate position of the Riffs at present loudly calls for the sympathy of the entire Muslim world and urges Indian Muslims to arrange to send at least a medical mission at once. The Sada-i-Muslim views with misgiving the growing friendship between Russia and Afghanistan and points out that as such an alliance would prove disastrous to Britain in the next war, she should forthwith cultivate friendly relations with Islamic countries. The paper regards the Singapore base as another strong link in India's subjection and asks Indians to raise a general and forceful cry against it. The anti-foreign demonstrations in China are being watched with keen interest and sympathy by the press. The Leader writes: In their struggle to free themselves from the tentacles of foreign imperialism which has all but destroyed the economic and political freedom of China, the Chinese have our fullest sympathy and we hope that out of this apparently unequal struggle they will emerge a great and united nation able to hold its own against the most powerful exploiter. Let those who in the pride of their power are trying to crush the spirit of an awakened China which, according to reports, is getting the direct moral and material support of Bolshevik Russia, beware, for they are raising the spirit of resistance and aggression among one of the most peaceful and most numerous peoples in Asia and are thus laying the foundations of another terrible racial and economic war. The Aj refers to the advice of the Times to the great powers to suppress the anarchy in China and says that this terrible imperialist organ makes such suggestions only at the instance of the British Government. If Britain meddles in the affairs of any eastern country it should be taken for granted that evil days are in store for it. If Britain and America extend their dominion in China under the pretext of suppressing anarchy the future of Japan will be shrouded in gloom. Japan will, therefore, be well-advised to establish an Asiatic Federation. The Najat apprehends that the present disturbance in China will develop into another great war and calls upon the League of Nations to take speedy steps to avert the peril.

Hej.

The news of the bombardment and blockade of Rabigh by Emir Ali's war vessels has been received with anxious concern by the Muslim Press. The Najat supports Maulana Shaukat Ali's view that the British Government are as in duty bound, responsible for the protection of the pilgrims and should compel Emir Ali to withdraw his warships from the port of Rabigh. The Haqiqat opines that once the British Government have allowed the hajis to depart from Indian shores they are responsible for their safety at sea and failing Rabigh the Government should arrange to land them safely at any of the other two ports. The Sada-i-Muslim remarks that if the British Government are unable to dissuade Emir Ali from doing mischief they should at least force him to suspend his activities during the haj season. The Medina says that the British Government possess a sufficient number of properly equipped warships in the Red Sea and would be held responsible if any of the hajis are wounded as a result of Emir Ali's naval activities there. The Oudh Akhbar says that by his action Emir Ali will incur the opprobrium of the entire Muslim world. It is strange that he has paid no heed to the Government of India's warning to him about the protection and safety of the pilgrims. The British Government should strongly call Emir Ali to account for the bombardment and should compel him to stop his offensive activities in Rabigh. The British Government as well as the shipping companies are of course responsible for the protection of pilgrims during the voyage till they have landed on Arabian soil. The Hamdam, however, is of a contrary opinion and says that the hajis must now return, as the British Government cannot and ought not to interfere in these hostilities.

Indians in Colonies.

Commenting on the report of the East African Commission the Leader says: The policy which the report has recommended is one of perpetual British trusteeship and racial domination . . . If the recommendations embodied in the report are given effect to, then it will mean not only the triumph of the white settlers but will also demonstrate to the world that the doctrine of native trusteeship as adumbrated in the Kenya White Paper of 1923 was highly misleading and meant nothing more than the subordination in perpetuity of the interests of the natives to those of the white settlers. In plain language the whole of the policy seems to be a combination of selfishness and hypocrisy. The Aj refers to the warning of the European Association of South Africa to ladies in the colony against having trade relations with Indian "coolies" for economic reasons and writes: If it is necessary to boycott Indians in the colonies, does it not follow that it is necessary for the same reasons to boycott Europeans in India.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hindu press continues to be exercised over the "Dera Ismail Khan notices". The Arya Mitra refuses to believe that responsible Muhammadans have no hand in the secret societies of the Frontier Muhammadans and the anonymous notices and contends that if the case is otherwise all the responsible Muhammadan leaders of India should convene a conference to denounce these notices and announce that they view this mean act of this "secret society" with deep disgust. This will bring the Frontier Muhammadans to their senses. The paper next invites the serious attention of the Government to the matter and says that it is their duty to protect the Frontier Hindus from the high-handedness of the Muhammadans. The Deputy Commissioner should nip the evil in the bud. The Kailas observes that the ancient Hindu nation is not going to be cowed down by the horrible and reprehensible threats of the Frontier Muhammadans. Muhammadan hooligans will cease to molest Hindu women, when the Hindus will have organised themselves. The indifferent attitude of the Hindu ruling chiefs, of the so-called leaders and of the Government towards the cases of the dishonouring of Hindu women is reprehensible and deplorable. The Bharat Jiwan exhorts Hindus to be courageous and to oppose bravely the aggression of the Frontier Muhammadans even at the cost of their lives. The Arya Mitra condemns the allegation of Hasan Nizami in the Durwesh against Aryasamajists that they take beef and says that this is the man whose destructive scheme has ruined the Hindus and kindled the fire of unrest and discontent throughout the length and breadth of the country. It is as much a lie to call the Arya samajists beef-eaters as to call the Muhammadans pork-eaters. The paper urges the Government to scrutinize the books and writings of the Nizami and take proper steps to check the spread of unrest and discontent in the country. The Nizam-i-Alam complains that the Hindu press has made it a point to publish tales of cow-killing and abduction of Hindu women by Muslims to stir up communal feeling. Muslims always show due regard for the feelings of their neighbours and never sacrifice cows publicly. As regards abduction of Hindu women it is disgraceful to give publicity to such cases. It is a pity that in their anxiety to calumniate the Muslims Hindus show such scant regard for their own reputation. Even if it be admitted that Muslim males and Hindu females are corrupt the evil should be reformed, and not advertized. The Medina has a contributed article in which the writer calls attention to reports about the oppression on Hamirpur Muslims in order to deter them from tabligh work and says that no Muslim should be victimised for carrying on tabligh propaganda.

Hindu organization.

The papers publish an appeal for the organization of the Hindu community, issued over the signatures of Raja Sir Rampal Singh and other prominent Hindu leaders of Oudh, calling attention to the poverty, disorganization and social evils among Hindus and to the danger to the community from the proselytizing activities of Christians and Muhammadans. Proceeding, it says: "If, therefore, we wish to retain our individuality and stop stagnation and further decay, it is imperative that we took steps to bring back to us the physical strength which was ours when we ruled the world. . . We must sangathanise ourselves and see that there is left no village, no town, no tahsil without having a Hindu Sabha of its own for looking after and promoting Hindu interests" The Indian Daily Telegraph in strongly supporting the appeal says: "He is no true Hindu who will not, at this crisis in the progress of his community and country, resolve to join the Sangathan movement effectively. To Lucknow Hindus, with their recollections of the recent riot, the appeal for Sangathan, we are sure, must have a special significance.".

Clemency to prisoners in United Provinces.

Warm and general satisfaction and gratitude has been expressed at the clemency shown by His Excellency the Governor to the prisoners convicted in connection with communal riots. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the step taken by the Government will be welcomed throughout India. The Government could never have started a more effective propaganda for the restoration of Hindu-Muslim unity than by the courageous resolve they have taken. We also welcome the measure as the first gesture from the Government of an adequate realization of responsibility towards the people on occasions of communal upheaval. The Aj heartily congratulates His Excellency on the magnanimity displayed by him and assures him that no Indian will commit the mistake of regarding such magnanimity as a weakness. The Anand is grateful to His Excellency for the leniency and says that this just and merciful act of his will fully satisfy the Hindus. The Bharat Jiwan expresses deep gratitude and says that if His Excellency also orders the release of the few prisoners who are still undergoing imprisonment in this connection the communal feeling will greatly subside. The Haqiqat and the Oudh Akhbar appeal for similar mercy for the accused in the Shahjahanpur and Karari riot cases respectively.

Contempt of Courts Bill.

The Press is in full accord with the committee of the Upper India Journalists' Association in its opposition to the Contempt of Courts Bill. In the opinion of the Leader the entire Bill is absolutely uncalled for and opposed to public interest. The definition of contempt of court is of so comprehensive a nature that it will become extremely difficult for journalists to comment adversely upon judicial vagaries even in a mild and restrained form. It will virtually remove the healthy influence of press criticism on the administration of justice. The Indian Daily Telegraph deplores that the bureaucracy in India should delight in forging subtle chains for the newspapers and thinks that the proposed measure would "muzzle the press effectively". The Hamdam urges the Government of India to defer to the opinion of the Journalists' Association and not to proceed further with the Bill as it contains too wide a definition of contempt of court and prescribes imprisonment as its punishment. The existing criminal code is sufficient for dealing with cases of contempt of court and no severer measure is needed.

Indian States.

The Alwar affair continues to receive considerable attention in the Press. The representative of the Partap who had gone to ascertain full facts about "the Alwar massacre" but was not allowed to proceed to Neemuchan is of opinion that the incident is of a very serious character and that people are much panic-stricken. Though the number of the killed does not amount to five or six hundred yet it is not so low as stated by the Alwar officials. The paper says that the attitude of the Alwar officials shows that they do not want that people should know full facts about the incident. The Vartman remarks that the tragedy seems to be of such a serious nature that attempts are made to conceal it. It is therefore necessary that an impartial commission should be appointed to investigate the affair and save the unfortunate villagers from despotism. The Hamdam observes that Indians are very conservative and love their old ruling chiefs and the Government would gain great popularity if they were to reinstate the Maharaja of Nabha and restore Berar to the Nizam.

Military training for Indians.

The Leader calls attention to the statement made by Mr. F. H. Brown, C.I.E., in the course of a speech in London that the military authorities blocked the way to the eligibility of Indians for admission to officers' training corps in the Universities where they were studying and says: We fail to understand on what ground admission is opposed when Indians can hold Commissions in the regular forces, and what calamity would have befallen the Empire if the demand had been conceded.

Lord Reading.

The Indian Daily Telegraph welcomes the news that Lord Reading's term of Viceroyalty will not be extended as, in its opinion, His Excellency has alienated not only the people of India, but also the princes. His "judicial" dealings with Nabha and Suket have startled the princes out of security. And as for the people the Reading regime has been a colossal failure. The most lawless laws were enacted during his period under which Bengal is still smarting.

Bawla murder case.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The almost personal attacks on the person and throne of His Highness the Maharajah of Indore in a section of the Indian press ever since the judgment in the Bawla murder trial, mark a debasing feature of journalism in this country. It is almost shocking to realize that without any evidence a campaign of calumny should be directed against Indore. Whoever the conspirators, certainly it cannot be the head of the state that rendered all help to the Bombay police in arresting the accused and in tracing and collecting all possible evidence against them. The Pratap also condemns the insinuations which are being made against the Maharajah and says: Even if by some stretch of imagination it could be proved that the Maharajah had some hand in the Bawla murder, the British authorities deserve a thousand times greater punishment than he has already suffered or deserves to suffer, for it is their policy which makes Indian princes the embodiments of sensuality and tyranny. And relying on the unwholesome favours of these authorities there are dozens of Indian princes who have so far advanced in the gratification of licentiousness and sensuality that the poor Holkar pales into insignificance before them.

Railway strikes.

Referring to the B. and N.-W. Railway strike, the Indian Daily Telegraph calls attention to the allegation that the railway company has been able to utilise the police to strike terror into the hearts of the strikers and says: Public life in Gorakhpur would be a mockery if responsible men do not come forward to protest against this police subserviency to capitalist interests. The Bharat Jiwan refutes the contention of the N.-W. Railway authorities that the strike was totally unjustified and has failed to dislocate railway work, saying that if there had been no justification for it, thousands of men would not have given up their vocation and roamed about from place to place starving and flying flags coloured with their blood. We think that the matter has been sufficiently prolonged, and the Government should conduct proper inquiries soon.

The ban against Mr. Malaviya.

The Kailas remarks that the Nizam's ban against Pandit Malaviya has pained the entire Hindu commuity. This together with the fact that the Nizam did not prohibit Khwaja Hasan Nizami from touring in his dominion and openly creating feeling against the Hindus clearly shows that the Nizamdom of Hyderabad is proving to be the reign of Aurangzeb for the local Hindus. The emancipation of the Hindu community can be brought about if only all the Hindu ruling chiefs join the Hindu Sabhas. The Vartman opines that the Nizam's despotic order against Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is insulting to the whole Hindu community. It shows that the condition of the Hindus is extremely deplorable in the Nizam's dominion. It is a pity that the Nizam has not imbibed the spirit of the twentieth century or of the British democracy.

Local Self-Government.

The Hamdam publishes a letter complaining of the attitude of the Hindu majority in the Benares District Board and pointing out that while that body has dismissed its Hakim it has retained its Vaidya on a much higher pay. A capable Muslim engineer was passed over and a less qualified and less experienced Hindu Engineer was appointed. Referring to the resignations of Muslim members from the Jhansi Municipal Board the Sada-i-Muslim urges Government to turn their attention forthwith to Muslim grievances in local bodies and to redress them.

Flood Relief Fund.

The Oudh Akhbar suggests that the unspent amount of the United Provinces Flood Relief Fund should either be kept in the form of a fixed deposit to meet similar calamities in the future or be spent in fixing iron railings on the bridges on the Ganges and the Jumna.

Next Home Member.

The Anand recommends the names of Pandit (Hon'ble Mr. Justice) Kanhaiya Lal and Raja Rampal Singh for the post of Home Member, after the retirement of the Hon'ble Raja (sic) of Mahmudabad and says that the appointment of either of the two personages will be viewed with satisfaction all over the province.

Muslim affairs.

The Hamdam publishes a letter complaining that pressure is being put on nau-Muslims in the Tirwa estate in the Farrukhabad district to forsake their religion. The paper thanks the Government of Bengal for the recess granted by them for Juma prayers and hopes that the Government of India will issue general orders on the same lines for the whole country.

Recording of evidence in English

The Oudh Punch ridicules the Allahabad High Court's circular order to judicial officers to record evidence in English. The Anand Pracharak advises the people to hold protest meetings against the order in every district and requests the Hon'ble High Court to reconsider the improper order. The Hamdam and Azad strongly support the resolutions passed by several Bar Associations in these provinces against the order and remark that if it is brought into force the evidence recorded would not be the exact statement of the witnesses, but the interpretation put upon it by the recording officer.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

The Shakti says that Lord Birkenhead's speech at the Assam dinner shows that he is not going to do anything for India till 1929. He has well brought about the regeneration of India by surfeiting her with repression.

Balrampur and Mahmudabad estates.

The Haqiqat appeals to His Excellency Sir William Marris to recommend the grant of feudatory status to the estates of Mahmudabad and Balrampur.

Foreign affairs.

Newspapers continue to condemn the policy of European Powers with regard to China and to evince hearty sympathy with the Chinese in their efforts to free themselves from foreign exploitation. The Leader writes:—"If the foreigners do not abate their arrogance and treat the Chinese as equals as they do the Japanese, the trouble is bound to increase. An awakened China will not put up with insults any more, and it is time that this fact is realised by those who are intoxicated with the pride of power." The Indian Daily Telegraph says that like vultures foreigners have been sitting round China in the hope that they would soon have a carcass to divide. This is a most deliberate attempt to keep down a great people from coming to their own, so that the European workers may find a market for their goods. What they call anti-foreign riots are but the merest expression of national indignation of Young China that finds itself choked under the heels of the merciless foreigner. Referring to the shooting of an Indian named Abdur Rahman Peshawari in Turkey the Vartman says that if a French, German or an Englishman had received such a shower of bullets there would have been a commotion all over the world but there is no one to look after poor and subject India. It hopes that this incident will serve as a lesson to the Indian Muhammadans who are never tired of singing the praises of Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan. The Oudh Akhbar condemns the attitude of the Allies in respect of the evacuation of Cologne as a serious violation of the Treaty of Versailles and remarks that it is bound to engender hatred and disaffection against the Allies and is likely to lead to another war for which they alone will be to blame. The Hamdam regards as cowardly and inhuman the Spanish idea of blockading the Riff coast and bombing the Riffs from the air and hopes that Britain will not be influenced by an agreement, past or present, to adopt any attitude in this connection which may further alienate Muslim sympathy. The Medina denounces the "persistently dishonest" attitude of France and Spain towards the Riffs and says that it is only their patriotism which is enabling these ill-equipped men to fight the organised might of the proud European Powers who are always ready to deprive God's creatures of their freedom. These Powers have not learnt a lesson even from the devastating effects of the last Great War with which God visited them as a punishment and are still blinded by Imperialism and Capitalism but God will help the Riffs. Referring to the Italian note to Afghanistan regarding the execution of an Italian engineer the Sada-i-Muslim writes that without the support and encouragement of other Powers, Italy could not dare to send such a challenge to Afghanistan. Italy and her allies should, however, know that they cannot throw even a slanting glance at Afghanistan. The time has passed when Muslim territories could be usurped by means of throwing an apple of discord among them. Now every Muslim, be he an Indian, Tartar, Turk or Egyptian regards it as his prime duty to help Afghanistan even at the risk of his life and property.

Haj.

Referring to the shelling of Rabigh by Emir Ali's war vessels the Anand says that Muhammadans ought to have been sorry for their shortsightedness in insisting upon going to haj against the Government's warning but on the contrary, Mahomed Ali is accusing the Government of India and holding them responsible for the safety of pilgrims. Is it not like a thief accusing the kotwal (police officer)? Referring to Maulana Shaukat Ali's telegraphic message about the bombardment of Rabigh, the Oudh Akhbar holds the Government of India as well as the shipping companies responsible for the safe landing of the Indian pilgrims and suggests that the Government of India should strongly press Emir Ali to stop the bombardment, else it fears that the whole blame will fall on their shoulders. The Rahnuma expresses horror at the bombardment and says that Indian Muslims are anxiously waiting to see what steps the Government of India take to protect the Indian pilgrims. The Najat characterises as sheer audacity the obstruction by Emir Ali of the pilgrims of an empire known as the "Queen of the Seas" and observes that it appears that in spite of her wide resources, the "Queen" does not desire to use her influence and to intervene in the matter. There are persons who suspect the hand of some of the British statesmen in the activities of Emir Ali and it is just possible that their suspicion may be correct to some extent. Mr. MacNeill's advice in the British Parliament for the postponement of the haj pilgrimage this year supports the belief that Britain avoids entering into any negotiations with Emir Ali about haj. The Hamdam, however, publishes with approval the views of Maulana Abdul Bari and Sheikh Mushir Husain Qidwai denouncing the demand of a section of Indian Muslims for British aid in landing Indian hajis at some port in the Hedjaz and deploring its shortsightedness in inviting British interference between two Muslim states at war on the holy soil of Arabia.

Reforms in Bengal.

The news of the resumption of the transferred subjects in Bengal has been hailed by the entire Extremist press as a triumph of the Swarajist party. The Leader, while admitting that the behaviour of the present Bengal Legislative Council on successive occasions was so lacking in clear-sightedness and intelligent consistency that on the face of it the decision of the Government of India and the Secretary of State in Council looks a justifiable proceeding, thinks that as statesmen it was their duty to take a broad-minded and far-sighted view of the position and the prospect and to base their judgment upon a higher conception of policy. The paper adds that at the present juncture their action can, and will largely be interpreted as a sign of their leaning towards the "scrapping of the Reforms" and as an indication of the probable outcome of the Reading-Birkenhead conversations. The Indian Daily Teleyraph writes: Diarchy has brought nothing for the people: it did bring something for the bureaucrats, because it enabled them to mislead the outside world into the belief that India had responsible government. The credit goes entirely to the Swarajists for tearing away the mask from the Government and forcing them to show their cloven hoof. The action of the Government ought to instil into minds that have not hitherto felt it, the ennobling feelings of self-respect and pride. The disappearance of the Ministers does not mean anything else than the effacement of the demoralising institution which enabled a few men to draw high salaries in the name of representatives of the people, when they were really helpless slaves of the Government. The Bhavishya congratulates the Swarajists of Bengal, and specially Mr. C. R. Das, on their success and says that the resumption will expose the hollowness of diarchy all over the country and lead to a saving of one lac of rupees yearly. The Aj writing in a similar strain hopes that the Central Provinces will follow suit. It is certain that if bogus Ministers are not allowed to raise their heads in these two provinces till 1927 there will be a Swarajist majority in the next elections and diarchy will end by 1929. It is better not to have powers at all than to have sham and humiliating powers like those conferred under this system. The Sada-i-Muslim says that the sole object of Messrs. Das and Nehru was to end diarchy and the object has now been attained. The Reforms were calculated merely to prolong the period of India's servitude. Now, by peaceful methods, Government should be compelled to inaugurate such a scheme of Reforms as may give some real weight to the voice of the Councils and some substantial power to the Indian Ministers. The Hamdam believes the Goverment will now have ample opportunity for improving the deplorable educational condition of Bengal Muslims and funds for that purpose will probably be not refused by the Council.

Death of Mr. C. R. Das.

All papers irrespective of political views join in mourning the death of Mr. C. R. Das as an irreparable national loss and paying eloquent tributes to his patriotism, self-sacrifice, dominating personality and dynamic powers of organisation. The Leader writes: —"We never have been of Mr. Das's party: We did not share his views; we could not approve of his ways. The more ready are we for this reason to bear testimony to his personality, to qualities in him which deserved respect and extorted admiration, to his public spirit and his self-sacrifice. He had a passion for the freedom of his country and there was nothing he was not prepared to do, no price he was not ready to pay, to achieve that freedom." In another note the paper highly commends the messages of sympathy and condolence sent by His Excellency the Viceroy and prominent non-official Europeans and says that such sympathy on such an occasion has the effect of lifting public life to a higher plane. The Oudh Akhbar says that the best way of mourning the death of Mr. Das would be the furtherance of the cause he had so much at heart. The Hamdam extols his great self-sacrifice and his remarkable qualities of leadership which were second only to those of Mr. Gandhi. He gave proof of great political acumen in keeping Bengal Muslims on his side by conceding them their just rights and he leaves a gap in Indian public life which it would be extremely difficult to fill and his death just on the eve of his victory, as demonstrated by the resumption of transferred subjects, is doubly deplorable.

Hindu Muslim relations.

Hindu papers apprehend serious trouble in Lucknow, Delhi and Bahraich on the occasion of the next Bakr-id. The Bhavishya says that in view of the danger at Delhi virtuous Hindu women of that city have procured arsenic and opium to enable them to protect their chastity by committing suicide, if necessary. The paper deplores that instead of responding to the appeal of the Hindus of Delhi Mr. Gandhi has preached the doctrine of forbearance. Addressing him, the paper says:—"As a result of following your teachings of self-abnegation, non-violence, and forbearance, Hindus have become so forbearing and non-violent that they remain passive even at the sight of their women being assaulted, houses being looted and burnt, and brothers and sisters being killed. What greater forbearance do you wish to inculcate now?" While admitting that the Hindu opposition to cow-sacrifice is in some respects unreasoning, the Aj appeals to Muslims not to treat with contempt the tenderest susceptibilities of the Hindu community on this subject if they want to make India free and thereby also save Islam which is in danger of being crushed all over the world (by European Powers). The Anand says that the frequent religious meetings that are being convened by Muhammadans in Lucknow by beat of drum lead people to suspect some secret motive behind them. It is not at all difficult to incite people in the name of religion. The peace-loving citizens and officials should be forewarned. The Kailas apprehends trouble in Delhi on account of the permission granted to Muhammadans to take out the cow procession and says that the Delhi officials should have taken a lesson from the last disturbance and should not have bowed before the hooliganism of Muhammadans. The Government ought to think of the evil consequences of this horrible permission which they have given in order to ruin the Hindus and wound their religious susceptibilities. If a disturbance again takes place the Local Government will be held responsible for it. Referring to the permission granted to Muhammadans to take out the cow procession, the Bhavishya says that the cow-eating English officials who rule with ease by setting the two brothers by the ears do not care if the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus are wounded or they are robbed and belaboured. The paper, however, advises the Hindus not to obstruct the taking out of the cow in contravention of this unjust permission as their organisation is not yet strong enough to make their influence felt by the Muhammadans and officials. The Abhaya expresses great anxiety about the Hindus of Bahraich and fears that as they are small in number and have a Muhammadan Collector who is free to do what he likes, they also may have to share the same fate as their brethren in Saharanpur. The Vartman publishes a letter complaining that most of the Bahraich officials are Muhammadans and as they are sufficiently under the influence of Hasan Nizami's scheme they cherish ill-will against the Arya Samajists. In the Syed Salar Fair Muhammadans were openly provoking the Hindus. Hindus recovered ninety-nine Hindu women and fifty-two children from the possession of Muhammadan rowdies. The ill-treatment of the Hindu women was shocking and it would be indelicate to say what happened to them inside the mausoleum.—The Hindu press also continues to be perturbed over the intimidating notices to the Hindus of Dera Ismail Khan, especially as they were followed by the burning of their houses. The Anand deplores that owing to the failure to make precautionary arrangements for protecting the Hindus they have had to undergo these sufferings and says that it is the duty of the Dera Ismail Khan authorities to bring the hooligans to book and of the Hindus to organise and protect themselves. The Vartman says that in such a dangerous situation the Deputy Commissioner should act with great caution. If the Hindus have suspicions against the police he should replace it by an impartial force capable of protecting the public from such mischief. If the Muhammadans are not put down with a firm hand the Frontier Hindus will lose heavily in life and property and the entire responsibility for this will lie on the shoulders of the Government. Hindus should guard their quarters with lathis. The Aj is anxious to know what action the authorities have taken to rectify the wrong. The fact that so many notices could be posted without the knowledge of the police is calculated to rouse suspicions. The authorities should remember that the eyes of the whole of India are directed towards Dera Ismail Khan at the present juncture. In a note on Hasan Nizami the Pratap says that the zeal with which the work of tabligh is being carried on at the present juncture was not evinced even in the time of Muhammadan rulers and the methods which are being employed for the purpose are most objectionable. Every day newspapers publish reports about the abduction of Hindu girls and women, from one end of the country to the other. This is not in conformity with the sublime teachings of Islam but in order to keep ignorant Muhammadans under their control the Moulvis have employed even prostitutes to do the work. Khwaja Hasan Nizami has excelled all such Maulvis. He has openly advocated methods for spreading Islam in every possible way with the help of prostitutes, bangle-sellers, ekka-drivers, and the like. Maulana Muhammad Anis Bilgrami urges in the Hamdam the organization of counter-propaganda by Oudh Muslims in reply to Raja Sir Ram Pal Singh's appeal for Hindu Sangathan and the editor opines that while the ullema should conduct a vigorous tabligh campaign, the Muslim taluqdars should try to improve the economic status of nau-Muslims as it is generally their poverty which makes them forsake their religion. Referring to disquieting reports about Hindu-Muslim tension in Delhi and other cities in connection with the approaching Bakr-id festival, the Haqiqat points out that the atmosphere is heavily charged owing to the contest between the Shuddhi-Sangathan and Tabligh-Tanzim movements and leaders of both communities should immediately devise means to prevent a conflict. The Hamdam is surprised at the efforts of the Delhi Hindus to stop the passage of the sacrificial cows through Pahari Dhiraj on the occasion of the Bakr-id and says that as Delhi Muslims already labour under a disadvantage in having to take cows outside the city for sacrifice their difficulties should not be increased. Under the heading "An Arya Martyr". the Patriot publishes an editorial article giving an account of the death of Babu Narain Singh of Patna, "an intrepid and zealous Arya Samajist" at the hands of Moslem hooligans. It says: "Babu Narain Singh has died a martyr. He sacrificed his life in the cause of the Arya Samaj and in championing the cause of the Hindus against the aggression of Muslims. It is the lookout of the British officials, for their own sake and for the sake of the good name of British administration, that the long arm of the law should not fail in this case."

The Shankar publishes an article from Lala Har Dayal (Sweden) in which the Lala urges that the Hindus should conduct all their activities through the medium of the Hindu Maha Sabha. Swaraj can be attained only when England is alarmed to see the growing power of the Hindu Sangathan and this Sangathan is supported by Nepal. Hindus should not look to Muhammadans for help as they are not to be trusted and may prove false at the crucial moment. They should resolve to take Swaraj whether theMuhammadans help them, remain neutral or even hostile. Hindus can establish Hindu Raj even in face of Muhammadan opposition. They have got to attain their ideal by strengthening their agitation and acting with self-reliance and should go on advancing towards it firmly and resolutely. For the attainment of this ideal Shuddhi, Hindu Sangathan and Hindu Raj are extremely necessary. Commenting on this the editor of the paper says that at present Lala Har Dayal is against the policy of the Congress but if the British Government allow him to come to India and to stay here for some time to study the situation he will become a convert to the Congress view. The paper agrees with the Lala that if Muhammadans do not stand by the Hindus the latter should not care for them but go on advancing towards their national goal. The Pratap reproduces from the Hindi of Natal "Raja" Mahendra Pratap's letter describing the facilities of board and lodging offered to political sanyasis by the Ghadar Party of America. In this letter the writer exhorts Indians to go and reside in the beautiful three-storeyed building (No. 5, Wood Street, California) situated on a high hill in a charming locality and says that he himself is not a member of the Ghadar Party but is only a guest of it and is writing this in compliance with the request of certain workers of the party. The Hamdam publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap, who says that he is proceeding with certain other Indian patriots to Tibet and Nepal to create sympathy for India both in the populace and elité of those countries. The "Raja" is of opinion that there are many sincere friends of India in Afghanistan, Russia and Japan who are prepared to undergo sufferings for her sake and that propaganda in neighbouring countries will considerably advance the cause of India's freedom. The editor wishes the mission success so far as it relates to the propagation of India's ideal of Swaraj in Tibet and Nepal.

Indian States.

The Pratap criticizes at length the communiqué issued by the Alwar authorities and says that some facts given in it accord with those contained in the non-official statement, e.g. the siege of Nemuchan, the outbreak of fire and the firing of shots. The official statement is silent about the extent of loss, the taking possession of wells and efforts, if any, to extinguish the fire. It does not mention how much ammunition and how many men and guns were sent to win this battle of Nemuchan. It cannot be regarded as satisfactory in any way. It is full of efforts to exonerate the authorities and to establish the guilt of the villagers. The Shankar publishes two open letters to the Nizam of Hyderabad in which the writer says that since the present Nizam has assumed the reins of government great injustice is being done to the Hindus not only in political but also in religious matters. The new councillors of the Nizam, particularly the bigoted action against the Hindus of Gulbarga, have won for his government the nickname of Moghlai Raj which in Marathi means something like a "reign of injustice." In view of all this the British subjects of Berar cannot like to go under the Nizam's protection. In the course of a leading article the Abhyudaya strongly protests against the Jarida of the Nizam in connection with the management of the Gudwal estate and says that the conditions laid down in it are so difficult of fulfilment that it practically amounts to the confiscation of the estate. The paper invites attention to the "tyrannical" attitude of the Nizam towards Lakshmi Bai, the widowed Rani of the estate, and appeals to all newspapers and the whole Hindu community to espouse her cause and carry on a vigorous agitation in her behalf. "We wish that the wail of injustice should resound throughout the world." The papers extol the action of the Maharaja of Kotah in enforcing in his state the law relating to change of religion by minors. The Vartman congratulates the Maharaja on the new law debarring men below eighteen and women below twenty from changing their religion without a certificate from a first class magistrate and appeals to other Indian chiefs to follow suit and thus save their women and children from falling into the hands of bad characters. The Aj heartily supports the punishment of three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of one thousand rupees which the law prescribes for the defaulters and observes that those who steal away women and children deserve severer punishment than common thieves and dacoits who only steal property. The Haqiqat is suspicious of the Maharaja of Alwar's refusal to allow impartial persons to proceed to Neemuchan to make enquiries on the spot and says that the rejoinder to the Alwar communiqué published by the representative of the Pratap shows that the state is trying to conceal the oppression practised. It is a pity that affairs in Indian states have been in a very bad way of late and the subjects in those states which possess the support of the Government of India are severely oppressed. It is high time that political organisation in British India took up the cause of the subjects of such states. The Maharaja Saheb of Alwar should allay further suspicions by permitting impartial journalists to proceed to the spot.

Law of infanticide.

The Leader supports the view expressed by Mr. Justice Percival and Mr. Justice Mirza of the Bombay High Court in their judgment in the case of a Hindu widow charged with killing her child that the Indian law might be brought into line with the law of infanticide in other civilized countries like France and Germany and says: "Such a change of law is especially necessary in this country where the widows are driven to infanticide by the tyranny of society. We hope that the Government of India will take the matter seriously into consideration and introduce the suggested reform in the penal law of the country."

Indians in Colonies.

Referring to the warning conveyed by the European Association of South Africa to European ladies in the Colony that trade relations with Indian "coolies" would result in the unemployment of their husbands, the starvation of their children, and the ruin of their nation the Surya asks if this does not clearly show that Englishmen cannot bear to see the progress of Indians. Is it becoming of the English society which boasts of its culture and sense of justice? The Aj approves the idea of the establishment of a "Pravasi Bharatiya Sahayak Mandal" (society for helping Indians abroad) at Benares and says that it is the duty of every Indian to relieve the sufferings of his compatriots in British and independent colonies because Indians cannot expect any sincere sympathy or real help from this alien Government.

Lord Reading.

The Gharib says that it matters little who comes here as Viceroy because all are of the same mentality. Lord Reading was famous all over the world for his justice but there was no injustice left undone in his régime. The black deeds of Lord Reading like those of other white officials, are tarnishing the pages of history. This was the Viceroy who dared to insult humanity by imprisoning a great man like Mahatma Gandhi. A number of innocent Bengali youths are still rotting in jails. It was in his régime that hundreds of Sikhs were pulled by their hair. We do not want such a Viceroy. We want a representative elected by ourselves to protect us. Howsoever kind a Viceroy may come the miseries of India cannot be removed so long as Swaraj is not established in the country.

The Services.

The Bharat Jiwan wonders why in spite of various efforts to induce the young men of Britain to join the services, the services are not attracting them and says: We hear that the rats desert the ship which is about to sink even if it is laden with the most sumptuous provisions. Is the case of the services similar?

Local self-government.

The Hamdam is grieved to note the anti-Muslim attitude of the Hindu majority in the Jhansi municipality and says that the expectations raised by the election of Swarajist and Khilafatist members to local bodies have been generally belied and complaints are being frequently received regarding the behaviour of the Hindu majority in many of them. Will the Hindu majorities now show better administrative capacity?

The Moplahs.

The Medina appeals to Government not to deport the Moplahs to the insalubrious Andaman Isles, as this would lead to their extermination in course of time. Their transport by sea in boats during the rains would also be attended with great danger to life and there might be a repetition of the Moplah train tragedy. Both the time and the method of deportation are tyrannical and improper. The Moplahs are not migrating willingly and Muslim feeling should not be so recklessly flouted lest peace may be imperilled.

Clemency to prisoners in the United Provinces.

While joining in the tribute of gratitude to His Excellency the Governor for clemency to communal convicts the Khurshed regrets that the Kandhla convicts have been ignored and therefore advises the Muslims of Muzaffarnagar to agitate for their release.

The Honours list.

The Azad can find few names in the Birthday Honours list which are distinguished for sincere patriotism and complains that the petty titles of Rai Bahadur and Khan Bahadur which ought to be reserved for Government officials are awarded to public men also. It would be better if Kaisar-i-Hind medals and the titles of M.B.E., O.B.E., C.I.E., etc., were granted to public men.

Recording of evidence in English.

Criticising the circular order of the Allahabad High Court in regard to the recording of evidence in English the Rahnuma remarks that the change will no doubt facilitate the work of English officers but will prove very harmful to the public and requests the Hon'ble Chief Justice to rescind it.

North-Western Railway strike.

Referring to the taking out of the blood-smeared banner by the strikers the Gharib says that the strikers have been compelled to do so because they do not get bread enough to satisfy their hunger. The British Government are not ashamed to turn a deaf ear to the pathetic cries of fifty thousand starving coolies and labourers while they appoint a Royal Commission to enquire even into the pettiest grievances of Englishmen.

Christian missionary activities.

The Bharat Dharma warns the Hindus against the proselytising activities of Christian missionaries who are maintained at Government expense and says that these men carry on their activities freely in leper asylums and reformatory schools and thus act in contravention of the Government policy of non-interference in religious matters. It appeals to councillors to take up the question of supervising such Government institutions.

Traffic in girls.

Referring to the traffic in girls in certain hill estates near Simla the Aj wonders if the estates in which such diabolical and sinful trade is carried on are still regarded as a part of the British Empire.

Campaign against leprosy.

The Abhyudaya says that if the campaign which has been inaugurated for stamping out leprosy becomes successful, the British administration will be immortalised in the annals of India. In this connection the paper requests the Government to test the efficacy of those indigenous medicines also which are claimed by Ayurvedic physicians to cure this disease.

Foreign affairs.

Commenting on the growth of anti-British feeling in China the Aj refers to the Shanghai incident and says that in view of their experience of firing, Indians can hardly believe that the British troops fired in self-defence. It, however, does not approve of the Chinese attitude and observes that China will be well-advised not to wage war with Britain. The Anand thinks that if the anti-British agitation in China is not stopped, Britain will also follow the policy of crushing China with a strong hand, because it is idle to expect from the present Government that they will sacrifice their interests by making a compromise with China. Referring to the growing pro-Bolshevik and anti-British feeling in China, the Medina asks whether Britain is going to sacrifice her position in the Pacific for the gratification of her imperialistic lust. Is there any country in the world which loves Britain to-day? From all countries, Arabia, Persia, Afghanistan, India, Egypt, China, Turkistan, Germany, Austria and Russia cries of hatred are being raised against her. The Najat apprehends war between China and Britain and prays that the European Powers may even at this stage come to their senses and realise that it is no longer an easy task to enslave the eastern nations. Discussing the present world situation and the possibility of another great war the paper warns Britain that the next war is not likely to prove advantageous to her as she has alienated Muslim sympathy by her selfish and anti-Muslim attitude. Her autocracy has wounded Egypt and the Sudan and has wrought havoc in Mesopotamia, Jazirat-ul-Arab and Palestine. She encouraged Italy to attack Tripoli and now her kind attention has been turned towards the Riffs. It is said that Spain and France will have her moral sympathy in blockading the Riffs and if this is true how can Britain expect Muslim sympathy and help? The Muslim Press is unanimous in regarding the demands presented by Italy to Afghanistan in connection with the execution of Engineer Piperno as unreasonable and unjust and as deserving rejection by any state which is at all jealous of its independence. The Medina remarks that though they may please the Qadians and the British Consulate they cannot be supported by any fair-minded person. The Hamdam justifies the execution and is sorry to find that the proud Western nations are so touchy. As Afghanistan does not possess a sea-board it offers no opportunity for naval action and the severance of diplomatic and trade relations would injure Italy more than Afghanistan. Italy would be well-advised in not sacrificing the friendship of the brave and self-respecting Afghans over such a minor matter. The Oudh Akhbar thinks that the honour of the whole of Asia is involved in the insulting, disgraceful and ridiculous terms of the Italian note and urges Afghanistan not to yield, however hard she may be pressed by her allies.

Haj.

In supporting Maulanas Abdul Bari and Shaukat Ali in their opinion about non-interference of outside Powers in the Hedjaz affairs, the Najat observes that the advance of British warships towards Rabigh has caused a commotion among Indian Muslims and urges that British action should be confined to a protest against the obstruction of Indian pilgrims by Emir Ali. Maulana Kifayat Ullah, President, Jamiat-ul-Ullema-i-Hind, Delhi, writing in the Hamdam, appeals to the Government of India to publish a detailed communiqué about the situation at Rabigh and to use only persuasion with Emir Ali to induce him to allow the hajis to land there. Failing Rabigh the hajis may be landed at any other port and if all ports are controlled by Emir Ali, the hajis may be returned to India. Anyway, the

INDIA OFFICE 21 JUL 1925 LIBRARY

British warships reported to have been despatched to Rabigh should not, under the pretext of protecting the rights of their nationals, occupy any Hedjaz port or in any other way interfere with the hostilities between Emir Ali and Ibn Saud. The Medina is dissatisfied with Britain's action in allowing two ships of Emir Ali to take water and coal at Port Sudan and points out that this action has thoroughly exposed British protestations of neutrality. Britain sold her ships to Emir Ali and now allows them to coal at a British port, so that after taking abundant stores and materials they may be able to bombard Rabigh. The Government of India are secretly intriguing to make haj unsuccessful this year and thus to harass Ibn Saud and the Islamic world. If Indian protests are of any avail the Government should thrust the ships of Emir Ali far away from the shores of Arabia and anchor the pilgrim steamers at Rabigh. The least that the Government should do to regain the confidence of Indian Muslims is to land the hajis in Arabia.

Reforms.

Referring to the forecast of the London correspondent of the Statesman about the outcome of the conversations between Lord Birkenhead and the Viceroy, the Leader says:—"Should the forecast turn out to be true it would certainly confirm the impression which has been gaining ground in this country for some time past that the forces of reactionaryism are gathering in volume and strength. If the Government of India and the Secretary of State think that they will find any section of political India to approve of their present attitude and to stand by them in their present policy they are greatly mistaken. Our internal differences may be deep or superficial but on one point we are all agreed and it is that India cannot very much longer be kept out of its legitimate rights and its lawful position. . . . The real thing to do is to show that the country at large is in dead earnest about further progress and we think we shall be utilizing our energies better by seriously attempting to set our own house in order." Referring to the disappointing forecasts about the results of the Birkenhead-Reading consultations and the great loss of strength in the political struggle due to Mr. Das's death, the Haqiqat advises all Indian political parties to sink their differences and to present a united and irresistible front to Lords Birkenhead and Reading.

Reforms in Bengal.

The Abhyudaya congratulates the Bengalis on their victory in getting the reforms strangled by the Government's own hands and says:—We have no complaint against the Government, for it was but meet to put an end to the hollow reforms. The decision of the Government, however, reveals the angle of vision of the higher authorities in India and England and their future intentions in this country. The Oudh Akhbar regards the resumption of transferred subjects in Bengal as a victory for the Swarajists and says that if the Central Provinces follow suit, it will be the duty of the United Provinces also to get rid of these frivolities. If the end of the Reforms in Bengal is the first outcome of the Reading-Birkenhead conversations further advantages from them to India would be simply inconceivable. The paper thinks that owing to the communal discord and strife engendered by the shuddhi, tanzim and tabligh movements the Government have become autocratic and therefore asks the organisers of these movements to realise their responsibility in the matter.

Death of Mr. C. R. Das.

The Press continues to mourn the death of Mr. C. R. Das and to pay warm tributes to his patriotism, self-sacrifice and his achievements as the foremost leader of the Swaraj party. "Nationalist" papers are generally of opinion that the best and the sincerest tribute to his memory would be to try and put an end to diarchy which had been his immediate objective. The Leader advises the Swarajists to take careful stock of the altered situation and adjust their policy accordingly. If the policy indicated by Mr. Das in his Faridpur speech is followed, the Bengal Swarajists may be able to extricate themselves from the difficult position in which they are placed. Their policy has led them to a cul-de-sac and they have to retrace their steps before they can make further progress. The Advocate writes:—"Had Deshbandhu lived a little longer he would have seen the complete destruction of diarchy in every province in India and now it devolves upon his followers to see that diarchy is rooted out wholesale from every province in India." The Vartman says that the Deshbandhu had promised that in case the bureaucracy did not concede the demands of the Swaraj party they would ask voters to stop the payment of taxes, but he left the world just when the time for doing so had come. The Anand remarks:—The clever pilot has abandoned the boat of unfortunate India in mid-stream. The Bengal tiger has himself disappeared after putting an end to diarchy. His death has shrouded in gloom the political horizon of India and plunged the entire country into sorrow. The Aj observes that the Deshbandhu met his death like Lord Nelson on receiving the news of his victory. He entered the Council to break it and succeeded in doing so, despite all efforts of the Governments of Bengal and India to the contrary. We have now got to push on his work. We should commemorate his death by putting an end to diarchy before 1929. The Muslim Press also universally deplores the death of Mr. C. R. Das in whom it recognised an undoubted champion of the just rights of Indian Muslims. The Haqiqat says that he was equally trusted by both communities, and has left a void in Indian public life which it would be difficult to fill. His death has been the most widely mourned in India since Mr. Gokhale's and he undoubtedly possessed great qualities of statesmanship. The Hamdam extols the spirit of self-sacrifice and the matchless qualities of leadership possessed by Mr. C. R. Das and says that he was able to keep Bengal Muslims by his side by his scrupulous regard for their just rights. In another article the paper supports Mr. Gandhi's proposal for the release of all political prisoners as a mark of respect to the memory of Mr. C. R. Das and says that this would be the best method of bringing about that atmosphere of good-will without which a conference to consider the demands of Indians cannot be successful. The Government can considerably weaken the opposition of the Swaraj party which is now leaderless if it releases all political prisoners forthwith. The Medina regards Mr. Das as one of the greatest champions of a united Indian nationality and says that few political leaders could equal him in freedom from prejudice, independence, statesmanship, wisdom, self-sacrifice, sincerity, tolerance and energy. It was at his call that the student population of Bengal flocked to the standard of non-cooperation. He was an inveterate enemy of diarchy and it must have given him great satisfaction to have witnessed the beginning of its end. His greatest achievement was the Bengal Pact which will serve as a model for future agreements for Hindu-Muslim unity when relations between the two communities again become normal. Let us hope that another though lesser leader will arise in Bengal and the god of autocracy will not be allowed to rest in peace in that province.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers remain agitated over the alarming reports received from Dera Ismail Khan, but are considerably relieved with regard to the situation in Delhi and Lucknow. The settlement arrived at in these two cities regarding Bakr-Id has generally been received with immense satisfaction and the avoidance of communal friction on that occasion is being earnestly urged both by the Hindu and the Muslim papers. Referring to the alarmist rumours concerning Dera Ismail Khan the Pioneer thinks that there are malicious persons who are ready to take advantage of communal suspicion in order to bring about disorder. An alarmist campaign of this kind has evil possibilities, and if the authors of it are discovered they should be severely dealt with. The Indian Daily Telegraph rejoices over the token of amity shown by the Muslim leaders of Lucknow by deciding that there shall be no cow processions in the city during Bakr-Id and says:—"Every citizen in Lucknow will realise with gratification and delight that the clouds of suspicion have rolled away and that, hereafter, the ugly scars left by the last riots will never be publicly exposed. If this spirit that comes from Lucknow should spread to other parts of these provinces and to other presidencies, a real beginning would have been made to gain the position from whence the advance guard of the nationalist army found itself rudely dislodged." The Advocate also writes in a similar strain. Referring to the press communiqué on the situation at Dera Ismail Khan, the Indian Daily Telegraph says that it will neither hearten up the minority who are threatened with dire visitations in the town, nor assuage Hindu anxiety outside the affected area. The Arya Mitra condemns the action of Dharampal in writing secret letters to Muhammadans all over India exhorting them to agitate for the proscription of the 14th chapter of the Satyarth Prakash and to pass resolutions to this effect in their Friday congregations every week. The paper expresses the hope that the Punjab Government will not allow such a resolution to be moved in the Council but says that if it is allowed and passed owing to the Muslim majority every Arya Samajist will try to give the widest publicity to the chapter and court imprisonment and even gallows for its sake and the Muhammadans will be responsible for the conflagration it will cause in the Hindu community all over the country. The Shankar observes that the news from Delhi, Lahore, Amritsar and Dera Ismail Khan shows that not only inter-communal foolishness is on the increase, but the Government's diplomacy and their policy of divide and rule are also at work and deplores that Indians are falling a prey to them. Referring to the communal situation in Dera Ismail Khan the Abhyudaya inquires if it is true that the Hindus are oppressed in the Frontier Province because the officials there are mostly Muhammadans and the Muhammadans enjoy many facilities for obtaining arms licenses while the Hindus have none. The paper urges Hindus to help themselves and to adopt every possible measure to protect their community. It also appeals to the authorities to take precautions so as to prevent the repetition of the Kohat tragedy in Dera Ismail Khan. It suggests that Hindu and Sikh soldiers should be posted in larger numbers in the affected area and exemplary punishment should be inflicted on persons found guilty of incendiarism. If Sikh and Rajput soldiers holding pensions are settled in large numbers in the Frontier Province, the ever-recurring communal troubles due largely to the fewness of the number of Hindus in the province will be reduced to some extent. Hindus should also be allowed to keep arms. In view of the fact that the Government took no action against Maulana Akbar Shah Khan of Najibabad for his letter in the Municipal Gazette, Lahore, challenging Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya to fight "the fourth battle of Panipat," the Abhaya assumes that the Government have some hand in the matter. After the burning of Hindu houses in Dera Ismail Khan, the heart-rending affair of Kohat and the action of the Government in sowing seeds of mischief in Delhi even after last year's experience, who will not say plainly that the troubles which are being created all round by Muhammadans are being inspired by Government themselves? Referring to the Delhi Bakr-Id controversy, the Sada-i-Muslim wonders why the Hindus should object to the taking of cows along a particular road when Muslims have no objection to the processions of their idols on public roads. Muslims hate idols just as much as Hindus abhor cow-slaughter. The Hamdam points out that if Muslims were allowed to sacrifice cows quietly in their houses there would be no fear of riots as a result of Hindus getting offended at the sight of cows being carried for sacrifice. Islam does not require its followers to take sacrificial cows in procession, but at the same time it is also strange that while Hindus know that thousands of cows are slaughtered daily they get excited only on the Bakr-Id day. While advising the Hindus not to think of resisting the order regarding the taking of cows along the Pahari Dhiraj route in Delhi, the Medina advises Muslims to avoid all display and to show due regard for the feelings of their neighbours.

Military Training for Indians.

Referring to the appointment of the committee for enquiring into the means of attracting the best qualified Indian youths to a military career and of giving them a suitable education, the Pioneer writes that the most vital issue for the committee to consider will be the means of inculcating among the young men of the educated classes that sense of discipline, of national duty, of corporate life and of personal sacrifice which is an essential attribute of the soldier. Traditions count among the martial classes of India and, there, the right type of officer can be found, but it is unswervingly demanded with an eye on the constitutional future, that the distinction between the martial and non-martial classes should eventually be removed. The committee will have to consider whether the removal is possible and whether by careful revision of the whole educational system and its bearing on the national outlook in defence matters the martial ideals of the Indian intelligentia can be translated into actualities.

Ayurvedic and Unani Committee.

The Indian Daily Telegraph approves the questionnaire issued by the Ayurvedic and Unani Committee appointed by the United Provinces Government and says:—"What is now wanted is to organise the quacks, to train them, to give them diploma and enable them to administer the medicines to which the people are used and which are best adapted to their economic condition. When fever can be cured by a pice worth of medicine, it is ruinous for a man, especially when he is too poor to have a full meal, to spend a rupee for a six-ounce mixture at the chemists." The Sach is strongly opposed to the committee and regards its scheme as harmful to the interests of the country. It fears that under official control only Government men will be appointed as teachers and professors and a large amount of Indian money will go every year to England for medicines.

Indian states.

The communiqué issued by the Alwar Durbar regarding the Neemuchana affair is being severely criticised as a vain attempt at whitewashing the state officials responsible for the loss of life and property. The Patriot writes:—The atrocious Alwar incident has imperilled the good name of the Alwar administration, unless on impartial enquiry the allegations are found to be false. The public cannot give credence to the official whitewashing statement. Will the Alwar authorities allow an impartial committee to enquire into the whole affair? The Shakti remarks that it never struck it even in dream that Indian states could behave like Dyer. The Indian chief who is going to the Imperial Conference as the representative of India has acted towards his subjects in the same manner in which his masters, the British, have behaved towards Indians. The Abhyudaya does not countenance the proposal to give the title of His Majesty to the Nizam on the ground that it will lose its importance by being conferred on an Indian prince. The arguments urged in favour of the proposal are all untenable. The paper sarcastically remarks that if the Nizam is to be thus honoured it should be for his being an "infallible autocrat" who cannot tolerate the least public criticism and does not allow Indian leaders to enter his territory. The Najat takes strong exception to the strictures passed by the Milap on His Exalted Highness the Nizam for his action with regard to the estate of a Hindu widowed Rani and says that the taluqdari in dispute was granted to the ancestors of the deceased Raja by the Nizam on the clear understanding that it would be resumed if anything happened to contravene the laws in force in the state.

Agricultural societies.

The Oudh Akhbar deplores the unsatisfactory state of the agricultural co-operative societies in the United Provinces and suggests that with a guarantee of six months' recurring expenditure they should be placed under the care of private persons who, the paper expects, will be able to improve their condition.

Proposed Royal Durbar.

Referring to the report that Lord Birkenhead would come out as Viceroy to India and would hold a grand Durbar to which His Majesty the King-Emperor would be invited, the Hamdam says that the hearts of Indians can be won only by political concessions and not by such spectacular demonstrations and it would be sheer waste of the poor tax-payer's money to hold any durbar. The Najat also urges his Majesty to cancel the visit in view of the burdens of the Indian tax-payers.

North-Western Railway Strike.

The Leader is glad to note that strikers are resuming work and says:—"Those who are going back to work are acting wisely, for there was not sufficient justification for the strike and it is best not to persist in an error. If the strikers' case had not been weak it would have received a much greater degree of public support than it did."

The Swadesh sedition Case.

The Aj deplores the conviction of Pandit Bechan Sharma "Ugra," officiating editor of the Swadesh, and remarks that a sentence of nine months' rigorous imprisonment is too severe and unnecessary in his particular case.

Foreign affairs.

The Shakti exhorts Indian students to take a lesson in patriotism from Chinese students and to wake up to their sense of duty. In a contributed article to the Abhyudaya a writer, who signs himself as "BASUDEVA," reviews the history of China and expresses his conviction that the next war in China will give a further fillip to the awakening among the Chinese and convey a lesson to the Japanese also. He adds that Asia will rule the world after the European Powers have been crushed in the next great war. From a review of the present situation in China the Oudh Akhbar apprehends another great war and points out that while Britain and Japan for their own advantages and political ends do not want to let China go out of their control, the Bolsheviks too have got a footing in the country and are determined to make war on the foreigners. The recent course of events shows that the foreigners alone are responsible for the unrest. Referring to the "atrocities" perpetrated by France on the Riffs, the Hamdam remarks that France had no cause for action against the Riffs excepting her sympathy for other European Powers and her desire for crushing the spirit of liberty among a subject people. The paper prays for the freedom of the Riffs from the "tyrannical grip of the usurpers" and appeals to Indian Muslims to help the Riffs by sending money and a medical mission as they cannot send military volunteers. Referring to the incident in the French Chamber during the recent debate on the Riffian operations, the Oudh Akhbar says that the Imperialist party in France seems bent on continuing the war to the bitter end and on crushing the spirit of liberty among the Riffs in spite of strong public opposition. Referring to the events leading to the execution of the Italian engineer Piperno, the Mansur is surprised that in face of these obvious facts Italy should have despatched such a harsh and insolent note to the Afghan Government. The paper expects that Italy would reconsider the matter and would not be so foolish as to lose a valuable friend like Afghanistan over a trifling matter like this. The Medina contends that Italy had no right under international law to seize the Afghan bank deposits and ammunition stores. For physical reasons Afghanistan is quite safe from any encroachment by Italy and hence the only effect that the disgraceful behaviour of that country can produce is a general hatred against foreigners among Afghans. It is, moreover, likely to afford ample opportunities to the Bolsheviks for carrying on their propaganda which is such a huge bugbear to Englishmen. Britain would, therefore, be well advised to side with Afghanistan and to settle the matter amicably.

Haj.

Referring to the surprise of Mr. Shaukat Ali at the fact that though Emir Ali informed the Government of India on the 1st June that he would bombard Rabigh on the 13th June, the "Jehangir" was detained at Port Sudan from the 5th June to the 17th June though she could make for Rabigh in a day, the Medina points out that this delay was meant to give Emir Ali an opportunity to mobilise his forces and to discredit Ibn Saud by harassing the hajis on land. The Government of India were underrating the intelligence of Indian Muslims who, being suspicious and prejudiced, could naturally anticipate this move. The paper is highly gratified at the landing of the hajis at Rabigh in spite of the obstacles placed by Government and the bombardment by Emir Ali. Proceeding, the paper says: No doubt the enemies are many. They are clever and deceitful and are equipped with bombing planes but God is our protector. "You were detained at Port Sudan so that the rebel Ali might meanwhile mobilise his satanic forces near Rabigh and might hurl mountains of suffering at you and Ibn Saud might be held responsible for your miseries. But God the Great, who is the best of deceivers, and also the punisher of deceivers, will foil their moves. You are going to the holy haram. Holding the cover of Ka'aba, pray that God the Great may free India so that no one may again be able to restrain you from the road to the Hedjaz.—Amen."

Indians in the colonies.

The passage in the South African Assembly of the Mines and Works Bill has evoked bitter comments in the press. The Leader regards this as the culmination of a policy of racial arrogance and selfishness which carries with it its own nemesis. "It is bound to intensify the clash of colour and of race and set in motion the forces of hatred and antagonism which cannot conduce either to the prosperity of the white settlers in South Africa or to its economic development. Now that the Colour Bar Bill has been passed and the standard of inferior citizenship of Indians within the Empire has been statutorily proclaimed we would like to know what action the Government proposes to take to vindicate India's honour. We know what a national Government would have done in the situation." In a subsequent article the paper says that if the senate does not reject the Bill the natives and Indians will have to fight their own battle. "They should give no rest to the Government until it realizes the mistake of its un-Christian policy." The Vartman remarks that it is idle to think that Indians can get equal rights in other countries when they have not been able to do so in their own country. Indians, moreover, have no right to expect better treatment from the people of other lands when they oppress their own brethren. The Hamdam urges the Government of India to adopt retaliatory measures and notes with satisfaction that Mr. Mani Lal Gandhi, who is at present in South Africa, proposes to start non-cooperation in reply to this insult to Indians.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

Commenting on the speech made by Lord Birkenhead at the dinner at the Central Asian Society the Indian Daily Telegraph says:—"The Secretary of State has openly insulted intellectual India; he has made mock at the pretensions of politicians; he has broken the Royal promise of swaraj by his emphatic assertion that the British must sustain the exclusive responsibility for the protection of India . . . We may assure Lord Birkenhead that the impertinent challenge that he has dared thus to fling to the face of this country would be taken up. Every Indian must feel his self-respect deeply wounded at this cruel taunt at their political ambitions. India will have deserved this contemptuous gesture from a Tory diehard if this plain statement of policy does not rouse from a united people a firm and emphatic demand for self-government."

The Swaraj party.

The Leader advises the Bengal Swarajists to abandon their policy of wrecking as even their departed leader Mr. Das had come to realize that it had only strengthened the hands of the reactionaries and rendered powerless the friends of India in England. "The Swarajists in Bengal would, therefore, do well to take stock of the entire situation carefully, give due weight to the conclusion to which the powerful intellect and mighty spirit of Mr. Das came when he held out the olive branch, and shape their policy accordingly. They must abandon their barren, futile, injurious, and suicidal policy of senseless obstruction. If they do not do so they will have only themselves to thank for their disintegration and disappearance from the political stage." The Bhavishya urges that as the future of India appears to be bound up with the leader of the Swaraj party and of Bengal, Indians should give their best thought to the question of appointing Mr. Das' successor who should be a person capable of checkmating the crafty bureaucracy. The paper holds that a Mahatma like Mr. Gandhi is totally unfit for such a position. In another article the same paper expresses the apprehension that as there is no suitable leader of the Swaraj party now a split may take place in its ranks over the question of accepting ministerships. The Sainik, a new Hindi weekly of Agra, says that the death of Mr. C. R. Das has greatly encouraged the bureaucracy and it is now quite possible that seeing Indians to be without a leader it may try to crush them more forcibly in the press of serfdom. "Soldiers of the swaraj army" should not, therefore, put off their uniforms as the struggle will have to be continued.

The Commonwealth of India Bill.

The Pioneer strongly criticizes the memorandum signed by certain Indian leaders in support of Mrs. Besant's "Commonwealth of India Bill." In its opinion the memorandum purports to frame a bitter indictment of British rule in India and definitely accuses the British Government of breach of promises and good faith. "Is it likely that such a document bristling as it does with historical inaccuracies, and dressing up a threat in the guise of warning will impress a great political party now in power in England with an almost unprecedented majority behind it? The most regrettable feature of the memorandum is its appeal to anti-British sentiment and enforcement of that appeal by statements of a very reckless character."

Reforms in India.

The Abhyudaya remarks that, as Indians have been asserting from the very outset, the Birkenhead-Reading conversations will do no good to India; on the contrary they will tighten the "steel frame" on India a bit more. This is only too natural as the saying goes, a blind man distributes sweets and gives them to himself. The Bhavishya argues that the forecast published by the Statesman of the upshot of the Birkenhead-Reading conversations must represent the truth substantially and remarks that it will naturally increase unrest and disappointment among such Indians as are not acquainted with the nature of Englishmen, specially of Lord Reading. But those who know that there is no nation on earth more selfish, clever, and cunning than the English never expected any good out of these conversations. It was nothing but adding insult to injury to have the forecast published at the time when the whole of India was stricken with grief at Mr. C. R. Das' death.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Abhyudaya wonders why Swami Shraddhanand was prohibited from delivering lectures at Chhapra and Bhagalpur where Hindu-Muslim tension is not so serious as at Delhi where he so often preaches. What good are the Collectors, Mr. Khan and Mr. Mirza, if their administrative ability is of so high an order that a lecture can disturb the peace of their cities? Commenting on the remark of the Chief Commissioner of Dera Ismail Khan that the Hindu losses ranged between an anna and Rs. 30, the Vartman observes that an official drawing a salary of thousands of rupees regards an anna as a negligible amouut but it is like a pound to the poor man who has no food for tomorrow. The Gharib suggests that if the Government are unable to protect the Frontier Hindus they ought to grant arms to them without any condition so that they may be able to teach a lesson to the Muslims for their diabolical deeds. The Haqiqat dwells on the scrupulous regard of Mr. Das for the just rights of Muslims and says that they can best honour his memory by refraining, as far as possible, from cow-sacrifice on the Baqr-Id day and by exercising the utmost circumspection wherever such sacrifice is performed so as not to wound Hindu feelings. The Sada-i-Muslim is surprised that the Muslim leaders of Delhi, being flattered by the Hindus, should have agreed not to take cows along the Pahari Dhiraj route. The paper regards this as a political blunder which will furnish the Hindus with a bad precedent.

Release of political prisoners.

The Vartman urges that if the expression of sympathy by Lords Reading and Birkenhead on the death of Mr. Das is really sincere and is not merely meant to win over the Indians, the Government should act upon Mr. Gandhi's proposal and release the political prisoners in Bengal as a mark of respect for the deceased's memory. The Abhyudaya says that if not for any other reason, then at least to show their magnanimity, the Government should accept the advice of Mahatma Gandhi and release the political prisoners in Bengal. The Bhavishya remarks that if the Government were to release the political prisoners in accordance with Mahatma Gandhi's suggestion it would get a good opportunity of securing the sympathy of the Indian people in general and of the Bengalis in particular. The Oudh Punch supports the suggestion of Mr. Gandhi that as a mark of respect to the memory of Mr. Das at latest those political prisoners should be released whom Mr. Das considered to be innocent and against whose arrest he entered a protest.

Dispensaries in rural areas.

The Leader heartily welcomes the scheme of the Local Government regarding the opening of new branch dispensaries in rural areas and says that it should offer an incentive to local authorities to do more than they have been doing in the direction of medical relief. The manner in which the medical requirements of the villagers have been neglected has been scandalous, and now that the Government is prepared to share the cost half and half it may be hoped that the district boards and other local bodies will take full advantage of the offer and make provision for extended medical facilities. The Indian Daily Telegraph hopes that the Government resolution marks the first step towards improving the existing facilities for medical relief and says: "This is a lesson in self-help which the Government have set before the public and we can only hope that the response would be worthy of the public spirit of these provinces."

Red Cross Work.

While admitting that the activities of the Indian Red Cross Society are essentially of a national character and agreeing with His Excellency Lord Lytton that they ought to appeal to the people and secure their co-operation, the Leader writes: "One of the evils of political subjection is that the best energies of peoples who have become politically conscious but who are denied freedom are absorbed in the struggle for constitutional liberty. Every question of social welfare and economic well-being, however essential the same may be for the progress and prosperity of the peoples concerned, is subordinated to the idea of national emancipation. The tendency to follow destructive policies follows the pursuit of a reactionary policy by those who have the gift of freedom in their hands."

Rural games.

The Leader writes: "The campaign inaugurated by Sir Fazli Hussain for the encouragement of rural games in the Punjab with the blessings of His Excellency the Governor should lead other provinces to undertake a similar campaign. In these provinces it should be initiated by the Minister of Education and the co-operation of the district boards and the leading men in the districts should be invited to bring about the revival of rural games which are fast dying out."

The Hindi-Urdu controversy.

Referring to the rumour that the Raja of Awagarh is to move in the Legislative Council that Hindi should be declared to be the court language of this province, the Hamdam points out that in spite of the continuous efforts of the supporters of Hindi the progress and popularity of the Urdu language in these provinces has not been affected and not even one per cent. of applications and plaints are filed in Hindi. The paper invites attention to the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha's reply to the resolution moved in the Bihar Legislative Council urging the introduction of Urdu in that province and remarks that as that proposal was opposed on the ground that it would increase the difficulties of Government why the same argument should not hold good with regard to the introduction of Hindi in these provinces.

Political Propaganda.

The Patriot strongly supports the appeal for union of the various political parties and says: Let us hope that the leaders of all the parties will be able to evolve a modus operandi for making the national work for Swaraj co-ordinated and so designed as to make the national will irresistible, which will enable us to bring the reactionary bureaucracy to its knees at no distant date." The Sainik holds that if a great war takes place in the near future India ought not to participate in it. It is a matter of shame for a subject country to place its men and money at the disposal of a tyrannical power to help it in putting fetters of subjection on other independent and semi-independent states. The Bhavishya invites attention to the inauguration of the boycott movement in China and expresses the hope that thoughtful Indians will revive the movement in India also, as it is one of the best means of advancement in the commercial and industrial field.

The Services.

The Leader fails to see why the standing joint committee on Indian affairs should think that any rules affecting the services made by the Secretary of State might not be accepted by the Imperial Government until they have been exhaustively examined by the committee, when they know that the Secretary of State is a Lord Birkenhead, supported by an Earl Winterton. Or are even they not sufficient to protect the interests of the services? The paper points out that the proper body to examine the rules is the Indian Legislative Assembly.

Local Boards.

Rao Abdur Rahman, writing in the Hamdam on the working of the Saharanpur district board, complains of the numerous irregularities committed by that body and asks Government to take action against the persons responsible and to appoint a non-official chairman. Failing that it should be laid down that resolutions affecting a particular community should not be regarded as valid unless supported by at least three-fourths of the members of that community. This is essential for protecting the minorities. A writer in the Haqiqat discounts the reports published in the Mashriq about the existence of an agitation in the Gorakhpur public against the new slaughter-house and remarks that it would be sheer folly to pay any heed to this spurious agitation and to allow the slaughter-house to continue.

The All-India Muslim League.

The Haqiqat supports the suggestion of Nawab Nasir Husain Khyal of Calcutta that the next session of the Muslim League should be held at Aligarh on the occasion of the University Jubilee in Christmas week and that the Hon'ble Sir Abdur Rahim should preside over its deliberations.

Indian States.

The Aj condemns the action of the Nizam in placing a ban on the Hindustan Times and other newspapers and wonders why all papers excepting Muhammadan are not forbidden entry into his territory. It regards the prejudiced attitude of the Nizam towards the Hindus as shameful for a ruler the majority of whose subjects are Hindus. The Najat takes the Hindu Press to task for its rude and undignified attacks on the Nizam in connection with the Gudwal estate affairs and remarks that the only object of this agitation is to damage the Nizam's Government in order to encourage the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements in the Deccan. The Haqiqat publishes an open letter from one Sultan Khan of Srinagar to the Resident at the Kashmir Darbar. The writer refers to the severities to which the signatories to the memorial to the Viceroy are being subjected and implores the Resident to come to their rescue. He assures the Resident that however oppressed Kashmir Muslims may be in future, they would never dare to approach him or the Viceroy.

The Sikh Gurdwara Bill.

The Hamdam urges that all Akali prisoners should be released, the question of Gurdwaras in Indian states should be settled and the definition of the word "Sikh" insisted upon by the Prabandhak Committee should be accepted, if it is wanted to secure peace and quiet in the Punjab after the passage of the Gurdwara Bill.

The next Home Member.

The Aftab says that considering his education, abilities, experience, and popularity the present Hon'ble Education Minister, Rai Rajeshwar Bali, is best fitted for the Home Membership.

Foreign affairs.

The Bharat Dharma remarks that the Chinese boycott of British goods has scared England out of her wits and has proved that there is no better weapon than the boycott of foreigners for the attainment of freedom and for self-preservation. The Bharat Jiwan refers to the British view that the Bolsheviks are backing the Chinese and observes that if the Bolsheviks succeed in liberating that unfortunate country (China) from the clutches of the wicked they will earn the gratitude of the whole of Asia. The paper fully sympathises with the Chinese youths and wishes that the Indian youths may also imbibe the same spirit of self-sacrifice. The Abhyudaya holds that the cry of Bolshevism in China has been inspired by self-interested capitalists and imperialists and says :—We cannot understand how our wish that others should not rule our homes can be called communism. Reviewing the situation in China the Medina observes that the two notes recently sent by the Chinese Foreign Office are tantamount to a declaration of war. The arrogance of the foreign powers has now roused even the opium-eaters of China. The starving Indians are not the only people who are acquainted with the deceptive moves and imperialistic lust of Britain. The drugged people of China also have been roused in a trice to the reality of the entire mystery behind the screen. Our heartfelt prayers are with China in her desire to throw off the yoke of foreign influence. The latest reports show that huge crowds of Chinese parade the streets with banners bearing the motto "Declare war against England." England has disturbed the peace of the east by the naval base at Singapore and it does not appear that its result will be good for her. There is still time for England to save her skirt from the flames. If the war predicted by the statesmen of the world is once begun it would be difficult for England, France and their satellites to remain alive. Otherwise we pray to God that circumstances may develop in favour of the freedom of the east. The Najat states that the Bolsheviks have secured the sympathies of the Sheikhs of Islamic territories and of the religious leaders of China and Japan so that the masses of these countries might come speedily into the grip of Bolshevism and the religious sentiments of the eastern peoples might be fully exploited. This new move of the Bolsheviks is succeeding a good deal. Now that the fire of Bolshevism has approached the imperialists, the struggle between labour and capital will come to a speedy decision. In another article the same paper says that France is now making full preparations for crushing Riffs and instigated by Britain is going to blockade the Riffian coast and thus to starve them to death. The recent French repulses have caused a general mourning in France, Spain and Britain and now these three seem determined to annihilate the Riffs. Under no moral law can this united action against the Riffs be justified. They are fighting for their liberty and no earthly power can frighten them. The paper warns Indian Muslims against Emir Ali's deputation which has recently arrived in India and wonders how in face of his numerous flagrant misdeeds the deputation can succeed in securing the sympathies of Indian Muslims for him. The deputation seems to be the result of the efforts of the Hedjaz merchants of Bombay and has surely some secret and unlawful object before it. The Medina thinks that if the Afghan Government were to interdict Italian trade within its dominions and Indian Muslims also were to boycott Italian goods simultaneously the Italian Government would soon realise how costly the estrangement with Afghanistan was proving.

11 AUG INDIA OFFICE

Lord Birkenhead's statement on Reforms.

Commenting on Lord Birkenhead's statement with regard to his conference with the Viceroy about the Indian problem the Pioneer says:—If Lord Birkenhead's statement contained no sensational announcement of new developments, it was inspired throughout by a liberal and broad-minded appreciation of India's aspirations and difficulties. There is a recognition of the importance of acting strictly on constitutional lines. It recognises to the full Britain's obligations to India. It also foreshadows a complete review of the existing constitution when the proper moment arrives for the consideration of the problem by a Royal commission. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—"The entire speech conjures up a picture that is positively revolting. It must put a severe strain on the faith of those who still swear by British justice and fair play. There is no mistaking the pronouncement of Lord Birkenhead. It is the herald of retrogression . . . It lies with our political leaders to say whether Lord Birkenhead was right or wrong in his contemptuous treatment of their claims. Lord Birkenhead will be right if, at this crisis, when our glorious country is menaced by British arrogance, the leaders fail to unite and force the hands of the Government to appoint the Royal commission in a year and widen the basis of reforms." The Leader says:—His Lordship's speech was characterized by a spirit of self-complacency which showed that he is incapable of understanding the deep-seated causes of Indian unrest and that he is not qualified to apply the proper remedy. The speech is not calculated to improve the situation in India, or to strengthen the forces of co-operation or to give satisfaction to the progressive elements in the country.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

Almost all papers strongly criticize Lord Birkenhead's speech at the Central Asian Society's dinner. The Leader says that Lord Birkenhead has shown a colossal ignorance of Indian history which would be inexcusable in one holding the responsible office of the Secretary of State for India. Proceeding, the paper writes:—"Did he express the views of the British Government or his own? If they were his own, they ought to be repudiated by the British Government. That they should have been expressed at a time when a large section of political India is mourning the loss of one of its foremost leaders adds to its objectionable character. We fail to see what immediate occasion there was for dropping such a bomb-shell." The Aj says that history has already answered the question whether the British came here with the sharp edge of the sword or with a pair of scales. The paper is, however, satisfied with this frank statement inasmuch as it shows that Lord Birkenhead's sword is going to protect the "Steel frame" of Lloyd George. It remarks that a number of swords have been broken on this ancient rock of India and many more will still be broken. India's ancient metaphysical civilisation is her armour. The Bhavishya characterizes the speech as wild talk and writes:—Englishmen came to India as petty hawkers and servants polishing the boots of Rajas and Nawabs and not as peace-makers among warring communities. We pity the intelligence of those who still talk of British sense of justice, liberality and sincerity. We have been proclaiming with the beat of drum that in cheating and deceitfulness English officers are matchless and it is not by yielding but by forcing them that something can be got out of them. Before the advent of the British peace had been established almost everywhere in the country. Then mischievous Englishmen made Hindus and Muslims fight against each other at various places, with the result that bloodshed became the order of the day. Even now British rule is based on the same crooked policy. Thefts and dacoities may have decreased for some time, but now they are increasing day by day, and famine, want, rise of prices and unemployment are the results of this good administration. Therefore, if Englishmen go away from India, they will be relieved of responsibility and India will be saved from famine and dissensions. The Pratap observes that the Secretary of State's remarks sound like those of a conqueror like Alexander or Napolean before his conquered people. Englishmen did not come to India sword in hand but as petty peddlers, who used to hawk about in streets for their living. They used to feel pride in bowing at the feet of the Moghal Emperors. Lord Birkenhead thinks that every Englishman has a god-given right to protect India. This is a mere boast. No country has been given the right to hold another country in trust. The Hamdam' regrets that His Lordship so boldly denied such a well-known historical fact as the coming of the English to India primarily for purposes of trade. No doubt when the Moghal Empire began to totter after the death of Aurangzeb the English employed their favourite device of "divide and rule" to gain political power for themselves. With such a record in the past and such communal tension on the occasion of the Bakr-Id in Calcutta and Delhi it does not become Lord Birkenhead to talk of "composing differences." His Lordship must bear in mind that while the English have failed to compose communal differences even in 150 years Mr. Gandhi came within an ace of accomplishing this feat in the brief space of two years and that also simply with the help of his sweet tongue. The Haqiqat points out that His Lordship's outspokenness has dashed to the ground the hopes entertained by optimists in India that some benefits would result from his conversations with Lord Reading. Lord Birkenhead has come forward with a really novel interpretation of British Indian history as a study of the writings of even British historians cannot lead one to believe that a handful of traders came to India to compose with the sharp edge of the sword differences which might have engulfed Indian civilisation in ruin. It was the willing co-operation of Indians themselves and not the English sabre which secured the Indian Empire for England. Equally objectionable was Lord Birkenhead's remark that the young students of China, Egypt and India were the worst enemies of the British Empire. The bitterness among the students is due solely to the repression of their just national aspirations and for this their European rulers alone are to blame. By their repressive policy the British Government are deliberately thrusting the students of these countries into the arms of Bolsheviks and Lord Birkenhead is far wrong if he thinks that he can suppress their natural desire for freedom by rattling the sabre. His predecessors have tried this policy and realised its futility and it will not be long ere Lord Brikenhead also will have to sheathe his sword. Indians should no longer expect any concessions from the present Government and should wake up in time if their love of freedom has not been killed by communal strife.

Commonwealth of India Bill.

Under the heading "Phantasms of the Living" the Pioneer criticizes the manifesto signed by forty Indian leaders in support of Mrs. Besant's Commonwealth of India Bill. It says:—"It may charitably be assumed that the forty variegated politicians who signed the solemn warning to His Majesty's Government are victims of illusions rather than conscious purveyors of fiction. Mental obliquity is obviously indicated when with British troops picketing the capital of India and armoured cars patrolling its streets to prevent internecine strife, forty Indian politicians could be found solemnly forecasting the separation of India from the British Empire unless their demands are granted by the British Government. Where would these politicians find refuge if the consummation they contemplate were achieved"? The Leader pays a tribute to Mrs. Besant for her untiring and devoted work in the cause of India's freedom and says that the scheme embodied in the Commonwealth of India Bill is the only definite scheme of self-government which is before the country and its main object cannot but have the support of all nationalists. The Anand urges Indians to organize a big agitation in favour of the Bill, as without strong national support it is vain to expect that the present conservative Government of England would accept any such Bill. The Hamdam thinks that Mrs. Besant's Bill affords a suitable meeting ground for all Indian political parties and all of them should unite to support it if they want to produce any effect on the British Parliament.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers bitterly criticize the attitude of the authorities and of the Muslims of Delhi in connection with the Bakr-Id. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The elaborate military and police precautions taken to prevent a breach of the public peace at Delhi mark the shame and humiliation of the people of this country. A few more instances of this kind ought to make it very easy for the British to do anything with India as a nation of semi-savages who fight over cow processions and who, therefore, require to be ruled with the sword . . . It would, in fact, appear as if the entire object of the Government in pandering to the cruel instincts of certain Muslims to lead cow processions is to have an opportunity to discredit the Indian claim for swaraj. The Hindu Sarvaswa remarks that if the Frontier authorities are really unable to protect the Hindus they should allow them to defend themselves. It does not become a Government who boast of being civilized to get the Hindus killed deliberately by Muhammadans. The Vartman says that Id-ul-Zoha was celeberated at Delhi at the point of spears and bayonets. Khwaja Hasan Nizami and other maulvis were busy provoking the Hindus by circulating notices to the effect that if Hindus wanted permanent amity they should allow the Muslims to sacrifice cows everywhere, in every street and lane, but as the authorities were supporting the Muslims they did not prosecute them for causing provocation. They did not even bring those to book who took out cows along forbidden routes and threw beef into temples. The Delhi Bakr-Id has also thrown light on the prestige of the authorities inasmuch as it has shown that the public is not prepared to obey even their pettiest order unless it is backed up by brute force. The decision of the authorities in allowing the Muslims to take out cows has embittered feelings and if a quarrel ensues the responsibility will lie on them (the authorities). The Aj writes :—The case of Delhi is more deplorable than that of Calcutta even though there was no trouble there because those who blackened their faces at Delhi were educated Indians. The Anand says that though the Hindus of Delhi maintained peace by supressing their feelings forcibly yet it is clear that obstinacy on the part of Muslims has damaged Hindu-Muslim unity and given conservative politicians like Lord Birkenhead an opportunity for saying that if the British leave India the country will be plunged into anarchy. It was but natural that uneasiness should have spread among the Hindus of Delhi, but instead of easing the situation the Government officials have added fuel to the fire even though they have succeeded in maintaining peace outwardly. The Abhaya remarks that in view of the police and military precautionary measures at Delhi it cannot be said that the Bakr-Id passed off peacefully there. Nor is the true God of all pleased with such a sacrifice. It is the false God of Indian Muslims, that is the pork-eating whites—at whose instance all this happened—who are undoubtedly pleased. The Bakr-Id was theirs. The Bhavishya writes :—Never again will Hindus fall a prey to the deceitful tactics of Muslims. Muhammadans who have gone to the extreme in following a crooked policy should remember that those who harass others in this world never remain happy themselves. In another article the same paper says :—How could the bloody Bakr-Id which exercised the minds of the Hindus for months pass off quietly? Indian Musalmans, who look upon Hindus as enemies and observe the Bakr-Id as a day of the Moghal Empire, find only this day in the year when, making a display of their prestige and importance, they are able, in the name of cow-sacrifice, to attack their inveterate enemies (Hindus), annoy them and arouse their religious passions. What can be the reason for throwing beef into the house of Lala Badri Das Ram Saran Das in Nai Bazar, and Babaji-ka-Panchaiti temple in Telipara, Delhi, beyond provoking Hindus to commit a riot. The paper next refers to the riot in Calcutta and expresses the opinion that the Muhammadans there were incited by maulvis and mullas to create a disturbance or else how could these poor workmen have the courage to sacrifice a cow and commit violence? Referring to the Bakr-Id riot at Calcutta the Hamdam urges that the mischief-makers should be socially boycotted and Hindu children should not be taught text-books of history which prejudice them against Muslims, but should be made acquainted with all the good that Muslim kings did to them, so that a feeling of solidarity may develop between the two communities and the work of national regeneration may progress with redoubled vigour. A writer in the same paper suggests that the Hindu-Muslim problem should be solved by enforcing Mr. Das's "Bengal pact" in honour of his memory.

"Hindu Swaraj."

Some papers reproduce an article contributed by Lala Har Dayal (Sweden) to the Milap of Lahore in which the writer declares that the future of the Hindu nation and of Hindustan and the Punjab depends on these four ideals :—(1) Hindu Sangathan, (2) Hindu Rajya, (3) Shuddhi of Islam and Christianity and (4) conquest and Shuddhi of Afghanistan and the Frontier. If the Hindus want to maintain their existence among the free nations of the world they must learn these four aphorisms like the Gayatri mantra. He adds :—Christians and Muslims will have to be converted as a man clears away from his eyes any particle of stone. Hindus will have to conquer Afghanistan and the Frontier and convert them to Hinduism in the sacred memory of Ranjit Singh and Hari Singh Nalva. If one crore of Goorkhas, Sikhs, Mahrattas, Rajputs and the Hindus become organized, swaraj will be ours. Commenting on this the Patriot, which is publishing the article in pamphlet form, says :—This question of Hindu swaraj now definitely raised by Lala Har Dayal, deserves the serious consideration of all Hindu leaders and we hope it will not be dismissed as a mere dream of a visionary. The Abhaya says that for Hindus every word of Lala Har Dıyal deserves to be written in letters of gold and remembered like the names of Rama and Krishna.

The Gurdwaras Bill.

The Pioneer regards the passing of the Sikh Gurdwaras Bill as a good omen and hopes that the operation of the new Act may put an end to the unhappy troubles which have marked the recent history of the Punjab. The paper congratulates His Excellency the Governor on the outcome of his firm yet conciliatory policy. The Leader offers hearty congratulations to the Government of the Punjab and its people and especially the Sikhs on the passage of the Gurdwaras Bill and says :— A Malcolm Hailey was required to rise superior to the narrow conception of prestige and to show that there was no problem which could not be solved by tact and statesmanship.

Political propaganda.

The Pratap urges the members of the Jhansi Municipal Board to place the question of the erection of a memorial to the Rani of Jhansi before the entire country as she is a source of pride to the whole of India. The Bharat Dharma publishes a contributed article in which the writer dwells upon the imperative necessity of prepetuating the memory of the Rani of Jhansi by erecting memorials and celebrating, throughout the length and breadth of India, anniversaries in honour of her heroic achievements. In another article the same paper urges that if Indians bear in mind that it is the bureaucracy which has done all it could to spread communal tension, and try to establish friendly relations among the various communities, they will soon be able to attain swaraj. The Vartman publishes the purport of a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap, who says that he regards the establishment of better relations between India and the neighbouring countries as necessary for the attainment of her freedom and has therefore been touring in various countries propagating love and culture of India. He adds that he is going to visit Nepal and Tibet with a view to preach the gospel of liberty there. The Abhyudaya urges that a deputation of Hindu preachers should tour Cambodia in order to rescue their fallen brethren there and remarks that their uplift is desirable from social, religious and political standpoints as well as from self-interest with a view to make the Indian Hindus and the Hindu race powerful. The Vartman lays the responsibility for the outbreak of communal riots on the shoulders of raw and inexperienced officers coming from England and says that if these officers be alive to their sense of duty and act properly the number of riots, disturbances, thefts and dacoities will decrease in the country, but how can the officers who have never been taught to discharge their duty properly establish peace in India? The Satya Bhakta announces in the Hindustani that the Indian communist party will try to get India also affiliated to the Third International, that communist schools and reading rooms will be opened and that an Indian communist conference will be held at the time of the next session of the Congress.

Indians in the colonies.

The Bhavishya denounces the "Mines and Works Bill" of South Africa as a heavy blow aimed at the coloured people by the crafty and wily whites. The paper says that the disabilities imposed by such Bills can be removed only when Indians become free and demonstrate to the whites that like them the "blacks" too are born to enjoy human rights. The Anand also condemns the Bill and remarks that India will have to put up with this insult as it is vain for her to expect that the Government of India or the British Government will do anything to wipe off the disgrace. It is impossible for Indians to maintain their self-respect within the Empire. The Bhàrat Dharma writes :—Who else than God will hear the pathetic tale of the Asiatics and natives? Autocratic authorities always try to show that only the powerful community can exist in this world. Will Indians ever understand this? Writing in the Aj on the position of Indians in Fiji, Benarsi Das Chaturvedi says that efforts will soon be made to cajole Indians by giving them nominal rights but they should continue their agitation so long as they do not get important political, industrial and commercial rights.

Indian states.

The Pratap says that if the report about the appointment of Sir A. K. Banerjee, the ex-Dewan of Mysore, as Regent of Gwalior in place of the Dowager Maharani is correct, it must be said that the British Government are unjustly interfering in the affairs of the state. However capable an outsider may be, he will think more of pleasing his masters—Englishmen—than of the well-being of the people. The Bharat Jiwan says that as the Maharaja of Alwar could not win over a pliant man like Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya it must be presumed that there is something rotten in the state of Denmark and that the Maharaja is playing tricks only to gain time. The Congress should take up the Alwar affair in its own hands as the Government of India will not do anything, because they want to show Indians clamouring for self-government what swaraj means in Indian states. The Shankar complains of increased coercion of Hindus in the Nizam's dominions and of the gradual confiscation of the jagirs of Hindu jagirdars, and remarks that the only remedy for the local Hindus is to refuse to bear these atrocities, even if they have to go to jail or mount the gallows for their refusal. It is no use appealing to the British Government, for if they do so they will receive the reply that it cannot interfere in the internal affairs of any state.

Military training for Indians.

The Medina says that the military policy of the Government of India is inspired by high-handedness, distrust and autocracy, and the army is stationed in India to protect not the country but the autocratic Government and its white members. It is because of this that the organisation of the Indian army is based not on the Indian angle of vision but on Nadirism and Changezism which aims not at safe guarding Indian rights but at strengthening British militarism. Government have therefore constantly opposed the efforts of Indian legislators to secure the opening of an Indian Sandhurst. The commission recently appointed to enquire into the fitness of Indian youths for military training should not tempt the legislators to rest on their oars as it might as usual be only a device to gain time.

The rumoured Royal Darbar at Delhi.

The Abhyudaya expresses the opinion that if the rumoured Royal Darbar at Delhi is held it will mean a festival to the authorities but bankruptcy to the poor people. The Pratap says that there is no wonder if the rumour proves to be true because Lord Reading can never fail to take the fullest advantage of the communal tension and political lull in the country. It seems that he wants to use the King-Emperor as a pawn in his political game and to strengthen the bureaucratic hold over the country by stirring up a wave of loyalty.

Municipal Boards.

The Aj agrees with the chairman's view as expressed in the annual report of the Allahabad Municipal Board that instead of municipal elections being held triennially one-third of the members should be elected every year and suggests that the elections should be held in December in place of March, so that new members may have an experience of at least four months at the time of the budget discussion and the publication of the annual report.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina deplores the apathy towards the All-Muslim Parties Conference everywhere outside the Punjab and says that if this indifference continues, the deliberations of the conference will carry no weight and the path chalked out by it will be derided as the work of a coterie. The Sada-i-Muslim supports the appeal of the Zamindar to the Sikhs to fulfil their promise and to return to Muslims the Shahidganj mosque which had been turned into a Gurdwara in the past.

The next Home Member.

The Jadu considers Nawab Muhammad Yusuf to be the best candidate for Home Membership and hopes that in view of his popularity and public spirit the choice of His Excellency the Governor will fall on him.

Foreign Affairs.

Commenting on the situation in China the Pioneer writes:—The exploiter of the Chinese to-day is not the Japanese and not the British trader: it is the Russian agent who is exploiting the trouble of China for the sole purpose of wrecking the peace of Asia and ultimately of the civilized world. It is the duty of the Powers, for the sake of China and for their own sake, to take firm, united action to prevent this catastrophe. The Aj condemns the atrocities of British troops in China and says that it is on account of these atrocities that public feeling against Britain is running so high in that country and Chinese generals are talking of waging war with her. India is sure to be affected by a war between these two countries and we do not want that there should be any kind of unrest here at the present juncture as only those who possess weapons and poison can benefit from it. The Muslim Press continues to watch the Riffian struggle with sympathetic interest. Syed Sakhawat Husain suggests in the Haqiqat that Indian Muslims should pass resolutions urging Britain to induce France to desist from operations against the Riffs and should also organise a boycott of French goods. The Hamdam opines that the continuance of hostilities between Emir Ali and Ibn Saud and the isolation of Jeddah from Mecca are proving extremely harmful for the economic interests of the Hedjaz and urges Ibn Saud to come to some understanding with the people of the Hedjaz as once he is able to win them over Emir Ali can be safely left out of account. Sheikh Mushir Husain Qidwai writing in the same paper says that it is impossible for the Hedjaz to submit for long to the rule of a foreigner like Ibn Saud and the present struggle between him and Emir Ali will only serve to weaken Islam and endanger the security of the holy places. Indian Muslims should, therefore, make serious efforts to bring about peace between them. The Muslim Press is generally not inclined to welcome Tahirul Dabbagh's deputation. The Medina warns Indian Muslims against it and says that these agents of the disreputable Hashmite Government will only widen the gulf caused among Indian Muslims by certain greedy ulema of Bareilly. The Rahnuma says that it will only encourage those who are fomenting differences between Sunnis and Wahabis.

Lord Birkenhead's statement.

Vernacular newspapers emphatically challenge the statement of Lord Birkenhead that Englishmen went to India for composing differences and say that as a matter of fact, it is the British administration which has fomented communal dissensions by adopting a policy of "divide and rule." The papers appeal to all parties to sink their differences and carry on vigorous agitation for the achievement of self-government. The Abhyudaya says:—"We are not at all surprised at Lord Birkenhead's statement. We never expected anything at his hands and always held the view that Lord Birkenhead-Reading conversations would do no good to India, but would, on the contrary, lead to the tightening of the 'steel frame' on her a bit more. In another article the same paper writes:—To-day Lord Birkenhead sings the praise of the sword. In which war did the British sword score a victory in India? Was it in the battle of Arcot in which Indian soldiers drank conjee themselves and gave rice to their British comrades? If craftiness means sword and valour surely we have nothing to say. Was the mention of sword necessary because there were to be no reforms and it was desirable to keep Indians quiet by flashing it? After all what statesmanship was intended to be indicated by such an allusion? We have only to lament that the decision of our destiny is in the hands of such a fool and it is to be apprehended that he will be the Viceroy of India one day. The Bhavishya remarks:—The mountain was in labour but produced a mouse and that too a dead one. Lord Birkenhead talks of composing communal differences. The fact, however, is that as a result of the policy adopted by the British Government Hindus and Muslims are anxious to break each other's head. Sometimes these two communities are made to fight each other in the name of law. "You have maimed Indians and deprived them of their manhood. You will be well advised to revoke the positively harmful dyarchy". The Aj opines that the statement is without substance and full of wrong theories. It appears that Lord Birkenhead does not want co-operation, but wishes simply to defer the reforms. The paper next refers to the Secretary of State's remarks about anarchy in India at the time of the advent of the British and says that revolutions take place in every country. It was India which once had the misfortune of falling into the net of deception of crafty foreigners at the time of a revolution and now it is the turn of China. In another article the same paper says:—The views expressed by Lord Birkenhead could be easily culled from the leading articles of Anglo-Indian papers and it was therefore not necessary to ponder over them for eight months and summon Lord Reading from India. We shall go on practising non-co-operation even for a century or more, but we shall not co-operate even if by doing so we get swaraj to-morrow. India is prepared to treat Britain as her friend and equal, but the idea of master and servant is intolerable to her. The Anand is disappointed with the statement and says that the Secretary of State's threat that India will be ruled with a strong hand will have no effect on Indians and will not stimulate their desire for co-operation. The Vartman wonders why Lord Birkenhead who holds the destinies of India in his hands took so long to study the situation in India. This means that he was totally ignorant of India when he took charge of her. How terrible and shameful that he should have been governing the country for eight months without knowing anything about it! The Pratap writes:—This nonsensical statement as well as the other speeches delivered by the Secretary of State show that there is no immediate hope of a change of heart or mind in him. He speaks of the impartiality of British officials in Hindu-Muslim riots, but we think that the recent Frontier riots were chiefly due to the reprehensible partiality of the authorities. The main policy of the officials has been directed towards widening the communal gulf. If we wish to court death we should listen to what he says, otherwise we should follow the advice of Mr. Mahomed Ali, put blinkers on our eyes and go straight towards our national goal. The only way to bring round conceited and self-complacent men like Lord Birkenhead is to make such a demonstration of strength, without using weapons, that all the Government buildings from no. 10, Downing Street down to Delhi may shake. It is a folly to believe in the generosity of Britain. The freedom of India lies in the hands of Indians themselves and the breeze of freedom will soon blow in this country. The Garhwali considers the statement to be devoid of substance and statesmanship and says that Lord Birkenhead thinks that if the British leave India to-day the country will be plunged into a terrible anarchical revolution. We are constrained to say that the Government's policy of distrust is responsible for creating discontent among the people and leaders and if there had not been leaders like Mr. Gandhi and Pandit Malaviya to restrain them, Indian youths might have led the country towards a revolution. There is, therefore, a greater danger of a revolution here in the leaders leaving the political field than in the British leaving the country. We agree with Lord Birkenhead that India will gain by remaining with Britain, but differ only in this much that we want India to have a status of equality within the Empire. The Sada-i-Muslim says that the speech will disappoint even the Moderates, but every Indian will be grateful to His Lordship for openly displaying the "die-hard" spirit of British imperialism. The Hamdam characterises the statement as a mass of pompous verbiage in which not a single ray of hope can be discerned for Indians. His Lordship has nothing but admiration for the Indian administrative machine and if there is unrest in the country it is, according to him, due simply to the campaign of calumny and misrepresentation initiated by Indian politicians. If Lord Birkenhead were to come out to India and to see for himself the half-starved and ill-clad toiling masses of the country he would know why in spite of their proverbial patience the land is seething with discontent. Lord Birkenhead is asking Indian politicians to achieve the impossible when he insists on their making dyarchy a success although they do not believe in it and regard it as a failure. The Haqiqat says that the Under Secretary of State's explanation makes it clear that there will be no Royal Commission before 1929 and, therefore, any proposals for political reform before this date will be futile. This was what was expected in view of the present Hindu-Muslim tension.

Reforms.

Referring to the passage in Lord Birkenhead's speech which suggested the framing of a constitution by Indians themselves, the Leader says: This is an invitation to Swarajists to do a little constructive thinking. They must give up their destructive rôle and let the country know what should take the place of the constitution which they seek to destroy. . . . We want a united demand to be made not because we expect that a substantial portion of it will be conceded during the existing régime, but because it will mean a great accession of strength to the public life of the country, will help in the process of nation-building, will strengthen the hands of our friends in England and will eventually lead to success if we show sufficient earnestness and perseverance. The Hamdam asserts that the Swarajists are always prepared for "honourable co-operation" but contends that Government also should show not by words, but by deeds, that they will treat Englishmen and Indians alike. There should be mutual trust and Englishmen should give up the idea that they can get Indians to co-operate in strengthening the British hold. The Sada-i-Muslim eulogises the work so far done by the Swaraj Party in the councils and hopes that it will be returned with an overwhelming majority to all councils at the next election. It advises the Swarajists never to accept office under the present Reforms as after Lord Birkenhead's statement this would be tantamount to a surrender. If the Swarajists remain unbending in their attitude Government will have to withdraw the Reforms and that would be the best thing for India.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on Syed Rahman's speech at Calcutta in which he is reported to have characterised Hindus as cowards the Bhavishya says:—The heroism of Muhammadans is confined to hidden and treacherous assaults and incendiarism. This is the work of thieves and robbers. Referring to the Kidderpore riot the same paper remarks that being eager for a revenge, Muslims by means of entreaties and recommendations prevailed upon the authorities to arrest Hindus. The arrest of the innocent coolies is nothing short of partizanship. Commenting upon the statement of Mr. Gandhi that in the Kidderpore riot during the Bakr-id the Hindus were guilty the Abhaya remarks:—Mahatmaji is in his dotage. Hindus are not guilty. Therefore people should pay no heed to what he says. What the Hindus of Kidderpore did was right. Hindu religion teaches us that for the protection of cows and the chastity of woman Hindus should do their duty, banishing all fear of bloodshed. The Bhavishya complains that since the Hindu-Muslim riot at Calcutta Muslims have been resorting to double-dealing in various ways and asks Hindus to be on their guard, because in view of the Sangathan movement hundreds of demons will throw obstacles in their path and try to make them deviate from it. The Vartman refers to the throwing of beef into various Hindu temples during the last Bakr-id festival and urges that the only way to stop this is to form civic guards in various towns. The Abhyudaya pays a tribute to the Hindus for the quiet passing off of the Bakr-id inasmuch as they displayed forbearance despite provocation at Delhi. Proceeding, the paper says:—The fact that Muslims took out cows for sacrifice through Pahari Dhiraj in spite of the persuasions and entreaties of Maulanas Shaukat Ali and Muhammad Ali, Dr. Abdul Rahman and Mr. Asaf Ali shows that these leaders have no hold over the Muslim masses. There appears to be no reason for the Muslim innovation of taking out processions with cows beyond wounding the feelings of the Hindus. Muslims now claim it as a right and the authorities are ready to help them on the plea of the protection of their rights. Swami Shraddhanand has stated that the Pahari Dhiraj affair was the outcome of a promise given by the Viceroy to a Muslim deputation last year. Be that as it may. But we too have the impression that the authorities have a hand in the Id problem. It is a patent truth that so long as Hindus and Muslims quarrel England stands to gain. There can be no more easy but effective instrument than Id to accentuate the estrangement between these two communities. If there be no third party in India, if the administration of India be in the hands of Hindus and Muslims alone, they will be constrained to effect a compromise on the Id question which is nothing but an attempt on the part of Muslims to benefit themselves in both ways, i.e., by securing concessions from the Government and by repressing the Hindus. The Sada-i-Muslim regrets that though it is known on the unimpeachable authority of Mr. Gandhi that Hindus were solely to blame in the Calcutta Bakr-id riots no Hindu leader or paper has come forward to condemn the mischief-makers. When Muslims are in the wrong there is a regular outcry that the Muslim leaders should condemn the actions of their co-religionists, but now both Lala Lajpat Rai's People and Mr. Malaviya's Hindustan Times are silent. Such is the prejudice and propagandism of the Hindus. If Mr. Gandhi were present at other riots he could soon know which party is generally to blame. The Medina writes:—The scurrility and malignity with which the Hindu papers have commented on the (Bakr-id) incidents at Delhi give proof of their extreme satanism, cowardice and unmanliness. But the leading article published in its issue of July 6, by that scurrilous, mean and extremely bigoted paper, the Tej of Delhi, is sufficient to cause extreme provocation among Hindus and Muslims in Delhi. The manner in which this bigoted and scurrilous paper has made out Muslims and Government to be cowardly, wicked and mean deserves a thousand condemnation (lit., curses). Of course the (imaginary) picture which it had drawn on paper of the bravery and patience of the Hindus is not only ridiculous but an open insult to them. It was not bravery on the part of the Muslims or of Government to take the cows along the Pahari Dhiraj route. All these arrangements were meant to assert an ancient right and to hold in check the mischievous inclinations and provocations of the Hindus. If the Hindus lay claim to courage and bravery and if our benefactor, Deshbandhu Gupta (Editor of the Tej) was the standard-bearer of that courage and heroism then it was necessary for them that for each drop of the blood of the two hundred cows sacrificed in Delhi, the blood of ten Hindus should have been shed and the cows should have been rescued. All this heroism evaporated with the arrest of Lotan Singh and a few nameless Jats. Mian! Be grateful and bless the machine-guns of Government that your honour was saved. Be thankful to the peacefulness and forbearance of the Muslims that you are to-day sleeping at night in peace and quiet. What is the good of heroism in the columns of newspapers? If you lay claim to courage, come into the field and thrust your heads into the machine-guns of Government and stop the "cruel" and (according to Arya papers) "touching" martyrdom of cows. Otherwise, what is the good of this fire-spitting (lit. poison-spitting). Sit quiet and mind your dhoti (loin-cloth) (lest it slip).

Gurdwara Bill.

Commenting on the observation of the Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee that the conditions regarding the release of the Akali prisoners are wholly unnecessary, unjust and derogatory, the Leader writes:—"Those of the prisoners who are convinced that the Bill substantially concedes the issues for which they fought should have no difficulty in giving the required undertaking. There is no humiliation involved in the same. In our view the Bill is a great victory for the Akalis. The undertaking they are required to give amounts to nothing more than to a declaration that its provisions are acceptable to them." The Abhyudaya expresses satisfaction and gratification at the passing of the Gurdwara Bill and remarks that this measure will mark a new era in the history of the Sikh community and remove a good many of their grievances. The success of the Akalis is the fruit of their sufferings and sacrifices. If they act justly and with honesty in future and do not disregard the interests of other sections of the Sikh community, there will no longer remain any unrest among the Sikhs and they themselves will be able to prosper and flourish. The Pratap congratulates the Akalis on their success and hopes that they will now succeed in extinguishing the fire of Hindu-Muslim antipathy in the Punjab. The Bhavishya in impassioned language congratulates the Akalis on coming off triumphantly through the ruthless ordeal of cannon, swords, bullets and jails and thereby bringing the Government to their knees. The paper urges the Punjab Government to release all Akali and other political prisoners at once, otherwise a fresh struggle for securing their release might be set on foot. The Vartman suggests the complete closing of the Akali affair by the restoration of the Maharaja of Nabha to his gaddi. The Aj congratulates

Sir Malcolm Hailey on the farsightedness and magnanimity displayed by him in giving assent to the Gurdwara Bill, releasing Sikh prisoners and recognising the Prabandhak Committee as lawful bodies and urges that even those Sikh prisoners should be released who do not undertake to abide by the new legislature.

Akali prisoners.

The Abhyudaya expresses gratification at the "just" action of the Punjab Government in releasing the Akali prisoners and congratulates both Sir Malcolm Hailey and the Akalis on it. It urges that the next step which the Government ought to take now is to restore the Maharaja of Nabha to his throne. If the Government exercises wisdom in this matter also it will be able not only to remove unrest among the Sikhs but also to convert them into friends. The Vartman says that in view of the release of Moplah prisoners who had openly waged war with the Government and of some other prisoners who had been convicted of grave offences, it is reasonable to urge that even those Akali prisoners who committed violence in a fit of religious fury should be released. The Pratap publishes a picture depicting the tortures of Akali prisoners in the Nabha jail, such as beating them with shoes after pressing their hands underneath the legs of bedsteads, suspending prisoners by their legs, searing their stomachs with red-hot iron, suspending them by their hands and squeezing them in wooden presses in order to force them to seek pardon.

Political propaganda.

The Indian Daily Telegraph deplores the "callous indifference" shown by Indians to Mr. Gandhi's appeals regarding spinning and weaving khaddar and says:—"Two centuries of merciless economic exploitation have rendered India, once the richest country in the world, to be the poorest country. . . The efficacy of khaddar to bring us nearer to the goal of Swaraj is incontestable. Let the Indians take up the challenge which Lord Birkenhead has thrown in his recent statement and prove that India means to be a free nation and not to be under eternal subjection to the British. Stung by such an insulting and discouraging statement, it is high time for us to try all weapons in our national armoury to win Swaraj. If khaddar can bring us nearer to Swaraj, let us make a mighty effort to make it a success." In another article headed "The sacred cause of freedom" the same paper says:—"The westerners, who once fought for freedom in their own country have been bent upon crushing the liberty of eastern peoples. A free people at Home, they have been tyrants abroad . . . The bubble of imperial fabric must break and the structure of western materialism must fall before the force of the united resistance of Eastern nationalities and the sacred cause of freedom will triumph." The Prabhat remarks that Lala Har Dayal's scheme for Hindu Swaraj is a packet of gun-powder which would inflame hundreds of men and prove detrimental to Indian nationalism. The Vartman supports the view of Mr. Jamna Das Mehta that satyagraha should be started on January 1, 1926 in accordance with the wishes of the late Mr. C. R. Das and urges that Swarajists should prepare the country for civil disobedience under the guidance of Mahatama Gandhi. The Sainik publishes a letter from Satya Bhakta of Cawnpore saying that there is no reason why Indians should not send their representatives to the Third International when delegates from all parts of the British Empire can join it. "We will fight for this right and are sure to succeed. Our relations with the Third International will be the same as those of two individuals following a common principle." The Aj heartily supports the resolution on the extension of franchise to women which the Hon'ble Mr. Ram Das is to place before the Council of State and wonders how women can be held ineligible for voting when they can even rule over states. The paper adds:—"So long as women do not help us in our national work we cannot succeed." The Haqiqat publishes an account of the annual meeting of the Anjuman-i-Ittihad-i-Hind, America, at Sacramento (California) on February 22, 1925, at which "Raja" Mahendra Pratap said that though working along different lines the Anjuman also, like the Ghadar party, wanted the emancipation of India. He referred to a letter he had written to Mr. Gandhi from Kabul and pointed out that Mr. Gandhi had sent him back a reasoned reply and had not attacked him. Mr. Gandhi also believed that good relations should be cultivated with all countries in Europe and Asia. Amir Amanullah had told the "Raja" that the independence of India was necessary for the independence of Afghanistan. The Japanese also realized that the English were their enemies. The "Raja" went on to describe the revolutions in various countries and said that he did not believe that the English would pack off bag and baggage from India of their own accord. He added that the English were pleased with the universal use of the charkha. Proceeding, he distinguished between "lion-heartedness" and "chicken-heartedness" and insinuated that the present leaders of the movement for freedom in India did not possess the former quality.

Indian jail administration.

The Anand remarks that judging from the statement in the latest jail administration report of these provinces it appears that the condition of prisoners must be deplorable and heart-rending and urges that they should not be provided with unwholesome food and that too in insufficient quantity. At least so much of human treatment should be accorded to them. The Vartman writes:—The condition of Indian jails is worst in the world. The treatment of the Akali prisoners would be a blot on the fair name of any civilized country. The Government have expressed their inability to carry out the recommendations of the Jails Reform Committee on the ground that they have no money, but it is surprising how they can spend so much money in giving fat salaries and big allowances to civilians and travelling expenses to their widows and children. The Oudh Akhbar takes exception to the remarks of the Inspector-General of Prisons of Bengal in his report for 1924 about the undesirability of the sentence of simple imprisonment and contends that instead of favouring rigorous imprisonment, which would have a still more demoralizing effect on the prisoners, he should suggest some means of reforming them so that they may prove useful citizens after release.

Cotton Mill industry.

Discussing the causes of the present crisis in the cotton mill industry of this country the Leader writes:—If the excise duty is not abolished, if the pre-war rate of exchange is not restored, and if the dumping of Japanese goods by the imposition of duties on them is not stopped in time, we shall be faced with a situation in which the premier industry, not only of the Bombay presidency, but of the whole country, will be involved in serious calamity which is bound to react on the whole commercial and industrial community as well as on the labourers, the consequences of which we do not make bold to predict.

Restoration of Oudh.

The Medina regards Rai Bahadur Lala Shankar Dayal's proposal for the restoration of Oudh to the descendants of Nawab Wajid Ali Shah as eminently reasonable and just and says that Government at least cannot look anybody squarely in the face and deny that the proposal is right. The Anand Pracharak, however, considers it to be both unnecessary and undesirable and hopes that the Council will not waste its time in discussing it.

Indian States.

The Haqiqat publishes a communicated article in which the writer strongly urges the Government of India to return to the Nizam his ancestral territory of Berar. It was the Nizam's Government through whose aid the British were able to gain a foot-hold in India in the beginning and the present Nizam himself has always been most munificent in his help whenever the Government have been in difficulties. It is a pity that when he claims his legitimate hereditary right the terrible demon of British land-hunger is not prepared to disgorge it. It would be better for the Government of India to return Berar before the Nizam's letter to Lord Reading is published, before fresh disclosures are made and before the agitation for restoration assumes all-India dimensions. The Chamber of Princes and the Punjab Khilafat conference and numerous other Muslim conferences have supported the demand and only a few wicked and biassed Beraris are opposed to it. Lord Reading would be well advised to rectify this wrong immediately after his return. Elsewhere the same paper appeals to the Government of India to show every consideration for the wishes of the present ruler of Bhopal in the matter of succession as they are in conformity with the Islamic law though they may conflict with the State custom. The heir designated by the Begum is the most suitable person for the gaddi.

His Majesty the King Emperor's visits.

The Anand Pracharak welcomes the idea of the King-Emperor's visit to India as it believes that it will prove advantageous to the country.

Foreign affairs.

Under the heading "The Travail in China" the Leader writes: To all disinterested observers of the course of events in China it is evident that the manifestations of nationalist spirit there are the outcome of the policy of exploitation which has been pursued by a number of Western Powers, Japan and the United States. A series of treaties have been imposed by force upon China which stand in the way of her economic and political progress and which are a constant source of irritation to the awakened consciousness of its people. The Chinese are prisoners in their own house . . . The vested interests are bound to put up a strenuous fight, and they may prevail. If these win, the peace-loving Chinese will be driven to desperation and no one can foretell what an exasperated people may do to vindicate their right to live. The Vartman holds America responsible for creating anti-alien feeling in China and says that there are signs which show a that if the foreigners do not change their policy the day will not be far off when a similar fire will rage all over Asia and every country will turn out foreigners like China. Referring to the report regarding the despatch of Indian troops to China the Aj says that this is a matter of the greatest concern to India. It lends support to the view that the Indian Army is chiefly intended to maintain and extend the influence of the British Empire in the East. We can emphatically assert that India is not eager to have a hand in the destruction of China. In another article the same paper remarks that the British Government's refusal to help France actively in depriving the Riffs of their liberty is based on the fear lest France's influence should increase in Morocco, which would always be a menace to Gibraltar. The Riffs will be able to profit by such an attitude of the British but their emancipation will depend upon their own exertions. The Hamdam complains of atrocities by British officials on the inhabitants of Mosul and says that even if the political exigencies of the Mosul Inquiry Committee demanded such action it should be discontinued as the inquiry is over and its continuance now will be regarded only as repression and tyranny.

Lord Birkenhead's statement and speeches.

Newspapers continue to criticize in strong language Lord Birkenhead's statement and recent speeches. A few papers have even indulged in vituperation. Commenting on the speech at Milton Abbey Park, the Leader says: "Is the constitutional progress of the whole of India to be delayed and a reactionary policy to prevail simply because in one or two councils the party of obstruction dominates? If his lordship is at all anxious to stimulate the forces of co-operation and to induce the swarajists to give up their tactics, he ought to show that co-operation pays. And how can the existing constitution be made a success when the representative bodies have no control over the superior executive agency which has been made more irresponsible than before, and which has been taken under the special and exclusive care of the Secretary of State? The conditions of co-operation have, indeed, been made more difficult even for those willing to co-operate and yet we are told that unless co-operation is forthcoming very few doors will remain open." The Bhavishya says that but for the dissensions between Hindus and Muslims and among various political bodies, even the forefathers of Lord Birkenhead would not have ventured in dream to hold out such reckless threats to Indians and an incapable man like Birkenhead would not have been allowed to occupy the chair of the Secretary of State for India. The paper calls Lord Birkenhead a hypocrite and says that his threats of closing the door of further reforms are of no greater importance than the ravings of mad men. The Abhyudaya observes that Lord Birkenhead makes a show of the strength of the sword. We should reply by the initiation of a vigorous agitation and our cheerful readiness to suffer the greatest self-sacrifice for our rights. This is the way in which the Indians, if they wish, can wrest swaraj from the hands of Lord Birkenhead himself. The Sainik thinks that the statement of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru to the effect that Indians cannot accept the position in which Lord Birkenhead wants to keep them and that they cannot co-operate with the Government in strengthening the hold of England over India will be endorsed by the Assembly. Lord Birkenhead should take it to be the reply of the whole of India and should bear in mind that no power can suppress an awakened nation. The Bharat Jiwan thinks that the only reply to the statement of Lord Birkenhead and Earl Winterton which Indians can give at the present juncture is the boycott of British goods. If Indians resolve to purchase goods from foreign countries other than England the "steel frame" will begin to rust from to-day and will surely totter down in a year. Englishmen are a nation of shopkeepers and they can bear anything except injury to trade. The Anand remarks that if Lord Birkenhead wants that Indians should co-operate with him he should deem it his duty to sympathise with Indians in their affliction and solve the problem of poverty and unemployment in the country. The Abhaya writes:—Everybody does know that Englishmen established their rule in India by fraud, deception and injustice. To-day Lord Birkenhead forgets everything and says:—"We have secured India by sword." Well, we should not feel offended. Speeches and writings cannot be a reply to this statement of his, but we too ought to decide that swaraj is not to be secured from Englishmen by words alone. So long as Indians do not become votaries of the sword they cannot reply to Lord Birkenhead, because poison is counteracted by poison only. The Aj exhorts the Indians to accept the challenge of the Secretary of State to frame a constitution acceptable to all sections of the people. The lament for Hindu-Muslim unity will only keep us at a distance from our object, whereas if we set about framing the required swaraj scheme, forgetting religious and communal differences, we are sure to attain unity as well as swaraj. The same paper in an another article supports the resolution of the All-India Swaraj Party meeting at Calcutta expressing willingness to co-operate with the Government on honourable terms. The Aziz-i-Hind welcomes the statement in the Lords as the establishment of democracy in India without adequate representation for Muslims in elective bodies and the services would mean their ruin as a community. The Oudh Akhbar advises the Swarajists not to respond to Lord Birkenhead's appeal for co-operation in working dyarchy as that would only lead to the perpetuation of that undesirable system. It is a pity that Lord Reading's visit has proved so barren of results and so much Indian money has been wasted.

17 AUG 19[illegible]

Political Propaganda.

The Aj refers to the protest of the High Commissioner of India, Sir A. C. Chatterji, and of the representative of the British Empire against the statement of Mr. Joshi at the International Labour Conference at Geneva regarding the prevalence of begar in India and remarks that dust is thrown into the eyes of people in this manner in respect of an evil which is practised in broad daylight almost everywhere. Even an outsider can conceive how fine the administration would be for the success of which such untruths have to be resorted to. Commenting on the grievances of third class passengers and the causes thereof, the Bhavishya says that in no other country of the world have the railway passengers to suffer so much. The chief reason of this is that in this country the railway authorities are foreigners. They have come here to amass riches somehow and not to provide comforts to Indians who are slaves. One Mr. Pestonji writing in the Oudh Akhbar urges Indians to take hope and lesson from the events in the Riff and China. The great war has estranged Germany, Russia and Japan from those who are out to dominate the East. There is, therefore, no reason why the East should not accept the aid of Russia or any other Power and to gain our freedom we should cultivate the friendship of those whom these dangerous and selfish people hate and avoid most.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Bhavishya calls attention to the reports received from Calcutta that Muslim speakers are openly inciting their co-religionists to break the idols of Hindus and for the blood of one Musalman to shed the blood of hundreds of Hindus. In one secret society of Musalmans it was suggested that the best opportunity for taking revenge would be the next Muharram. The same paper publishes a letter from the Secretary, Hindu Sabha, Allahabad, warning the Hindus against the kidnapping activities of the Muslim goondas. It says that thousands of Muslim goondas are engaged in this work which, it appears, is being carried on in an organized manner. If every Hindu remains alert and does his duty these diabolical deeds of wicked men will stop at once. Maulana Akbar Shah Khan, Najibabadi, writing in the Hamdam observes that Lala Har Dayal's articles on Hindu Raj appear to be the composition of some British Foreign Office official. The Mahrattas and Sikhs never became a power in the land and it is idle on the part of the Hindus to think of expelling from India those very Muslims who ruled over them for so many centuries. When the Hindus and Muslims together cannot expel the British it is foolish to believe that the Hindus alone will be able to do this. All these articles are meant only to widen the gulf between the two communities. The Haqiqat wonders why Mr. Malaviya, who was so much perturbed over the Kohat incident and made a display of his love of peace and justice has taken no notice of the Kidderpore occurrence and has not uttered a single word of reproach to the Hindu hooligans responsible for it. The Muslim leaders were always reproached for not sympathising with the Hindus oppressed in communal disturbances, but what about the indifference of the Hindu leaders and the silence of the Hindu press in respect of this particular affair? The Awaz complains that Muslims sacrificed a cow at Mechua Bazar, Calcutta, in the presence of Hindus and says that the best way for Hindus to put a stop to cow-slaughter would be to slaughter pigs and use pork. This should be done after persuasion has failed with the Muslims and then it will be seen that cow-slaughter will stop of itself.

Moplah prisoners.

Referring to the reports that the scheme of the Madras Government to send the women and children of Moplah convicts to the Andamans is meeting with strong Muslim opposition, the Leader says: Having regard to the intensity of feeling that has been roused, it would be unwise on the part of the Government to insist on carrying out the scheme and ignore the sentiment of the community. It would be well if the Government could arrange to send a deputation of one or two leading non-official public men to the Andamans to study the conditions obtaining there and postpone their scheme till the deputation submitted their report. The Mansur advises the Government of India not only to abandon this ruinous scheme but also to accord sanction to the settlement of the Moplahs in the Nizam's dominions. The Hiqiqit strongly supports the resolution passed at the All-Muslim Parties Conference at Amritsar on this subject and suggests that protest meetings should be held throughout the country.

Hindu organization.

The Bhavishya writes: If Muslims and Christians keep aloof from national work the Hindus should take to the organization of their own community. India, after all, belongs to Hindus. Unless they organize themselves they cannot rest in peace. If laying aside their sectarian differences twenty crores of Hindus raise a unanimous cry for the progress of the country, the whole world will become perturbed and big generals will be at their wits' end.

Indian states.

Referring to the Neemuchana affair the Indian Daily Telegraph says that the report of the commission appointed by the Alwar Raj and the comments of the Maharaja on it mark the end of what can only be described as one of the worst agitations in the country against a prominent ruling chief and a successful administrator. No one can read the speech of His Highness the Maharaja without feeling to what extent misrepresentations had been carried. The agitation against Indore combined with this campaign of calumny against Alwar, distinctly mark the dawn of a new era in Indian politics—an attitude of severe criticism towards the princes which must have the only result of alienating a powerful class from the politicians.

Bhai Parmanand.

The Aj refers to the reply of the Under Secretary of State to Colonel Wedgewood's question regarding the refusal of permission to Bhai Parmanand to visit England for medical treatment and wonders how even the independent members of Parliament can support such cruelty. It is a wonder of wonders that the Secretary of State did not wish to interfere with the decision of permanent officials, when he can not only interfere, but even kick, in case a most ordinary Civilian feels the slightest inconvenience. All this shows that the greed for Empire and the tendency to support the action of officials belonging to their own race are gradually throwing down the English from the high pedestal of justice and magnanimity. This may cost two or three Indians their lives, but England will surely suffer the most in the end, as she will become totally demoralised.

Jail reforms.

Commenting on the latest administration report on jails in the United Provinces the Oudh Akhbar says that in order to meet the objection of the jail authorities to sentences of simple imprisonment the magistracy should as far as possible inflict fines and the punishment of simple imprisonment should be gradually eliminated from the Penal Code. The Hamdam urges that juvenile offenders should not be allowed to live with grown-up prisoners in common jails. They should either be discharged on the security of their guardians or retained in reformatory schools for a period which should be so short as not to leave any influence on their lives.

Cow-protection.

The Pratap publishes a letter in which the writer says that the question of cow-sacrifice can be solved if the entire Hindu community including rajas and raises, sends an All-India deputation to the independent Muslim states and also to the Ulema there to secure firmans against cow-sacrifice and to request those Ulema to tour in India. It would then be very easy to open gowshalas and cow-protection societies in every village and force the Government to stop the slaughter of cows for purposes of trade and for the army.

The Congress.

The Krishna thinks that among those proposed for the presidentship of the Congress Mrs. Naidu, Mr. Kelkar and Lala Lajpat Rai have the best chances. However as the Cawnpore Reception Committee does not favour Mrs. Naidu, one of the remaining two will most likely be selected. The Medina strongly objects to the election of any anti-Muslim leader like Lala Lajpat Rai or Mr. Malaviya as president and says that if any such person is elected the Muslims should boycott the Congress. A selection can be easily made out of Messrs. Arabindo Ghosh, Jawahar Lal Nehru, Patel, Moti Lal Nehru, Sen-Gupta, Abdul Kalam, Shaukat Ali and Mrs. Naidu. The Sada-i-Muslim deplores Mr. Gandhi's resignation of the presidentship of the Congress and says that with Mr. Sen-Gupta ready for servile co-operation the Congress will now prove a rudderless barque.

Local boards.

The Pratap suspects a clever move on the part of the authorities in fixing the date for the district and municipal board elections in December when the Congress will also be held and urges Congressmen not to devote so much attention to the elections as to let the Congress work suffer. Commenting upon the annual report of the Aligarh municipality the Aj agrees with the view of the Chairman regarding the desirability of keeping religion aloof from politics in India and says: This poisonous germ of mixing up religion with politics has entered into our life to such an extent that the entire business of the country has been suffering through it and it is also strengthening the very bureaucracy to weaken whom the nationalist movement was started. There can be no progress of the people and no unity among them until a system of general electorates takes the place of separate representation on a religious basis. The Government have no interest in unity. We ourselves have placed such an instrument into their hands as has greatly increased their power. If we had eyes to-day, we would have endeavoured to wrest this instrument from their hands, but when we ourselves have become blind, there is no reason why they should not take advantage of our folly. A writer in the Medina appeals to the Muslim members of the United Provinces Council to see that separate representation is granted to Muslims in town areas now that the Town Areas Act is going to be amended. The Zulqarnain while supporting the grant of separate representation to Muslims in town areas urges that the Town Area Committees should have the schools, slaughter-houses and pounds within their limits under their control. The Mukhbir-i-Alam emphasizes the desirability in public interest of the presence of editors of newspapers on local bodies and hopes that the Government will keep this in view in making nominations for the new boards. The Hamdam condemns Mr. Shastri's attack on Mr. Jinnah for the latter's efforts to secure a revision of the Lucknow pact and asserts that the extension of separate representation to local bodies and the services cannot add to the estrangement between the two communities. Hindu and Muslim members are working in co-operation in the Legislative Councils where separate representation exists and there seems no reason why the same good relations should not prevail in the local bodies when the rights of the minority in them are defined. By creating contentment among Muslims who are seriously dissatisfied with the existing state of affairs, inter-communal unity will be furthered and not hampered. They have grievances against the Hindus and these must be remedied.

Sir William Birdwood's speech.

The Oudh Akhbar says that Sir William has shattered even the little hope that had been left after the disappointing speeches of Lord Birkenhead and Earl Winterton and by saying that Indians were pursuing an impracticable ideal he has virtually declared that Government have decided once for all that Indians will continue to remain deprived of their just and national rights.

The Skeen Committee.

The Abhyudaya apprehends from the personnel of the Skeen Committee and its terms of reference that it will do no good to Indians and the money of the people expended on it will be wasted.

Foreign affairs.

Referring to the news that France and Spain have arranged a joint campaign against the Riffs, the Leader says:—"Europe would have rung with denunciation if any great Power had tried to crush a small European state in the manner France and Spain are trying to do in the case of the Riffs. But there is none to succour these poor but indomitable tribesmen and the whole of Europe looks on almost unconcerned while a great human tragedy is being enacted. The Riffs have shown that they are not only clean fighters but high-minded and generous foes." The Medina says that if it is a fact that the whole of Europe is supporting France and if America and Italy are really giving her practical aid, then the Franco-Riffian war may well be regarded as a contest between Islam and Christianity and it becomes the bounden duty of every Muslim to help the Riffs. Indian Muslims can contribute their share by holding protest meetings all over the country to press the British Government to arrange for an honourable peace between the parties, by sending a medical mission and giving an enthusiastic response to Syed Amir Ali's appeal on behalf of the Red Crescent Society and by effecting a complete boycott of French goods. Referring to the report of a secret Turko-Persian treaty regarding Mosul, the paper advises Britain to improve her political relations with the Islamic countries and not to give them an opportunity for a joint opposition. The Hindustani expresses sympathy with the Chinese who, according to the appeal issued by the Canton National Government, are slaves in their own land. The Chinese are quite right in demanding freedom of trade and movement for themselves and the statement of the foreigners that the Bolsheviks are egging the Chinese on to war is totally unfounded. The real cause of the conflict is that the foreigners have robbed the Chinese and rendered them helpless. The Bhavishya remarks that the responsibility for dissensions and brigandage in China lies more on the shoulders of England than on those of Japan, America and France. The Aj is glad that the Afghan Government have refused to bend their knees to Mussolini and remarks that the confiscation of all available cash and property of Afghans by him is nothing short of dacoity.

Lord Birkenhead's statement and speeches.

The Abhyudaya does not agree with Mr. Srinivasa Shastri's views on Lord Birkenhead's statement and says that only such a policy should be adopted as would carry the masses with the leaders and inspire self-confidence in them and unite them into a solid and powerful body. The Vartman observes that it is vain to expect co-operation from Indians unless the present system of government is changed or an assurance is given to that effect. Indians will not be content even with colonial self-government. The Sainik remarks that if Lord Birkenhead has firmly resolved to keep India in bondage with the sharp edge of the sword, she, though a subject country, has also firmly resolved that she will not rest in peace so long as she does not become free. Such speeches will only alienate Indians. The Garhwali regards the speech as a threat to Indians and says that the speech shows that his lordship has no knowledge of the real situation in India and has formed his opinion only by hearing one-sided arguments. Indians were forced to resort to non-co-operation when they found that co-operation was fruitless. It is the agents of the British Government themselves who are really responsible for non-co-operation. Englishmen should treat Indians on a footing of equality and, realising that the welfare of both the nations lies in mutual co-operation, should not try to humiliate them. Referring to the speech at

MANUSCRIPTS BRANCH
INDIA OFFICE

Milton Abbey Park, the Oudh Akhbar assures Lord Birkenhead that the Swarajists are not to be moved by threats and can be won over only by concessions. The Aziz-i-Hind welcomes Lord Birkenhead's statement in the House of Lords as the paper holds that the establishment of democracy in India without adequate representation for the Muslims in the elective bodies and services would mean their ruin as a community.

Political propaganda.

Referring to the United Provinces Liberal Association's decision that it is in the best interests of the country that every political party should work the present system in order to demonstrate the ability of Indians to work a more fully democratic form of government, the Pioneer says:—" That decision accords with the spirit in which the Liberals have endeavoured to order their doings ever since the Reforms came into existence...But the chief need for the Liberals is to infuse into their political creed a more robust belief in themselves and a less suspicious attitude towards the Government. They cannot expect to carry the weight that they desire if they persist in supporting a programme which, in many respects, is merely Swarajism smitten with pernicious anæmia." The Abhyudaya thinks that Mr. Gandhi's dissociation from the Congress is a misfortune for the country and remarks that there is no other leader in the country who is so resourceful and far-sighted as to be able to awaken the people and to carry them with him at a critical juncture. The Aj exhorts all Indian political parties to sink their differences and present at the next Congress a united front to Lords Birkenhead, Reading and Lytton and to induce Mr. Gandhi not to desert the Congress at the present critical juncture. The Abhyudaya observes that Mr. Jinnah's attempt to secure a revision of the Lucknow Pact will be a side-blow to Indian nationalism. Those who dream of Arabia and Turkey will sacrifice the permanent interests of the country to their temporary gains. Hindus will do well to be on their guard and to protect not only their own interests but also the future and the permanent interests of the country. The Pratap views with approval Mr. Gandhi's new programme for the economic and political organisation of villages and regards it as a preparation for satyagraha which will never go in vain. It says that this organisation will produce brave and firm men who will make Lord Birkenhead and his nation speak the truth and clear their hearts. Unless we develop this power, Lord Birkenhead and his colleagues, far from giving us anything will not even talk to us politely. The Bhavishya says that the Swaraj party is the only party in the country which is able to give battle to and defeat the " crooked bureaucracy." It should now give an opportunity to other political parties to join the Congress, so that its demand may be regarded as the united demand of the whole country. The Aj remarks that the Liberals are mistaken in holding the opinion that the Swarajist policy was a failure and urges that it is not proper to allow dyarchy to exist anywhere in India. The people should, therefore, strive hard to put an end to it. The Hindustani hopes that all Indian political parties will agree whole-heartedly with the conditions for co-operation with Government put forward by Swarajists at the Calcutta meeting of the All-India Congress Committee and in view of Mr. Gandhi's willingness to withdraw the spinning franchise even the Liberals will now have no cause for grievance. The situation demands that all parties should present a joint scheme to Lord Birkenhead, as his recent statement in the Lords shows that he has no regard for Indian interests and the conditions of co-operation laid down by him are simply impossible of acceptance. He wants Indians to work the present Reforms and then to expect further concessions. All Indian political leaders have repeatedly declared that the present Reforms are a delusion and a snare. The Indian political leaders should present the same united front that the British political parties are presenting in regard to the Indian question. We acknowledge that the present Government is well organised and equipped with machine-guns, aeroplanes and other weapons of destruction which can annihilate us in an instant, but history does not show that any nation has been able to rule over another for any length of time through sheer force. Government would, therefore, be well advised to concede the Indian demands which it cannot put off for more than a short time.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Vartman urges Hindu Sabhas to send preachers to villages to save simple and ignorant villagers from changing their religion and says that it matters little whether the All Parties Muslim Conference was successful or not, for the work of tabligh has been started in the Punjab and it is quite possible that it may be extended to other provinces. Referring to the scheme of a Hindu Raj formulated by the Arya Swaraj Sabha, Cawnpore, the Sada-i-Muslim wonders how a Government conducted in accordance with Arya principles and the ancient Aryan civilization can be established without antagonising Muslims and other races. Any movement which aims at combining religion with politics is bound to end in failure. In another article the paper complains that the Arya Samajists deliberately distort history to suit their propagandist purposes. This would be evident from a survey of any book from "Satyartha Prakash" down to "Hindu Superiority." Influenced by this national trait the Krishna has also related some stories of the bravery of Rajput women against Akbar. Well, the question is of the courage of men, and history shows that Rajputs gave the greatest proof of their being men by marrying their daughters to the Emperor. If we too had been inspired by sangathanist feelings we could have referred to some (heroic) deeds of the Muslims. But we find that when the Muslims get out of hand under this very provocation of the Hindus, a difficult situation arises and the associates of the Krishna have to run to the law courts. So we are not going to be taken in. Muslims, look here, propaganda has to be met by counter-propaganda and not by "manly courage." Leave this for Rajput women.

Protection of Cement Industry.

Referring to the message of its Simla correspondent that the Government have decided to take no action at all on the report of the Indian Tariff Board regarding the grant of protection to the Indian cement industry, the Leader says:—"If this information is correct, then the Government have laid themselves open to just criticism. It is unfortunate that internal competition should have furnished the Government with an occasion to arrive at the reported decision, but the very fact that they have rejected a very reasonable recommendation the acceptance of which only involved a contingent obligation, will lead the Indian public to think that their decision has not been arrived at entirely on a question of principle or policy but has been influenced by considerations which are not free from bias in favour of British cement which competes with the Indian product at the ports."

Indians in the Colonies.

Under the heading "Insatiable Anti-Indianism" the Leader strongly condemns the bill introduced by Mr. Malan in the South African Assembly and deplores that the Government of India have not adopted a policy of retaliation. "We are aware that such a policy aimed by the Government of India at the white peoples of South Africa can not go far in making an impression upon the latter but it will at least show the world that the South African Government's policy has moved to indignation even the British Government of India and therefore stands self-condemned. Indian opinion is of course unanimous on the subject but it is powerless to make itself felt. All the same it cannot afford to let judgment go against it by default. It must agitate against every act of injustice and must make its voice heard not only in Simla but in Whitehall also."

Punjab Jails.

Referring to the judgment in the libel case against the Bande Mataram of Lahore the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—"The case has resulted in a black mark being imprinted on the jail policy of the Punjab. The pity is that the editor who exposed the wrongs has yet been mulcted in damages by the High Court. We congratulate the Punjab newspaper on the high sense of public duty that it has displayed. It has by this considerably elevated Indian journalism as a whole. Perhaps some years must elapse before our judges take that broad and humane view of libel cases against newspapers and show the same high regard for the liberty of the press that we find in some of the decisions of the British courts."

Bombay Textile Industry.

The Leader regrets the action of the Bombay Millowners' Association in deciding to reduce the wages of their workmen and says that if there is a strike it will not be easy for one to withhold one's sympathy from the strikers. "We earnestly hope the Government of Bombay will try to intervene at this stage and to intervene effectively on the side of the weaker party, not to extort from the millowners unfair concessions but to see that the weaker party will not be cheated of what may be their just due and to ensure that conditions will not be produced in which breaches of the peace cannot be averted."

Moplah prisoners.

The Medina expresses extreme dissatisfaction at the reply given by the Home Member of the Madras Government to the Muslims about the colonisation of the Moplahs in the Andamans and says that when the Jail Committee has declared the Islands to be uninhabitable, this deportation can mean only annihilation and ruin for them.

Indian States.

The Arya Mitra says that in the Bhopal State, which has already got a bad name for prejudice against Hindus, a number of Hindu women are being abducted and forced to accept Islam every month and the authorities do not pay any heed to the complaints of their relatives. When these women have once embraced Islam it becomes unlawful, according to the laws of the State, even to talk about them any more. The paper appeals to the Government of India to take measures for stopping all such activities. The Abhyudaya remarks that in the official report on Neemuchana massacre the blame for firing the first shot has been laid at the door of poor subjects, whereas the firing by the Inspector-General of Police has been described as having been done in self-defence. This is how the truth is concealed. The Bhavishya says that by the arguments which His Highness the Maharaja of Alwar has advanced for not allowing an independent commission of inquiry into the Neemuchana affair he has betrayed his own incompetence and despotism. The British Government does not interfere even in cases like this simply because such tragic occurrences in Indian states prevent a widespread agitation against the oppression practised in British India.

The U. P. Ayurvedic and Tibbi Committee.

Hakim Doctor Ulvi writing in the Oudh Akhbar appeals to the Committee to recommend the establishment of a Central Tibbi College at Lucknow which should impart instruction in all the modern developments of medical science and conduct investigations into the properties of unani drugs and whose degrees should be regarded as a registrable qualification.

Foreign Insurance Companies.

The Oudh Akhbar accords its hearty support to Mr. Jamna Das Mehta's Bill for the deposit of security by foreign insurance companies and says that Indian investors and insurers in these companies stand urgently in need of protection, and there seems no reason why the conditions imposed on Indian companies should not be extended to foreign companies.

Local Boards.

The Oudh Akhbar questions the wisdom of holding the municipal elections in the United Provinces in December while the financial year closes in March. The proposed changes in the election rules also need careful scrutiny by municipal boards and they should not accept anything which would add to the disabilities of voters. The condition laid down about the production of certificates of payment of income-tax by voters of that class seems unnecessary and any other proof of such payment should suffice.

The Sikh Gurdwara Bill.

The Najat condemns the "callous indifference" of the Government of India to public opinion in not reinstalling the Maharaja of Nabha, in offering only conditional liberty to Akali prisoners and in trying to induce Akalis by propaganda to resume the Akhand Path at Jaito and says that the Akalis will not be satisfied until all their demands are conceded.

Sale of landed property in lieu of revenue arrears.

The Oudh Akhbar notes with satisfaction a resolution of the Assam Council that in cases of sale of landed property for realisation of arrears of Government revenues, the defaulting proprietors should have the right of getting back their properties if they deposit the arrears together with other incidental charges and expenses within thirty days of the sale and appeals to other local legislatures, especially that of the United Provinces to take similar action for the protection of landed proprietors.

Presidentship of the Congress.

The Oudh Akhbar opines that on account of his disinterestedness, sacrifices and capacity Mr. Gandhi is the best man for the office and he should not resign the presidentship of the Congress simply because that body is likely to reject his spinning franchise. Pandit Moti Lal Nehru is no doubt a suitable person but with his poor health and his pre-occupations in the Swaraj Party he would not do for the post. Every effort should, therefore, be made to retain the services of Mr. Gandhi.

Railway facilities in Etah.

The Anand Pracharak points out that Etah is one of the richest, busiest and most populous districts in the Agra division. The town of Etah is also centrally situated and the interests of trade and public convenience demand that the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway line should be extended from Kasganj to Agra via Etah. This extension would also be able to divert the trade which at present passes from Kasganj to Agra through the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway.

Conviction of the editor of the Siyasat.

The Najat deplores the conviction of the editor of the Siyasat and says that this is probably the first instance in India in which there has been such a severe sentence in spite of an apology. This means that justice is being subordinated to political expediency.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 8, 1925.

Foreign Affairs.

The Najat welcomes the proposal of some Calcutta traders to organize a boycott of French goods as a protest against the action of the Government of French India in sending troops to crush the Riffs. Muslim countries are faring very badly at the hands of the European Powers and the weapon of economic boycott should prove very useful in undermining the resources of their countries which are mostly trading and manufacturing. The paper is, however, diffident of the success of the boycott as Indians are extremely unpatriotic and weak. They should first develop the spirit of sacrifice and steadiness of purpose which would persistently refuse to co-operate with those who enslave them. Till then their future is absolutely dark. In another article the paper says that the selfishness and oppressions of the imperialistic governments of Europe have so far awakened the governments of the East that they are now closely watching the moves of Europeans and are trying to save their countries from their political activities. The obstacles which have been placed by Britain in the solution of the Mosul question have been viewed with anxious concern by Turkey and Persia and reports are now to hand of a secret alliance between the two to face a war with England on the Mosul question. If England gets Mosul she will begin to hanker after the oil wells of Persia also. We pray to God that the matter may be amicably settled by negotiation and the world may be spared the inevitable horrors of war.

Lord Birkenhead's statement and speeches.

The Shakti says: If Lord Birkenhead has resolved to suppress us and to benefit by our weakness, we too have resolved to extricate ourselves from his clutches as soon as possible. So far he has non-co-operated with us, but if he can assure us that he wants to co-operate honestly and sincerely a number of doors are open for him. If, however, he persists in his haughtiness he will have to lose India and repent. The Prem is furious over Lord Birkenhead's Dorset speech and says: It is due to our present political apathy and communal antipathy that the Secretary of State has dared to give vent to such sentiments. Lord Birkenhead relies on the British sword but where was his sharp sword when the Germans were gaining victories one after the other? At that time it was not the British sword but the poor and helpless Indians who saved the honour of Britain. His lordship is welcome to shut the doors. This will only do good to India as it will disillusion those who have been expecting to see swaraj coming through these doors. The Najat says that the extremely disappointing speech of Lord Birkenhead at Milton Abbey Park affords a glimpse of the spirit of absolutism which pervades the British administration. Just now when every part of the British administrative machine is bent on depriving Indians of their natural rights in order to maintain its own prestige and the prevailing colour distinction, it is idle to expect any change in the British angle of vision. When we do not enjoy the right of self-determination we should calmly and bravely bear our sorrows. Lord Birkenhead thinks that his race has a permanent right of dominion over India but it is too much to expect any intelligent person to acknowledge this claim. Practically all the avenues of co-operation thrown open to Government by Mr. Das's Faridpur speech have now been closed by Lord Birkenhead and all Indian political parties are now in search of a front on which they can launch a united attack and bring this god of pride and arrogance to the right path. The heartless and unsympathetic manner in which Indians are being ruled does not at all become such a self-respecting people and it is up to them to give as dignified and strong an answer as Lord Birkenhead's attitude deserves.

Referring to the latest plan of campaign announced by the Swarajists in Bengal, the Pioneer writes: The baffled politicians who have declared their intention of inaugurating a movement to persuade the peasantry to refuse payment of taxes seem to have overlooked the pertinent fact that Government possess a very effective instrument for coping with revolutionary tactics in Bengal and we are convinced that any overt act aimed at paralysing the administration would be dealt with sternly and swiftly. The authorities, indeed, would be untrue to their trust if they failed to use to the full every weapon in their armoury to prevent the ruin of deluded and ignorant peasants in order that the vanity of discredited politicians might be soothed. Commenting on the speech of the Governor of the Central Provinces to the Legislative Council the Indian Daily Telegraph says: The Governor assumed a most conciliatory tone, but it would be fatal to the future of the Swarajist party if the Central Provinces group should succumb to the blandishments of officials and Liberals. The threat of Lord Birkenhead is dangling over their heads. Liberals have still faith in British promises, but the country has lost it. And we warn the Swarajists that the moment they decide to accept ministerships and to work dyarchy attended with bombastic explanations about responsive or honourable co-operation, they will have completely lost their hold on the populace. The Abhyudaya pays a high tribute to Mr. Gandhi for the sacrifice involved in making over the Congress to the Swaraj party. He has sacrificed his most cherished principles to the interests of the country. He has placed before the country an unrivalled example of patriotism, generosity and renunciation and other leaders should not hesitate to make a similar sacrifice in order to secure unity among all political parties for presenting an undivided front to Lord Birkenhead and the bureaucracy. The Abhaya deplores that the Hindus do not understand the real objects and spirit of the Rakshabandhan ceremony which was inaugurated in order to conserve and organize the Hindu society. Two of the objects were to protect the country from foreigners and the cows from wicked persons. If we had properly grasped the real meaning of Rakshabandhan Hindu society would not have fallen into such a plight. The Prem publishes a letter from Lala Har Dayal (Sweden) in which he appeals to Hindu poets to write an epic on Nepal which upheld the honour of India in her struggle for liberty a hundred years ago and whence her freedom is to come in future. Commenting upon the case of the two Indian girls whose chastity was reported to have been outraged by the white manager of an estate in the Malaya Peninsula and his assistant the Aj remarks: How justice was murdered in the case! We are sorry not that justice was not done because nobody does justice to beggars and slaves, but because Indian labourers still work there. We know they are helpless, but all the same they should attach greater value to the honour of their women. The Hindustani warns Indian political leaders against offering co-operation to Government at this juncture as they would thereby lose not only their respect in the eyes of officials but also their popularity with the public. They should at least wait for Lord Reading's announcement and the debate on it in the Assembly before declaring their intentions. The Oudh Akhbar urges the Government of India to make it clear to Lord Birkenhead that it is only by responding to Mr. Gandhi's appeal for the release of political prisoners that he can expect any change of front on the part of Swarajists.

Mr. C. R. Das and Lord Lytton.

Commenting on Pandit Moti Lal Nehru's statement regarding "Wayfarer's" account of the negotiations between Mr. Das and Lord Lytton, the Leader writes: It is immaterial what precisely was the nature of the "negotiations" with the British Government and through whom they were carried on and what stage they might have reached at the time of Mr. Das's death. What is of importance at the moment is what policy the Swaraj party intend to follow in the immediate present and the near future. On this we regret to say that Mr. Nehru's statement is not reassuring from our point of view . . . The Swaraj party are still looking backward, if we may say so. Firmly convinced as we are that their past policy has not made and cannot make for the ordered political progress of India, we can but express again a mild hope that at an early date they may take a bold step forward and declare that their policy is no longer one of preparation for mass civil disobedience or of obstruction leading to nowhere but of constructive constitutional effort. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—No one can read the contradiction of Pandit Moti Lal Nehru without feeling that Gandhi was right in handing over his political self, body and soul, to such a body (Swarajists). The extracts from the letters of the late leader, quoted in that letter, are inspiring. They lift the position of the Swarajists from the plane of humble negotiations with the bureaucracy to that of heroes and selfless patriots, as ready to suffer for their country now as four years ago. The Aj says that the charge against Mr. C. R. Das that he had secretly negotiated with Lord Lytton and had displayed even mean-mindedness in forgetting political prisoners is utterly baseless and has been made only with a view to discredit the departed leader of the Swaraj party.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers publish instructions issued by the All-India Hindu Maha Sabha for the proper celebration of the next Janmashtami in the course of which it is urged that Sri Krishna, as Gopalji, being the chief protector of the cow, it is the duty of every Hindu to take a vow on the Janmashtami (the birthday of Krishna) that he would do his best for the protection of cows so that no cow belonging to a Hindu may fall into the hands of butchers and that he would stop all money-dealings with them. The Abhaya publishes an article under the heading "Increase of Hooliganism" in which it complains of Muslim outrages upon Hindus and says:—Muslims have forsaken humanity itself. Robbing people, molesting women and kidnapping children, as is done by wolves, are specimens of their civilization. In throwing flesh inside temples, setting fire to buildings and beating two or three men by ten or twenty lies their heroism. Marrying the daughters of uncles is an example of their high ideals. Can anybody sleep peacefully in the midst of such races and such a religion? If not, then all should combine to crush the ~~increasing~~ hooliganism of Muslims. The paper blames the Government for this state of things and warns it that if the hooliganism of Muslims is not checked they may after destroying Hindus put an end to the "proud" Englishmen also. Referring to persistent reports of abduction of Hindu girls by Muslims, the Arya Patra appeals to Hindus to take vigorous steps to save the honour of their womanhood from the attacks of the agents of Hasan Nizami. Referring to a speech by Swami Satyadeva at Cawnpore in which he extolled the bravery of the Hindus and also gave some instances of his personal courage, the Sada-i-Muslim writes: Swami Satyadeva has become very brave. All the inhabitants of America were so much afraid of him that they fled to hide themselves in the holes of rats at sight of him. Nine frontier men said only "Hun, Hun" in reply to his challenge and went away. He says that Muslims have never fought and can never fight. There is no doubt about it. We also acknowledge that the Muslims have never fought against them, because when Akbar first went to war against the Rajputs, after a few defeats, these people sent their daughters to the royal harem. How could Muslims fight now? Can anyone go to war with his wife's people?

Indian Medical Service.

Referring to Lord Birkenhead's statement that the Indian Medical Service must be maintained under certain conditions the Pioneer writes that its maintenance under the conditions outlined will be of a character radically altering its whole outlook and bringing, in effect, a new Service into existence—"It would be interesting to know whether the recent declaration of the British Medical Association regarding the manner in which the Royal Army Medical Corps has been treated has been taken into account by Lord Birkenhead. There seems to be a possibility that the War Office will find itself in the same position as the Admiralty if it persists in the attitude to which the Association has taken exception. If that is so, recruitment of medical officers to India may be markedly affected," The Leader strongly protests against the decision of the Secretary of State and says: "Medical" as a transferred subject will continue to be reserved to a material extent, and the abiding interests of India and her people will continue to be subordinated to the requirements, and still more, to the interests of the British Government and their officers . . . Lord Birkenhead has accepted the obligation of providing medical attendance by British medical men for the British Services in India. We affirm with confidence that it is no part of his duties as Secretary of State for India to accept such an obligation in disregard of the interests of the people of India, the guardian of whose interests he should have primarily considered himself to be. But his action is so very like the act generally perpetrated by self-appointed trustees of powerless peoples. Criticizing the maintenance of the Indian Medical Service the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: For one thing the military service men have been keeping the hospitals and medical college a close preserve for themselves. The best Indian talents find no scope. The Aj sarcastically remarks that Lord Birkenhead's action in giving to the high-placed Civilians even more than that recommended by the Lee Commission and in totally ignoring the same Commission's recommendations regarding the Indian Medical Service betrays his inmost desire to co-operate with Indians. We hope Sir Surendranath Banerjea and other Liberals of his class will be greatly pleased at this desire. Co-operationists and "constitutionalists" will do well to bestow some attention on this angle of vision of the Secretary of State.

Bombay Textile Industry.

The Leader strongly criticizes the attitude of the Government of India and of Bombay towards the mill crisis in Bombay and says that they ought to intervene without loss of time and grant some relief to the industry in order that, while workmen are saved, the capitalists may not feel a sense of grievance that they have been coerced into a concession which they were not in a position to make. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The Government in this country, faced with such a situation, is unwilling to lift its little finger. It will not interfere. It will only watch on. We have no hesitation in characterizing this attitude of the authorities as a scandal. The Aj urges that the solution of the problem of the wages of workmen in the Bombay mills is not to be found in their reduction but in a vigorous agitation for the reduction of the cotton excise duty. If the mill-owners fail to make an impression upon the Government through the ordinary form of agitation they should go one step forward and lead the movement for the boycott of British goods. The Oudh Akhbar appeals to the Government of Bombay to intervene on behalf of the cotton mill labourers of Bombay as a reduction in their wages will lead to emigration of labour and disastrous strikes. The mill-owners should clear the stocks by lowering the prices.

Allahabad University and women students.

The Leader strongly protests against the resolution of the Executive Council of the Allahabad University that except with the permission of the Vice-Chancellor no female student shall be admitted to any of the B. A. classes along with the male students. It says:—"Apart from the policy and propriety of the rule we should like to know whether the step taken by the Allahabad University is legally justifiable. Did it consult its legal advisers before deciding to compel girls to attend classes separately from boys?" In a subsequent issue the paper writes:—"Should women's education be encouraged in every possible way or should new barriers be erected against them? What will be the University's final answer to this crucial question?" In yet another article the paper writes:—"The more we think of it the more does it appear to us that the Executive Council has acted in an inexcusably irregular manner. It seems to imagine that provisions of the law can be set aside when they appear irksome to the majority of the Council. The matter deserves the serious consideration of the Government, the Chancellor and the Court."

Dr. Sudhindra Bose.

Commenting on Pandit Benarsidas Chaturvedi's communication printed in the paper recounting the difficulties said to have been placed by the British Consulate at Washington and the India Office in Dr. Sudhindra Bose's return to India to see his ailing mother, the Leader says:—"No Indian who reads it can, we think, help coming to the conclusion that Dr. Bose has been treated very hardly indeed. What is the justification therefor we do not know. If there is any, the Government owe it to themselves to publish it for general information. The facts as related in Pandit Benarsidas' communication are very damaging to the Government and are bound to evoke for Dr. Bose and his aged mother whole-hearted sympathy from every Indian.

Indians in the Colonies

Commenting on the new Class Areas Bill introduced in the South African Assembly, the Bhavishya deplores that Indians who shed their blood in the great war to save Britain should be so badly treated in one of her colonies. When Indians are crushed and robbed in their own country it is nothing strange that they should be ill-treated in South Africa and other colonies. Referring to the refusal of the British Government to interfere in the proposed South African legislation against Indian residents the Aj fails to comprehend the necessity for the existence of the British Empire when the inhabitants of one of its parts are so free to be hostile towards those of another. In another article the same paper remarks that when the British Government cannot interfere to prevent oppression of Indian residents in South Africa humanity dictates that India too should be granted Swaraj so that she may be able to adopt counter measures for the protection of her children. But the British Government will never do this. She would be our protector and at the same time refuse to protect us. Indeed this amounts to binding our hands and feet and then throwing us before a pack of wolves. The Vartman urges Indians to follow the same path as was pursued by Mahatma Gandhi while in South Africa and to oppose the new anti-Indian Bill there, even if they have to undergo terrible sufferings and face death.

Indian States.

The Bhavishya refers to the Viceroy's approval of the action taken by the Alwar Darbar in connection with the Neemuchana affair and says: Maharaja, if you are an Indian and have a heart within your body you will never be able to remain happy in spite of any number of certificates, unless you do penance for the sin. The Pratap disbelieves the Maharaja of Alwar's statement in connection with the Neemuchana shooting affair and remarks that the people of the State may take it to be true, but it will only increase the suspicions of the outsiders. The Maharaja should have espoused the cause of his subjects and inquired sincerely into their grievances. The Abhyudaya holds that the Maharaja of Alwar has by no means enhanced his self-respect and honour by his decision regarding the Neemuchana massacre and reiterates that it is only through an independent commission of inquiry that he can convince the outside world whether his officials were or were not to blame for the tragedy. The Nizam-i-Alam appeals to Muslims in British India to agitate against the oppressions on their co-religionists in Hindu States like Jaipur, Nimwar, Bharatpur and Kashmir in many of which they cannot build mosques even on their own land, cannot call out azan and are forcibly converted and deprived of their property.

Referring to the advice of the Premier to Englishmen to purchase only British goods to help British trade out of its present difficulties, the Aj inquires whether the eyes of Indians will not be opened even now and whether leaders of all the political parties in this country will not take a vow not to use foreign goods. It hopes that the Liberals will no longer hesitate to make Swadeshi one of the items of their programme. The Bharat Dharma refers to the movement initiated by Admiral Jellicoe for the boycott of foreign goods and urges that such a boycott in India will be more useful than the effeminate Khadi.

Sir Surendranath Banerjea's death.

The Leader says that in Sir Surendranath Banerjea's death another national institution has passed away. He lived not only for himself but for his country and countrymen. His public life was one of the finest examples of courage and endurance, love and patriotism, service and sacrifice. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:— Old age had clouded his vision and loosened his sinews for active warfare. He grasped at peace and rest after a life of unremitting strenuousness. But young Bengal has imbibed his spirit. Young India will draw its greatest source of strength in its coming fight against the bureaucracy from the story of his life.

The Next War.

The Vartman says that the defeat of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's motion in the House of Commons regarding the construction of new warships shows that the deluge of a war greater than that of the last war is going to submerge the great Powers of the world and that the responsibility for it will lie on the head of Britain as she is the first to increase her armaments and thus to give alarm to America and other Powers.

Hindu Sabha and Elections.

In a signed article Swami Vicharanand Saraswati complains in the Abhaya that the Hindu members of councils elected by the Congress and other political bodies are Hindus in name only and do not represent the interests of their community and urges that true representatives of Hindus for councils and local bodies can be elected by Hindu Sabhas only.

Jail administration.

Commenting on the judgment in the defamation case against the Bande Mataram of Lahore, the Patriot writes:—Now that the ghastly facts about prison administration have been brought into public view, it is to be hoped that Government, instead of screening the jail officials, will cause a thorough investigation to be made into the matter and introduce the necessary reforms. It is disgraceful for a civilized Government to allow prisons to be turned into "regular hell" under their very nose.

Protection to paper industry.

The Leader thinks that the Indian Tariff Board's proposals with regard to the protection of the indigenous paper industry are eminently reasonable and moderate and deserving of acceptance.

United Provinces Zamindars.

The Hamdam has a contributed article urging the establishment of a technological institute to impart industrial education to the sons of Zamindars in United Provinces and of a bank to relieve indebtedness among them.

Railway administration.

The Hindustani complains of open bribery among railway officials, their rude behaviour, thefts from parcels and herding of passengers in carriages and hopes that the higher authorities will take early steps to remedy this scandalous state of affairs.

High prices of foodgrains.

The Rahnuma appeals to the Government of India to stop the export of grain from the country to alleviate the suffering caused by the prevailing high prices.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 15, 1925.

Foreign affairs.

The Indian Daily Telegraph asks what the League of Nations, which was created for upholding the rights of small nations, is doing to protect the Riffs, and says: The fact that it is not intervening in the disputes between the great Powers and the minor down-trodden nationalities, proves that its functions are carefully handled so as to serve the interests of the great European Powers. Another great war is needed to open its eyes to the glaring iniquities and injustice done to subject nations. The Aj writes: We have to hang down our head in shame at the fact that Indian sepoys fired at unarmed Chinese students in Shanghai. It is our duty to start such an agitation in this country that the practice of getting such demoniacal and detestable work done by Indians in foreign countries may be put to an end. British officers may well perpetrate any brutal deeds for the Empire but they have no right to get Indians into disrepute in this manner. The same paper opines that the Mosul Commission's report can satisfy neither the British nor the Turks. It thinks that the Commission has attempted to satisfy the British, although the arguments are mostly in favour of Turkey. This explains why the Commission has had to make so much use of "ifs" and "buts." Nothing more could be expected of the League of Nations. The Medina entertains grave suspicions about the bona fides of the Hedjaz deputation and inquires what right Tahir and his companions have to represent the Hedjazis when they are not themselves inhabitants of the Hedjaz.

The Panipat disturbance.

Commenting on Lala Duni Chand's account of the Panipat disturbance the Indian Daily Telegraph says: "Mr. Duni Chand's description carries on its face the stamp of truth. We have no doubt now that it was the pusillanimity of the local officials that created a situation which otherwise might never have arisen. It constitutes a scandal, now that we see facts in their true perspective." In his "Hindu Notes" in the same paper "Pampadi" writes: "And what is it but that thousands of pious Hindus, wending their way to the Jumna for the sacred bath, were charged with bayonets so that Muslims might use a particular road which hitherto had not been closed to Hindus? We had Kohat, we had Malabar; we had Dera Ismail Khan. And now we have Panipat. How many more, oh Lord Krishna, before Hindu Sangathan will be an accomplished fact!" The Advocate fears that innocent Hindus may become the victim of prosecution and urges the Government to make a thorough enquiry into the matter. Discussing the various reports of the disturbance the Bhavishya comes to the conclusion that the real sufferers were the Hindus. It is they who were wounded, robbed, beaten and arrested. It is their temples which are lying closed. All this is the result of their weakness and disorganization. The Hindu leaders of the Punjab ought to have the whole affair investigated through an inquiry committee. The Abhyudaya tries to make out that the official version of the disturbance is altogether unworthy of credence and says that it was owing to the inaction and incapacity of the officials that this replica of the Kohat tragedy was enacted on a small scale. If correct facts are to be elicited the matter should be investigated by an independent non-official body.

Indians in the Colonies.

In the course of two leading articles recounting the various disabilities imposed upon Indians in South Africa the Leader writes:—"The story of the long and severe persecution of our industrious, law-abiding, and helpless countrymen in South Africa forms one of the most painful chapters in the history of the British connection with India. A bare recital of the wrongs wantonly inflicted on them is sufficient to lacerate the heart of any Indian." The paper then draws attention to a number of " persistent and heartless attempts " that are being made to render Indians in South Africa " homeless and penniless " and deplores that the Government of India have not taken action to implement the Immigration into India Act of 1924. They have taken no steps so far to frame rules under the Act to give effect to a policy which was accepted by the Imperial Conference as far back as in 1918. " There is time yet for the Government of India to rise to the height of the occasion and protect Indian honour by retaliating against South Africa, particularly through her coal trade which adversely affects Indian interests and facilities for the growth of which are an insult to the whole nation. The princes and the people of India have the same feelings on the question of the treatment of Indians in South Africa. It is the primary duty of the Government of India to act as a national Government at this juncture. . . . An Empire in which we are to be hewers of wood and drawers of water can be nothing but a bitter mockery to us." The Mahashakti writes: If India had a national Government there would have been more of retaliatory measures than of arguing and pleading in vain. Commenting on the growing ill-treatment of Indians in the colonies the Aj writes: Englishmen may or may not comprehend it, but it is true that the Empire has these days become a mark of disgrace for us. The flag of the Empire has come to be the flag of subjection for us. For the good administration of India and for the promotion of goodwill between whites and non-whites it is imperatively necessary for British statesmen to warn the white colonists not to lay the axe at the root of the Empire. If they cannot do so they should allow the Indians to retaliate against their oppressors. The Anand urges the necessity of raising Indians in the Colonies from the status of a coolie to that of a citizen to prevent their subjection to unjust treatment in various British Colonies and appeals to the Hindu Maha Sabha to take up this work.

Hindu organization.

The Indian Daily Telegraph strongly protests against the prohibition of the Bhagwad Gita procession on the Janamashtami day at Lucknow and fears that unless the position is explained the Hindus might construe the official opposition to the procession as British hostility towards Sangathan . . Hindus must put their house in order. If Hinduism is to be a living force, the spirit of the Bhagwad Gita must spread. The paper wants to know if Hindu organization is to be discouraged by Government. " Hindus must know, so that they may decide on their future action, which must extend to civil disobedience if Hinduism is at all to live." In the same issue " Syngal " writes: I look upon the enthusiasm raised by the name of Nepal among the Hindus as a happy augury for the success of the Sangathan movement. There is no reason why the Hindus should not feel the same enthusiasm for Nepal as Muslims feel for Turkey.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Bhavishya says that if realising the true meaning of Janmashtami and the teachings of Lord Krishna the Hindus fearlessly come forward to protect their religion all their troubles will come to an end. In the course of an article on Janmashtami, the Hindu Sarvaswa exhorts the Hindus to protect cows and tell those who oppose them that as this country belongs to the Hindus they should remain here as pro-Hindus. The Hindus are not prepared to harm them in any way, but if they wound their (Hindus') afflicted hearts it would not be productive of good. Referring to a report in the Hamdard about the expenditure of Rs. 30,000 on secret service through the Collector of Bijnor during the year when the Malkanas were being reclaimed, the Najat states that suspicion is growing among middle class Indians and is being strengthened by circumstances that the United Provinces Government are helping the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements with funds. Will the United Provinces Government issue a detailed statement to make it clear whether " Secret service " includes aid to the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements and thus clear a popular misapprehension?

The Viceroy.

Commenting on Lord Reading's return the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: " Lord Reading has never been known as particularly friendly to Indian aspirations. But it was not before he had taught the Secretary of State for India to make that speech that India knew of the extent of the dangerously retrograde views of its Viceroy who assumed charge with the proud boast of doing justice to India and now shines with the Bengal Regulation flashing its lurid colour from his forehead." The Abhyudaya remarks that Lord Reading has the chance of a life-time to immortalize himself in Indian history. It is to be seen whether he follows a path covering him with glory or with infamy. A master-stroke of statesmanship can do everything. We wait to see whether he now possesses the ability to make such a stroke. The Aj writes: This time people will keep a strict eye on Lord Reading. India had to spend lakhs of rupees on his visit to England. But what will be the gain? Certainly there is now greater apprehension of repression and "Readingshahi" justice being done. India has got a singular pair in Lord Reading and Lord Lytton.

Ministry in Central Provinces.

The Indian Daily Telegraph commends the action of the Central Provinces Swarajists in refusing to form a ministry and says that it would have been a fatal blow to the prestige of the Swarajist party if they, in Nagpur, had offered to work dyarchy at the point of the bayonet of Lord Birkenhead. The Aj expresses satisfaction that the Central Provinces Swarajists were not taken in by the sweet words of the Governor to accept Ministry and decided to cast in their lot with the rest of India. They deserve congratulations on it. In another article the same paper says that the Swarajists in the Central Provinces should not fight shy of the suspension of dyarchy. If the Swarajists remain firm the reforms will be scrapped before 1929. If the bureaucracy still displays obduracy we shall have to prepare ourselves for civil disobedience, which appears to be the only way for the salvation of India.

Muslim affairs.

The Sada-i-Muslim suggests that the Tanzim movement should aim at amalgamating into one organization all Muslim educational and charitable institutions so that the community may become well-knit and be able to act as one body. A subscription of one pice per head per mensem should be collected from all Muslims and this would bring in about a lakh of rupees every month which should be sufficient to cover the expenses of all Muslim institutions. The Al Bashir condemns the action of Jamiat-ul-Ulema and the Deoband Alims in not joining the All Muslim Parties Conference because the Qadians were allowed there and says that if the theologians adopt such an intransigent attitude the temporal leaders should continue their patriotic work according to their lights. The Medina considers the resignation of Dr. Kitchlew from the office of President of the Khilafat Committee as a great loss to the community and implores him not to deprive the Muslims of his guidance. Referring to the resignation the Sada-i-Muslim takes Mr. Mahomed Ali to task for attacking the Tanzim movement and points out that the Quran never enjoins the Muslims to forgive and forget when the Hindu community is ranged against them. The Hamdam invites the attention of the higher authorities to the small number of Muslim holidays in the engineering section of the Military department and urges that at least gazetted Muslim holidays should be allowed.

Allahabad University and women students.

The Leader writes: Several Indian papers have more or less strongly expressed their disapproval of the resolution of the Executive Council of the Allahabad University in connection with the education of women students. The consensus of enlightened and progressive opinion all over the country is against the reactionary step of questionable legality but unquestionable unwisdom taken by the University Executive Council and we feel a sense of humiliation at its having been taken by our reformed University. The Advocate writes: This new move of the University is most unjust and inhuman and amounts to an insult to womenfolk. There should be no discrimination between the two sexes in matters of education; women are entitled to the same privilege as boys.

New Commander-in-Chief.

Referring to Sir William Birdwood's statement that his speech before his departure for India had been wrongly reported the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—As at present explained, we cannot really call Sir William Birdwood a friend of India, but he does not come in our midst as our enemy as the first report made it appear. All the same, his views on the Indianization of the army are not advanced enough for Indian politicians, and that must considerably cool all enthusiasm for him in the Indian public.

Political propaganda.

The Hamdam is surprised at the Secretary of State's refusal to accept Mr. Gandhi's suggestion regarding the release of political prisoners and says that no better suggestion could have been made to soothe the feelings of Indians. While congratulating Government on its decision to extend exemption from disabilities in connection with Council election to persons sentenced up to one year's imprisonment for political offences, the Sada-i-Muslim suggests that the disability should be removed altogether irrespective of the term of imprisonment.

Unemployment among educated men.

The Rahnuma accords its hearty support to the resolution to be moved in the local Council about the appointment of a committee to inquire into the question of unemployment among educated men in the province and points out that while an illiterate artizan can earn Rs. 50 to Rs. 60 a month hundreds of matriculates knock about for posts of Rs. 15. It would be better to grant scholarships to such matriculates and to provide facilities for technical education for them.

Bombay Textile Industry.

The Aj refers to the grant of a subsidy by the British Government to avert a strike by miners in Britain and remarks that this action of the British authorities is quite in striking contrast with the attitude of the Indian authorities who are not moved at all at the prospect of the ruin of the Bombay cotton mills. There is not the least doubt that if the Government of India were to abolish the cotton excise the textile industry would get much-needed relief and the workmen would not be thrown out of employment. But this will never be done; for the Finance department of the Government of India is more concerned with the unemployment problem of England than with the troubles of Indians.

The Contempt of Courts Bill.

The Bhavishya writes:—If to-day India were not stretched in the powerful steel stocks of the avaricious foreigners her liberty of speech and writing would not have been taken away to such an extent. If the Contempt of Courts Bill is passed any paper which happens to incur the displeasure of local officials will be in peril. If subordinate courts are empowered to inflict punishments prosecutions will be started on newspapers one after another, with the result that there will be increased bitterness in the relations between the Government and the people and co-operation will become very difficult.

Indian States.

The Pratap writes: When the Maharaja of Nabha was deposed Lord Reading made loud professions about protecting him and his State and promised to pay him Rs. 25,000, but this promise began to be broken after three months. Now the plight of the Maharaja is very pitiable. On the one hand the property of the State is being auctioned gradually and on the other the Maharaja's Mussoorie buildings were to be auctioned. What a good protection is being given? The Aj refers to the lavish expenditure of money by the Maharaja of Patiala in London and remarks that this is a misuse of the money of his subjects and no Maharaja has a moral right to do so.

The Oudh Chief Court.

The Anand invites the attention of the Viceroy to the fact that it would be a great injustice to the Hindus if out of the five Judges of the Oudh Chief Court even two are not Hindus and hopes that His Excellency will deem it his duty to do justice to the Hindu community.

Board of Vernacular Education.

While expressing satisfaction at the establishment of a Board of Vernacular Education in the United Provinces the Hamdam complains that the powers of the Board are too limited and that the official and nominated members form a majority. It hopes that in course of time these shortcomings will be remedied.
